Ten Big Reasons Why

BETHANY GRADED LESSONS are being adopted by so many of the best schools among Disciples.

1. There is more to them—at least a third more—than is contained in any other series.
2. They are rich, vital and full of suggestion to teacher and pupil.
3. They are free from the sectarian spirit.
4. They are soundly and fervently evangelical.
5. They are truly artistic in all their illustrations.
6. They are printed on better paper with better binding and in better taste than any other series.
7. Every lesson writer is an expert of interdenominational reputation.
8. They are a monument to the modern spirit of unity—several leading denominations have co-operated to produce them and are now using them.
9. The Disciples possess full editorial rights, through the editor, Charles Clayton Morrison.
10. Every Disciple school that uses them participates in and promotes a great Christian union enterprise.

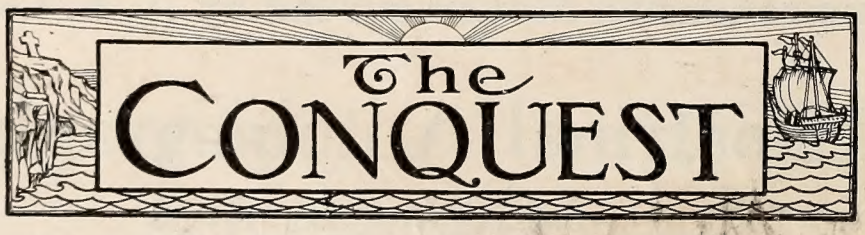
What They Say About Our New Weekly



Rev. Claude E. Hill, National C. E. Secretary—"This paper ought to have a wide circulation among the young people of our churches. I like, especially, your treatment of the Endeavor Topic. I certainly wish the paper abundant success."

Dr. J. H. Garrison, Editor-Emeritus Christian Evangelist—"I have examined The Conquest with care and with pleasure. If you can maintain the high ideal which is so well realized in your first issue, you will be making a valuable contribution to our Sunday school literature and to the religious training of the young."

Rev. J. H. Goldner, Euclid Ave. Church, Cleveland—"I like The Conquest immensely. The treatment of the Sunday school lesson, C. E. and midweek prayer-meeting topics is fresh and satisfying. In addition there is an abundance of readable and informing matter of a high order. The paper merits a hearty reception."

Rev. H. D. C. Maclachlan, Seventh Street, Richmond, Va.—"I am very much pleased with The Conquest. It is a good augury for the success of the Sunday school and the Disciples Publication Society that you are putting out such a publication."

W. O. Rogers, of the Sunday School Times Staff—"I have examined the copy of your new paper, The Conquest, with great interest. It looks interesting, which is the first requisite. Then it is interesting, which is the second. It has a fine tone. I predict for it a real success."

Dr. Loa E. Scott, Author of "The Life of Jesus"—"The Conquest is indeed a credit to the Disciples Publication Society. There is need among us for just such a paper, one that takes a broad outlook upon the world and upon the problems of the church and Sunday school."

Rev. Cloyd Goodnight, Uniontown, Pa.—"I like the virility and admire the study pages of The Conquest. Am sure you have a fine combination of page and column features, such as will make the paper not only attractive but valuable. It has the modern touch."

Mrs. Jessie Brown Pounds, Author—"I am sure you are putting out just the kind of a paper our young people need."

The Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse is fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, the Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, EDITOR HERBERT L. WILLETT, CONTRIBUTING EDITOR

"And Thy House"

The jailer at Philippi knew that he needed to be saved from something. Just what he wanted to be saved from we may not feel quite sure. It was not simply his terror of the earthquake. Even in that sudden and startling event he did not forget his responsibility for his prisoners. The thought of his personal danger did not rise above his consciousness of responsibility. The man was no coward. Moreover, the earthquake was past, and we are not altogether sure he supposed these prisoners of his had caused it. But he recognized something that had saved them. It had not prevented their being whipped or bound and imprisoned. It had not saved them from persecution and pain. But it had saved them from terror, from taking cowardly flight, and it was saving them now to a sublime consciousness of superiority to all the accidents of fate and the power of men to do them harm. It had saved them into a sublime confidence that they were in league with the powers that rule the universe. They were consciously capable of meeting life on terms other than those of fear and helplessness. Something had made them masters of their fate, captains of their own souls, and caused them to be triumphant over all possible calamities of human life.

No doubt the jailer felt the same consciousness of sin. To be sure he was not responsible for the imprisonment of these men. He was merely carrying out orders which he had no choice but to obey. He was as much the victim as they of the system which persecuted them; nevertheless, the sight of the injustice they were suffering and to which they rose superior could not but bring him face to face with sins of his own. Willingly or unwillingly he was a participant in their persecution. If that represented no personal sin of his it was at least a reminder of sins which had been his. He was a sinner and needed to be saved. There was no need of splitting hairs about it or of putting too fine a point upon the question of his own responsibility. There is no need of dulling the edge of our own sense of unworthiness by too much theological subtlety. The temptations of human life have been too strong for all of us. The question, "What must I do to be saved," is one which every man has need to ask. He who can show us that which can save us, and will save us, will confer upon us a great and lasting benefit.

But we have made a great mistake in supposing that our chief need was to be saved from the penalty of our past sins. Men have formulated ingenious theories to show how we are to escape mere penalty. However important that may be, that is not the essential thing in salvation. We need to be saved now and we shall need to be saved hereafter, not so much from the sins that are past as from present and future ones, not so much from the penalty as from the power of sin.

Men need a salvation from present sin. Men need a power that can keep them sweet and strong and pure and save them from the domination of passion and the overmastering of the allurement of worldliness. "Thou shalt be saved," is an utterance shot through and through with a great and radiant hope.

The Philippian jailer asked only how he himself might be saved. In that terrified moment when he fell on his knees before the imprisoned Christians, he thought only of himself. "What must I do to be saved," had been his anxious and appealing cry. The answer was larger than the question. Too often we have overlooked this excess of the reply over and above the scope of the inquiry. "Thou shalt be saved and thy house." When he came to think of it, the jailer cared more for his house than he did for himself. Any father who is worthy of the name loves his children more than he loves his own life. I imagine the jailer was ashamed when he came to think of it that he had only asked about himself. At any rate, we ought to be ashamed if we think either of the question and of the answer and do not remember how much was included in the latter.

The most wonderful thing about human life is its power of transmission, its capacity for flowing on in a never-ending stream through successive generations. He who flings a drop of ink into a river blackens the stream one hundred miles below to the full capacity of that one drop. He who causes to flow into the stream of life a single pure spring by so much purifies the river of all coming generations. The setting of the solitary in families is not a mere incident in the plan of God. It is a most vital and significant fact in the social life of the human race. Whether any one man lives a happy life or a sad one, a good life or a bad one, is in itself a matter of small relative importance, but whether coming generations are to be better or worse for his living is a matter of such vital significance that no man or woman can afford to face the future unterrified by the possibility of the harm that may come through the consequence of any single sin.

What Has Become of Your Smile?

A Plea for the Spirit of Gladness From an African Missionary.

BY DAN CRAWFORD.

THE other day I was talking with a Cabinet minister in England. He said to me: "Mr. Crawford, I would like your eyes."

"What do you mean?" I asked.

"Well, I would like to experience the surprise that you must be having in seeing the difference between twenty-five years ago and now. What is the biggest thing you have seen in the way of change?"

"Well," I said, "one of the greatest differences between now and twenty-five years ago that I notice is this: that modern materialism has robbed the modern young man of his smile. When I came into town the other morning in 'the tube' there were thirteen clean young English sphinxes before me, with a strained, almost 'struggle-for-life' look on their faces. Twenty-five years ago I would have had before me thirteen genial, joyful, roast beef Englishmen dissolving in smiles."

"What is your point?"

I said: "Do you remember Herbert Spencer's chapter on 'The Psychology of a Smile'? The point to that long chapter is that nothing on four legs ever smiled a mighty smile. It is only God's biped, feet in the mud, if you like, but head in the glory, who smiles that wonderful thing called a smile."

"What do you mean?"

"Ah!" I said, "Spencer would never put the sermonizing tag on, but I am going to. Spencer proved that the smile is the coat of arms of the soul. The smile is like the flag over Buckingham Palace. When the flag floats we know the King is in the palace. You see? Ah, 'what shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world'—you in America, they in England, we in Africa—'and lose his' smile? 'The joy of the Lord is your strength.'"

GOING "DOWN" TO AFRICA.

As we were drawing near Benguella, where we were to land, yet still so far out at sea that we could not see the African continent, I saw a panoramic parable of the whole missionary situation in that vast continent. Our beautiful blue Atlantic as we neared the mainland became tinged with a muddy brown. The ugly brown Congo was vomiting its dirty contents into the blue Atlantic! There you have the sad and symbolic story of decadence on the west coast of Africa. "Evil communications corrupt good manners," and to go out to Africa means to go down to Africa, for the tendency is down, down, ever down.

Well, from the day I landed the devil lurked by my side. And I saw that there was one thing he especially wanted. He wanted to sap my gladness, wanted to steal my song, to steal my laugh, to rob me of the joy of my life. But one day I read in this dear old Book: "My heart is fixed; I will sing"—that is, I'm going in for singing! It was not much, only a few words, but it shed glory in my darkest places ever since. And, friends, when you find your song in peril just run to David, the sweet singer of Israel, and get a little snatch of one of his songs. Fix your heart on it. Make it the habit of your life.

Another thing that I saw at once in Africa was the limitation of self. One thing I was particularly anxious to do—and I asked God that He would equip me for it—was the translation of His Holy Word into the Bantu tongue. The question was as to how it should be done. What I resolved to do was this, not to invite Mr. African to live with me, but to go and live with him in his little native town. So I went first to Chenda, or Pilgrim Town, on the Kunje River. I was the Lord's pilgrim. For the first twelve days the people stared at me in the most stand-offish manner. Who are you? You are a spy! You are not black. You are white. And for ten days, twelve days, fourteen days, they were very exclusive. But about the sixteenth day they apparently decided to take me in. Then I began what is called "Thinking Black." The normal Bantu speech was pouring into my ears all the time. I had my notebook and pencil, and I tell you, as I found my notebook filling up with nouns, verbs, and adjectives, I just gasped. The verbs have thirty-two tenses, and about ten voices. And the noun is a great big fellow with nineteen genders.

NATIVE POLITENESS.

Living as I was with the natives, I saw their normal life. I lived in their beehive huts and even got accustomed to their simple native food. There was a dear old grandmother who used to stir my porridge every morning with her gnarled old hands. She was what one would be inclined to call repellent at first, but she soon developed into a charming old dowager. You should hear some of these old ladies talk! Suppose you are listening to her: She is talking in that wonderful thirty-two-tense language of hers. What does she say? We'll suppose she comes to some so-called ugly word. We should use it, but she! oh no; she is supersensitive, and when she comes to this word she dodges it: "But not to be impolite to the gentleman," and around it she goes. And if a negro brings you four pots of temperance beer, he does not call it that; he says he is bringing you four pots of water. If you invite him to supper and he wants to say No, he says "I am not refusing," but all the time he is refusing.

One very tragic thing is that these natives have never, never had a book. But though they never had a book, when they look at you their glance goes right through you. Oh, that Negro! He can look through you as though your body were made of plate glass. You now understand why I ask you to pray for every missionary on the foreign field. Those people do not know what literature is, and so the missionary is their walking and talking Bible. They will speak about Christ being in him, and even dare to talk about him as being their God.

Many years after I had gone into the interior of Africa, an Irish friend of mine, a very charming and scholarly man, Mr. Cobbe, with a heart for God's work, decided on a trip off the beaten track in Africa. He wanted to get in touch with the people. I met him at the Lualaba River. When we met, I gripped his hand and he said: "I have come to pay my debt." We lived together for a little while. He was a cultured, classical scholar, and a good linguist; he was of no use, however, when he tackled a language that had never been reduced to writing. But Christ was living in his heart by faith, and he was a living example.

A STORY OF THE CANNIBALS.

One day the cannibals came over the hill. Those cannibals are true tories, every man jack of them. You cannot force the missionary on him. He sizes you up for about a week. He is reading you. The one thing this African goes for is the eyes. Every morning he comes with his imaginary fishing rod and he goes into the missionary's eyes and fishes out any information he wants. He knows, for instance, if you begin the day with God. Well, this particular cannibal looked over Cobbe, and he thought he had struck the real thing. He stayed around with Cobbe for about fourteen days, and then he took French leave. "Over the hills and far away," he disappeared. That is also a cannibal trick—no good-bye. Later, that dear friend of mine, Mr. Cobbe, passed away.

Ten years passed. I was traveling in Lubaland and there one day in one of the villages a man came up to me and said: "You are the very man I have been looking for." It was the cannibal who was so glued to Mr. Cobbe. I went to his hut and sat down. And he told me that he had started a new religion. And I found out that the new religion that this man had set up was based upon the worship, not of God, but of Mr. Cobbe, the living epistle. It was enough to have made Cobbe turn in his grave. Here was a man who practically said: "We know about God; but He is too busy off among the stars. He has left us alone. So I will lift up a little prayer to this Christian God and he will pass it on to God. He will have big influence with God." Oh, the tragedy of these poor souls groping their way along if haply they might find a walking and talking Bible!

I want to say, dear friends, that we who live away off there in Central Africa do not at all want your commiseration. We have a great time there shut off from everything. Again and again the Lord has fed us in the most marvelous manner and done many wonderful things for us. I remember when a robber got my boots once how the Lord God gave me another pair in the wilderness. We have learned when we get a pair of boots like that not to ask whether they fit or not. And that reminds me of something that Billy Bray once said. Someone told him that the Lord had put it on his heart to give him a suit of clothes. "Well," said Billy, "if the Lord has put it on your heart to do this, the clothes are going to fit; for the Lord knows my measure." In some marvelous way the Lord has again and again come to succor us.

SOME HEATHEN COMPENSATIONS.

Emerson was quite right when he said that in this world there is a law of compensation that really compensates. It is so with the African native. He never had such a thing as a notebook, and the law of compensation has ordained that he should have a most wonderful memory. One day many years ago I limped into a town. I was tired out. The temperature was probably a hundred and two, or more. I did not want to have a meeting; but the people came so insistently and begged so pathetically that I gave them a broken, little, scapegoat message. Ten years afterward I came into that same town—I had never visited it in the meantime—and those poor people, like a gramaphone record, had kept that message of mine, and they gave me back my poor old sermon. They had preserved it, passing it on from lip to lip.

Take the matter of light. In Central Africa they have never had artificial light of any kind. The result is that, by this law of compensation, they have wonderful eyesight. They disapprove of artificial light, saying that to light up any dark place is to fight God. When the sun sets, that means that God has drawn the curtains that your eyes might have sleep.

Take the matter of boots. The African had never seen a pair of boots until Dr. David Livingstone came into the interior. So when they saw him they gave him his name accordingly: "The man who has no toes," for they thought he had cut off his ten toes. But when I wanted to cross the Crocodile River, I just got on the back of a native, hung on to him, and he, by taking hold with his ten grips, got me safely across. We who have boots have no grip.

A DANCING GRANDMOTHER.

That reminds me of an experience with that dear old grandmother of whom I was just speaking. She became a very bright, joyful Christian saint. One day I came around the corner of the hut and there was this dear old dowager—can I believe my eyes!—dancing, and with a face as solemn as a sermon! I said: "Grandmother, what is this?" Then she said most condescendingly: "Sit thee down, father, and I will teach thee the great doctrine of dancing before the Lord." I sat down meekly and mildly, and she taught me diagrammatically. She used her old black body for a blackboard. The mouth was for song, she said, but joy also flowed down to the toes. The way to get it out was to dance before the Lord. What did I think about it?

And—my brother missionaries will support me in this—give me a church with the old people. Some people think the old are done for. The dear old friends, they are delightful. They are just themselves. And I am sorry to say that some of the recent generations of Africans make excellent parrots. They take after the missionaries in every way. But the old people just remain their dear old selves to the end. I have seen these dear old grandmothers work. I have seen them hobble out three miles, not as mission agents, but for nothing. At one end of the town I attended the meeting of this old grandmother I was speaking about; at the other end of the town the young evangelist was holding a meeting. He spoke splendidly, but his preaching was not to be compared with hers. The words of the poem just hit these dear old women:

"Life is a sheet of paper white,
On which each one of us may write
A word or two,—and then comes night."

Here is this dear old grandmother. She is a finished metaphor. She realizes that "life is a sheet of paper white"—very dirty sometimes!—and she realizes that her paper is coming to a finish and that she must write close. And, oh, I want that to symbolize my life for God, for I want to be true to Him!

LEARNING TO PRAY.

About ten years after I went to Central Africa, my dear wife joined me. All that time I was alone the loudest song of the sons of men was humming in my heart: "The girl I left behind me." Well, I sent a letter and she dared to come. She joined an expedition that dropped her about two hundred miles from the eastern ocean. I went to meet her, and the British Consul married us. Before he married us I said: "We are going to pray." Down we went on our knees, and down he went too. Just fancy getting a British Consul on his knees! We married in good old Puritan fashion, with two texts of Scripture. One of the two was: "Abram pitched his tent there. . . . And there he builded an altar unto the Lord." Brethren and sisters, I challenge you: you have pitched your tent, but have you builded your altar? Oh, there is the leakage of power. That is why our prayer languishes; we do not do what Father Abraham did. He did more by building his altar than he did by pitching his tent. Take that, America! Take that, England! You are building your tents and you are pitching your altars, I am afraid, out of the window. I am here to testify this morning—and we are here for business—that I only learned really to pray after I was married. "If two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven." And who can agree like husband and wife, and hand in hand go to the throne of grace and ask of the Lord a boon or a bounty? Oh, it is grand. There is a verse of Scripture that I think is very much mangled and muddled: "That your prayers be not hindered." That word prayers does not refer to ecclesiastical prayers, or to conference prayers. It means specifically and technically your prayers, husband and wife. Look it up and see. It comes in a very sacred chapter, so sacred that we cannot with propriety talk about it here.

HINTS FOR MARRIED PEOPLE.

The second text of Scripture was very simple. It was: "My beloved, ... my friend." My friends, there is many a husband who is not his wife's chum, who is not his wife's friend. And there is many a wife who is not her husband's chum, who is not her husband's friend. "My beloved, ... my friend," and I tell you where a husband and wife have learned to chum and have a great good time together, there you have the very spice of life itself, the best thing on the planet earth. "I speak concerning Christ and the church." There is that in Christianity that I never found until I was married. I wish I could tell you of our babies born away off there on the frontier, no doctor near, no helping hand. By these things men live, and by these things men love. I would not exchange them for a king's ransom.

CIVILIZATION'S TIRE PUNCTURED.

These natives have their temptations. Down in the south there is a certain kind of civilization advancing, that civilization that brings drink, gambling, and all the rest with it. It was down that way that I went when I was starting out for England, down there by the railway head, where I and my black friends bade each other goodbye. Oh, how they looked at that railway! Then they asked me to explain to them about some of the things belonging to your so-called civilization. So I began gushing about all your wonderful civilization. How they looked and listened! As I went on telling them of automobiles, submarines, aeroplanes and everything else, trying to draw a wondering look from them—and how I piled it on!—I noticed one man with an uncomfortable look in his eyes. I could see he was waiting for me the way a cat waits for a rat. Finally he said as I stopped: "Are you finished?" And then, dear friends, he punctured my tire with a bang. I will never forget it. He said: "To be better off is not to be better." TO BE BETTER OFF IS NOT TO BE BETTER! That was the last speech I heard in Central Africa.

And right across Africa, away on the lonely edge of the marshes, there is no native who would ever think of denying the immortality of the soul. Never! They say: "The dead do not really die." They say: "The body is the cottage of the soul." And no African would say of anyone who is dead: "Mr. Smith has departed." They would say: "He has arrived." And when Dr. David Livingstone died away down on the shores of Lake Bangweola they said: "He sleepeth." Always "He sleepeth." And against that what do I find in your modern civilization? I find materialism rampant—so rampant that you have no such certainty as that.

THE BEDROCK OF THE BIBLE.

You do not need to talk about David Livingstone and others being pioneers of the Gospel in heathen lands. God is His own pioneer. In some senses God has preceded us. He has unfurled His own flag. He is not merely talking to those natives. He is shouting at them out of every stick and stone and running brook. Oh,—and I say this with gusto—that wherever we have planted the dear old Bible in those latitudes, we have done it on bed rock, for we realize that there at least is a sure foundation upon which we may build.

ANNOUNCEMENT EXTRAORDINARY!

Dan Crawford is not only a missionary but is a Bible student, with an original and interesting method, and The Christian Century is glad to announce a series of striking study articles from Mr. Crawford on the following subjects: "The Law of Faith," "The Certainty of Faith," "All of It," "A Resurrection Reverie," "Think It Not Strange," "The Times of the Gentiles."

A Doctrinal Autobiography

In his first installment of this brief autobiography the author, a prominent and trusted minister of the Disciples of Christ, sets down his recollections of the local church life of his boyhood and youth. The present chapter deals with the reading matter which fell into his hands and gave to his mind its early doctrinal quality. Subsequent chapters will tell of college experiences, first pastorates and later intellectual reconstruction.

MY boyhood days were filled with constant and exacting work. The period of my schooling ended just after I had entered the High School. As I now look back upon my entrance upon an apprenticeship at the age of fourteen, I can see that the loss of the advantage of an education in the early days of my life was irreparable. Yet vividly in my memory lives to this day the rebellion against the irritating and tyrannical pedagogue into whose hands I had fallen. He was a believer in everlasting punishment and carried his belief into what should have been the peaceful pleasures of the school room. He was an Irishman, seeking his fortune in the New World, possessed of a passion, amounting to seven devils, for discipline and authority. Seeing no hope of deliverance from his rule and his ferrule, I set at defiance all parental authority, abandoned the school, and secured a position at two dollars per week. I have since learned that the best discipline in school and home is to be found where the pupils and children are conscious of none.

A "SELECT" LIBRARY.

Up to this period I had read a few of the standard authors, but my understanding of them was vague. I even tried Shakespeare, but at that time and for many years after, he was Greek to me. Since those impressionable days I have read again many of the same books, and I wonder now that I enjoyed them as much as I did. My books were wholly of my own selection; there was neither method nor goal. I recall "Robinson Crusoe," "Uncle Tom's Cabin," "The Swiss Family Robinson," "Gulliver's Travels," "The Lamplighter," "St. George's Key," and a book of adventures in crossing the plains, the title of which I have forgotten.

The works of A. L. O. E., and some of the above, were borrowed from our Sunday-school library with the encouragement of my mother who was prejudiced against works of fiction; for even Dickens at that era in our home was likely to fall under the classification of "yellow back novels." Many of the books from the church library, as I now recall them, were of the colorless variety; the greatest compliment that could be paid to them was that if they did no good they could do no harm. (I have wondered whether it was not in some such sentiment that the foundations of our colorless journalism were laid).

THE OUTSTANDING RELIGIOUS BOOK.

But the one outstanding religious work of this period—I was probably fifteen or sixteen years of age—was Prof. Calvin Stowe's "History of the Books of the Bible." I thought then that the unbeliever was little short of a madman to doubt the authenticity of any of the books or their right to a place in the Canon. I did not see how such arguments as were offered could be met by either scholarly or blasphemous unbelief. For a long time Professor Stowe was the champion of the faith in my eyes. Another book which influenced me greatly, and wholly for good, was Dr. Daniel March's "Night Scenes in the Bible," a truly wonderful piece of literature to me at this day. I read these works through again and again, committing to memory long portions of them. In addition to all other reading, I memorized much of the New Testament, though I have always found it difficult to appreciate the Old. The fact that the New Testament particularly the Book of Acts was an armory from which to draw weapons in our encounters with the sects that were just as zealous for what they believed to be the "truth" as we were, has had much to do with determining my preference for the New Testament.

DISCIPLES' WRITINGS.

I was introduced to the writings of our own people through the "Life of Knowles Shaw." The story of that pioneer has thrilled thousands of youthful minds as well as fathers and mothers; while his evangelistic triumphs gave a new impetus to the work of the Restoration. He was a professional evangelist before the era of the professional, a modern psychologist without ever having studied the science of psychology. I have no doubt that many people looked on him as a mesmerist.

Another doctrinal discovery was the sermons of Benjamin Franklin which I devoured. I was waking up to the unanswerable arguments on the side of "Our Position." About the time that I became a Christian one of our brethren loaned me "The Living Pulpit" by Dr. W. T. Moore, though had I referred to him as "Doctor" then, I should have been looked upon with suspicion, a borrower of sectarian phraseology. This volume was a delight. No rains ever fell upon parched soil with more welcome than did these sermons, pictures and sketches, fall into my mind. I aspired to be worthy of a place in the company of such men, believing that they belonged to a superior order. That volume had much to do with directing my thoughts to the ministry. I read it again and again. I came to believe that "we were right and couldn't be wrong." No mathematical demonstration could be clearer than the statements of the plea in that volume, so I thought. For one who had ever been a Disciple to renounce that faith for some other could only be accounted for by me on the grounds of moral or mental aberration. I did not believe that men could honestly make such a change any more than I believed that there could be two Atlantic Oceans.

SOME EARLY IMPRESSIONS.

One of the pleasures of my mature years has been to turn the leaves of that volume and to recall the impressions of my youth which were rimmed with the poetic and heroic, and to compare the dreams of the then with the realities of now. I believed that all our preachers were orators and mighty men; I could not harbor the thought that they would be guilty of the violation of any of the major or minor moralities which might be condoned in those who sat under their preaching. I idealized them in every particular. I longed to see and hear them. But I had to suffer the disillusionments that come to us all at some time in life, and to confess on more than one occasion that even our greatest preachers were made out of the same clay with other mortals; and even that clay was not of as fine a quality as could be found in some of those who drank in their eloquent words. It is well that the mind of a boy is not made for analysis. But the "Living Pulpit" did its perfect work in me.

"The Voice of Seven Thunders," was to me a marvellous production. I believed that the Book of Revelation was unsealed now and forever, after one perusal of that work. I have since changed my mind on this point, and find the Apocalypse as unintelligible now as it was before I ever heard of the author of the "Seven Thunders."

ARGUMENT AMMUNITION.

The life of "Raccoon" John Smith supplied me with arguments and anecdotes with which to confound and humiliate the "sects" on many occasions. My reading was so much more extensive than any of the other young men in the congregation, and my powers of debate so much more developed by my acquaintance with our polemical literature, that I found myself the center of this group, if not the leader. Our ambitions were to rout the Philistines by whatever denominational name they were known. Naturally my success in discussion, or what I was flattered to believe was success, created in me a demand for that type of literature which has done much to stamp the Disciples as a camp of warring Ishmaelites. This was the period of our aggressiveness in the congregation, referred to in an earlier chapter, when we took to the streets with tracts in the hope that the enemy would take to the woods. But as already recorded the enemy stood his ground with a perversity that found no explanation short of the maledictions which the Scriptures heaped upon the stiffnecked.

AT THE FEET OF THE GREAT DEBATERS.

Before I was twenty years of age I had read with delight the Campbell and Rice debate, the debate with Robert Owen and Bishop Purcell, and wondered how any of those defeated champions could dare to walk down the streets of their respective communities without the aid of a diguise. I could not understand how they could retain the respect of their acquaintances after the drubbing they had received at the hands of Mr. Campbell. But they did walk the streets after the debate just as they had done before, and their friends did not seem to think that they were less worthy of respect. That they did not lose any prestige because of their defeat by Mr. Campbell I did not learn for many years afterward. My youthful ardor compelled me to see Mr. Campbell dragging these illustrious victims at his chariot wheels. Even at this writing, I am ready to say that the issues at stake were not allowed to suffer in his hands. If the other side in each instance was satisfied with the outcome of those discussions, the friends of Mr. Campbell and his cause had no reason to cover themselves with sackcloth.

I must confess that the reading of so much of our polemical literature made me very much of a partisan; I know now that my constant desire was to secure victory rather than to discover truth. I was continually revolving in my mind the arguments advanced by the opposition and deciding on the course which would lead to their defeat. I prided myself that I was a sort of an enlightener of all those who were walking in the darkness of sectarianism. Had they been half as anxious to receive light as I was to impart it I would have converted the country for miles around to our views of Christianity. But my good friends had not the least inclination to accept my benevolent overtures; they had a way of resenting my efforts which was often puzzling as well as humiliating to me. I read the New Testament constantly, and I found there much material to mass against the bulwarks of the enemy. The ease with which I routed one and all was surpassed only by the obstinacy with which they stood their ground, and refused to be routed. They persisted in living and moving and having their being long after I had left them upon the field for dead. I concluded that sectarianism had as many lives as a cat.

THE MILLENNIAL HARBINGER.

The "Millennial Harbinger" fell into my hands about the time I had discovered the strength of our position, and some copies of the Christian Baptist, but they were heavy reading for a youth with a meagre common school education. Maybe the difficulties I had with them then have confirmed the conclusions of my later years that it was much easier to admire the writings of Mr. Campbell than to master them. I lost myself in the involutions of his ponderous sentences as a youth and I have had equal success in losing myself in those same sentences after a score of years. Neither of these publications did much for me.

The debates, however, were more easy to follow, since the opponent's statement of his position, and Mr. Campbell's re-statement of it again and again, as well as the clear statement of his own position, together with the pros and cons of the discussion, did much to help me to an understanding of the points at issue which must have remained vague had they not been worked out in true Johnsonian style in Mr. Campbell's octagon study. What a blessing to the world has been the passing of the mouth-filling, ear-stunning, eye-puzzling phrase and sentence which every scholar of a century ago coveted as he coveted a good name. The literary men of Mr. Campbell's time were thorough believers in the axiom that the shortest distance between two points was by way of Robin Hood's barn.

ONE OF THE FAITHFUL FEW.

While I was revelling in these efforts to propagate the plea I was deeply concerned in the work of the congregation. I seldom, if ever, missed a service. My zeal kept me at the post of duty in season and out of season. I listened to sermons with critical ears. It was fortunate that our minister was almost as fanatical as I. Very seldom did he make a doctrinal slip. But I recall the joy that I found in these services; all day long I worked like a slave to please my employer and to receive my meagre salary with a clear conscience at the end of the week. I was always tired; I never knew the time when I had sufficient sleep. Great as was the temptation to lie in bed Sunday morning for a much needed rest I banished it as a suggestion from the Evil One. Worn and jaded as I was, I arose in good time always, and was ready for service at the ringing of the bells.

HARD ON "FAIR WEATHER" CHRISTIANS.

The distance to our church was long and I covered many miles on the Lord's day. When the weather was bad I coveted the pleasure of being one of the faithful few to be found at the service; and the promise of the Lord as found in the book of Malachi to the few who should be numbered among the jewels was exceeding precious. We had been taught at home and from the pulpit that duty done under adverse circumstances had a peculiar reward for the Christian. A fair weather Christian we almost treated with contempt. We came to believe that one of our number who would not brave a snow storm on prayer meeting night was no credit to a people in whose hands the Almighty had placed a great trust. I have not changed my mind on this point. I did all manner of work about the church, even taking the janitor's place one winter to keep down expenses. Many a night I was compelled to go without supper in order to have the lecture room heated and lighted for some special meeting.

SHUNNING BOYISH PLEASURES.

But I was being educated in many ways through these experiences. My readings gave me a good knowledge of the English tongue, though I knew little of the grammar. I learned to pray and to speak in public. I had a wide knowledge of the history of our people for one of my years. My lack was in the narrow range of reading and thinking. I shunned boyish pleasures as if they were evil and evil only. I remember going to a theater on two occasions, and felt guilty all the time I was there. I never played cards, never learned to dance, never indulged in Sunday excursions. For years I would not read a Sunday newspaper, thinking that my protest might be the means of calling the attention of the publishers to the sin of violating the Sabbath. As compared with my own children I had a gloomy time. But the one compensation was the joy of my church life. No matter how many adversities I faced through the week, the preaching and the singing on Sunday were literally balm to my aching breast.

My evenings were spent in reading or in visiting some friend who shared my own views. We consoled each other in our solitary fortunes, or misfortunes, for both of us had the faculty of talking ourselves out of our naturally small circle of friendships, under the delusion that we were witnessing for the truth when we were heaping reproaches upon people who were more deeply religious and certainly more intelligent than we. We embittered our own lives by our course, but at the time we regarded it as the only one possible, and really enjoyed the melancholy consolations that we imparted to each other.

BORN TO POVERTY.

It will not be necessary for me to say that I was poor. From the day of my entrance into church relationships that has been a matter of regret. My fortunes have not improved with the years, though my salary has increased. When I became a member of the church, my salary was three or four dollars per week, but I remember well the satisfaction it gave me to contribute a dollar each month for current expenses. We did not have many calls for missions and benevolences in those days, or I should have been more wretchedly poverty-stricken than I was. I never learned how to refuse any calls for help, and from a selfish point of view it is well that so few came. I have met during my ministry scores of men who owned houses and lands who thought they were doing their duty when they gave twelve dollars a year to the pastor's salary, but I have never become reconciled to the idea that they were particularly concerned about laying up treasures in heaven. I gave away about all that I earned, saving only enough to pay board and to buy a book now and then, and this rule formed early in life has never been broken up to the present time. I am as poor to day as when my salary was four dollars per week, if I except my books and furniture.

EARLY CALLS TO THE MINISTRY.

The visits of a few brethren of prominence to our congregation at different times were bright spots in our church life, almost gala days. As a rule they were men of fine pulpit ability, and many strangers came to hear them, as a result of the advertising we did in the newspapers. They kindled ambitions within me which at that time I had no hope of realizing. But from what I have said it will occur to the reader that I was inevitably being "called" to the ministry as though a voice had sounded from heaven. At first I banished all such thoughts, believing myself unworthy, but by degrees what was first the film of an idea came to loom as large in my thinking as a mountain.

THE PERSONALITY OF CHRIST.

By Joseph Fort Newton.

What vastness, too, is here. No one mind, even the greatest, seems able to illustrate it. We have to add together many intellects, putting contradictions side by side. He was radical and conservative; an extreme fraternalist and a great individualist; mystical and practical; full of prayer while going about doing good; with the strength of a man and more than the mercy of woman; more human than any of us—and more divine than all the gods of whom man has ever dreamed. All that men seek elsewhere they can find in Christ—and much else besides. His sayings may be found scattered over the world, but he alone brought them together and gave them his image and superscription. So vast is the mystery of Jesus that we do not think of his mind, or his heart, or his will, but of himself—his personality. There were heights in him far beyond our ken, something mysterious and mystical which baffles analysis. He heard voices where we are oppressed by the dead weight of silence; he saw visions where we see only vacancy.

THE BELLS.

By Thomas Curtis Clarke.

Hark, the tolling of the bells
Through the spaces drear!
Sad the message they proclaim—
Old Year's death is near.
Earth is weary of her life:
Worn her face, and sere.
With the sad bells' waning tones,
Passes out the year.

Hark, the chiming of the bells,
Sweet and strong and clear!
Glad the message they proclaim
To our every ear.
Death to all our sin and shame,
Sigh and bitter tear:
Dawn of love, and life, and hope
With the new-born year.

Six Millions for Disciples' Philanthropies

Stupendous Campaign of all Missionary and Benevolent Societies and Educational Institutions of the Disciples of Christ for Collecting Gigantic Sum to be Used in Expansion and Endowment.

TO BE LED BY ABRAM E. CORY.

EVERY missionary and benevolent society of the Disciples of Christ and every educational institution (excepting only the Disciples' Divinity House at the University of Chicago), is to share in a great fund of $6,000,000 to be collected by a continent-wide campaign during the next two years.

As a starter for the campaign $1,250,000 has already been pledged, $1,000,000 of which is in the form of a conditional gift by Mr. R. A. Long of Kansas City, a member of the Business Men's Commission.

Mr. Abram E. Cory, missionary to China, who came home on furlough two years ago to raise a special fund of $1,000,000 for foreign missions, and who succeeded in doing it, will lead the new campaign.

The announcement comes as an enlargement of the plans of the Men and Millions Movement launched at the Toronto convention last October and which contemplated the raising of a fund of $2,500,000 above the regular offerings, for the benevolent and missionary enterprise alone. The educational interests have now been articulated with the Movement and the sum of $3,500,000 for the colleges added to the fund to be raised, making a grand objective of $6,000,000.

HOW THE FUND IS TO BE DIVIDED.

It was decided by a joint committee of the societies and reported at Toronto that the missionary and benevolent societies shall share in this fund as follows:

American Christian Missionary Society	$600,000
Foreign Christian Missionary Society	600,000
Christian Woman's Board of Missions	600,000
Board of Church Extension	200,000
Board of Ministerial Relief	200,000
National Benevolent Association	200,000
Mission Work in Russia	100,000

A Commission of business men, appointed at the Toronto convention, and approved by the Association of Colleges met in Chicago last week and divided to the various institutions the $3,500,000 which it is proposed to raise for education. By the action of this Commission the colleges will share as follows:

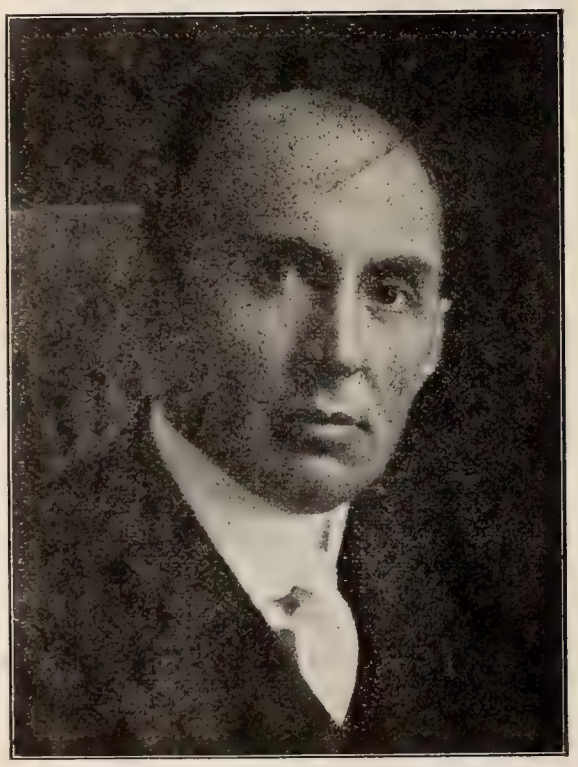
Drake University	$400,000
Texas Christian Univty	350,000
Transylvania Univty.	350,000
Bethany College	300,000
Butler College	300,000
Hiram College	300,000
Eureka College	275,000
Phillips Univty.	275,000
Cotner Univty.	225,000
Christian Univty.	225,000
Milligan College	50,000
Virginia Christian College	35,000
Bible College of Missouri	30,000
William Woods College	30,000
Christian College	30,000
Keuka College	25,000
Phillips Bible Institute	20,000
Camden Point College	10,000

The cases of Atlantic Christian College, Southern Christian College, Lamar College and Carr-Burdette College were left for a future study of the Southern situation. The same was true of the problem on the West Coast; hence, no allottment was made to Eugene Bible University, Spokane University, and the Southern California University. Johnson Bible College in Tennessee asked not to be included in the list, though members of the Commission were sympathetic with its work.

The College of Missions at Indianapolis is assigned $150,000 in addition to the regular appropriation received from the missionary societies. It is the thought of the Commission that this shall be raised without affecting the contributions of other institutions.

The sum of $300,000 was allotted to possible shrinkage in the pledge list.

The Educational Commission of Business Men is composed of the following: Judge Frederick A. Henry, Cleveland,



Mr. Abram E. Cory, Leading the Men and Millions Movement.

Chairman; R. A. Long, Kansas City; R. H. Stockton, St. Louis; Judge J. N. Haymaker, Wichita; M. M. Cochran, Uniontown, Pa.; Wm. F. Irwin, Columbus, Ind.; W. F. Holt, Redlands, Cal.; C. C. Chapman, Fullerton, Cal.; W. Hume Logan, Louisville; A. E. Cory, Executive Secretary.

THE CHICAGO MEETING.

All the members were present at the Chicago meeting except Messrs. Chapman and Stockton. Five sessions were held during two days. The meetings were characterized by deep devotion and prayer. The executive officers of the Commission had gathered detailed information from all of our colleges, and had supplemented this information from various educational Boards. The Executive Committee of the Men and Millions Movement had voted to constitute the Commission advisory members of the Executive Committee. This action was approved, thereby co-ordinating the work of the Commission with the Men and Millions Movement.

Mr. Long's announcement of his purpose to make a gift of $1,000,000 conditional on the raising of $5,300,000, besides, was accompanied by a statement of his belief in the loyalty of our colleges to the divine Lordship of Christ and to the fundamental principles of the Disciples' movement. He said:

> "I am making this gift because I believe that the colleges and societies receiving this fund will for all time be true to that confession which has been the genius and liberty of our people, namely: 'Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God.' I am making it in the belief that they will continue to be loyal to Christ and to His Church and to adhere to the fundamental principles for which our people have always stood."

In a resolution approving of Mr. Long's statement of faith and congratulating the colleges that have already expressed their approval of a similar statement previously submitted to them by Mr. Long, the Commission itself affirmed a like faith in the divinity of our Lord and a like confidence and hope that our colleges would adhere to this faith and be loyal to the Disciples' principles.

STANDARDS SET FOR COLLEGES.

Thereupon the Commission began the discussion of the problem of strengthening and coordinating the colleges of the Disciples. Mr. Cory and Judge Henry submitted much data collected through an elaborate questionnaire showing the financial and academic standing of all our schools. It was agreed that every school sharing in the benefits of the Men and Millions Movement should within the next five years bring its standards up to class A, as determined by the best sentiment of educational authorities in America.

Following are the specifications set forth by the Commission which all institutions are asked to set about attaining before accepting any portion of the fund:

(1) That each of our institutions of learning adopt such designation in the following classification as properly belongs to it and represents its work: University; Graduate School; College; Junior College; Academy; Bible College; Special School.

(2) That the name "University" be dropped from all our schools, with the exception of Drake.

(3) That all medical schools affiliated or connected with our colleges, or universities be dropped as soon as possible.

(4) That the starting of new schools with inadequate endowment should be discouraged.

(5) That a full four years High School course of fourteen or fifteen units be the minimum standard of entrance requirements to the Freshman Class.

(6) That the full four years of college work be done in every school as a prerequisite to granting any bachelor's degree.

(7) That the College Association be asked to suggest suitable standards of faculty requirements and the number of hours that each teacher should teach; it being the desire of the Commission to cooperate in every way in raising the standard of our faculties.

(8) That it is undesirable to associate college students in the same institution with those who are taking preparatory work and those who, without having met college en-

Lebanon Grapes

A Glimpse of a Characteristic Syrian Industry.

BY HERBERT L. WILLETT, JR.

I HAVE been spending a few days at Aley, a village some eight miles inland from Beirut and lying on a crest of the Lebanon mountain range. A week ago the dread sirocco swept over the whole region, and trees now stripped of their foliage, vines withered and ruined by the intense heat, grass and flowers brown and dead are witnesses of the hot wind's visit. Nothing suffered more than the grapes, thousands of pounds being destroyed before relief came; but so plentiful is the crop, that vast quantities are being gathered now, and it is of the use of this fruit that I wish particularly to write.

The grapes of Aley are famous throughout the country for their flavor, size and juiciness, and it is from these hillsides that most of Beirut's choicest grapes are brought during the grape season. The Syrians live on practically nothing but grapes and native bread, and the huge mass of the fruit placed before a visitor at every meal amazes and disconcerts the westerner, unused to "bolting" a whole bunch in less time than it takes to tell of it. Yet we find them so delicious and so inexpensive that we too are planning to make them a staple article of diet, eating seeds, skins and all with great relish.

The Wine Press.

A Lebanon Farm.

VARIETIES OF GRAPES.

There are three chief sorts of grapes, so far as I have been able to discover; the white grape, almost round and the size of a black walnut, which is very sweet, the skin tender and the seeds few; the blue grape, much the same in shape and size, but tougher and less juicy; and the white-mottled grape, shaped like a pecan, and somewhat sour. Little care is taken in separating the vines of the different varieties, and it is only the picker who sorts them and puts them to their respective uses. Vines are never trained up, but lie flat on the ground, on the terraced sides of the Lebanons, thriving in the meagerest quantity of soil, laboriously freed from stones and rocks by the peasants. Just as the grapes begin to form in the spring, small props are put under the vines, and so keep the bunches of fruit off the ground.

After the pickers have finished, the vines are stripped, the leaves being used for fodder, and then are closely pruned and allowed to lie on the ground again until the following spring. As a result of this treatment, single vines often produce from 400 to 500 pounds of grapes per year, recalling the story of the spies, and the burden of fruit they carried away, and I have seen many clusters of bunches too heavy for a man to lift, and growing on a few inches of stalk. Yet the stalks have all the appearance of dead and rotting wood, and seldom grow much larger than a man's wrist.

While there are no set rules for the use of a given variety of the fruit, yet in general the white grapes go to make "dibs" or syrup, which the peasant uses with his bread; the blue grapes make Arak, a strong liquor; and the mottled grapes are dried for raisins. On almost all of the flat roofs of the native houses, you can see large cloths spread out to hold layers of grapes, left to dry in the sun. To keep them from hardening too quickly, they are sprinkled twice a day with water and oil; thus it takes from five days to a week to make them ready to be put away for the winter; and though the flavor is not equal to that of the raisins we buy in America, yet it is very good considering the simplicity of the drying process.

We visited a maasera, or wine press, while the natives were making "dibs," and saw all the different stages of manufacture. Such a press is located near several vineyards, is owned in common by the growers, and is used in turns arranged by the casting of lots.

EXTRACTING THE JUICE.

Several large vats are prepared in the solid rock, the floor sloping slightly toward similar vats set in a lower level; the two sets are connected by a small trench, which carries the juice pressed from the grapes into the lower vats. Piles of the fruit are placed on the upper level and covered with powdered clay, which being heavier, helps to settle all sediment in the juice. Then men walk, jump and stand on this mass, treading it out with their bare feet, until all of the juice is exhausted and has run in a stream that looks as muddy as gutter water, into the lower vats, where it settles for an hour before being dipped up and taken into a stone shed, and turned into a large copper boiler set into the floor over a hole some eight feet square. This cavern has two openings—one through which a man thrusts dried reeds, grasses and thorn bushes to feed the fire, another for the smoke to escape. As the latter has a way of seeking other exits, however, the interior of the hut is often somewhat stifling.

In the caldron the juice is just brought to a boil, then skimmed and allowed once more to settle in outdoor vats. After an hour this juice, now fairly clear, is replaced in the caldron and boiled for four hours, the small particles being skimmed off during the cooking. When cooled the juice is a thick syrup, easily preserved for several months. The sheikh of the hawwara gave me a piece of native bread to dip into some dibs that had just come off the fire, and I found it very good with a flavor not unlike that of maple syrup. It is stored in jars for winter use, and is one of the peasant's most common food supplies.

As we saw the cheerful group talking and singing as they trod out the grapes, and remembered that this process is one of the most happy and social occupations of the people, we felt the meaning of the phrase, "I have trodden the winepress alone," and were able to understand how unusual would be a lonely worker at this task and what utter isolation from one's fellow it represents in the prophetic passage.

MAKING SYRUP.

Arak is a liquor used in large quantities, and found in many flavors, depending upon what grapes are used and what mixtures added. The grapes are simply allowed to ferment for a few days, then are placed in a still and boiled, the vapor being passed through cold water and condensed into a thick syrup. This syrup is extremely intoxicating, but a few drops in a glass of water forms a very popular beverage, stimulating and refreshing. The Syrian knows nothing of grape juice as we use it.

There are comparatively few of the natives who make Arak, raisins or "dibs" for sale; most of them cultivate just enough grapes for their own use, and for the market, where they sell a sufficient quantity to buy their winter supply of wheat.

To be in sympathy with God is wise; without that sympathy we may be clever, shrewd, temporarily successful, but we put money into bags with holes and scatter our seed in stony places.—Joseph Parker.

THE LOSS OF THE SMILE.

WE are printing in this issue one of the most remarkable articles we have ever published. It is an address by Dan Crawford. Visiting England after an absence of twenty-three years, the thing that oppresses him is that England has lost its smile. Coming to America for the first time he does not find it here.

We might have expected that Mr. Crawford would have lost his smile. He has witnessed unnamable atrocities. He has lived in the heart of a heathendom unutterably black. He has been shut off from contact with all that we count worth while. He has spent the years of his young manhood and middle life amid gross barbarism. But he comes back smiling. He has seen the power of the Gospel to save men. He believes that the grace of God is adequate to its task. He has tested his faith and it holds water.

Here we are, worried to nervous prostration over the price of eggs. Back to us comes a missionary who has been submerged a thousand miles deep in the mud of paganism, and he strides down the road with a cheerful, swinging step, and his conversation bubbles over with mirth.

He is no cheap optimist. He knows the horrible side of human life. He has confronted its elemental passions in their most exaggerated manifestation of gross wickedness. But he has seen the power of the Gospel, and his soul sings.

Here is a first hand evidence of Christianity. Here is a man who knows whereof he speaks, and he comes back to us and tells us to smile.

There are few sadder sights than a row of people trying to extract a smile from the alleged funny page of a daily paper. There is something to move one to tears in the faith men have that they can be merry over the crude illustrations of a Sunday supplement. The real sources of joy lie deeper. Dan Crawford has found them. Have we well-fed Christians lost them?

Let us smile. Not the silly, shallow smile, nor the fixed, glued smile, nor the inane and meaningless smile, but the smile that grows out of a deep spiritual life, faith in God, and joy in living.

THE WALLS OF JERICHO.

THESE are hard days for the saloon power. If ever Satan trembled for that stronghold of his, the open saloon, it must be now. The onward march of the hosts of God is straight against this monster of iniquity, and its walls shake like those of Jericho.

Stop and think about it. The temperance reform is only a hundred years old. Drunkenness is as old as Noah. The drink traffic is entrenched in politics and has mighty vested interests leagued with it. Yet here we are with state after state gone dry, and county after county in the wet states declaring for local option, and the forces of righteousness uniting with confident assurance that with the help of God the saloon is to go. And all this has been wrought since yesterday, as time is reckoned.

Men and women who love God and hate rum have attacked Washington demanding Nation-wide prohibition. Railroad after railroad is forbidding its employees to enter saloons or to use intoxicants in any form. Great corporations, one after another, are declaring that as the laws make them more and more responsible for the lives of their men, they must have sober men, who do not endanger their own lives and the lives of others. The laws of economics are opposing the rum power. The stars in their courses are fighting against this age-long evil.

How futile it all looked a few years ago, Carrie Nation with her little hatchet, and a few dear old ladies with their white ribbons, and now and then a minister or a reformed man like Gough and Murphy—what a futile host to be marching round Jericho, blowing their toy rams' horns! Jericho sat tight, and smiled, and now and then sent some money to the police department, and paid very little attention to the procession marching about the walls. But Jericho now begins to wake up and feel some sense of alarm. The walls are high and strong, but there is more power in the blast of a ram's horn than these gentlemen within the walls supposed. Already the walls are toppling in several places, and there are signs of a panic within them.

What a rebuke it would be to our meager faith if we who have been on this weary march for some little time and now and then have blown with rather dry lips should live to see the whole thing crash, and the legalized saloon outlawed wherever the stars and stripes float?

It does not look so completely impossible as it once did.

Keep up the march, and blow a little louder.

Nay, do more than that. Shout, for the Lord hath given you the city!

COULD THE PRISON HAVE DONE IT?

A CHICAGO policeman some years ago was tried on the charge of conspiring to smuggle a witness out of the jurisdiction of the court. He claimed that the testimony against him was perjured, but he was convicted. The case was appealed, and he was released on bail, and obtained employment as detective in a Chicago clothing store. The store knew that he was accused, but was willing to give him a chance. The appellate court affirmed the decision of the lower court, and the order was sent down that he should be taken into custody and sent to the penitentiary for from one to five years. In some way the official document was mislaid. Meantime he had been promoted again and again, and is now manager of the whole great store, one of the largest in the city. Now the order has been found.

It is the official duty of the officers of the law to take this man and send him to the penitentiary, and they will do so unless he is pardoned.

Ought he to be pardoned or punished?

Would imprisonment now make him a better man?

Would the prison have made him as good a man as he now is?

This is no theoretical problem. By the time this paper is in print this man may be behind prison bars.

What ought society to do with such a man?

THE WINTER OF OUR DISCONTENT.

EVERY winter brings to Chicago, as to every great city, a problem which arises from the presence of great numbers of unemployed men, and many unemployed women. Reports of the various charitable agencies of Chicago reveal that this problem in an exaggerated form is early forcing itself upon Chicago this year. It is estimated that there are close to 100,000 unemployed men now in the city. The Municipal Lodging House, one of the wisest provisions to meet this situation, is already greatly overcrowded, its provision to care for 175 men being stretched to care for about 400 men, and many being turned away. The department of homeless men of the United Charities reports that the increase of applicants is already over 300 per cent. The charitable agencies of the county are likewise overtaxed.

The mayor has appointed a commission on the unemployed, and to that honorable body, various agencies, including the Local Betterment Committee of the Federated Church Council, have reported recommendations. Additional provisions through the Municipal Lodging House are soon to be opened, and it is hoped that the city will provide work in some manner for the army of idle men anxious to earn a mere livelihood. The situation will doubtless be met, although not in a way to prevent a vast amount of suffering, and a little development of anarchistic and revolutionary sentiment.

Why should not Chicago and other American cities learn from economics, and the practice of German cities, and be prepared against these annual perils by having funds in reserve and being ready with some form of public work whenever private industry, especially the seasonal vocations, turns adrift large numbers of unskilled workers to starve or be fed by charity.

A growing number of employers of labor seem to feel the responsibility of providing in some manner for their laborers to carry them over periods of depression. Surely, for the community it will prove more profitable and far less dangerous to enable men to earn their living, than to compel them to beg or steal bread, and to sleep in bunk-houses or the saloons. It is a matter of satisfaction to know that the Christian church, represented in the Federated Church Council, is upholding the gospel by taking an active interest in this serious matter.

THE OVERTHROW OF MODESTY.

OUR editorial warning parents not to neglect their own duty nor to trust too largely to sex-instruction as a cure for all modern evils has been widely copied, and we are glad to see secular papers uttering sensible words on the subject. The Argonaut, of San Francisco, has this thoughtful editorial:

During the last few years we have seen the almost complete destruction of those reticences upon sex matters that doubtless had their own attendant evils, but that did actually prevent far more evils than they caused. What we call plain speaking became a vogue and a fashion. Literature and the drama combined in what was said to be a moral crusade, but that was actually a financial crusade. And now the churches have followed suit. Nothing is too private for public discussion, no audience too young for admission and participation, no vital fact too explosive for reckless handling. Upon every side we see gross familiarity at its deadly work. Here in San Francisco we are about to have what its promoters call a Purity Sunday. Countless sermons will be preached to audiences of young men and young women, and with their own sex relations as a topic. Does any one with a sane knowledge of human nature suppose that even the most exquisite delicacy can neutralize the inevitable poison of those sermons? Is it not well known to even the tyro in such matters that here at least the most fatal and irresistible of all forces is that of suggestion, and that reason and prudence struggle in vain against it. The cure for this sort of evil is reticence and not publicity, mystery and not familiarity, the home and not the pulpit, the mother and not the school-teacher. To err in such a matter as this is to poison the rising generation. Indeed if we are to credit the hysterical exaggerations of the women's clubs the rising generation is already poisoned by a familiarity that presents experiment as a pleasing adventure in well-known paths.

Therefore it is time that we called a halt to the sex fanatics. They have been at their work for some years past, and now the air is becoming unbreathable. Every field of publicity has been invaded. They have almost persuaded us that sex is the one thing worth thinking about and worth talking about. The results are sufficiently evil upon matured minds that have learned to govern themselves. Upon immature minds to whom self-government has hardly occurred it has been little short of disastrous. Every sacred mystery of life has been cheapened, coarsened, profaned. All the protective veils of mystery and sanctity have been broken down, and in their place we are offered statistics, hospital reports, and iodoform. It is these sex fanatics that are largely responsible for the juvenile immorality of the day. It is the sex newspaper, the sex drama, the sex novel, the sex reformer, and the sex pulpit that have created it. And it has been nourished by the apathy and the neglect of parents who are quite content that the policewoman and the delinquency court shall do the work that has been so shamelessly neglected by themselves.

Let us hope that we are nearly at the end of this particular epoch lest some worse thing befall us. It is bad enough that for years past our young people should have been forced to live in an atmospere of public discussion comparable only with that of an open sewer. Things will have come to a pretty pass if we must now forbid our children to go either to school or to church for fear of the moral contamination that must ensue.

Ignorance is in some cases a contributory cause of sexual sin, but it is not the sole cause, nor even the chief cause. Purity is not to be attained by the mere stripping of the raiment of reticence from the limbs of modesty. And the present moment of violent hysteria on sex problems is not the sanest and best time in which to make sweeping readjustments. The reticences that guard decency are not ruthlessly to be trampled. The way to purify lies not in that direction. Again let us say, there is no cheap substitute for parental responsibility. It were better for a parent that he were drowned in the depth of the sea than that he should fail of his own duty in this direction through cheerful surrender to hysterical enthusiasts.

PEACE SENTIMENT GROWS.

WE CANNOT be too thankful for the growth of the peace sentiment in the United States. The Lake Mohonk Conference, the peace societies, the teaching of ministers, the continual advocacy of international peace by the religious papers, these and other means have gradually begun to act upon public opinion until today "grim-visaged War" cannot raise its "wrinkled front" without arousing the protests of good and true women the world over. Although European nations are still staggering under the impoverishing taxes necessary to maintain huge armies and great fleets of war-vessels, even there diplomats and cabinets, lawmakers and the people are making it more and more difficult to embroil the continent in war. The self-restraint shown by the great powers during the recent war in the Balkan States is unmistakable evidence that dread of war is based on something more substantial than fear of each other. Three or four decades ago such an international complication as was observable near the Bosphorus would almost inevitably have set the war drums beating and started the recruiting officers feeding men into the jaws of the war dragon. Although this hatred of war may arise, in part, from the unwillingness of commercial people to see their business injured, and from the growth of war-hating socialism, even more is it born out of growing detestation of war as war. The people of the United States ought to be devoutly thankful that in the present crisis in Mexican affairs there is in the White House a man committed to peace.

DEMOCRATIC CONVENTIONS.

"ECCLESIASTICISM."

IT IS a bugaboo word. It conjures up pictures of tyranny and autocracy and creed-making and heresy trials. It revives memories of medievalism. It suggests the union of state and church as in Spain and in England.

It is unfortunate that the word has fallen into bad repute. It is in its make-up a good word and denotes a good thing. Like "Higher Criticism," which the late Professor McGarvey always stoutly defended as a legitimate and helpful science, it has come to stand in the popular mind for the abuse of the good thing which its proper use connotes. To say a man is a "higher critic" is, in certain circles, to condemn him, notwithstanding Professor McGarvey always insisted that he himself was a higher critic.

Likewise, to classify a plan of church organization as an "ecclesiasticism" is, in similar circles, to condemn it without regard to its inherent merits.

What, then, in its good and proper sense, does ecclesiasticism mean? It means that these free churches, or "ecclesiæ," are and should regard themselves as being subordinate to the whole Church of Christ. It means that they are articulated in an organization larger than any one of them, through which they are able to serve certain ends which they could not serve in isolation. It means that the local church accepts its place as a member of the social organism, the Church of Christ. It means that the ideal of the Body of Christ is made real and visible in a practical co-operative unity.

The Disciples of Christ are committed to the view that the ecclesiastical relations of a church of Christ should be had with the whole Body of Christ, beginning with other churches of Christ in its own community and extending in widening circles to the last church in the end of the earth. Our protest against the denominational order is based upon the ground that it renders impossible this ideal ecclesiastical relationship. It divides churches into sets or sects, and those of one set have no ecclesiastical relations with those of another set.

The Disciples stand in this anomalous position: They have come out from the denominational order, and are unable, for the present, to find adequate ecclesiastical relationship.

Leaving denominationalism, they had to leave ecclesiasticism Their goal, however, is the re-establishment of a true ecclesiastical order wherein may dwell unity and democracy.

AT THE END OF THE DAY

ON GROWING OLD.

EDITOR THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY:

A LITTLE poem-prayer appeared in your pages some weeks ago "written especially for The Christian Century," and entitled, "The Prayer of One Growing Old." I have read it again and again. No name is attached to it, but I know it springs out of a rich and gracious soul. I have wondered much who might be its author, and have pictured to myself the circumstances of now this and now that writer whose name appears frequently in your columns, and have re-read the verses as though they were falling now from the lips of this and now that one. But I have failed to identify their author through this test of imagination.

I therefore take the verses in their anonymity, and thank the Holy Spirit from whom I have no slightest doubt their prompting came. May I take the liberty of quoting the verses again? They will voice for all of us who have passed the stage of unreflective youth the prayer our hearts evermore try to utter.

"Be with me Lord! My house is growing still,
As one by one the guests go out the door;
And they who helped me once to do thy will Behold and praise thee on the heavenly shore.

"Uphold my strength! My task is not yet done,
Nor let me at my labor cease to sing;
But from the rising to the setting of the sun
Each faithful hour do service to my King.

"Show me thy light! Let not my wearied eyes
Miss the fresh glory of the passing day;
But keep the light of morn—the sweet surprise
Of each new blessing that attends my way.

And for the crowning grace!—O Lord, renew
The best of gifts thy best of saints have had;
With the great joy of Christ my heart endue,
To share the whole world's tears and still be glad."

THE first two lines linger in my ear. My house still rings with the merriment of childhood. Guests come often and leave behind them love and knowledge and inspiration. My labors yet consume me. The chance for meditation and, alas! even for prayer, is scant. But sometimes at the end of the day, when the house is still, the pages of the book in my hand look dull and unappealing, and my thoughts run forward to the time when weakness and age shall change for me too all the aspect of the world. I know that I then will dwell in tender reminiscence upon the past. I suppose that only under the most obstinate protest will I resign my mind to the idea that I have really "grown old." Probably I will insist that I am as fit for active labor as I ever was—that I can write better, preach better and give better counsel than in my younger days. I will think much about heaven, no doubt, partly because so many more of my friends and dear ones will be there and partly because there will be continually brushing against my face the gentle zephyrs from the farther shore.

What man of fifty years, or even forty, is there among all your readers, Mr. Editor, who has not wholly changed his view as to the sufficiency of the three-score and ten years allotted to a human life? In youth the years before us looked like a constellation of planets, each one awaiting our leisurely habitation. At forty and fifty and sixty they look like a string of tiny beads. We no more than get used to writing 1913 than we have to change to 1914. We come home from our summer holiday with stern resolutions to accomplish certain definite tasks during the year, and lo! the summer is upon us again before we have gotten fairly started.

UNLESS our minds have grown callous with business and ambition and selfishness, this reflection on the swift passing of years is most solemnizing.

We are growing old!

Let us not be depressed over it, but let us not be deceived. Let us face it as a fact and ask our hearts fairly, at this opening of a new year, just what kind of old age ours is to be.

Nothing fascinates me more than a beautiful aged soul. Little children interest me with their innocence, their yet unrevealed possibilities. But old age tells its own story. My emotion in the presence of a richly-laden life, well-lived and radiant with a faith that is one of veneration and pathos amounting almost to awe. Here, I feel, is the justification of life. It is not in the great deeds one has done. It is not in the objective contribution one has made to the social order of the world. It is not in the tool that one has invented, or the new truth one has uttered, or the new law one has drafted. It is not in any of these things that one's life consists, but in one's SELF, one's soul.

"The best is yet to be,"

SOME one wrote a book with the title, "Growing a Soul." I have not read the book, but I got more light from the title alone, than from many a book I have read. That is what life is for, is it not?—to grow souls! Life isn't just a mere chance to invent tools or to utter truths or to make laws. Tools, truths and laws are all mere means to the end of producing souls. Civilization isn't anything to glory in, for its own sake; but the souls that civilization makes possible—that is the thing to glory in. Souls do not exist for civilization, but civilization exists for souls.

Civilization is just a word by which we are able to say in five syllables: Here is a great chance for men to become great souls!

And while it must evermore be remembered that souls grow great through service within the social order—not, as the ascetics think, through mystical meditation apart from the social order—it must not be forgotten that the greatest thing about service in the social order is the personal character from which it springs and into which it reacts. That is why

"All service ranks the same with God.
There is no last nor first."

That is why I venerate old age. It shows me the ripened fruit of the universe. It's what all this wonderful Creation's for. And that is why I do not share for myself the strange desire of those who pray to die "with the harness on." By that prayer they mean that they wish to escape old age, they wish to be taken while they are strong and efficient in the world's work.

My prayer is that God may give me a chance to collect my moral goods together before He takes me hence.

MY work, like yours, Mr. Editor, and like that of most of your readers, is hard and urgent and leaves little chance for meditation, for detachment, and for a full and fair appreciation of the meaning of this life. After my work is done I want a chance to sit beside the highway, just before the sunset, and count over my soul's gains and losses before I am called to give my account to God.

I know no higher goal to set before myself than to live so that I may, in my time, enter upon a happy and, if God wills it, a blessed old age.

I want to carry with me as much as possible into that experience.

The sordid tares which—despite my prayers—still appear in the field which I have sown with my best purposes, I hope to have fully cast away.

I wish to carry forward with me a great sheaf of friendships—the kind of friendships that grow out of the soil of simple and unaffected respect.

I wish to carry with me all the knowledge of the world I can gain as I go along—through travel and books and personal intercourse with my friends and teachers.

I wish to have in my soul the honest knowledge that somewhere in my life I did at least one truly heroic deed, a deed that drew forth all my courage, that was prompted by sheer faith and that cost me my heart's blood.

I wish to be saved the saddening recollection that I ever did injustice to any man.

I wish that my dear ones—those to whom in early life I owed obedience, and those for whom in later life I was responsible—may make for me a love's-circle at the end of the day around the mystical hearth-fire of memory.

I wish that I may have the sense of deepening fellowship with Christ, my Saviour, and through that a clearer knowledge of God whose Providence embraces all my years.

These are my wishes for myself, Mr. Editor, at the end of this last day of the old year. They are my wishes for all your readers, also, who, like myself, count up the increasing years with trembling thoughts.

EPISCOPALIAN LOSSES AND GAINS.

In an editorial in the Living Church Annual for 1914, the chief stress is placed upon the rather disappointing increase in the number of communicants. Though it is stated that in this report the communicant roll is found to exceed the one million mark, yet it is noted also that the actual gain, a fraction of 2 per cent, is less than usual, reaching only 18,196 as compared with 22,924 last year, and more than 26,000 in 1908.

Commenting upon this fact, the editor of the church annual writes as follows:

More and more the attention of the Church should be concentrated upon the grave evil of the loss of communicants through "drift." Parish after parish drops these in large blocks at the beginning of a new rectorship, and frequently at other intervals. Never are the year's statistics closed without the enumeration of many dioceses in which these wholesale removals have cost the entire diocese an apparent decrease in numerical standing.

The year's gains throughout are small. The clergy have increased by 37, as against 72 in 1912 and 63 in 1911 but only 27 in 1910. The normal increase in parishes and missions invariably exceeds that of the clergy. In the last ten years the net gain in clergy has been less than 500, while that in parishes and missions has been more than double that. In 1913 there was one clergyman to every 175 communicants; in 1903 one to every 150.

Over against these unfavorable figures is to be placed the favorable fact, that the gain in baptisms is the largest reported in six years, and that in Sunday-school pupils larger than for many years.

CHURCH MEMORIAL TO ROBERT COLLYER.

A memorial window was unveiled in the Unitarian Church of the Messiah in New York City to the Rev. Robert Collyer, on Sunday, December 7. It was of this church that Doctor Collyer was for so many years pastor and pastor emeritus. The subject selected for artistic treatment was "John Wesley Preaching to the Miners," and the scene was Kingswood Common, near Bristol, England. Doctor Collyer was himself born in the mining district of Yorkshire, and was for ten years in England and America a Methodist local preacher while he practiced his trade as a blacksmith. In the design Wesley wears the Geneva gown and bands in use at the time by the clergy of the Church of England when preaching, and in the faces of the auditors may be discerned the magnetic effect of the message in course of delivery. In the upper section of the window appears a reproduction of the reverse of a medal struck out to commemorate the death of John Wesley, and bears the text, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

On the base of the window in a panel is a memorial inscription reading thus:

In Loving Memory of
ROBERT COLLYER
Dec. 8, 1823—Nov. 30, 1912.
"He held fast to the things that are good."

CHICAGO PLANS "GO TO CHURCH DAY."

Plans for Chicago's big "Go-to-Church-Day," launched by an editorial in a Chicago paper, have matured rapidly.

At four different meetings of Protestant clergymen "Go-to-Church-Day" was up for consideration. It had the general approbation of the ministers. Delegates to a big meeting to be held in the Hotel La Salle were appointed. At the meetings of the Baptist, Congregational, Presbyterian and Methodist ministers, communications from A. G. Fegert, president of the Chicago Christian Endeavor Union, were read.

Mr. Fegert commended the idea of a great "Go-to-Church-Day." He asked that each of the ministers' associations appoint delegates to attend the Hotel LaSalle meeting. This meeting will be non-denominational. Representatives of all the churches will be there. Plans for the day will be discussed. Committees to take charge of the work will be appointed. An advertising and publicity campaign will be outlined.

Each of the ministers' associations named delegates for this meeting. The following speakers have been selected to address the Hotel La Salle meeting: Bishop Charles P. Anderson of the Episcopal Church; Dr. Emil G. Hirsch, representing the Jewish congregations; Rev. John Timothy Stone, Presbyterian; Rev. Frank S. Anderson, Baptist; Dr. Ozora S. Davis, president Chicago Theological Institute; Rev. C. G. Kindred, Christian Church; Secy. Marion Lawrence; and Rev. P. J. O'Callaghan, representing the Roman Catholics and Bishop W. F. McDowell of the Methodist Church.

Many church organization are already preparing for the campaign. It is proposed to establish regular downtown headquarters and to work along well defined lines in making the day one of the most memorable Chicago has ever seen.

"I think the idea of a "Go-to-Church-Day" an excellent one," said Mayor Harrison to a reporter.

"Personally I shall be very glad to go on February 1, or any other Sunday that may be fixed upon for such observance. Of course I do not mean that any person's churchgoing ought to be limited to a single Sunday, but it does seem to me that there is nobody that ought not to go at least that often." The Mayor said that he has made no particular plans to attend church with his cabinet, but added that he thought the idea merited consideration.

For weeks before the eventful day, Chicago will be placarded with huge signs "Go-to-Church-Sunday." All big firms will be asked to placard their delivery wagons with stickers calling on the people to "go to church." Young women will cover all prominent street corners for several days before the big "Go-to-Church-Day," distributing cards that will urge their recipients to "go to church."

METHODISTS IN SOCIAL SERVICE.

The Methodist Social Service Commission is doing a very practical work in the carrying out of its new plans. These include the following definite lines:

1. (a) A careful investigation as to the extent as to which Methodist churches of cities are lined up with the associated charities;

(b) A systematic effort to bring all the churches that are not so related into active co-operation.

2. (a) The preparation of a classified list of the charities and movements for social betterment, public and private, in the city;.

(b) The selection from this list of such as the federation can co-operate with, and an effort to bring into line the forces of the federation, and also, as far as possible, of the Church.

3. (a) A careful study of the foreign population of these cities, of the location of foreign communities, their needs of every sort, and how fully these needs are supplied.

(b) An effort to supply such needs as are not already met, by bringing this information before the stronger churches and before the missionary societies of the churches in a given city.

NEWS NOTES.

A religious census of Wichita was taken recently. Not quite half of the population was reached, but twenty-nine different faiths were found. The Buddhists have one adherent: the Socialists and Swedenborgians have two each. The Methodists found the largest number of members and the Presbyterians the second largest.

The annual meeting of the Temperance Society of the Methodist Church was held recently in Topeka, where its world headquarters were established about a year ago. In the work which is being pushed by this organization thousands of pastors have pledged themselves to hold street meetings, while nearly half a million young people have signed the total abstinence pledge.

The most valuable property held by a religious denomination in Philadelphia is the Arch-Street Methodist Episcopal Church at Broad and Arch Streets, which is assessed at $900,000. The site is desired for an office structure, but the trustees of the Church have refused to let the property go for less than $1,000,000.

The Christian people of Holland showed hospitality toward the Edinburgh Continuation Committee when it met at The Hague in November. The members of the committee, which represents the comprehensive Protestant foreign mission forces of all Christendom, were virtually the guests of the Dutch nation during their stay. The entertainment fund which provided for their expenses at one of The Hague's spacious hotels was contributed by persons of the highest social and official station, including Queen Wilhelmina herself.

"John Barleycorn"

BY EDGAR DEWITT JONES.

The personality of some authors enhances the value of their writings. This is certainly true with regard to "John Barleycorn," Mr. Jack London's terrific arraignment of the drink evil.

1. To begin with, Mr. London is one of America's most original story writers and since "O. Henry's" death, Mr. London has no rival in vigor and freshness of style, brilliant color and cleverness. He has written a long row of unusual and gripping tales. Among these are "The Sea Wolf," "The Call of the Wild," "White Fang," "Before Adam," "Martin Eden," "The Valley of the Moon," "The Abysmal Brute," and "Smoke Bellew."

2. Mr. London is a man of the world. He has seen life from many angles. He has known the bitter sting of poverty, has been a tramp, a sailor, a gold seeker in Alaska. He has read prodigiously, written prolifically, and always interestingly. He has fraternized with all sorts and conditions of men and has won success and fame with all that such success can bring in luxury and possessions.

3. Philosophically and politically Mr. London is a socialist. Intellectually he is at war with the present social order. He is also an out-and-out revolutionist and if his life has ever been directly affected by religion and particularly by institutional Christianity, he has nowhere recorded it. It is well to remember these facts in order to weigh fairly and fully the tremendous plea he makes in "John Barleycorn" for total abstinence and the elimination of the saloon.

"MEMOIRS OF AN ALCOHOLIC."

John Barleycorn is not fiction, but autobiography. It is the story of Mr. London's own struggle with the drink demon. Some reviewers regard these "confessions" as worthy to rank with De Quincy's. Mr. London was five years old when he had his first bout with John Barleycorn. He was carrying a pail of beer to his father, who was working in a field half a mile from the house. In childish curiosity he sampled the beer and though it tasted like medicine he drank half the contents of the pail and thereby became a very sick little boy, and lay all afternoon at the edge of the field. His next struggle with the demon was when he was seven. It was on a Sunday afternoon, where there were many youngsters and much wine. An Italian asked him to have a glass of wine and because he was afraid to refuse he drank the stuff down at a gulp and being urged he drank glass after glass until he was terribly, madly drunk. He very nearly died and was sick for weeks. Yet it was treated as a joke by his elders. Everybody drank about him. There was not a teetotaler in the community. He tells us that "at every time in the world in which I lived (in which I lived) John Barleycorn beckoned, all paths led to him." Then began his long acquaintance with saloons and drinking men, his ability to drink great quantities of liquor and keep his head, then occasional wild excesses and deep debauches. All the time, he tells us, he did not drink because he liked it but because others drank and the social side was attractive. Slowly but surely he found his system needing liquor in order to keep himself keyed up to the proper pitch. Then came his rise as a writer and John Barleycorn's rise with him, because the demon had gripped him and now held him fast. Only by reading every line of this extraordinary book can one get the full and awful import of the story. Mr. London is not a reformed drinker. He still drinks and sadly tells us why he does. Here is a passage out of the heart of his confessions:

"My life has indeed fallen in pleasant places. Not a hundred men in a million have been so lucky as I. Yet, with all this vast good fortune, am I sad. And I am sad because John Barleycorn is with me. And John Barleycorn is with me because I was born in what future ages will call the dark ages, before the ages of rational civilization. John Barleycorn is with me because in all the unwitting days of my youth John Barleycorn was accessible, calling to me and inviting me on every corner and on every street between the corners. The pseudo-civilization into which I was born permitted everywhere licensed shops for the sale of soul-poison. The system of life was so organized that I (and millions like me) was lured and drawn and driven to the dram shops."

THE CURE—ABOLISH THE SALOON.

Mr. London has convictions on the drink evil and boldly states them. Abolish the saloon is the cure, the only cure he affirms for all the woe and distress that John Barleycorn causes. We have been accustomed to hear this counsel from ministers, reformers, temperance workers and church people, but this war cry from Jack London is in every way noteworthy. Nothing from Gough, Murphy, Frances E. Willard, Dow, Beecher, or Bryan surpasses these words of London.

"And like such a survivor of old red War who cries out, "Let there be no more! so I cry out, "Let there be no more poison-fighting by our youths!" The way to stop war is to stop it. The way to stop drinking is to stop it. The way China stopped the general use of opium was by stopping the cultivation and importation of opium. The philosophers, priests and doctors of China could have preached themselves breathless against opium for a thousand years, and the use of opium, so long as opium was ever-accessible and obtainable, would have continued unabated. We are so made, that is all. We have with great success made a practice of not leaving arsenic and strychnine, and typhoid and tuberculosis germs, lying around for our children to be destroyed by. Treat John Barleycorn the same way. Stop him. Don't let him lie around, licensed and legal, to pounce upon our youth. Not of alcoholics, nor for alcoholics do I write, but for our youths, for those who possess no more than the adventure-stings and the genial predispositions, the social man-impulses, which are twisted all awry by our barbarian civilization which feeds them with poison on all the corners. It is the healthy, normal boys, now born or being born, for whom I write."

THE CURE—GIVE WOMEN THE BALLOT.

Not only does Mr. London advocate the abolition of the saloon but he indicates the way to do it. Give the women the ballot, he says, and they will accomplish the cure. He tells us further that the reason he voted for Woman's Suffrage in California was that he "knew that they, the wives and mothers of our race would put John Barleycorn out of existence, back into the historical limbo of our vanished customs of savagery." In the following magnificent passage he gives a reason for the hope that is within him that women with votes will put John Barleycorn down and out forever:

"The women are the true conservators of the race. The men are the wastrels, the adventure lovers and gamblers, and in the end it is by their women that they are saved. About man's first experiment in chemistry was the making of alcohol, and down all the generations to this day man has continued to manufacture and drink it. And there has never been a day when the women have not resented a man's use of alcohol, though they have never had the power to give weight to their resentment. The moment women get the vote in any community, the first thing they proceed to do, or try to do, is to close the saloons. In a thousand generations to come men of themselves will not close the saloons. As well expect the morphine victims to legislate the sale of morphine out of existence.

The women know. They have paid an incalculable price of sweat and tears for man's use of alcohol. Ever jealous for the race, they will legislate for the babes of boys yet to be born; and for the babes of girls, too, for they must be the mothers, wives, and sisters of these boys.

And it will be easy. The only ones that will be hurt will be the topers and seasoned drinkers of a single generation. I am one of these, and I make a solemn assurance, based upon long traffic with John Barleycorn, that it won't hurt me very much to stop drinking when no one else drinks and when no drink is obtainable. On the other hand, the overwhelming proportion of young men are so normally non-alcoholic, that, never having had access to alcohol, they will Representative Hobson on Mrs. Exe.

Don't take that man for a leader!''

The speaker was Representative Hobson, the occasion a banquet in Washington.

''Don't take a man for a leader,'' he repeated, ''or you will be as badly off as Mrs. Exe.''

''Mrs. Exe stood on a crowded corner when the traffic was at its height, staring at the thick, tangled come-and-go of motor cars and drays and cabs, and not daring to venture in among the dangers of that moving mass.''

'' 'May I cross the street with you, madam?'

''She turned and saw an elderly stranger with lifted hat and gallant smile.

'' 'Oh, thank you,' said Mrs. Exe, and the stranger grasped her arm with a firm grip and together they plunged boldly into the wild crush of vehicles.

''In and out, right and left, up and down they zigzagged at imminent peril of life and limb. Pedestrians on the sidewalk stopped and looked at them. Drivers and chauffeurs shouted and swore at them. It was plain to all that they were in unusual danger.

''The escort of Mrs Exe, still wearing his gallant smile, still grasping her arm, finally seemed to make no effort to avoid the oncoming vehicles. He darted erratically and yet calmly this way and that.

''At last, by a miracle, the other side was reached. Mrs. Exe then jerked her arm away from her escort's grasp and with a look of scorn she said:

'' 'It's no thanks to you that we weren't both killed. Why, the way you positively courted danger one would think you were blind.'

'' 'Madam, I am blind,' he replied. 'That's why I asked if I could cross with you.' ''

Mayor Mitchell's Law Story.

Mayor Mitchell of New York was talking about an attack that had been made upon him during the campaign.

''My accuser,'' he said, ''reminds me of Hi Doolittle. Hi was the champion liar of his native village.

''One day Hi was arrested and brought before the local justice for chicken stealing. He pleaded guilty.

'' ' Yes, jedge, yer honor,' he said. 'I plead guilty on the advice of my lawyer.'

''But the local justice rubbed his chin dubiously.

'' 'I dunno—I'm afraid,' he stammered—'I guess—wall, Hiram, I guess I'll have to have more evidence afore I sentence ye.' ''

Mrs. Pankhurst's Sentiments Got Lost.

Mrs. Pankhurst, discussing with a New York reporter her reception by the government, said:

''I was, I confess, taken aback. I entered the bay with my heart glowing with the warmest sentiments—and they shipped me off to Ellis Island as an undesirable.

''I felt like that young man who said, bending over a beautiful young girl passionately:

''Miss Higginson—Arabella—there is something has been trembling on my lips for the last three months.'

'' 'Yes, I've noticed it in certain strong lights,' she answered. 'Why don't you shave it off.' ''

Greeting General Hardee.

General Hardee, the famous Confederate commander, was a strict disciplinarian. One day he rode out on picket line, and found a sentry, a raw recruit, sitting on a rail fence munching a piece of bacon. The general drew his horse up. The sentry sat munching away unconcernedly. ''Do you know who I am?'' demanded General Hardee, in his severest tones. ''Stranger, I 'low I don't.'' ''I am General Hardee, and''—Without stopping to hear the rest, the raw recruit climbed down from the fence and, scrambling into the road, extended his hand, as he said: ''How air yer, Gineral? I'm mighty glad to see yer lookin' so peart.''

The Science of Dogs.

''The senator's ignorance of banking reminds me of the three ladies in the observation car,'' said Frank A. Vanderlip in a recent interview upon the currency bill.

''These three ladies as they shot in an observation car Californiaward through the superbest scenery in the world fell to talking about dogs.

'' 'I don't know a thing about dogs,' said the first lady. 'They're all just dogs to me. If I had a preference, though, it's for the cob.

'' 'Cobs are nice—so affectionate,' agreed the second lady. 'But I'm no dog sharp, either. Still, I must say my choice of a dog would be a mustang. They're such good watch dogs, aren't they?'

'' 'I don't know one dog from another,' said the third lady. 'I just divide them into big dogs and little dogs. I'm very fond of a hackney, though—I mean, of course, for a lap dog.' ''

A Jonathan Edwards Story.

It is related that a young man went one day to the famous New England preacher, Jonathan Edwards, to ask for his daughter.

''You can't have her,'' said Mr. Edwards.

''But I love her.''

''No matter, you can't have her.''

''But she loves me, too.''

''I say you can't have her.''

''But I am well off and can support her.''

''You can't have her, I tell you.''

''Why not, Mr. Edwards? What have you against me?''

''Nothing.''

''Well, then, why can't I have Emily?''

''Because, I think you are a pretty decent sort of a man—too good for her.''

''What? Mr. Edwards, what in the world do you mean?''

''She's got a wicked temper, and you wouldn't be happy with her.''

''But I thought she was a Christian.''

''So she is, young man, so she is. But before you have lived as long as I have you'll find that there are some people in this world that the grace of God can live with, but you can't.''

He Wanted ''Pervisions.''

One day during President Lincoln's administration an old negro, clad in rags and carrying a large empty basket, ambled into the Executive Mansion. Stepping toward President Lincoln, he said:

''Am you de President, sah?''

''I am,'' said Mr. Lincoln.

''If dat am a fac', I's glad to meet yer. Yer see, I lives away up dar in de back o' Virginia, and I's a poor man, sah. I hear dere is some pervisions in de Constitution for de culled man, and I'm here to get some ob 'em, sah.''

John D., Jr., on Saving.

''Save when you're young.'' The speaker, John D. Rockefeller Jr., was addressing a Y. M. C. A. meeting in Cleveland.

''Save when you're young,'' repeated Mr. Rockefeller, with a smile. ''The years will pass swiftly. Then, when you find yourself well on, you'll also find yourself well off.''

Ex-Secretary Dickinson's Story.

When Jacob M. Dickinson, formerly secretary of war, as a member of the Alaskan boundary tribunal was called upon suddenly to make his argument because Sir Edward Carson had concluded his remarks one day ahead of time, he began by telling a story. ''So far from feeling any sense of confidence,'' he said to the president of the court, ''I am in a position very deeply to sympathize with the feeling of the confederate soldier who, when the battle line was sweeping forward in the last fearful charge at Chickamauga, and a rabbit jumped up and ran through the rear, cried out: 'Run, cottontail! If I did not have any more character at stake than you have, I would run, too.' '' saloon only in the pages of history, and they will think of the saloon as a quaint old custom similar to bull-baiting and the burning of witches.''

Values of the Book.

1. It is difficult to over-estimate the value of this unique volume. Purely as a literary event the work is fascinating, but this is the least important feature. The publication of this autobiography first in the most widely-circulated weekly magazine in the world and then in book form by the notable house is an aid to sobriety incalculable.

2. The social side of drinking and the social appeal of the saloon is a fact that must be taken into account by all social workers. More and more churches and Christian associations, must take into account the social nature of humanity and provide for same. Mr. London's experiences constitute important data for the sociologist.

3. Mr. London's book comes at the opportune time. The drink evil is confronted by foes today not simply in the church, but in industry, in commerce, in economics and in politics. And now this tremendous broadside from one of our foremost literary men is sensational in the best sense.

4. Mr. London's belief that women with the ballot will put John Barleycorn to rout has received startling corroboration in the November elections in Illinois. In the average community from 85 to 90 per cent of the women voting may be counted on as voting against the saloon. Bloomington saloons cannot survive before the ballots of our womanhood.

5. Read this book. Give away copies of the book to youth and middle age. Put this volume in the hands of saloonkeeper and scholar, of miner and minister, of politician, and priest, and everywhere it goes it will sow the seeds of moral dynamite.

Disciples Table Talk

Tribute to Predecessor's Wife.

In the opening of his sermon on C. W. B. M. day E. F. Daugherty, of Vincennes, Ind., paid a tribute to the wife of his predecessor in the Vincennes pastorate, Mrs. Wm. Oeschger, whose husband is now Chancellor of Cotner University, Lincoln, Nebr. "It seems to me that in naming our young women's organization 'The Dema Oeschger Mission Circle' deserved honor has been paid to her life and devotion in this church," said Mr. Daugherty. "Whatever excellence the auxiliary to the C. W. B. M. in this church and county may have rests upon the inspirational foundation and growth which her zeal and labor afforded. It is not every congregation that can claim the memory of a full-hearted devotion from an efficient and capable woman in the promotion of a great cause. But I venture to say that the memory of Dema Oeschger through life and after death will linger in the annals of this church, a very responsible explanation of whatever missionary achievements it may, in the good grace and time of God, record."

Tribute to Kentucky Preacher.

"Possibly the greatest tribute ever paid to a citizen of Mt. Sterling, Ky., declares a local paper, was that accorded Rev. H. D. Clarke, whose funeral was held at the Christian church, Dec. 19. Every business house in the city closed out of respect to the dead. The funeral sermon was preached by Mark Collis, of Lexington. Before the church services, Manager Crockett stopped all work at the Farmers' Tobacco Warehouse and services in honor of the dead minister were held. B. F. Horton, pastor of the Methodist church at Richmond, paying a glowing tribute to the dead that was listened to by a crowd of men clad in overalls. The bells of the city were tolled during the march to the cemetery, where 128 members of the Hazelrigg Bible class dropped carnations on the casket of their beloved teacher."

South Bend Women to Teach Foreigners.

To help foreign mothers to learn the English language as the fathers and brothers have opportunity of doing is the mission which the C. W. B. M. of First Church, South Bend, Ind., has taken upon itself. Arrangements to do so were made at a recent meeting, as the result of a talk by Miss Olive Bailey, nurse at the Children's dispensary, on the necessity of education among the mothers. A class in English will be organized at the dispensary, following the regular clinic and will meet each Wednesday following. Mrs. H. M. Appleman, who formerly taught in one of the city's schools, and is familiar with the desire of the mothers for education, has volunteered her services as teacher and she will have several assistants, also volunteer workers.

R. W. Gentry Receives Surprise.

A gathering that packed the basement of the church at Winfield, Kan., came through the rain to attend the recent "First Annual Banquet" and welcome the one hundred new members that have joined during the year. The first part of the program consisted of an oyster banquet and a greeting to the new members, who all wore blue ribbons. It had then been planned to complete a campaign for $2,000 on the church debt. But such success crowned the efforts of the workers that by the middle of the afternoon the full three thousand dollars had been raised, and so the meeting was turned into a Jubilee Banquet instead. The paying of this sum on the debt means much to the church at this time. The church was forced to repair its furnace this fall at a cost of several hundred dollars, and a generous member offered to give this sum if the payment of the debt was raised. The banquet was planned to raise the entire amount, but in the afternoon the amount was pledged and the banquet instead of being a debt raising occasion was turned into an occasion of joy. The committee played a good joke on the pastor of the church, R. W. Gentry. He was not informed the money had been raised so prepared to deliver a money raising speech. In the midst of his peroration a member slipped up to him and tipped off the information. The announcement about took his breath away but he was equal to the occasion and suggested the singing of "Praise God From Whom All Blessings Flow," which was done.

Dr. Willett at First, Springfield, Ill.

"The unchanging east" is a misnomer, according to Dr. Herbert L. Willett, of the University of Chicago, who recently gave a lecture at First Church, Springfield, Ill. The lecture dealt with his recent trip to Japan, Corea, China and India. Dr. Willett commented on the rapidly changing conditions, political, educational and social, and told of the remarkable result of missionary work. "The missionary work is becoming more united," he said, "and the work, as a consequence more successful. The church of the east will be different from that which we know here, more suited to the oriental minds, but it will be a Christian church, and will bring the good that the Christian church stands for." Dr. Willett spoke of the political situation in Japan, and sketched conditions in India and Corea. His lecture was instructive and delightfully told, a local paper reports.

First Church, Little Rock, Heads Union Move.

On Sunday, December 21, the entire organization of 1,500 members of Young People's Christian Leagues of Little Rock, Ark., assembled at First Church, for a meeting to ratify the action recently taken in amalgamating the various unions into one body for co-operative work. This amalgamation takes in the City Union of Baptist Young People's Unions, embracing local societies for each Baptist church in Little Rock and Argenta with a total of 500 members; the City Union of Methodist Epworth Leagues, embracing locals and 500 members, and the City Union of Presbyterian and Christian Church Christian Endeavor societies, embracing all locals and 500 members. This organization embraces all the Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian and Christian churches in both Little Rock and Argenta, and includes representatives from more than a thousand families in the two cities. Judge Fred A. Isgrig, Methodist, is president; Warren T. King, Presbyterian, vice-president; Carl Stevenson, Christian church, treasurer, and Clyde Arnold, Methodist, secretary of the Associated Leagues.

Mayor Charles E. Taylor, J. H. O. Smith, pastor of First Church, and Judge Fred A. Isgrig, addressed the meeting on selected subjects.

Dr. McCash "Received" at Spokane.

Several hundred people attended a reception to Dr. and Mrs. I. N. McCash at Central Church, Spokane, December 12. Dr. McCash has just assumed his new duties as president of the Spokane university. B. E. Utz, retiring president, made a few remarks and introduced Mayor W. J. Hindley, who presided. Charles Hebberd represented the chamber of commerce and Dr. S. Willis McFadden represented the ministerial alliance. Dr. McCash made a responsive address.

T. W. Grafton, of Indianapolis, visited the prayer meeting service of his old church at Jackson Avenue, Kansas City, a week ago. He was cordially greeted by several hundred of his old parishioners. This church is without a minister at the present time, but all departments of the work are thriving. The Sunday school is running just below one thousand in attendance, and the offerings of the Sunday school and the church are the largest in its history. A unique feature of the work at Jackson Avenue, Kansas City, is the Men's meeting held each Sunday evening just before the preaching service for one hour. The men gather in an upper room largely for prayer and conference. Over 50 men is the usual attendance.

Will F. Shaw has been pastor of the North Side Church, Chicago, these many years; although there have been many removals, the work is in as flourishing a condition as at any time in its history. The C. W. B. M. Day Offering amounted to $85. There were 200 in Sunday School and one baptism. Many opportunities for other work are opened to Mr. Shaw, but he feels the call of the city.

The Brotherhood Movement has issued large quantities of good literature on the subject of Men's Work. In writing of this literature R. W. Blosser, one of our Pacific Coast business men, says: "Since receiving your literature I have read some of the publications gotten out by members of other denominations. I do not mean to flatter you when I say yours is the best of all."

F. F. Walters has been pastor at Wichita Falls, Texas, only two years. A new church building has just been dedictated, and a pipe organ installed costing $3,000. The minister's salary has been raised $500, a brotherhood Bible Class of 100 men organized, and the work is going on to great victory. The plans of the building were all drawn by the pastor.

Miss Rose Elliott, sister of the National Brotherhood Secretary, sails from San Francisco, January 8, for Changsha, China. She goes to establish a school for the children of Misssionaries at Changsha, Hunan Province, where her brother, Rev. Walter S. Elliott, is agent of the American Bible Society.

The men of the West Street Church, Tipton, Ind., banqueted together in their fourth annual meeting recently. J. C. Todd delivered an address on "Christianizing the Nation's Leadership." The retiring pastor, G. I. Hoover was toastmaster for the evening and was heard appreciatively by 250 men.

S. M. Cooper of Los Angeles, erstwhile President of National Board of the American Society, now a real estate baron of California, addressed the Brotherhood at Orange recently on the subject "Our Common Problems." It is said to have been a very forceful address.

DEATH OF JAMES WARE.

A cable from Shanghai, China to the office of the Foreign Society, announces the death of James Ware on Sunday, December 21.

It will be remembered that he had been in poor health for some time. Last spring he came to America in the hope of finding relief. Eminent physicians gave him no hope of recovery, and he longed to return to his wife and children, and to "dear China," as he spoke of his adopted country. The physicians stated that he could live only about six months, and their prediction proved true to the very day.

Arrangements were made for his speedy return and he sailed from Vancouver on the "Empress of Japan" July 30, and reached Shanghai August 18. It was fortunate he could be accompanied by Dr. A. L. Shelton, who was on his way to Tibet. No better traveling companion could have been found for the good man in his delicate condition. Mr. Ware stood the trip admirably, and indeed, it was hoped that he was on the road to comparative good health again. But an insidious disease soon carried him down to death.

The faithful missionary was ready for the call. No truer, nor kinder hearted soldier of the cross ever went to battle for the Kingdom on China soil. He was gentleness and kindness, and real goodness incarnate. Everybody loved James Ware—the Chinese, the missionaries, the official classes—indeed, all classes. Blessed with a sunny disposition and alway optimistic, genial and companionable, he drew all to him.

Mr. Ware was born in England in 1859, and went to China in 1880. Someone said, "He was always a Christian." In June, 1890, he left the service of the American Bible Society in Shanghai, to join our missionaries, and has been continuously in the service of the Foreign Society ever since. His chief work was in Shanghai and in stations round about.

Mr. Ware was a useful member of a number of important boards and committees in China, as follows:

The Bible Revision Committee.

Chairman of the Hymn Book Revision Committee.

The Board of Directors of Chinese Tract Society.

Board of Publication of Christian Literature Society.

Board of Managers of Nankin University.

The immediate family he leaves consists of his wife, who will, no doubt, continue in the mission work, and five daughters and one son. Three of his daughters and one son are in America; Doris and Alice are students in Drake University, and Dr. James Ware is practicing medicine in the city of Des Moines; and Miss Grace is teaching in the Girls' College at Camden Point, Mo.; and two of the daughters are with the mother in Shanghai. The youngest is about fifteen.

In his death the Foreign Society, in particular, and the cause of missions, generally, sustain a heavy loss indeed. The Foreign Society mourns his going. He will be especially missed by our own missionaries in China who were warmly attached to him, and he loved them as brethren in the Lord. His uniform courtesy and Christian bearing were a constant benediction to his associates. Many of his Chinese brethren whom he brought to Christ and have passed on before welcomed him on the other side.

Thousands will be praying that his place may be speedily filled that the rank may not long be broken. F. M. RAINS.

EFFICIENCY WEEK AND CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR DAY.

The National Board of Christian Endeavor is publishing an Endeavor day program entitled "Christian Endeavor and Christian Missions." This program has been prepared by H. A. Denton, of Galesburg, Ill., and W. E. M. Hackleman of Indianapolis. It is one of the best Christian Endeavor Day Programs this Board has ever offered to the societies in connection with the Endeavor Day.

Claude E. Hill, National Superintendent, has prepared a program for Efficiency week, the week preceding Christian Endeavor Day. This program is of course suggestive. It can be changed to suit the convenience of the societies but it will be found exceedingly helpful if carried out just as given. Any society can follow it with great profit to the young people of the churches.

Dr. Francis E. Clark in his annual address at the Los Angeles convention suggested that all the societies observe Efficiency week with a meeting every night in the interest of Christian Endeavor and close the week with a great Christian Endeavor rally on Sunday night. Mr. Hill has acted upon this suggestion and prepared this program for our societies. The regular Endeavor day program should be used by all our societies. It is a complete program in every respect.

These programs are now ready for delivery and will be furnished in quantities to societies desiring to use them. The only stipulation is that an offering be taken at the close of the meeting and forwarded to Claude E. Hill, National Superintendent, Valpariso, Ind. These programs should be ordered at once. Write to the National Superintendent and tell him how many your society will need. They will be furnished free of all charge. Order to day. The program for Efficiency week will be sent with the Endeavor day program. Address all orders and make all remittances to Claude E. Hill, National Superintendent, Valparaiso, Ind.

BROTHERHOOD LETTER.

[Editor's Note. The Christian Century is glad to receive the following "Brotherhood Letter." It is hoped others may follow. The Century believes in the Brotherhood and in the work it is trying to do. And it believes in the wide-awake Brotherhood Secretary.]

The annual meeting of the National Brotherhood Board was held in R. A. Long's office, Kansas City, Mo., on December 17. Ten out of twelve members of the Executive Board were present, coming from Denver on the west and Indianapolis on the east. It is a significant item that these business men are giving so largely of their time, and several of them paying their own expenses to deliberate over the affairs of our Men's work. The report of the National Secretary showed 932 Chapters on the records, and it was decided to ask our Local Chapters to arrange for the observance of Men's day in our churches some time early in 1914. A committee was appointed to draft a program to be observed and also to frame a letter asking for financial support. Our National Men's movement has not tied up as closely with the ministers of our churches as it is hoped to do hereafter. The ministers are the key men to the local church situation. A Men's Brotherhood movement may be organized without the co-operation of the minister, but very few such survive.

The General Brotherhood movement has been of very material assistance to all of our missionary and benevolent enterprises, including our colleges, in recent years, but the entire emphasis of the movement will hereafter be laid in the direction of creating local Men's movements in our churches, and giving them workable programs that will make the local church efficient.

The Joint Magazine idea, now being considered by our National Societies, had its conception in the National Men's movement, and a Resolution was passed by the Board to continue the agitation for a joint magazine, proffering the facilities of the National Office and urging the moral support of all our people in the joint magazine proposition.

One of the topics to be discussed at the Atlanta Convention (men's session) will be the idea of a Religious Conservation Congress for our church. The Methodist Brotherhood recently held such a Congress in Indianapolis, which was attended by 3,500 men. Such a Congress would be of almost untold value to our churches, and it was determined to agitate the idea and bring it up for discussion at Atlanta.

The Commission reports presented at the Brotherhood Session in Toronto are not yet ready to publish, but it is hoped to have them in print shortly.

The National Secretary and some of the Directors will visit our college centers during the coming year, for the purpose of presenting the idea of Men's work to the student body. A series of papers is now being prepared by the National Secretary with this end in view. All of our states are being urged to make Men's work a Department of their State work, and come up to their State Conventions next year with a place on the program for the discussion of Men's work and the great problem of lay leadership. Much literature and correspondence along this line is being sent out from the general office.

The Men's session at Atlanta will be great as usual. Some of the foremost American speakers on the subject of Men's work will be heard. All of our men's organizations are urged to send representatives to the Convention. A banquet for delegates from local chapters will be given by the National Board.

A Resolution was passed by the Board suggesting a more liberal use to be made of the business men who attend our Convention, by appointing them upon some of the Committees, and a communication to this effect has been sent to the Presidents of the various Societies.

Attention was called to the failure of our National papers to publish anything in regard to Men's Work. One of our papers has a Department for Women's work but nothing for men. This is an omission that our Men's movement will undertake to supply, and this article is being sent to our papers with the hope that it will be published and that other articles which may be furnished will receive adequate publicity.

An Executive Committee to meet monthly with the Secretary was elected by the Board.

The success attending the publication of a permanent literature on Men's Work has been such as to encourage the officers of the movement very much and a second volume on Men's work will soon appear from the pen of the National Secretary. While our Men's Movement has not been heard from as much as formerly, it is doing, in a silent way, a more effective work than ever before in its history. Correspondence with the National office is invited and communications will receive prompt attention. Thousands of packets of men's work literature are being sent out, and the claims and the opportunities of men's work are more generally recognized by our ministers and others in local churches than ever before.

E. E. Elliott, National Secretary.

LU CHOW NEWS ITEMS.

We are rejoicing over the return of Mr. and Mrs. Brown and son Ransom from America. We also welcome Miss Vautrin to our circle.

During the past summer Miss Favors moved into the new "single ladies'" home. It is only a Chinese building with mud walls, but has been fixed up nicely on the inside. To this home Miss Vautrin comes to help with the work in the Girls' School and among the women.

We have just started our Bible study classes for men three of them for Christians, and one for those interested in Christianity.

Mr. and Mrs. Baird, Miss Vautrin, and Mrs. Peng recently spent a few days at Liang Yuen where they held interesting meetings both for men and for women and children.

Mr. Han and Mr. Hsia recently held a ten days meeting at San Ho. Mr. Brown went out for the closing days. The leaven is working in our outstations.

Miss Favors, Mrs. Baird and Mrs. Brown are in charge of the Bible study classes for women. Every Christian woman in the city is in a Bible class.

A Christian Endeavor Society was started for the Girls' Day school. Twenty members attended the first meeting, and thirteen of them took part in this meeting. It was a splendid start.

Dr. and Mrs. Wakefield are happy to announce the birth of a new daughter. She was born September 26 at Kuling.

The Girls' Day school which is in the "single ladies'" compound has fifty-four pupils. The tuition is paying for the three room building erected the past year.

There are five children's meetings held each week at Lu Chow. The children are taught songs, Bible stories and Bible verses.

A Mr. Djang heard an evangelistic sermon in one of our chapels. He bought a Bible, took it home and studied for himself. He has now quit wine, opium and his one time friends and presented himself for baptism.

The boys' schools of the city have all been closed for lack of funds to carry on the work. The money was used in bringing the lawless element into subjection after the Revolution.

The selling of meats was forbidden on the streets for two days during the past week. This was during the time the officials were imploring the idols for rain.

The Butcharts are preparing to move to Nanking within a few weeks, where Doctor Butchart goes to help in the Union Medical school. We shall miss them from our small circle here.

The attendance at our boys' day school has increased this fall over last spring in spite of the inadequate quarters. There are fifty pupils in our school here and fifty at San Ho.

The Chinese are now wearing four layers of garments, the out one being cotton padded. One's dearest friends look strange.

Mr. Baird and Mr. Brown have used reams of paper planning the new church building. The work is to be started immediately. Miss Myrtle Warren of Nebraska is the giver of the fund.

Three evangelistic meetings are held each week for men at our East Gate Chapel. Mr. Han does the preaching. Mr. Buck now living at the East Gate also helps in the work.

The hospital graduating exercises are to take place next week. The boys who graduate have spent six years in the hospital.

DISCIPLES IN NEW YORK CITY COLLEGES.

THE ACROPOLIS CLUB.

The "Acropolis Club," composed of the Disciples of Christ students and teachers who are connected with the many colleges in New York City, meets the second Monday evening of each month in Earl Hall, Columbia University. At our last meeting more than thirty were in attendance. We generally have a short program at these meetings followed by a social hour. At our last session Rev. A. F. Sanderson of Union Theological Seminary gave a short address on "Problems of the Modern Ministry" and Prof. Fishback of Teachers' College read an excellent paper on "Moral Training in the Public Schools."

The "Acropolis Club" desires to meet any Disciples who visit New York and extends a hearty invitation to all such to visit the Club. It is especially desirous of meeting any of our educational and missionary representatives who might come this way.

The Club would be glad to have the students who are thinking of entering any of the institutions here, to write to it for information. We want all such to come to our meetings and to get acquainted as soon as they come to the City.

UNION SEMINARY.

There are twelve Disciple students in Union this year—the largest attendance from the Disciples in the history of Union. Seven states are represented, and as many Disciples Colleges. Three of the Students are ministering very successfully to strong churches. In New York City the Disciples are drawn together in sympathy more than in the West and Middle West, for we are so few out here.

Union Seminary is a splendid institution, and admirably suited for graduate work for Disciple students. It occupies the place in the educational world which the Disciples endeavor to hold in the church world. Some of our strongest men have finished their training in Union, among whom are Pres. Joseph L. Garvin of William Woods College, Prof. Bower of Transylvania, Prof. Vernon Stauffer of Hiram and Dr. J. M. Philputt of Central Church of Christ, New York City.

DR. Z. T. SWEENEY ENTERTAINS.

Dr. Z. T. Sweeney entertained the divinity students of Union Seminary at a dinner given in honor of Professor Roscoe Hill of Columbia University, who is superintendent of Dr. Sweeney's Bible School at the Lenox Avenue Church.

Brother Bedford presided over the gathering, representing the official Board of Lenox Avenue Church. Each guest was called upon for a speech and duly responded. Many complimentary things were said about the ability and work of Dr. Sweeney and Professor Hill. The courses of a most excellent dinner, served by the ladies of the church, had an added flavor in a continual fire of wit and repartee. At the close of the speeches made by the guests, Dr. Sweeney made one of his characteristic, forceful speeches counseling the young theologs out of his extensive and active experience, to remember that when it came to guessing, a university professor could guess as widly as the humblest of us—at which sly and mirthful glances were shot in the direction of Professor Hill, who, however, did not come under the group referred to by the speaker.

A spirit of good fellowship is being established among the Disciples of New York City. The Monday noon ministerial meetings, held monthly, are well attended. At the last meeting Dr. Sweeney led a discussion on "Authority in Christianity," using as a basis of his remarks his sermon in the "Indiana Pulpit." A spirited general discussion followed carried on with zest but in a kindly spirit.

It is very much desired by the pastors of the various churches in and around New York City, that the Disciples living in New York make themselves known to some of us. Brethren, we need the inspiration of your fellowship and service!

WESTERN SERIES OF SCHOOLS OF METHODS.

The Bible School Department of the American Christian Missionary Society is planning a western series of Schools of Methods early in the new year. These will be the first Schools of Methods up to the International standard west of the Missouri River. It is hoped that they will be state wide in their attendance and influence. In most places lodging and breakfast will be furnished all visiting teachers and officers. Many Bible Schools should see that their entire force is sent to take advantage of this week of instruction. These are Schools, not Conventions. Efficiency, education, evangelism will be the keynote words in every session. The modern Bible School is growing on the departmental plan. The Bible School Department of the American Society is fortunate in having a strong team including a specialist for each department to constitute this faculty.

Miss Hazel A. Lewis will look after the Elementary Department, Miss Cynthia Pearl Maus the Secondary Department and W. J. Clarke the Adult Department. In addition the state men in each state will be Dean and lead a course on Bible School Organization and Management. Also a strong pastor has been secured to take a course on Bible Study.

The itinerary includes the following schedule of dates:

Nebraska, First Church, Lincoln, January 4-9.

Colorado, Grand Junction, January 11-16.

Idaho, Caldwell, January 18-33.

Washington (East), Spokane Central Church, Spokane, January 25-30.

Washington (West) First Church, Seattle, February 1-6.

Oregon, Salem, First Church, Salem, February 8-13.

California (North), First Church, San Jose, February 15-20.

California (South), First Church, Los Angeles, February 22-27.

Kansas, Central Church, Hutchinson, March 8-13.

THE CHRISTIAN LIFE AND PRAYER.

Jan. 7. Matt. 6:1-15; Mark 1:35; Eph. 5:20; 6:16.

"Prayer is the heart of religion," says Professor Coe, "When you have told what a man's prayers are like, you have told what his religion is;" and nothing more clearly shows the drift of religion in our days than the differences between the way we pray and the way our fathers prayed. The contrast is not a slight one. They agonized in prayer. They wrestled with God. They stormed the gates of heaven, and by sheer violence of desire seized upon the promises and made them a personal possession. We pray with far less assertiveness, with far less confidence in the power of prayer to work specific, tangible effects in the world about us."

The reasons for this change, Professor Coe believes, are to be found in the responsibility which we feel for changing the world for the better, in the breaking down of the old-fashioned distinction between the sacred and the secular, in the increased emphasis upon the Fatherhood of God, in the habit of scrutinizing more closely the results of prayer, and in the unwise efforts of those who try to build up the prayer life by insisting upon a return to obsolescent modes of doctrinal belief. But the soul still needs to have "conversation and intercourse with God." We shall not cease to pray, although we may change somewhat our theories about prayer.

PETITION.

What is the use of asking God for things? Will the Almighty be changed from his purposes by our requests? Does God the Father need to be reminded of his children's needs? Of course we are not expecting to overturn the laws of the universe. God knows what things we have need of before we ask him. Nevertheless, shall we not talk with him about the things we are trying to do? Our petitions, rightly presented, will bring us to a knowledge of his will and to glad submission to the ways of perfect wisdom.

PENITENCE.

Sin is not a private matter. The man whom we wrong belongs to the universe. To injure him is to do violence to the whole spiritual realm. "Against thee, thee only, have I sinned," cried the psalmist. The penitent seeks deliverance not only from the consequences of his sin, disease, social displeasure, but also from the disposition which leads to sin.

THANKSGIVING.

The religious man accept his blessings as the gift of God. This does not in the least disguise to him the fact that God sends many of his gifts by human messengers. He learns that God is in the kindness of friend, in the knowledge of the scientist who frees men from fear of disease and famine, and in the social order that affords him opportunity to live in peace and enjoy the fruits of his labors.

FELLOWSHIP.

The sense of our obligation to make the world over into the kingdom of God may cause us to feel disinclined to ask God to do the work of destroying bad institutions and building good ones. Mr. Moody is reported to have said to a wealthy man who called for prayers for a family in need of food and clothing, "If I had your means, I wouldn't bother God with this job." But we are co-workers with God. Shall we have no communications with him when we are doing a work which he approves and for which he gives us strength? If we undertake to bring in the kingdom of God by our own strength and wisdom, we are likely to have many moments of discouragement. Our fellowship with God may take the form of appreciation of the power and goodness of God. It then corrects our ideals and sustains our purposes.

Hab. 3:17-18; Neh. 4:9; Eccl. 5:2; 2 Chron. 7:14; Eph. 3:11-12; Heb. 4:16; Jno. 14:13; Jas. 1:5-7.

HIS IDEA OF A GOOD WIFE.

There was recently discovered in a fur-covered, musty trunk in a New England attic a letter giving directions to a young man, presumably about to embark on the sea of matrimony, for choosing a woman who would make a good wife. "She will be like three things," it says, "and she will not be like three things. She will be like a snail; and she will not be like a snail, who carries all it has on its back. She will be like an echo that speaks when spoken to; and she will not be like the echo, which always has the last word. She will be like the town clock that speaks at the right time, and she will not be like the town clock, heard all over town."

The letter was dated 1863 and seems to voice pretty fairly the masculine attitude toward women at that time. The writer, however, if he is living today is having an opportunity to remold his sentiments. Our "emancipated" women have little in common with the modest violet of his ideals.

Golden Text.—Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. Mark 12:31.

American Standard Bible.
Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons.
(Used by permission.)

(25) And behold, a certain lawyer stood up and made trial of him, saying, Teacher, what shall I do to inherit eternal life? (26) And he said unto him, What is written in the law, how readest thou? (27) And he answering said, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself. (28) And he said unto him, Thou hast answered right: this do, and thou shalt live. (29) But he, desiring to justify himself, said unto Jesus, And who is my neighbor? (30) Jesus made answer and said, A certain man was going down from Jerusalem to Jericho; and he fell among robbers, who both stripped him and beat him, and departed, leaving him half dead. (31) And by chance a certain priest was going down that way: and when he saw him, he passed by on the other side. (32) And in like manner a Levite also, when he came to the place, and saw him, passed by on the other side. (33) But a certain Samaritan, as he journeyed, came where he was: and when he saw him, he was moved with compassion, (34) and came to him, and bound up his wounds, pouring on them oil and wine; and he set him on his own beast, and brought him to an inn, and took care of him. (35) And on the morrow he took out two shillings, and gave them to the host, and said, Take care of him; and whatsoever thou spendest more, I, when I come back again, will repay thee. (36) Which of these three, thinkest thou, proved neighbor unto him that fell among the robbers? (37) And he said, He that showed mercy on him. And Jesus said unto him, Go, and do thou likewise.

Verse by Verse.

v. 26. How readest thou: What are your findings from reading the law.

v. 27. Thou shalt love, etc.: Quoted from Deut. 6:3. Thy neighbor as thyself: Quoted from Lev. 19:18.

v. 29. Who is my neighbor: To the Israelites only Israelites were considered as neighbors.

v. 30. From Jerusalem to Jericho: A wild route infested by robbers.

v. 31. Passed by: Paid no attention to him.

v. 32. Levite: The tribe of Levi furnished Israel with priests and priests' assistants.

v. 33. Samaritan: The Samaritans, dwellers in Samaria, were a mixed race and despised by the Jews.

v. 34. Oil and wine: Common remedies.

v. 35. Two shillings: About 30 cents.

v. 36. Which proved neighbor: Proving oneself a neighbor is reckoned as a privilege, rather than as a duty. Go, and do thou likewise: A startling application of the truths embodied in the story to the case of the "lawyer."

At the Heart of the Lesson.

Could Jesus qualify as a rabbi? A certain lawyer proposed to determine the rights of the Galilean teacher to recognition. A professional teacher and a propounder of the Mosaic law, he assumed the right to judge the popular young rabbi from Galilee whose reputation as both teacher and healer was now wide spread, and probably with the assumption of considerable importance he proceeded to interrogate our Lord. It seems likely that this event occurred on the occasion of a visit of Christ a little while before the last Passover, to the Feast of Dedication. In some house or court-yard where Christ had been teaching he is suddenly confronted by a man whose first question is a kind of challenge as to his right to leadership. The law furnished the basis of both public and private morality. The lawyer of repute was a skilled dialectician and was familiar with the multiplied traditional sayings associated with the law of Moses. Here was his opportunity to reveal his own learning and at the same time possibly to convict Christ's teachings as heretical and to destroy his reputation as a new prophet. It is entirely possible that the question he propounded had been carefully phrased by conspirators seeking to take the life of Christ. It would have been much in accord with the spirit of the Sanhedrim to have commissioned a legal expert for this very task.

THE QUESTION OF THE AGES.

A more comprehensive inquiry he could not have made. "What shall I do to inherit eternal life?" This is the question of the ages. Smoking altars in every tribe and nation through milleniums of time ask this same question. The longing for immortality is universal. The instinctive recognition of God is universal. No people or tribe has been found utterly devoid of an interest in life beyond the grave. The spark of celestial fire which we call conscience is never quite extinguished however depraved the life may become. A sense of obligation which carries with it approval or condemnation, ineradicably abides in the life of every individual. A consciousness of ill-desert has led to manifold efforts to appease the wrath of God. The unknown God has been feared rather than loved. Humanity is possessed with a sense of the endless life. The words, "Eternal Life," as employed by the lawyer contemplate not only a continuation of personality but supreme happiness. It was in this sense that Christ employed the term. The purpose of the question then was this, "What shall I do to insure for myself the everlasting favor of God so that life beyond will be blessed and unspeakably happy? What must I do to eliminate from my own mind and heart the sense of ill-desert which I feel? What must I do to remove the sin which stands between myself and eternal joy? What must I do to earn freedom both from the guilt of sin and the love of sinning?" All this is involved in the inquiry. This lawyer was not ignorant of the fact that self-immolation, the deliberate infliction of all sorts of pain had been employed to secure immunity from the consequences of sin and sinning. He knew that men had sought to buy their way into Divine favor through the most agonizing personal experience; that human sacrifices had been employed in the hope of turning aside the wrath of a terrifying deity. His especial zeal, however, centered in the law. The only ground of hope for him was in scrupulous obedience to the letter of the law of Moses. Any doctrine which antagonized this conclusion would be regarded as heretical and punishable.

THE THRUST PARRIED.

Jesus meets blade with blade. The lawyer was somewhat perturbed by the dextrous way in which Jesus parried the thrust which had been expected to draw blood. Quick as a flash the question is met by a counter question, "What is written in the law? How readest thou?" On forehead and wrist the lawyer doubtless had a phylactery, a little leather box in which were parchments containing important laws and sayings of the Pentateuch. More than likely Deuteronomy 6:5 was one of the texts the lawyer was carrying about in the phylactery. Behind the question of Jesus we read much more than the mere inquiry. He virtually says, "You who are skilled in the interpretation of the law ought not to be ignorant of the answer to your own question. What is your interpretation of the law of life? There is a realm of reality beyond and behind the formal expression of the law in which eternal life may be found? Have you not found it there? Harmony with God is the first essential to eternal life and harmony with God implies perfect and absolute obedience to his holy will. The will of God is expressed in the law of God and I must know your understanding of the law before I can proceed to make clear to you the conditions and provisions of eternal life."

CAUGHT IN HIS OWN NET.

The shrewd lawyer whose motives had certainly not been any too honorable was thrown quickly from the position of an inquisitor to a defender. He had proposed to examine Jesus as to his qualifications and now he finds himself on the witness stand with Christ as judge. His familiarity with the law is beyond question. Without a moment's hesitation he answers the inquiry of Jesus, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul and with all thy strength and with all thy mind and thy neighbor as thyself." If he has failed to discover the secrets and source of eternal life it is not on account of ignorance of at least the letter of the law. He not only knew the law but he knew the essence of it and it is greatly to his credit that he went straight to the heart center of Old Testament teaching and truth and in a few short sentences threw open the door to spiritual reality. Great was his discomfiture when Jesus unhesitatingly accepted his statement without qualification or emendation as the ground and basis of life eternal. "Jesus said, 'This do, and thou shalt live.'" As an evidence that controversy and not assurance was the purpose of the lawyer's interrogation we have his unwillingness to rest in the endorsement of Jesus and his consciousness of defeat.

ON THE JERICHO ROAD.

The parable of the good Samaritan is one of the most comprehensive which ever fell from the lips of our Lord. "A certain man went down to Jericho." He was typical and representative of any and every man on the pilgrimage of life. He was compelled to pass through an enemy's country. The privilege even of a fair fight was not granted. Greed and selfishness combined to destroy him. The Bedouins who attacked him robbed him and left him half dead, representing the cruel world forces, rapacious, heartless, utterly selfish, world forces seeking personal gain through exploitation. Parallels in the modern business world are not wanting. The passing priest stood for the organized religion of his day. He had probably just come from Temple worship. He had recited prayers and offered sacrifices. He bound the law on his forehead but his selfishness was like an incrustation preventing love, which is the heart of religion, from entering his soul. There was no question as to the urgent need of his wounded, suffering brother-man. Both race and religion brought him under definite obligation to render assistance. He had all the outward ear marks of a follower of Jehovah. He was not only a member of the church, he was a professed teacher of religion. "By their fruits ye shall know them." "Not every one that sayeth unto me, 'Lord, Lord,' but he that doeth the will of my father which is in heaven." Example speaks rather than precept. The minister of religion whose life proclaims his selfishness, whose interest in personal comfort is greater than his concern for the kingdom of God, may have the eloquence of Demosthenes and the learning of Augustine, but he will ruin any church of which he becomes pastor.

The passing Levite was equally irresponsive to the call of distress. His was even a measured and studied meanness. He took time to ascertain the real situation. He looked on the half-murdered man. He was like the investigating committee. Possibly it may not have seemed to him entirely scientific to render assistance until he should report the case and have further investigation. The man was not in the best condition to give an account of his family history or to declare whether or not there might be some relative living somewhere in the world to whom his situation could be referred. The Scribe was too scientific in his philanthrophy to give assistance without fully determining whether the case was a worthy one or not. He may have paused not so much to consider the advisability of rendering assistance as to get material for a homily upon the perils of the Jericho road and upon the importance of government interference, with the violent robbers who were infesting the regions. At any rate he passed by.

It is when I am told that God is love that I commit all judgment to him gladly. It is when I believe that some one loves me that I am never afraid to be myself.—G. H. Morrison.

trance requirements, are taking special work. Therefore, offerings of such work to such students should be discontinued as soon as feasible in newer communities, and where the State High School system is adequately developed it should be discontinued at the earliest possible moment.

(9) That entrance requirements of fourteen or fifteen units for all departments should be the standard in order that there may be a homogeneous student body.

(10) That all schools be urged to publish annual reports, and that in their financial acounting the Carnegie Foundation's standard form Bulletin No. 3 be used.

(11) That all schools require an annual independent audit, the auditor to be appointed in some way agreeable to this Commission.

(12) That some suitable budget plan be followed in every school. (Definite suggestions will be made to each institution regarding a suitable budget plan.)

(13) The Commission urges upon all our schools the importance of endowment in order that we may have a strong and efficient teaching force. We respectfully suggest that emphasis should be placed upon the character of the faculty and endowment for that purpose, rather than the number and size of college buildings. Properly equipped men are a greater force in college work than physical equipment, and the desire for outward display should be subordinated to inward efficiency. We believe as a rule, our colleges need strengthening as to their faculties more than the increase and enlargement of college buildings. Fatal to the colleges as well as fatal to the man is the lust of display.

(14) It is the sense of the Commission that any money contributed for general endowment should not be used for buildings, or equipment. Further, that no part of the fund to be raised by the Men and Millions Movement, and given to the colleges, should go for betterments of any sort without the consent of the Commission.

(15) It is believed that a careful study should be made of the development of the local field and the College association is asked to appoint a Committee of college presidents to consider this.

In making the above recommendations the Commission realizes that time must be spent to carry them all out properly. It is not desired that there be undue haste in any changes, but it is expected that, with these ideals before our institutions, all will set to work to complete them within the next five years, if possible.

HOW THE MOVEMENT GREW.

The real beginning of the Men and Millions Movement was during a banquet at Pomona, Calif., when Mr. W. F. Holt proposed to be one of a hundred men to give another million dollars for Foreign Missions in addition to the million Mr. Cory had just completed. From that moment the Movement grew. It was proposed by the now sainted Mrs. M. E. Harlan that three missionary societies, The Christian Woman's Board of Missions, The Foreign Christian Missionary Society and the American Christian Missionary Society should unite and raise the million dollars proposed. This purpose was enlarged until at Louisville it was decided to call for $2,000,000 and One Thousand Men and Women for the Home and Foreign Fields. In the year that intervened between the Louisville and Toronto Conventions the Movement increased until the total sum to be asked for was put at $2,500,000, to be divided among the six missionary societies, as stated above.

Meantime the college problem of the Disciples weighed increasingly heavily upon the hearts of all leaders of the Movement. One thousand men and women had been called for mission fields at home and abroad. An educational qualification was determined for these workers: four years in High School, four years in college and at least one year of graduate specialization. How could our colleges respond to this demand of the mission task without more money and men and equipment for their own work?

Mr. R. A. Long, says Mr. Cory, left the Toronto convention with a vision of missions and education yoked together in a single comprehensive enterprise and on Oct. 18, he made to Mr. Cory this proposition to give a million dollars toward achieving it. This is the proposition that was submitted to the Commission of Business Men last week.

Complying with Mr. Long's condition the pledges solicited are to be in direct gifts of $500 or more. No annuities or bequests or gifts under $500 are to be counted. The privilege of assignment is of course given to all givers if desired.

Further details of the Movement will be announced from time to time, and no doubt certain revisions may be made, but at present it is commended in all of its vast outreaches to the prayers of a great brotherhood.

The Highway to Efficiency

in the Sunday School is

The Bethany System

What some of our Leaders say of it:

"Nothing Could Pry Us Loose"

We began using the Bethany Graded Lessons at their first issuance and have increased the supply from year to year as the literature for all grades was published. There is nothing in the series that is not now used by our school. Nothing could pry our superintendents and teachers loose from these lessons. They meet the needs of pupils of all years and make the teacher's work a joy. We have no word with which to express our satisfaction with the series.

H. H. HARMON,
First Church, Lincoln, Neb.

"As Nearly Perfect as Can Be"

We have used the Bethany Graded Lessons for three years, and the longer we use them the better we like them. They are the latest and best thing in Sunday-school material, and when all of the text books have been prepared it will offer a Sunday-school course as nearly perfect as can be. They certainly make teaching and learning easy, and cover in a most adequate way the whole ground of education in Christian service. The teachers' text books are especially valuable and constitute in themselves a course in Sunday-school pedagogy.

H. D. C. MACLACHLAN,
Seventh Street Church, Richmond, Va.

"Thoroughly Edited"

I have recently had the pleasure of examining closely a set of the Bethany Graded Lessons, together with a recent copy of "The Conquest." I want to congratulate you upon the high quality of this literature. It is certainly a great satisfaction to feel that we are now able to put into the hands of all our Sunday-school pupils, material so splendidly classified and so thoroughly edited as is the above mentioned.

L. J. MARSHALL,
Pastor Wabash Ave. Church, Kansas City, Mo.

"We Would Not Turn Back"

We are using the Bethany Graded Lessons. We would not turn back. The service our Sunday-school specialists are giving us as represented in this course is making a new day in religious education.

FINIS IDLEMAN,
Pastor Central Church, Des Moines, Ia.

"Unanimously the Bethany Series"

After a campaign led by Miss Eva Lemert of Kansas City, Mo., resulting in the thorough grading and departmentizing of the school, we had to decide the matter of graded helps. A committee of three was appointed, consisting of the pastor, superintendent and one member of the Executive Committee. This committee made an individual examination of lesson helps and decided unanimously in favor of the Bethany series, arriving at their decisions independently and solely upon the merits of the literature. So far as I know these lessons are giving entire satisfaction.

EDGAR DeWITT JONES,
Pastor First Church, Bloomington, Ill.

"Nothing to Compare With Them"

We have been using the Bethany Graded Lessons from the time you began to publish them and we are very highly pleased with them. We have often had occasion to compare them with the publications of other houses and thus far can say we have found nothing that compares with them. I am teaching a young men's class in the course, "The World a Field for Christian Service," and am glad to say that it seems to me the best adapted for young men of high school age of all courses I have ever seen. My class is becoming very enthusiastic over it.

P. J. RICE,
Pastor First Church, El Paso, Tex.

"Have Created Enthusiasm"

Over a year ago our school adopted the Bethany Graded Lessons, upon vote of our teachers, who had examined personally the texts for their respective grades. They are a delight to all. The missionary lessons appeal very strongly to pupils and teachers. The first year Senior lessons have created enthusiasm on the part of both pupils and teachers I most heartily commend the Bethany Graded Lessons to all who may think of grading their schools or have found other lessons unsatisfactory.

T. E. WINTER,
Pastor First Church, Fulton, Mo.

"Delighted"

Our Sunday-school, which has lately begun the use of the Bethany Graded Lessons, seems to be delighted with them. I have heard no word of unfavorable criticism and very many words of appreciation. Our teachers like the form and material of these lessons.

GRAHAM FRANK,
Pastor Liberty, Mo.

"Best on the Market"

We consider the Bethany Graded Lessons for the Beginners and Primary department the best on the market of our own brotherhood and second to none of other communions. Congratulations!

J. J. TISDALL,
Pastor Wilson Avenue Church, Columbus, O.

A Pledge of the New Patriotism

Dr. Charles S. Medbury's New Year's Resolutions

TO THIS DAY that is mine, my country's and my God's, I dedicate my all. My talents, every one, shall be held subject to the sight draft of the emergencies of others. I will enlarge my soul by love for those from whom I find myself recoiling. No man shall ever feel his color or his caste in my presence, for within my heart of hearts there shall be no consciousness of it. The man who has fallen shall find in me a friend, the woman down, a helper. But more than this, those falling shall have my trust that they may still stand. No name shall ever pass my lips that hurts another in things of face, form, station or estate. My own weaknesses, foibles, sins, shall chasten speech and spirit. My life shall be a dedicated thing. I shall count it desecration to pervert it. The vandal hands of lust and hate and greed shall not be permitted to despoil. And thus I resolve, not because I am good, but that I want to be; not because I am strong, but that I fear weakness; not that I feel above others, but that with all my soul I long to be of humankind both helped and helper. So I dedicate my days. So do I set apart my culture. So do I receive but to give again to others. So do I press humbly into the presence of the sacrificial Son of Man, crying out in eager consecration, "Let me follow Thee, Master, wherever the world still needs ministry, wherever life is still to be given for the many. Help me, Thou whose manger cradle brought democracy to light, to meet in my own worth, democracy's final test, and to my own great day to be true."

The Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse is fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, the Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

It Grips and Holds! Why?

The Conquest is an attractive paper. Gripping serials and short stories have a place in each issue.

The Conquest is an up-to-date paper. The articles used are not moss-grown. A striking feature of the paper is the illustrated Modern Science page.

The Conquest is a useful paper in the work of the church. Its "Conquest Bible Class" is unsurpassed. Its Christian Endeavor and Prayer Meeting columns are vital and suggestive.

The Conquest is a newsy paper. Its news is not merely small talk of Sunday-school attendance, contests, etc., but real news that builds up and helps.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, EDITOR HERBERT L. WILLETT, CONTRIBUTING EDITOR

The Vision of Those Who Wake

It is recorded of the disciples present at the Transfiguration that "When they were fully awake, they beheld His glory." The evangelist wishes us to be assured that the disciples saw the glory of the Lord, and were not mistaken about it. They had been asleep upon the mountain top, but were not asleep at the time of the Transfiguration. They were fully awake when they beheld His glory. Only a week before Jesus had told them that He was the Messiah. Peter had confessed Him as the Christ, and Jesus had begun at once to explain to them that He must go to Jerusalem and be crucified. It was hard to adjust their faith in Jesus as king to the thought of Jesus as a condemned and executed criminal. We have accustomed ourselves to the thought of a crucified Christ, but the term to them seemed to imply a terrible contradiction. It had been a sad week for them; and at its close Jesus took three of his nearest disciples up on one of the slopes of Mount Hermon, and there they spent the night. They slept in the open air under the great towering summit of Mount Hermon whose snow-white wedge lifted itself into the black sky and looked down upon them from among the stars. In the early morning the disciples walked with a wonderful sensation that they were not alone. They beheld the Lord, no longer in the commonplace garb of their ordinary humanity, but in the radiance of the heavenly glory and the companionship of their illustrious dead. They beheld Him not as the toiling and defeated prophet but as the radiant and glorified companion of Moses and Elijah; they saw him not as a Syrian carpenter turned teacher and rejected in His teaching, but as the Son of God lifted high above the common level of human life into the glorious fellowship of the immortals.

We do not know from what wonderful dream they were awakened to the beholding of this marvelous reality, but that it was a reality they wished to assure us. No such vision as this had ever come to them while they slept. Literally they never had dreamed of such a thing. "When they were fully awake," and not till then, "they beheld His glory."

In the olden time God sometimes spake to men in dreams and visions in the night, but all such dreams had their inevitable limitations. The noblest visions of human life are not disclosed to men in the hours in which they sleep. It is when they are fully awake they behold the noblest possibilities in human life and the largest hopes for the life to come.

It was so even in the olden time. The star of Bethlehem shone down on many an Oriental hamlet, but most of the men of the olden times slept through it all. Only those who were awake and remained awake followed the star to where the Christ-child lay. There were many shepherds in the field on the night when the angels sang, but most of them slept straight through the song and only those who were fully awake heard the celestial voices singing Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men.

God's problem is not the invention of a vision. It is the finding of men who will rub their eyes wide open to behold the vision. The vast majority of men see no great distance into the future, perceive no very large interests beyond those that immediately concern themselves. Only here and there a rare soul catches the vision and reveals it to other men and these men must be fully awake.

No great invention was ever made, no fine song was ever sung, no piece of canvas ever glowed with an artist's inspiration but someone first of all saw a vision. To other men it was only a white piece of canvas, but the artist already saw upon it the picture which he intended to paint. To others it was only an instrument, but the musician who sat down with his fingers upon the keys already had sweet harmonies that echoed in his soul.

One day in Florence a bungler bought a beautiful piece of marble and set himself to the task of knocking off what he did not want, and he battered and chiseled and hammered until he had spoiled every hope which he could conceive of making anything of beauty out of it. He threw away the damaged block and it lay in the gutter. Michael Angelo saw it there and took it to his studio. He saw in it a vision of a masterpiece and when he had finished it it stood forth in the lines of strength and beauty. It was thus he created the majestic statue of his Young David. That is the kind of vision God has of human life when it has been battered and broken and thrown away. That is the vision which we must have of a world that seems commonplace and sordid and hopeless. This is the vision which comes only to those who wake and whose eyes are illumined with the light of God's clear truth. The great achievements that have transformed human life have come from the visions of men when they were fully awake. God grant us in this New Year a new vision of the Christ.

Part of a Mandarin Garden, Soo Chow.

A Water Street in Soo Chow.

In Beautiful Soo Chow

Narrating Some Experiences in "The Venice of the East."

BY HERBERT L. WILLETT.

THEY have a saying in China, "Heaven is above and Foo Chow and Soo Chow below," and another advising all men to "See Soo Chow and die." These proverbs express somthing of the admiration which the Chinese feel for the "Venice of the East," as Soo Chow may well be called.

The city is the capital of the Kiangsu Province which is densely populated, fertile and progressive. It is abundantly watered, by the Yangtse, the Grand Canal and the many small canals fed by the Great Lakes. Here grow rich harvests of rice, cotton and beans, and the production of silk, tea and medical herbs is very great. Soo Chow is a city whose streets are canals, and some of whose market places, like the Rialto of Venice, are bridges. It contains three-quarters of a million inhabitants, and is one of the oldest settlements in China.

FROM NANKING TO SHANGHAI.

We left Nanking in the morning, driving down to the station in what seemed ample time, with Mr. Sarvis to help us in getting our tickets and baggage checks. The railroad from Nanking to Shanghai is admirably equipped, but that did not obviate the necessity of going early, so that the usual delay in getting luggage adjusted might not be fatal to our plan of taking that particular train. We were sorry to leave Nanking where we had enjoyed days of unusual pleasure with friends and in the study of one of the most convincing pieces of united missionary effort to be found in all the Orient.

It is a run of about an hour and a half to Soo Chow, which lies half way from Nanking to Shanghai. Mr. Sarvis, already acquainted with the missionaries down the river, went along with us to visit the Soo Chow University, which he had never seen. On arrival at the station which is a modern, handsome building, we were met by a young man, one of the University students, sent by Pres. Cline to conduct us about the city, and out to the school.

Instead of taking rickshas we preferred the exercise and views to be gotten by walking. This filled the numberless ricksha men with keen astonishment and regret. They could not understand how anybody should desire to walk, especially as their conveyances were so well-appointed and they themselves so much in need of the fares. For at least a mile down the road from the station to the city gate they followed us in a gesticulating, remonstrating, protesting and at times almost a belligerent body. Our young man and even Mr. Sarvis utterly failed to impress them suitably with the idea that we really did not wish to ride. At last, giving us up as hopeless, they turned back, with many disapproving looks and words.

AT A MANDARIN GARDEN.

Our first visit was made to a mandarin garden, which is one of the show places of the city. It is an elaborate group of buildings, surrounding in part, and in part surrounded by a charming combination of flower spaces, grottos, miniature lakes, fairy-like pavilions, mazes in which one can easily lose his way, and ornamental piles of rocks. It was once the home of one of the Manchu nobles in the pre-revolutionary days, but is now used as a place of resort by all who wish to pay the small admission. Many of the rooms are in the same condition as when the place was occupied. The library has a fine collection of Chinese classics, and the furniture and art collection are well worth inspection.

We next visited a Buddhist temple, which was in process of repair, one of the very few temples we saw on which any decorative work had been attempted for years. For the most part these once sacred places are in a sad state of ruin. One portion of the temple is a large apartment in which there was a huge collection of Buddhas, like those we saw at Nanking and elsewhere. They looked dusty and forlorn, and seemingly the number of the faithful who come to visit the place and bring offerings to the priests is not large.

BRIBING THE BEGGARS.

Just outside th temple we encountered a group of beggars, dirty, unkempt, importunate who followed us with insistent demands for gifts. We made them understand at last that the only way to secure money was to pose for a picture. And if the engraver finds any print clear enough, and the editor grants room enough, you may see what those rascals looked like.

We were by this time close to one of the many canals that run through the city. Boats were passing back and forth all the time, though we were some distance from the middle of the town. Presently a boat came along propelled by a boy who stood on the high stern and navigated the canal with a broad, single oar. We hailed him and got on board. We soon learned that under the deck-like platform, which ran half the length of the boat, he had two other passengers whom we had not seen before, a man and a woman, the former sick, and the latter in charge of him. It was a cheerful reflection that the man might be suffering with anything from toothache to cholera. But the boatman appeared quite happy in the prospect of the additional business we brought him, and took us to our destination, quite regardless of his earlier passengers, who took the matter philosophically, and made no complaint.

A JOURNEY BY BOAT.

Down the canal we made our way in the long boat, passing numberless craft of every sort—lumber boats, vegetable craft from the country, house-boats and pleasure floats. The house-boats were of special interest. They were fastened along the side of the canal, as close together as they could be placed. The women were at work, washing, cooking or doing various other sorts of household work. The children were playing about, running from boat to boat, as if on a pavement. But quite the most diverting sight was the babies, most of which were fastened to the side of the boat with a rope, so that if they should fall in the water they could be pulled in. And in several instances they were tied to a bit of wood, or some other light, floatable material, so that in case of accident they would not go under.

On we went, between rows of houses high up above the water, with all manner of balconies, stairways, doors and windows looking out on the stream, meeting, jostling, colliding with, and passing boats of every sort, floating under arches of city walls, and long high spans of bridges, till at last we drew up at a landing place in the heart of the city, and let our oarsman go on with his patient and unremonstrating passengers. We were helped up the stone steps to the narrow dock, and then our guide told us to wait and he would get us donkeys for our journey through the more crowded part of the town and out to the big pagoda.

By the time he returned we were the center of a rapidly increasing, closely pressing crowd of Chinese. They were perfectly civil, but very curious. It was a comfort to hear the jingle of bells and know that our student conductor was returning with the animals. We were quickly lifted up on to the narrow, humpy saddles of the little beasts that seemed hardly large enough to carry us. Then we started at a speed that was alarming to the ladies, turning sharp corners, going up and down over bridges that were approached by ascending and descending flights of stairs, and through streets so narrow and so crowded that you were sure somebody would be run down at every stretch of the way.

DOING SOME SHOPPING.

The shops all along the way were most interesting and far cleaner than we had seen in the native section of any Chinese city. They were of all sorts, cloth, silver-ware, curios, furs, bamboo work, restaurants, and every other sort of business. We came out at last into an open space where we saw the big pagoda of historic fame, climbed up several of its many stories, enjoyed the splendid view over the swarming town, saw the buildings of the University in the distance, and decided to make our way there as soon as possible.

It was much further than we had supposed. The donkeys had disappeared, so we walked back through the narrow streets, betrayed into inspection of the numberless interesting things we saw and into bits of shopping where the bargains were too tempting to be resisted. In all this experience Mr. Sarvis was an invaluable help, and our young guide, who knew a little English, did his part. But oh, the curious bits of jewelry, the lovely jade-handled teapots, the fascinating fabrics we wanted, but had no time (or money) to buy!

AT THE UNIVERSITY.

Our donkeys finally overtook us and it was almost dark when at last we reached the University, out in one of the finest of the suburbs of Soo Chow. It is a mission of the Southern Methodist Church, and one of the finest mission stations in the Orient. It is a young institution, having been started as recently as 1899. At the General Missionary Conference held in New Orleans in April, 1901, the prospects and needs of the young school were presented, with the result that an offering of $50,000 was made in a single evening. It is located inside the Fu gate on the southeastern side of the city. It owns about twenty acres of land, and hopes to acquire some additional land lying between the campus wall and the moat inside the city wall. Allen Hall, the main building, is a handsome, three-story structure of red and gray brick. A still more recent structure, Anderson Hall, was built with money contributed by the Court Street Church, Lynchburg, Va. In addition there are dormitories, five residences for foreign teachers, and several other buildings. Across the street from the compound are the Girls' School, the medical school, dispensary and hospital, and several other buildings.

We were welcomed by President Cline and assigned to the various faculty homes for entertainment. In the evening there was a large gathering of students and members of the staff in one of the lecture rooms of Allen Hall. Interestingly enough the request was made that the subject of the address should be the recent efforts made in Chicago to investigate and check the social evil. The consideration of the work and results of the Vice Commission were listened to with the closest interest by all present and the chairman of the meeting made the statement that no subject was of greater concern in China to the missionaries, who were constantly confronted by the dire results of the universal plague, in students and others.

INSPECTING EDUCATIONAL METHODS.

The next day we inspected the work of classrooms, clinics and laboratories. Addresses were made at the chapel hour at the University, and later at the Girls' School. Some phases of Doctor Park's work and that of his medical assistants were of special interest. He is naturally the leading surgical authority in the entire region, and his influence is very great. His daughter is in charge of a wonderfully equipped kindergarten, the gift of the doctor. She is a student of the Montessori method, having worked with the founder in Rome. Her service is given to this splendid ministry without compensation.

The pleasure of meeting the workers in the Soo Chow mission was very great. Such men and women as President Cline, Professors Whiteside, Gee, Park, and their wives, and the Misses Park, Pyle and the Polk sisters. The last two physicians in charge of the woman's hospital, are the greatest asset a community can have. In addition the native members of the faculty and staff numbers twice as many more.

The Soo Chow Mission, of which the University is the central interest, is one of the most convincing proofs of the value of concentration in the work of missions. It is the most conspicuous missionary enterprise of the Southern Methodist Church in China. If that body of people had no other mission at all, it would still be worth while to concentrate as they have on this strategic point. No mistake is more common or lamentable in missionary work than the dispersion of effort over a wide field. Many of the mission boards have shared the obsession of a desire to plant as many stations as possible without regard to their adequacy of equipment, or their efficiency. At first glance, a dozen stations make a more impressive showing in a report than one. Yet soon or late the least observant student of statistics is sure to ask whether one station, properly equipped, may not be doing a larger service for a non-Christian land than a dozen that struggle to exist on the means at their disposal, and fail of effective results. This is the growing feeling of the missionaries in all the fields, and in a certain measure, of all the boards.

Here at Soo Chow no mistake has been made. The University supplies the educational facilities for academic, medical and theological training. The industrial work gives efficiency and competence to the workers employed. The medical dispensary is the physical and sanitary redemption of the city. The kindergarten is drawing the children of the gentry and influential people of the place, and thus reaching the parents and, back of all, and through all, is the evangelism which uses all these means to reach the entire community and the out-stations with the Gospel.

MEN FOR THE MINISTRY.

By Charles M. Sharpe.

The problem of securing an efficient ministry is absolutely central and fundamental to the whole enterprise of the church. Primarily the problem does not relate to quantity so much as quality, though it includes both. We are in a critical transitional time as regards the whole attitude and method of our religious work. It is a time that calls for the keenest, most alert and best trained minds. Explorers, experimenters, builders are needed—men of vision and initiative. They must be men who, through competent study, are able to enter into the treasures of the past. They must be men who know the facts and forces of these new times, and are able to knit the past into the present, in order that we may not lose our Christian heritage.

The Disciples especially need a ministry of superior intellectual power and equipment—a ministry trained to a clear understanding of the things involved in essential Christianity. As an advertising agency publishing the merits of Christian unity the Disciples have been a brilliant success. But can we deliver the goods for which such a tremendous demand has been created? Can we even enter an efficient combination for the purpose of supplying the market? That is one important phase of the problem of an efficient ministry for the Disciples.

Consecration, earnestness, and moral character are, of course, assumed. Granted that he possesses these, the minister must also have in him the stuff of which successful specialists are made, and he must have the knowledge and training that makes specialists.

In our quest for men for the ministry we should lay all possible stress upon the fact that now as ever the altar of God calls for the best. A high ideal of ministerial preparation held up persistently and insisted upon strenuously will go further than anything else in constituting an effective call for hosts of men that God can best use.

Evangelists Then and Now

CHAPTER THREE IN "A DOCTRINAL AUTOBIOGRAPHY."

This theological life history of a minister is awakening eager interest among all classes of readers of The Christian Century. In tracing out the evolution of his own personal thought the author traces also the way over which the major part of the Disciples' communion has come during the past generation and a half. The present installment deals with the influence upon the author's mind of evangelistic activities as reported in the "Christian Standard."

POSSIBLY the greatest of all the influences which determined my manner of thinking as well as my calling was the "Christian Standard," to whose weekly visits the entire household looked forward with eager expectation. I think my father was on the list of charter subscribers. We all believed in the infallible character of its teachings as we believed in the inspiration of the Scriptures. In one of these particulars my views have radically changed in recent years, and I have learned not to put my trust in temporal or ecclesiastical princes.

We believed in Isaac Errett, and I love to honor his memory even now. Maybe we love him more because of the fall of his paper from the standards that he set up. To me, the ardent youth, Isaac Errett was a friend who never failed. When in my discussions I found myself driven to the wall, though I never admitted the possibility of such a thing, I wrote post haste to the "Querist's Drawer" for light, and received it whether my opponents did or not.

ISAAC ERRETT'S TRAVEL LETTERS.

Mr. Errett's letters of travel were fascinating, especially those written on the tour taken with Dr. Z. T. Sweeney; its editorials were encouraging and illuminating, though, of course, I could not begin to appreciate them at their face value. What I did not understand by sight I accepted by faith, as many of its constituency still do, though they have outgrown the verdancy of youth without discovering that their favorite paper has journeyed backwards to take its place with Lot's wife on the shore of a deserted Dead Sea.

Above everything that cheered us were the reports from the field. Had the telegraph been used to announce victories at that time, I think our entire congregation would have been translated, so great must have been their joy. The progress of the plea made our satisfaction almost greater than we could bear. If we had but few additions to our congregation during the year, the many additions elsewhere gave us a vicarious success.

A PEOPLE "BOUND TO WIN."

When the enemy called attention to the fact that "we" were an obscure sect and not growing, we pointed with pride to our phenomenal growth in different sections of the country. When he declared that a people who possessed the "truth" as we professed to do, should be making a better use of it than we seemed to be, we replied that numbers were no criterion of success, since the apostolic church was only a feeble folk. When we used the apostolic church as an argument for our identity with apostolic church ideals, despite our meagre numbers, we forgot the pride which thrilled our hearts when we pointed to the inroads we were making on sin and sectarianism away from home. Thus we had the opposition on the hip all the time, whether we were growing or standing still. No matter what happened we were, whether or no, bound to win.

If I remember correctly, Knowles Shaw was the link between the pioneer evangelist of the John T. Johnston type, and those few brethren who in a most spectacular way appeared in the West, using the platform as if it were a stage. The species was a rare one, and could not propagate itself in an age of growing enlightenment. Other religious bodies may have had this variety of evangelism but I have never been able to discover any mention of it. The long hair of the evangelist, his full evening dress, flashing diamonds—let us hope that at least these were genuine—patent leather pumps, his general knowledge of the poets which he quoted ad libitum, even designating page and paragraph, caught the crowd, and made him the successful rival of every other attraction in the community. The rustics stared; the sober-minded wondered.

THE OLD-TIME EVANGELIST.

Every ideal of the pulpit was set aside, and the desk itself was dispensed with during the days of the revival, as if its presence might suggest the innovations from which it was suffering, as its stability would hinder the movements of the dramatic preacher-performer. The multitudes came in droves to hear and were charmed by the display of verbal pyrotechnics. It must be admitted that this type of men had wonderful power in presenting the plea in a manner that won hundreds to its acceptance. Nor were they lacking in ability. They were well read men with remarkable memories, if they did not possess any great degree of real scholarship. The charm of their evangelism was the novelty of the dress, and the long quotations from Dante and Shakespeare which led the rustic and the literary citizen alike to the conclusion that if these men knew the masters so intimately, they must have the lesser lights at their tongue's end too. Thousands were converted under their preaching, and as always the end justified the means. Then as now those who ventured to criticise an evangelist or his methods, were set down as sore, sour, selfish, or 'peeved' over their own failures, and certainly they must be heretical. Such a style of evangelism could cease to shock cultured minds only after it had become familiar. It was possible only in the chaotic West.

A GREAT PRICE PAID.

Of course, it was years after these men had kindled my enthusiasm for them because of the reports of their success, that I learned the details of their work and their history; but when they were taking the country by storm any questions as to methods, any misgivings as to the character of the men were as remote from my mind as I was from Africa. It was a long time before I learned that God used many imperfect and even feeble men to help the struggling race on its way toward the goal of perfection. The fact that he can use any of us is a daily wonder to me. But I think we paid a great price for our experiments with dilettante evangelism. The pendulum swung to its widest extreme in those who came after these men.

"DANCING PUMP EVANGELISM."

At the time this latter class appeared I was on the ground floor, so to speak, a student at college, and was fast becoming familiar with realities which were taking the place of the ideals seen all the years of youth through a medium that almost led me to be a worshipper of men. And since I am writing of an evangelism that served as a nourisher of the hopes of our feeble congregation I shall continue, though it takes me years in advance of my story. Whatever may have been the defects of the dancing-pump evangelists, I have yet to learn that they were either ill-mannered or uncouth. I am sure they kept up the appearance of being gentlemen. Their successors, however, swung to an almost violent extreme. They were ill-mannered, domineering, uneducated, mistaking vulgarity for plainness of speech, swagger for independence, clownishness for wit, and the loud manner of the braggart for the unassuming conduct of the brave.

There were exceptions, of course, but the type is a distinct one. The program was to "blow" into a town, call the official board together, ask if they intended to stand by the evangelist, now that they had invited him to hold a meeting, and, if not, this was the time to say so, as his trunks were still at the depot, and other fields were contending with each other for his services, of whose support he had been assured. He wanted a fair and square understanding before he unmasked his batteries. The poor officiary, frightened at such an approach, and feeling as comfortable as a hare when hemmed in by her pursuers, for want of knowing what to say, said what the evangelist wanted them to say. who forthwith pulled off his coat, rolled up his sleeves, and declared his intention neither to give nor to ask quarter from the enemy. The fight was on. As each member of the official board wended his way homeward after such an interview, methinks he continued to ask himself, "Where are we at?"

POPULAR AMUSEMENTS ATTACKED.

What the evangelist of that era considered the weak spot of the church's life was selected for the first assault, and needless to say that spot was popular amusements. The devotees were singled out with embarrassing particularity, grilled night after night until they sought refuge in the privacy of their homes as long as the meeting lasted, and, in some instances, sought the peaceful security of some less militant congregation than the one that was producing such indiscriminating evangelists. If the offenders were influential in the church so much the worse for them. After that fusillade had spent its fury and the dead buried and the wounded oiled and bandaged, the sects were selected for slaughter. It was a maxim with this class of evangelists that the church must be 'cleaned up' before the extermination of the Canaanites could be accomplished.

THE INEVITABLE RESULT.

The effect of the aforementioned cleaning up was, in some instances, to leave two congregations fighting where one dwelt in peace before. As for the war on the sects, it resulted in bringing many over to our side, but it is doubtful if the cause of Christian union was helped forward by the methods employed. Once a congregation undertook a campaign of this kind, it could not retreat without loss of prestige in the community, nor could it advance far and retain what prestige it had, the only alternative being to prolong the siege in the expectation that the gain numerically would compensate for other losses.

CRISES MET.

At some stage in the meeting, the crisis became so acute because of pressure without and the demands of the evangelist and singer within, that threats were indulged in that "unless the members would stand by the meeting he, the evangelist, would throw it up." There were always a sufficient number to demand that the congregation be thrown down for a few weeks more as it has been in the past few, rather than have the evangelist fling his "throw." The experiences of that evangelistic era are still fresh in the memories of some, who, like myself, if they refer to it at all must do so in gentle accents and a beautiful Christian spirit. Of course a great deal of good was done, but it has always been a question with the writer whether the ills did not predominate over the good. I do not know that the spiritual life of the congregation was not helped by these assaults of the wild and woolly period of our evangelism.

EARLY IMPRESSIONS.

But to my boyish mind the reports of these revivals were as water to the thirsty traveler; I saw the 'truth' winning its way; I saw the strongholds of sectarianism tottering; I saw in these evangelists the spirit of John the Baptist, and felt that they deserved the plaudits of men since they must be enjoying the favor of God. It was a pity that I had to forget my early impressions when I met some of these worthies in after years. I began to write in my note book that all is not gold that glitters, and that our religious journals may report meetings in such a way as to deceive the very elect. It was my misfortune that I had been so trained as to see only one side of a question, only the ideal in men, only what was apostolic, forgetting all the while that apostolic men may do some very unapostolic things.

TYPE SURVIVALS.

Fortunately, that era of our evangelism has retreated farther and farther from centers of enlightenment, though survivals of the type still find a field for their activities in the more unprogressive communities.

"The Way to Unity"

Dr. W. T. Moore, Theologian-Philosopher-Poet, Discusses in Verse the Problem of Division.

THE CHURCH divided! Why is this? Christ's body rent in twain!
Is this the road by which to preach extension of his reign?
But why is this? Again I ask: Can anyone define
Why we prefer this human church to that which is divine?

The answer is not far to seek, though it may wound our pride,
We fail to see that difference gives no license to divide;
We dare to walk where angels tread, and though not understood,
We make our shibboleths the test of Christian brotherhood.

We tie our faith to human creeds, and never stop to think
That theories swim along right well till practice makes them sink,
And when they're dead and out of sight down after them we dive,
And bring them up to speak for us as if they were alive!

A "dead hand" thus is made to rule when doctors say 'tis dead,
It still is found in church's safe though it is seldom read;
But let some member choose to change or nullify the deed,
Then opens wide the old safe door and out jumps little creed.

How long will men keep up this role of slavery to the past,
And never grow beyond the mold in which small souls are cast?
Is there no cure for this grave fault somewhere within our reach,
So that in all our future days we'll practice what we preach?

If so, we may with reason hope the time will not delay
When all our soulless rubbish will go into quick decay,
When only Christ shall be our creed, who lives forevermore,
And all by Him may find the church through wide and open door.

The union problem waits on this, but will not wait for long,
If only men will turn away from what is clearly wrong,
Will break the chains of human creeds by which they now are bound
And stand together in the faith upon a common ground.

Instead of creeds make this the chain: a love for one another,
And then one Church will be indeed and every man a brother,
One family of the living God, whose largeness will increase,
While all the Spirit's followers keep within the bond of peace.

With such a glorious Chuch as this, o'er which Christ's flag's unfurled,
The saints can go to battle for the conquest of the world,
And thus united in the faith, sustained by hope and love.
The Church on earth will represent the pattern from above.

Then let us not the Spirit grieve—by which all saints are sealed—
In building up sectarian walls, e'en on the foreign field,
But let us prove on every field that all in Christ are one
So that the world will soon believe in God's beloved Son.

W. T. Moore and a Friend.

There are few of the older Disciples who have not known W. T. Moore through the years, if not personally, at least through the medium of the papers. His patriarchal personality has given distinction to many a convention gathering. But Doctor Moore is known not only for his theology, philosophy and verse, but also for his hunting proclivities. He takes as much interest in a bag of game as in a theological dispute. Although Doctor Moore does not put himself forth as a great poet, his verse is nevertheless interesting. The accompanying lines on the subject of church division will be read with pleasure by many readers. Doctor Moore has written many books, among which is a "Comprehensive History of the Disciples."

Dr. Montessori Teaches America

Famous Italian Educator Tells Chicago How to Instruct Her Children.

DR. Maria Montessori has been visiting Chicago, telling teachers and parents how she has succeeded in teaching idiots to read and write, how she has taught the rudiments of geometry and arithmetic to children scarcely out of their swaddling clothes, and how by "studying children as a naturalist studies bees" she has established a brand new system of child training under which children develop a fondness for their studies not exceeded by their liking for jams and lollypops.

Dr. Montessori, who in addition to being an Italian countess, possesses the distinction of having been the first woman upon whom the University of Rome conferred its M. D. degree. Although she speaks only in Italian, an expert interpreter enabled Dr. Montessori's novel ideas of how children may be best trained to seep down into the minds and hearts of her hearers.

RENOUNCED SOCIETY LIFE.

This Italian countess, who renounced society life to become an educator, explained how in her school in Rome children are taught to write before they can read—a reversal of the course pursued in the ordinary school. She gives pupils no instruction whatever for holding the pen or pencil, muscular control of the pen alone being necessary. Triangles, squares, geometrical figures of wood, metal or cardboard are used in teaching children to write. They are required to trace the outlines of these and then fill in the outlines with colored pencils of large size.

After a week's work on these geometrical figures, script letters of large size are cut from fine emery paper and pasted on cardboard. The child is given a letter, a vowel first, and told to touch it. Then the phonetic sound of the letter is given. Then the consonants are associated with the vowel and in time words are given in the same way. The children are often blindfolded and by the sense of touch are able to tell the particular letters which they are given. In this way they come to see with the ends of their fingers as well as with their eyes and become familiar with the shape as well as the sound of letters. In learning to write the child has taken one step in learning to read, as he has learned the alphabet both by touch and sight and sound. From words to phrases and sentences the children are led by cards.

HOW MONTESSORI TEACHES.

The process of teaching the very young child numbers is very simple. He is told that there are two buttons lacking on his garment, that there are three stripes of different colors in the rug on which he is standing, and thus, by simple illustrations, he readily comes to understand numbers and be able to count. The first practical lesson is received in counting money.

The fundamental principles which distinguish Dr. Montessori's method from those usually employed are the complete liberty of the child in its natural activities and the utilization of all its natural energy. The child must be hindered only from acts offensive and harmful to others. Reckless repression of spontaneous acts is avoided as well as the imposition of work at the will of another. To interfere with the spontaneity is to repress the very essential of life itself, according to Dr. Montessori. Her system constantly keeps in view the development of independence on the part of the child, that he may think and do for himself and develop in the interest of himself and others. No child is regarded by her as free so long as others do for him what he may do for himself. Hence the child must be taught to dress and undress and feed and care for himself at least from the time he is 3 years of age.

THE UNDERLYING PRINCIPLE.

She has kept in view as her fundamental principle the necessity of giving the child the environment adapted to its individual normal growth. This system as applied in the education of defective children is now used by her in the education of normal children as well and with splendid results. Children in her school from 4 to 5 years of age, read, write, and do number work with a facility equal to that of children of the second and third grades in the ordinary public schools, and without overexertion or without being forced to their task. Dr. Montessori's first rule in her school work is to give attention to the health of the child and its physical development. She demands that the children who attend her school shall be clean in person and in clothing and show respect for their superiors. Parents are expected to co-operate in the work of educating their children. The unwashed and slovenly, as well as those who are not amenable to the discipline of her school or whose parents are not in sympathy with the aims of the same, are not permitted to remain in the school.

P. C. Macfarlane Speaks to Boys

Former Brotherhood Secretary Addresses Banquet of the Chicago Association of Commerce.

FROM Secretary of an incipient Brotherhood to chief adviser to the young men of America, is a far leap. But that is the feat that is reported to the credit of Peter Clark Macfarlane, erstwhile Secretary of the men's Brotherhood of the Disciples. Thus does the church lose another one of its men of talent to the service of the "mere world," which it seems is still wiser in its day and generation than the children of light. Else, would Peter Clark Macfarlane not have been continued in his notable work for the Brotherhood?

A week ago Mr. Macfarlane came to Chicago and addressed the Association of Commerce at the Hotel La Salle. The occasion was the sixth annual dinner given for the future bankers, manufacturers, et al., of Chicago. They accepted everything appreciatively—advice as well as dinner. There were boys in knickerbockers, who probably knew more of baseball than the laws of commerce; boys in their first long trousers and manufacturers of Chicago. really battling with the world, even if parentally chaperoned.

One and all cheered Peter Clark Macfarlane, special writer, when he closed his address with his improvised slogan for the youths in training for Chicago's commercial army:

"Ambition, will, brain, the ideal before us. We are going to be fighters; the battle is set in order, the guns are shotted, the weapons are in our hands, and we have the courage to attack, and will succeed!"

Mr. Macfarlane was introduced as being "more than any other man in America the best fitted to tell the young men of this country of the opportunities that lie before them and the pitfalls that should be avoided if a life is to be well and usefully spent."

Peter Clark Macfarlane.

"Young men must take the lead in every great venture," Mr. Macfarlane said, "and the young men must solve the problems of Chicago for tomorrow; but there is a difference in young men. The man who will bear the city's burdens must be a man who gets ready for them, who begins his training now.

"I remember sitting at Seagirt a year and a half ago talking to the gentleman who is now president of the United States. I was trying to find out something about his antecedents, running back into the history of his thought, and he told me of the books he had written, and I went away and read the books and the speeches, and I came back and talked to him again, convinced that Woodrow Wilson—at least thirty years ago, and I don't know how much further back—started out to be president of the United States; and it took enormous faith thirty years ago for a Democrat to start out to be president of the United States—almost as much as it would take a Republican now.

"Without ambition Abraham Lincoln, at the very hour when he was signing the emancipation proclamation, might have been undistinguishable among the fifty-year-old grocery clerks of Illinois. Thomas A. Edison, to whom civilization owes so much that we never shall be able to build a monument high enough to indicate it, might still be lost among the telegraph operators of this country."

MODERN WOMANHOOD

Conducted by Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison

The New Ballot and Illinois Women

An Address Delivered at the Recent Woman Suffrage Convention at Peoria, Ill.

BY MRS. ELLA S. STEWART.

MY SUBJECT IS limitless—the power coming to Illinois women through the suffrage conferred by the Legislature of 1913. No one today, however intelligent, however sensitive or prophetic, is able to grasp the ultimate significance of that grant of power—the effect upon the future of our state of these long pent up energies of women, now liberated for the public good.

The masses of men have only faintly glimpsed the powers for civilization inhering in the vote. Even the great apostles of democracy have perhaps only glimpsed it. That revelation will be a growing one. But at any rate, we have faith to believe that this torch which has been thus lighted for the Illinois women will illumine the dark places in government—at times startling bats in gruesome political cellars, or revealing the poisonous damp in government cisterns. It will help cleanse and glorify municipal life, and be the light to guide Illinois children into safer paths.

SOME DEVELOPMENTS EXPECTED.

Now, as women proceed in the use of the vote which we have, there is no doubt that some will soon find that there are some straws missing in this new broom. (If I may change my poetical figure of light to this more practical emblem of feminity.)

For instance, they will sometimes yearn for the power to vote for prosecuting attorneys, sheriffs, police magistrates and other officials of administration. But they will be able to accomplish untold good with such power as they have and will also be developing capacities for full suffrage.

As to a few explicit powers:

First: By their vote for presidential electors they will influence national problems and international policies. From our distant periphery there will be a wire to the nation's center, and Illinois women as well as men will be conscious that they have helped elect one who has the greatest influence in determining vast issues—war or peace, the development of agriculture, industry, commerce and the arts of civilization.

I will pass over the consideration of the powers growing out of the vote for the members of the board of equalization and review, the clerk of the appellate court, the county surveyor (who apparently as an after thought among the officials cannot be complimented by the votes of women) and for the sanitary district trustees. But I want to speak of three other features of the law.

TOWNSHIP SUFFRAGE IMPORTANT.

Few of us realize the importance of the township suffrage provided by our law, the vote for supervisor, town clerk, assessor and the highway commissioner.

Let us take the supervisor. If our bill had only mentioned that official it would have been worth fighting for. Eighty-five of our 102 counties are organized on the township plan, and the supervisor is the most important township official, and many of his duties lie along the trend of women's traditional activities and interests.

The supervisors are the county housekeepers. They have charge of county buildings and other county property, and must provide accommodations for courts and the county officers. If you had visited as many Illinois court houses as I have within the past year, you would find that the woman voter's broom is much needed.

These men levy county taxes within certain limits, manage a great deal of the county funds and county business, audit accounts, have much power over roads and bridges, ditches and drains, fill vacancies in county offices, appoint election judges, provide ballot boxes for elections, prepare ballot lists, grant liquor licenses outside of incorporated municipalities and have many other interesting and important duties which I have not now the time to mention.

But the fact which will interest women immediately is that these officials whom they may elect will act as boards of health and have charge of the charitable work of the county; they maintain and regulate the poor farms, jails and work houses, and are authorized to pay pensions to the blind, to poor parents of children, and to provide detention homes for children.

REVELATIONS OF THE REPORTS.

According to a report submitted to the legislature this year, a majority of the jails in Illinois are old and antiquated. Of the ninety-eight jails inspected, twenty-six were so dark that artificial lighting was necessary on the brightest days; twenty-one jails had solid stone walls, ventilated only through board doors. Only ten could be put in first class condition as to sanitation. Thirty were considered second class; twenty-six as poor, while thirty-two were in such a condition that they should be abandoned.

In thirty-six counties there is no separate department for children. In eleven counties there is no provision for women in the county jails. Many counties comply with the letter of the law requiring separate cells for women, but fail to segregate these cells from those of the men.

Only seventeen counties do not detain insane persons in the county jail. In fifty-seven counties insane persons are held in the main jail. Only twenty-six had special cells provided for insane persons.

The majority of the county jails were unsanitary and uncleanly. Only in forty-three counties were separate towels furnished and clothes changed weekly. In twenty-six of the other counties one or the other of these aids to cleanliness were supplied, and in only thirty-one clean sheets and blankets provided weekly.

Does not this suggest a program of study and action for Illinois women?

Then as to the charity of the county. Surely no one is better able to understand this problem than women, who have taken care of the poor, the sick and unfortunate from time immemorial.

A DEPLORABLE CONDITION.

While the last report of the State Charities Commission shows improvement, their latest report also reveals the sore spot and shows the county farm as a "political football, passed back and forth by partisans or parties and groups as a reward to satraps for services rendered." There is no general system of accounting. Many counties have no record of the produce of income from the county farms, of the total expenditures, or the net cost of the institution to the tax payers. Under the present system the epileptic, demented, aged, blind and crippled, young and old, are all thrown together.

All this great field of social service is within the jurisdiction of the supervisors, who in the future will be elected by, and should be held responsible to, the votes of women. This should furnish incentive to housekeepers and mothers to make these conditions reflect present thought as to sanitation, correction and humanity.

I must speak of one other township official to be elected by the votes of women—the highway commissioner.

OTHER IMPORTANT POWERS.

This is a most important power inasmuch as the same legislature passed a good roads law, so that Illinois may now be able to grapple with one of her greatest problems—the problem of poor roads. One of the current magazines has recently analyzed the paralysis of life which has held certain mountain districts of Kentucky and Tennessee in medieval obscurity as the utter lack of transportation. There are no roads.

Poor roads in Illinois explain largely the isolation of the splendid patriotic women of the farms, who, up to the present time have been little represented in the great educational and progressive movements of Illinois women, and as a result of this vote for township officials I prophesy that a new era for country women has opened in this state. I expect to hear of hundreds of rural communities where the men and women will now meet at their school houses or homes to discuss the opportunities growing out of the votes for women for these two groups of township officers, and I am quite as happy over this phase of our law as any other.

I want also to speak of the vast possibilities growing out of the vote which

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

MEN AND MILLIONS.

THE ANNOUNCEMENT in last week's Christian Century of the propitious launching of a movement to secure one thousand additional men and women to work on the home and foreign mission fields, and to gather a fund of six million dollars above the regular missionary collections to be divided among the missionary and benevolent societies and the educational institutions of the Disciples of Christ, has thrilled our entire communion.

Quite apart from the vast sum involved, the conception itself marks an epoch in the administration of the affairs not alone of a single religious group, but of the entire Christian world. This, we believe, is the first instance of a religious body merging all its interests into one comprehensive organization, and asking its membership to give great sums to them all through a single treasury. Its implication as to the essential unity of the hitherto separated and often competitive tasks of the church is its most impressive feature. Home missions, foreign missions, the care of the needy, the education of youth and the preparation of an equipped ministry—these are not many and rival tasks but parts and aspects of the one common task of building the Kingdom of God.

In its genesis this idea seems to have been conceived in more than one great soul. Mr. Abram E. Cory, the leader and, on its human side, the life of the movement, modestly and, no doubt, truthfully, disclaims credit for first conceiving the great plan. It grew, he says, from suggestions made by Mr. W. F. Holt, of California, the late Mrs. M. E. Harlan, of Indianapolis, and others, and finally took on the clear outlines of possibility through the proposal of Mr. R. A. Long, of Kansas City, to give a million dollars toward its realization.

Explaining his relation to the growth of the plan Mr Cory was heard in a private conversation to say, in language whose elegance under the circumstances we will defend against any prudish critic, that he had been "booted along" from one plan to another through at least four stages of enlargement.

Beginning with a one-million dollar goal he was compelled by forces outside himself to enlarge his ideas and make it two millions, then two and a half millions, and finally, by the inclusion of the colleges, six millions. No enterprise known to us bears upon it so unmistakably the marks of divine providence.

It is not a man's movement.

Singularly and indisputably it is of God.

THE SPIRIT OF THE MOVEMENT.

WE BELIEVE that the Men and Millions Movement will go forward with no tumult of man's devices, but in awe and humility and intense consecration. The Movement is pregnant with tremendous sacrifices that will soon come to birth. Men and women of wealth will be searching their hearts to apply Christ's test to the use of their money. We do not believe Mr. Long's generous gift will be the only million-dollar gift. Others are able to do as much. Many who give the minimum of $500 and many whose offerings are scattered all the way between that and Mr. Long's will be making sacrifices of self-interest in the interest of the Kingdom of God.

The reflex influence of the successful completion of this Olympian enterprise upon the spiritual life of the Disciples of Christ will be tremendous. It will almost give to our communion a new state of mind. Far beyond our own border will the inspiration of our example spread. Other religious bodies will see the advantage and the glory of such a practical unification of their Christian tasks also, and go and do likewise.

And who knows but that all the churches of Christ in America may, as a result, some day see the advantage and glory of similarly merging all their tasks of missions and benevolence and Christian education into one united non- or un- or inter- or super- (take any prefix you please) -denominational organization for administering the King's business on a scale worthy of the King?

Perhaps it is not well now to prophecy concerning indirect results. We stand at the beginning of our task. It is a very concrete and practical task, close to the ground. With hearts burning with devotion let the work be done!

One thousand trained workers and six million dollars! There are two present urgent duties before each loyal soul of us. One is to begin the searching of our own hearts as to our own part in the movement. The other is to add to the names of those who are dearest to us and whom we daily bear up to God in prayer, the names of Mr. Cory and his coworkers, that they may have grace and strength and courage and unflagging faith to carry the mighty responsibilities that rest upon them.

THE COLLEGES AND THE MOVEMENT.

AT LAST it begins to look as if Disciples of Christ intend to do justice to their educational institutions. Too long have the colleges waited. Evangelism and missions have received not too much but too exclusive an emphasis in our planning and giving. Nearly twenty institutions of culture, many of them naively wearing the appellation "University," have been struggling for their life through many years. The Disciples have strangely lacked in educational conscience.

But the inclusion of the colleges in the Men and Millions Movement, and as the largest factor in the Movement, means that the dawn has suddenly burst out of a long night. Three and a half millions of dollars for twenty-five institutions is a small sum, indeed, as college endowments go today. The larger amounts apportioned to the ten leading schools is, as the Business Men's Commission says, only a beginning. It will give these colleges a chance to breathe and to hold up their heads.

But a "beginning" implies a farther and ampler support after the "beginning" has been made. So our colleges and our men and women of college ideals may thank God that these institutions of culture are coming into their own.

Of no less significance than the great sum of money to be raised for education is the standardization which is to be brought about within the next five years by the auspices of this fund. It is said that only one college in our group comes up to the requirements for Class A as defined by the Carnegie Foundation. A few of these schools are an academic scandal. The majority of them do good, earnest work, the best work possible in their poverty. But with the distribution of the benefactions of the brotherhood will go the impressive suggestion that the colleges abandon the medical and musical college, the "preparatory department" and the flamboyant title of "University," and organize a curriculum thoroughly collegiate in character, articulating with accredited high schools and attracting a homogeneous student body.

The Commission of Business Men has thrown a flood of light into our educational situation by the adoption of the high standard set forth in last week's Christian Century as the condition of a school's participation in the fund about to be raised. The intelligence, sanity, progressiveness and statesmanship with which it met this problem deserves unstinted praise.

To those on the outside of its councils it seems unaccountable that the Disciples Divinity House, in Chicago, the single institution among us standing for the higher education of the Christian ministry, whose students to the number of more than three hundred occupy leading pulpits and academic positions in our brotherhood, should have been omitted from the division of the prospective fund. No doubt the Commission had a reason for making this single exception.

The Christian Century has been receiving many expressions of wonder at this omission, from former students of the Divinity House and from others who believe that the higher education of the ministry is the most important aspect of our educational problem as a people. To all inquiries our reply has been that we believe the Commission must have acted under a misapprehension, and that, without doubt, the Divinity House will yet be included. If it is not included the Commission will no doubt make its reason public.

POSTER PREACHING.

THE Poster Advertising Association has undertaken a striking form of evangelism. On a date agreed upon, Dec. 19, the billboards of practically every city and town of importance in America were decorated with a large poster, nine feet high and twenty-one feet long, containing a picture of The Nativity. No advertising accompanies the picture, and it is posted in conspicuous centers. The purpose, as set forth in a letter to the clergy, is "to utilize the immense pictorial appeal of posters in a way which shall make men better by turning their minds to noble and inspiring thoughts." A personal letter to the editor from an officer of the Association says, "We want you to feel that we have no ulterior motive, but that we want to contribute our mite to the spiritual uplift of humanity."

We have reason to believe that this is a perfectly true statement. We believe that the men who are responsible for this undertaking have done it solely for the good it will do. Heartily we thank them.

If we are correctly informed, this is the first step in what may become an important movement. The billboards of the country are sometimes full of paid advertisements, but there are seasons when valuable spaces are not sold. The associations that own or lease these boards are willing to utilize the vacant boards with messages that shall make men better.

BISHOP LAWRENCE ON THE MINISTER'S WIFE.

BISHOP Lawrence, of the Massachusetts diocese of the Protestant Episcopal Church, in an address paid a tribute to a class which is by no means over praised—the wives of ministers. He said: "If there is a body superior in tact, devotion and ability to the clergymen, it is their wives." The United Presbyterian writes that there is, unhappily, an occasional wife who spoils the work of her minister husband by her unseemly ways and talk, but agrees that the rule is that no small part of the pastor's efficiency is due to the part which the prudent and wise wife has in the church work.

CONTINENT-WIDE "GO-TO-CHURCH SUNDAY."

A CONTINENT-WIDE observance of "Go to Church Sunday," Feb. 1, became a possibility when the suggestion for its celebration in the United States and Canada was incorporated in a telegram sent by A. G. Fegert, chairman of the general "Go to Church Sunday" campaign committee to Dr. Francis E. Clark, founder and president of the Christian Endeavor movement.

The text of the telegram follows:

"Go to church Sunday, proposed by Chicago Christian Endeavor Union to be observed Feb. 1, has been indorsed in Chicago by Catholics, Jews and every denomination of Protestants. Commercial interests and public service corporations will co-operate so that every man, woman and child will have a chance to go to church that Sunday. Newspaper advertising, house-to-house visitation, electric signs, streamers on automobiles and wagons, stickers on envelopes, salutation of 'Go to Church Sunday,' telephone calls, letters, torchlight parades and every other means of advertising will be employed to promote churchgoing.

"Enthusiasm for the plan is running high. Looks like 'Go to Church Sunday' will become as popular as Christmas. Suggest you issue a call through the 80,000 Christian Endeavor Societies of North America with their membership of 4,000,000 of every denomination that they arrange to have every town and city in the United States join Chicago in the observance of Feb. 1 as 'Go to Church Sunday.' Ask them all to pray at noon each day and work hard day and night for success of plan. Field Secretary Gates is mailing you all details of plan.

"Chicago Christian Endeavor Union wishes you a happy New Year and a safe and successful tour of Europe, Asia, Africa and Australia, on behalf of the World's Christian Endeavor convention to be held in Chicago in July, 1915."

DEMOCRATIC CONVENTIONS.

AN INTERPRETATION.

DISCIPLES of Christ have always insisted that the church of Christ in each local community is independent, sovereign and free. This position stands well the test of Scripture and practice. It keeps church life near to real human life by keeping the church more conscious of its immediate community than of a remote authority unrelated to its immediate community.

But this free congregation of believers is a member of a larger entity, the Body of Christ, of which also all other congregations of believers are members. There is much inspiration in this ideal of a "holy Catholic Church," of which all our sovereign local churches are members and organs. But it is more than a mere intangible ideal. The Body of Christ is, or should be, a visible, social reality. The ideal must be embodied in an organization, if the great tasks of missions and benevolence and education and the whole round of problems involved in social reconstruction are to be wrought out.

There are three ways by which sovereign local churches may work at these tasks.

First, there is the non-co-operative way. The churches may work in isolation, each one doing that which seemeth right in its own eyes. This plan needs no discussion. It has been demonstrated by experience to be ineffective and wasteful, lacking also the dynamic and inspiration that comes from fellowship in a common task.

Secondly, individual Christians may organize co-operative societies and appeal to the churches to make their gifts to the societies and allow the societies to administer the funds thus gathered. This is practically the method followed by the Disciples for more than a half a century. The societies were originally constituted of individuals who supported it with gifts of money—a certain signed gift constituting one an annual member and a larger gift making one a life member. The Home Society and the Foreign Society each provides in its constitution for an additional class of members to be appointed by the churches as churches, but in neither society has this representative membership ever been actually called into existence. The policy of administering these missionary enterprises is determined, practically, by the executive boards, and a report is submitted to an annual mass meeting. This mass meeting takes hardly more than a receptive interest in the proceedings, probably because it is not a responsible body, and because the year's work is usually well done, the funds well administered and the time set apart for deliberation and discussion very short.

The third method is for the churches themselves to consider that they in their united capacity as the Body of Christ, are the divinely ordained missionary society and benevolent society and education society and social reconstructive society, and to lay intelligently to heart their responsibility not only to give money to these great tasks but to assume responsibility for them and to perform whatever functions are requisite to their most effective administration.

Without suggesting the faintest criticism of our great missionary societies, which sprang into existence at a time when the churches had no missionary vision and could not be induced to undertake such a task, and which have wrought a work that is marvelous in our eyes, The Christian Century interprets the action of the Louisville and Toronto convention in organizing a "General Convention of Churches of Christ" as a step toward the assumption by the churches themselves of this their essential responsibility. It was a step toward the merging into a unified, orderly, democratic body, responsible to the churches directly, the several functions now performed by several unrelated societies.

If we misinterpret the purpose for which the "General Convention" was organized we will be grateful if some one who knows will tell our readers hat its purpose is.

AT THE END OF THE DAY

ON CHURCH-BUILDING AND SOUL-BUILDING.

EDITOR THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY:

LIKE MANY of your readers, I have long been observing with actual depression of spirit the fact that so many of our ministers resign their pulpits shortly after building a new church edifice. There must be something symptomatic in this almost universal custom. I have been reflecting on it until I have come to some pretty serious conclusions.

I suppose there are many explanations. The pastor probably alienated some members of the church in his aggressive handling of the building problem. There are always those in every congregation who act as a drag upon any movement that involves money. They have no faith, no vision of the urgent opportunity before the church, and besides they do not intend to bear their rightful share of the burden. Between such persons and the pastor there could easily enough develop a more or less strained relationship which would make his continuance in the pastorate after the new house was built appreciably less comfortable.

Again, I imagine many of these pastoral relations are severed through disappointment at the results following the completion of the new building. People's hopes were stimulated to expect enormous increases in their congregations and it was expected that many would be added to the number of the saved through the attraction of the beautiful edifice. But within a few weeks after dedication day the novelty and glamour were worn off and both congregation and minister found themselves face to face with the same problem with which they had been struggling in their more modest home for many years. There was no magic in the new church house. One result of such a disillusionment could easily enough be the resignation of the pastor.

PASSING by these and many similar explanations, I am convinced that there are many pastors among us who regard it as the highest goal of their ministry to build a house of worship. Their preaching and organizing for several years will take that direction, and when that goal is attained they are at a loss for some substantial task to which to set their hand. Not finding it, they leave and go to another field—perhaps to build another church edifice.

I have today had the experience of worshiping with a congregation whose minister is obviously steering his work in the direction of a new building and subordinating everything to that purpose. I cannot tell your readers, Mr. Editor, how unsatisfying the church service was. The morning was beautiful with sunshine. A snow had fallen during the night and Nature was overspread with charm. I walked to church with praise in my heart and a hunger for a fresh and illuminating interpretation of God's life and His grace.

I arrived five minutes before the service began. The little sanctuary was in a hubbub. The noise was hardly quelled by the entrance of the pastor. He was a clean-cut, well-appearing young man. But he brought no message to my soul. He used twenty minutes or more in making announcements about committees and contests and finances and socials, and the "sermon" had not an ounce of food in it.

When I talked with him afterward he told me that he was determined to have a new church building under way inside of two years and he was bending all his efforts to that end. He was keeping things humming, he said, and quietly starting some pledges on the side.

This congregation needed a new church building, there was no doubt about that, but they needed some building too, and the very lovable and good-intentioned young shepherd of their souls was purchasing the church building at the expense of the soul-building. With his mind full of his material ambition, and cluttered up with committees and finances, how could he divide the word of God to his people?

I AM forced to the serious conclusion that the supreme need of the ministry today is the recovery of its spiritual character. There is a note which has been sounded by some very eminent church leaders recently to the effect that the minister of today must be an all-around business man, a manager, a social organizer, a comptroller of finances.

That kind of talk would make me indignant if it did not make me so sad to think that such sentiments could find acceptable hearing. In my judgment and experience it seems clear as the day that the one great need of the church is for prophets, for men who can tell us of God, who can open our souls toward the Father, who can interpret to us our place in this invisible spiritual universe, who can teach us how to worship and lead us like true priests of God to the altar of intercession.

The great danger in our church life today is materialism, externalism, institutionalism. If our ministers fall into the error of measuring their success by material standards—money raised, houses builded or what not—the tenure of their pastorates will be short and the spiritual results meagre. Our modern Christianity, taking its cue from the age, is emphasizing the active, pragmatic, institutional side of church life. We are asked by our leaders to do many things.

Our churches are the scene of much bustle and noise. The "bee-hive" ideal possesses us. We are exhorted to get up "boosters' clubs." The committee on securing a new pastor says he must be a "hustler" and a "live wire." A passion for numbers possesses us. "Personal work" is organized on mechanical lines. "Church work" does not connote to the average mind a very high and attractive kind of labor. It consists mainly in cooking, sewing and soliciting. The restaurant side of our church life is conspicuous. Our ladies have a great reputation for their dinners. We were never so busy.

THERE never was so much bustle and motion and organization as today. Our ministers have given up trying to teach us anything and have taken to exhorting us. A well-known pastor, the leader in a perfectly marvelous Sunday-school enterprise, a masterly organizer, and a man whom I personally greatly admire and love, has a lecture to church workers entitled, "Making the Wheels Go Round." In this title is unconsciously betrayed the fallacious ideal of much modern church work. It does not follow that because the wheels go round the grist is ground. Nor does it follow from the fact that many, many hands are busy attending the machinery and making the wheels go round that therefore the grist is ground.

No material or organizational success can be a substitute for intelligent reverence and worship inspired and interpreted by a teacher whose lips have been touched with a coal from God's altar. Our pastors cannot afford to become business men. The reason business men need pastors is because their own minds are so full of business that they have too little time to discover the deeper meanings of life. But if the minister turns business man and house builder, then it will be a case of the blind leading the blind.

And if the minister turns housebuilder he will find his people asking in wonderment, after the house is built, "what is there now for us to do?" He will have to invent something for them to do. And when a church gets to the pitiable necessity of inventing something to do to justify its existence it ceases to be a church of Christ.

So I say that the frequent removals of our pastors after the building is completed is a symptom of an inferior and fallacious conception of the ministry and of the church, on the part of both the minister himself and his people. It is not my purpose to map out in detail the higher ideal of the ministry, but I think what I have said may at least point my readers in the direction that their ideal is to be found.

1913 Shows Progress in Religion

CHICAGO DAILY NEWS' RESUME OF YEAR'S WORK.

Upward of 40,000,000 Americans, native and foreign born, have allied themselves with some religious body and to support their religions they give more than $400,000,000 a year, or an average of nearly $10 each. To be more exact, the number of people enrolled as members of some religious body, Christian or Jewish, is about 38,200,000. This is considerably above one in three of the population.

The amount of money they give altogether is not taken by census enumerators. These gifts have been carefully estimated at $360,000,000 to $375,000,000 a year. They are, however, increasing steadily. Last year large sums were put into new buildings, so the total will press the $400,000,000 mark within a year or two if it does not do so now.

Those who know say the most striking feature of the year among both Protestants and Catholics was the advance in methods of work. As in the industrial world, churches are revamping their ways of doing things. The Christian associations are leading in these new ventures. Churches are quick, however, to pattern after the associations.

Increase in the Membership.

Christian bodies in America, except a few of the small ones, increase their membership about 2 per cent a year. Catholics, Disciples of Christ, Lutherans and sometimes Episcopalians do somewhat better.

In Sunday-schools there is the same steady increase in numbers of children enrolled. Catholics are multiplying their schools and adopting pedagogical methods. They also are introducing the system of classes and teachers. Organized Sunday-school work of the world, having its strongest centers in America, held a world convention during the year and made plans for growth. Educational methods are put on better lines. America is carrying the Sunday-school system into the very corners of the earth.

Gifts for Mission Work.

Mission contributions, all Protestant societies, reached $63,000,000. No other country compares with America. England is second, but a large part of England's gifts are for relief, so vast are demands of the suffering poor. Americans' gifts go almost wholly to religious causes. The sum named should be increased by $3,000,000 to $5,000,000 if Catholic missions are included. This sum is exclusive of gifts to Catholic orders.

Protestant foreign mission gifts for the first time passed the $18,000,000 mark, the largest from any country. Protestant home missions are $45,000,000, with a steady gain in amount and a better system for its distribution in large cities and in towns of the far west.

Eugenics in the Church.

Eugenics came to the fore in Christian affairs during the year as never before. It started in Chicago and was taken up throughout the country. With it came a new interest in all social questions. The Federal Council of Churches made plans to prevent commercialized vice in San Francisco as much as possible during the Panama Exposition. Pulpits everywhere inveighed against evil in the home, on the stage, in politics and business.

There came in cities, especially in the east, a great increase in the number of noonday lunch clubs conducted by church organizations. These are chiefly for women. These clubs have in them a protest against poor luncheons provided by the trade as cost of living has advanced. They have a social and a religious side. They are centers for picking up new workers in churches and they make profits. With the clubs also have come new centers for the church to reach working men, to secure employment for men and women.

Jews Have Been Active.

Orthodox and reform Jews have been active. The former perfected an agency for keeping congregations closer together, and for the first time in the history of Judaism in America salaried secretaries were sent out on national work. The latter made national a Young Men's Hebrew association on the same lines as the Christian associations and guaranteed an annual expense fund for five years.

Catholics lost by death a number of cardinals who were of first rank in the conduct of world work, but beyond that the Vatican had a quiet year. French Catholics went forward as never before, being released from obligation to the state. Here missionary leaders held in Boston the greatest gathering of Catholic prelates and laymen America has seen.

Plan for Church Unity.

Church unity ceased to have the Episcopal Church as one leader, other bodies naming commissions that are equally prominent in forward plans. Almost all bodies were in the unity plans by the end of the year, except the Roman and eastern communions. Tremendous progress has been made toward the world conference to consider the matter. Committees are at work devising concrete questions to come before the proposed conference.

The American Bible Society readjusted its work in Panama and the near east, dividing it up to some extent with the British and Foreign Bible Society of London to make, if possible, at Panama a great Bible distributing point comparable to that at the terminus of the Suez canal. It reported less disturbance of work in Mexico than might be expected and great opportunities in China. In Burma Baptists celebrated the centenary of their missions.

Congregationalists made all benevolent societies semiofficial, linking them with their national council and creating a national secretaryship. This secretary gives this body for the first time a national official head. It is a significant change from independence toward centralization. Still the independence of the single congregation being assured, the plan was adopted unanimously. It is on the line of events transpiring in other bodies, and is held to mean a new congregationalism.

Adopt Policy for Methodists.

Methodists held a national mass meeting and adopted a policy for Methodism, or for that part of it that is in the north. This policy affects missions, education, extension and every phase of Methodist effort. Government by mass meeting is new, but this experiment worked. United Brethren so admire the plan that they are to try it next spring. For the larger body it is held that it means a new Methodism.

An Episcopal general convention adopted the province plan. It divided the country into eight districts and set up for the first time conventions between those of dioceses and the general one. To these provincial conventions were committed many duties, aiming to obtain greater freedom of action at less cost.

Disciples of Christ met in national convention for the first time as a delegate body. Heretofore, this large communion has been governed in its benevolence and other common work by mass meetings.

DR. GLADDEN RESIGNS.

News of the resignation of Dr. Washington Gladden from the pastorate of the First Congregational Church of Columbus, Ohio, is a reminder that for many years he has been regarded as one of the world's greatest advocates of social righteousness. He is to be succeeded by Dr. Carl S. Patton, but will remain as pastor emeritus in the church where he has been pastor for thirty-one years.

In his active efforts for the advancement of humanity Dr. Gladden has not only labored as a modern crusader in the church, but as editor, lecturer and author, and within the better meaning of the term has gone into politics. To show his sincerity as a citizen and regard for citizenship he served as a member of the city council of Columbus, 1900-1902.

Of Human Interest

Marion Harland's Glimpse of Poe.

Marion Harland tells, for a recent issue of the Continent of the one glimpse she enjoyed of Edgar Allan Poe, now regarded as America's greatest lyric poet. She thus describes her impressions of him on that "perfect day," as he stood for a moment on a sidewalk of Richmond, Va.:

"No photograph that I have ever seen conveys a just idea of the pure, indefinable refinement and clarity of feature and expression. He was evidently in a serene mood. The perfect day; the reaches of green shade under the vista of fine trees; the perfumed air and the river song may have had a message for him that no other could interpret.

"In that one instant I inventoried every particular of face and form. He wore a summer suit of light, black cloth and his hat was a black leghorn. I recalled at once that his wife had not been dead very long and decided that he still wore mourning for her. He carried a lithe figure with military erectness; I remarked especially that his ungloved hands were slender and shapely. 'Patrician!' I said then, and 'Just what a poet's should be!' The thought ran through me like some subtle electric fluid that the hand holding the hat had written 'The Raven' and 'The Bells'! His mouth was shadowed by a slight dark mustache; his hair was black and curled lightly.

"It was all over in less time than it takes me to write the last sentence. With one last look at the rose thickets he put his hat upon his head and moved slowly down the street, not glancing back as I arose and strained my eyes for a last glimpse of him until he was lost in the distance.

"He bore no resemblance to one who had written of himself as the doomed wretch whom—

"'Disaster followed fast, and followed faster
Till the dirges of his hopes that melancholy burden bore
Of Never—nevermore.'"

Secretary McAdoo Entertains "Julia."

Very early one morning, two hours before the Secretary of the Treasury was at his desk, there was a caller at the Treasury Department, who said she had come all the way from Georgia to see Mr. McAdoo and bring him something. She was a colored woman, dressed in her best, and if some one had told her that it was all but impossible for anyone in all the world to speak to the Secretary of the Treasury when he was in his office it would have made no difference to Julia. The Chicago Record-Herald tells the story:

"I'se come to see Mr. McAdoo," she said to the private secretary, seating herself comfortably in the outer office, "an' I'll jes' wait!"

She waited two hours, and more.

"But she says she knows you'll see her," the private secretary explained to the Secretary of the Treasury, "and she insists she has brought you something from Georgia."

Something from Georgia was the one thing that appealed to the Secretary of the Treasury irresistibly, and he pushed aside his papers, took off the tortoise-shell spectacles, which he wears only at his desk, and looked up.

"Ah'm Julia!" his caller said, by way of introduction, and with a bow so low it tipped her hat over her big black eyes.

"Ah'm Julia? Don't yo' all know me, Massa Will?"

"Why, hel-lo, Julia!" The Secretary of the Treasury laughed with the delight of a boy. Here was no suppliant for office, no claimant of patronage. His caller was the daughter of his old black nurse, Adeline Brown, and the sister of Henry, who used to play with him, and whom Adeline always whipped unmercifully upon the slightest provocation of any real or imaginary disrespect to her "white chile."

Julia dipped into the capacious but perfectly safe pocket of her petticoat and produced a small parcel.

"* * * an' I'se done brought yo' all something," she said.

It was an old photograph of the mother and father of the Secretary of the Treasury, carefully cherished for fifty years by Adeline Brown, Julia's mother, who had been his nurse. The little discolorations of time were appearing on the background of the picture, but Mrs. McAdoo was still resplendent in the black silk standing out over her hoopskirt, and Judge McAdoo was dignified in light, baggy trousers, long coat and stock.

Senator Lodge's Latest Story.

Senator Lodge said of a lobbyist whose lobbying had failed:

"He tried to accept defeat with urbanity, but consciously he showed his chagrin. Poor chap, he resembled Mrs. Smythe.

"Mrs. Smythe called on a friend, expecting to be asked to stay for luncheon. But the friend didn't ask her, and so Mrs. Smythe, secretly much disappointed and put out, rose to go.

"She didn't intend in the least to show her regret, but involuntarily, as she put out her hand she said:

"'Well, good-bye, dear Mrs. Luncheon.'"

Noted Scientist on Recognition of Genius.

The late Alfred Russell Wallace, the co-discoverer with Darwin of evolution, had a hard row to hoe at first," said a Baltimore physiologist.

"Poor Doctor Wallace had, in fact, such a very hard row to hoe that he couldn't afford to marry till he was sixty-three, when to balance matters he wedded a young girl of eighteen, by whom he had a son and a daughter.

"I commiserated in London last summer with Doctor Wallace.

"'It was too bad,' I said. 'A man of genius like you cramped with poverty till past middle life! It was too bad.'

"'My friend,' Doctor Wallace replied, 'always you will find the fire of genius takes a long, long time to make the pot boil.'"

The World Is Growing Better

Millionaires Fight Loan Sharks.

To obliterate the loan shark and enable American wage-earners to borrow money easily, cheaply and under self-respecting conditions is the underlying purpose of a great banking enterprise shortly to be launched under the auspices of Julius Rosenwald of Chicago.

Mr. Rosenwald, who is about to leave Europe for Egypt, prior to returning to Chicago at the end of March, has given a detailed account of the scheme, which in many respects is unique in the history of American philanthropy. The inspiration for the idea comes from one of Mr. Rosenwald's eminent European co-religionists, Signor Jussot, Italian minister of finance, who is the founder of a system of banks in Italy which lend sums as low as $10 to workingmen, small tradesmen, farmers and others who enjoy no credit at the banks.

The plans for the establishment of Mr. Rosenwald's first bank, which is intended to be only the forerunner of a great chain of similar institutions throughout the United States, are at the point of completion. The bank will be opened in Chicago with a capital of several hundred thousand dollars. The aggregate capital when all the other banks which are projected are ready for business, will approximate $5,000,000.

Mr. Rosenwald does not authorize the statement, but it is understood that Andrew Carnegie and Vincent Astor are prominently associated with him in the enterprise.

Hotel For "Down and Outs" Opened.

The Rufus F. Dawes Hotel, built at 8 South Peoria street, Chicago, by Charles G. Dawes as a memorial to his son, who was drowned in Lake Geneva, Sept. 5, 1912, was thrown open to the city's homeless men last week. Within a few hours after the banker had opened the doors of the institution he endowed, the dormitories were filled. Fully 200 men had been standing in line awaiting the opening at 6 o'clock. Three hundred men may be cared for at one time. "Gee, dis is fine," was the word of commendation that came to the bank president from his first guest, "Bill" McCarthy, who passed over his nickel for bed and bath. Mr. Dawes was assisted in the first night reception by his wife and daughter Caroline, his brother, Rufus C and Henry M. Dawes, and the architect, Arthur G. Brown. They spent an hour before the huge fire-place talking with the unfortunates.

Chicago Has "Sane" New Year.

Victory for the "sane New Year's eve" was proclaimed last week by the men who have sought to establish it. They declared that Chicago had seen its last New Year's eve carousal. "Died of natural causes" is the verdict of the "sane" advocates upon the orgy. They give Chief Gleason and the police credit for having helped to bring about the sane observance of the coming of a new year, but declare the police were aided by conditions for which that department was not responsible. Arthur Burrage Farwell, president of the Chicago Law and Order League, was one of those to proclaim the death of the orgy of New Year's eve. He declared that "the annual debauch" had died a natural death and commended Chief Gleason for having helped bring the disgraceful custom to a close.

The Book World

BY ARTHUR GORDON.

The Moslem Christ. By Samuel M. Zwemer. Mohammedanism is the one religion of any world significance that has risen since the advent of Christianity. All the rest of the great faiths are older than our own. It is therefore of interest to note the attitude of Islam toward the Founder of the Christian institution. Mohammed was not unacquainted with the story of Jesus. He obtained fragments of it from scattered groups of Jews and Christians, not always the best of their kind. As a result the Koran, the sacred book of Islam, contains several references to him, and the later literature of the Moslem communities has many more. With a wise anticipation of absorbing the rest of the world in the embrace of Islam, the Saints and Prophets of Judaism and Christianity were taken over into the Mohammedan scheme, just as Rome was accustomed to "invite" the gods of conquered nations to a place in the imperial Pantheon. Therefore, as might be expected, Jesus is accorded a place of honor in such a list as that in Sarah 6, which refers to "Isaac, Jacob, David, Solomon, Job, Joseph, Moses, Aaron, Zachariah, John, Jesus, Elias, Ishmael, Elisha, Jonah, Lot," as the notable prophets of the past, who are all superceded by Mohammed, the Prophet of Islam. Doctor Zwemer, who has lived for many years in Arabia, and is now in Cairo, has collected the references to Jesus in the Koran and such commentators and preservers of tradition as Eth—Thalabi and his companions. The allusions are for the most part reverent and appreciative. They emphasize always the human life of Jesus, his prophethood and mission to the Jews. But they deny in the strongest manner his divine sonship. This is not surprising when one remembers the stern and uncompromising monotheism of Mohammed's teaching, and its protest against the trinitarian doctrine of Christianity, which was often crudely presented in a form to resemble tritheism. To the followers of the prophet nothing could be more blasphemous than to affirm that God had a son, for such a statement was sure to be interpreted in the most indelicate and offensive terms. The Arabic literature contains many legendary stories regarding Jesus, His teaching and especially His miracles. Such acts of wonder are freely attributed to Him, as to Mohammed and all the prophets. The most remarkable feature of this reflection of the life of our Lord in the writings of Islam is the appropriation of many of His most instinctive utterances, and their assignment to the prophet, by the commentators. This goes even to the length of attributing to Mohammed the Lord's prayer.

It is not to be presumed that any or all of these references to Jesus would accord Him that unique supremacy which Christianity has evermore claimed for Him. He is still and always one of the preparatory prophets, and not even the chief of these. Therefore the missionaries waver between an attitude of grateful appreciation of all that Islam affirms regarding Jesus, as the best of approaches to the preaching of the Gospel, and a sentiment of fierce and intolerant hostility, because they find that this very reverence for Jesus is an obstacle to his complete acceptance. Doctor Zwemer himself displays this wavering tendency. At times he appears to rejoice in the broad foundations Islam has laid for a fuller faith in God through Jesus. At other moments he seems to think it a misfortune that the Koran makes any reference to Jesus; and to believe that the crude state of idolatry and fetishism in which Mohammed found the Arab tribes would afford a better ground of hope for their conversion than their fanatical devotion to the Prophet. But such a view is at variance with all the facts of religious progress. Mohammedanism is sure to prove a half-way house to Christianity. It is a great thing to have brought a people like the Arabs and their Mohammedan brethren throughout the world, to a monotheism so firm and abiding as theirs, and a reverence for such a leader as they believe Mohammed to have been, however mistaken their picture of him. Constant and kindly insistence, not on the doctrines of Christianity as Doctor Zwemer insists, but on the person of Christ, will bring the result of a radical assignment of the prophet and the world's Savior to their rightful relations, and the exchange of an ethnic faith for the religion of the spirit. Immigrant Forces. By William P. Shriver. "Factors in the New Democracy," is the subtitle of this volume, which is published by the American Christian Missionary Society of Cincinnati, under the general auspices of the Missionary Education Movement of the United States and Canada. It is one of the best volumes put out in that series. We recently noticed in this supplement Mr. Haskins' excellent book, "The Immigrant." But this is a work superior to that in many regards. It has the human touch of reality and concern. It gives not only the facts and statistics but their interpretation. It follows the streams of immigration to their sources in Europe and Asia, and pours searching and welcome light on the conditions, physical, social and religious, in such home-lands as Hungary, Bohemia, Croatia, Roumania, Italy, Russia, and the like. Most of all, the element of religious solicitude beats through like a pulse. The author knows that while economic, educational and social factors are to be regarded with interest and given some emphasis, it is religion that determines in no small degree the present and the future. For this reason the chapters on "Religious Backgrounds" and "The Task of the Church" are of particular value. Appendices cite the literature and classify the statistics. (American Christian Missionary Society, $1.00.)

The Boy Scouts of the Dismal Swamp. By Walter P. Eaton. A little group of boys up in the Berkshire Hills conceive the idea of a trip to the great Dismal Swamp in Virginia. Their Scoutmaster reads to them Mrs. Hemens' poem (wrongly credited by the author to Tom Moore) about the demented lover who followed his dead sweetheart to the Swamp, and the boys wanted to go. Their trip down the coast, their camp life in the swamp region, their experiences getting lost, hunting, studying forestry, learning the laws of good scout life, are just the sort to absorb boys in the pages of the book. It is a companion story to Mr. Eaton's "Boy Scouts of Berkshire." (W. A. Wilde Co. $1.00 net.)

The Pipes of Clovis. By Grace Duffie Boylan. Partly historical, partly romantic and partly fairy. The story of a wild, shy boy, who learned to play the woodland pipes with such skill that all creatures came at his call. He saved the land of Swabia in the twelfth century by calling the horses of an invading host to follow him. Then he saved the little princess who had wandered into the forest and at last won her hand in the tournament. A pleasing book for children of ten and above. (Bently, Brown & Co. $1.00 net.)

LITERARY NOTES.

"Commenting on the work of various Protestant bodies in Italy, Professor Luzzi, of the Waldensian church, in advocating a united evangelical church of Italy, pointed out an advantage that would accrue in a better housing of the work. Instead of having many and different places of worship, which often present a shabby and far from aesthetic appearance, it would be possible to have one or two churches in every town, built with good taste, in the most central part and built in such a way as not to be out of harmony with the artistic ecclesiastical monuments which are the glory and pride of our Italian cities. Under the shadow of these big churches we might have here and there in every town, a number of mission halls where evangelists, no longer guided by denominational barriers, could preach Christ to the people, with one mind, with one heart. Immigrant Forces, by William P. Shriver. (American Christian Missionary Society, Cincinnati.)

One of the most interesting biographies of the year is Sir Edward Cook's The Life of Florence Nightingale, published by The Macmillan Company. That Sir Edward is a just and understanding biographer, all those familiar with his Life of Ruskin, published a year or so ago, can affirm. That in Florence Nightingale he has a subject of irresistible appeal in every civilized land is no less evident. The fashion in which he has acquitted himself of the task shows, as the Daily Chronicle of London remarks editorially, that he has "nobly risen to the height of his opportunity."

Two of the season's biographies now in their third printing are "The Memoirs of Li Hung Chang" and "Letters and Recollections of Alexander Agassiz," both published by Houghton Mifflin Company.

TWO GREAT COMMENTARIES.

Peloubet's "Select Notes," prepared for many years by Dr. F. N. Peloubet and Prof. Amos R. Wells, clings rather closely to the old commentaries, but is full of suggestion. In late years the pages of this book are brightened with many full page illustrations in colors. (W. A. Wilde, Boston, $1, prepaid.)

Tarbell's, while a younger publication, is a vigorous one. Martha Tarbell, Ph.D., reveals the spirit of modern scholarship in every page. Especially strong is she in adapting the lesson to the various stages of mental development. (Fleming H. Revell, New York, $1, prepaid.)

Disciples Table Talk

George A. Miller Celebrates.

On Jan. 1, George A. Miller began the eighth year of his pastorate with the Ninth Street Church of Washington, D. C. During the past seven years substantial gains have been made in all branches of work in this splendid church. 678 persons have united with the church and the present resident membership is about 1100. The Bible-school attendance has about doubled and there was an average attendance last year of 598. This is the largest church and Bible-school of our people on the Atlantic coast. At the beginning of the present pastorate there was a debt of $15,000 on the church building. This has all been paid and a residence next door to the church has been purchased and partly paid for and is being used as a Bible-school annex. On Jan. 1 the church adopted the duplex envelope system and also the budget plan for missions. They voted unanimously to become a living link in both the Home and Foreign societies. Mr. E. B. Bagby, of Baltimore, the only other pastor the church has ever had, will begin a series of special evangelistic services on Jan. 18.

Embarrassment Partly Relieved.

Replying to an editorial question put to him in a recent issue of The Christian Century as to what he would say in apology for his brethren's remissness in failing to pay their share of the expenses of the Federal Council of churches of Christ, Dr. Peter Ainslie says that the embarrassment to which he was subjected was not so great as had been feared, because he carried to the Council a check for $1000. This amount had been put into his hands by popular gift through a widespread solicitation by mail. There yet remains $700 to be paid in the next thirty days. Dr. Ainslie desires to "clean the slate" and earnestly asks all who have not had a share in discharging this obligation to send their contributions to him at Seminary House, Baltimore, Md., in order that the Council's annual report may not show the Disciples lagging again.

Paris, Ill., Makes Good Report.

H. H. Peters has closed his first year at Paris, Illinois. There have been 185 additions during the year; 133 of these by confession and baptism. The church has been re-decorated and otherwise repaired at an expense of $2,500. Mr. Peters has married 59 couples and conducted 42 funerals. The Sunday-school has had a splendid growth. The average attendance for the last quarter was 664. The new year starts out with fine prospects.

Abram E. Cory was on hand at the student Volunteer meeting in Kansas City last week. On the platform sat President McLean, Stephen J. Corey, Prof. McGavran, J. H. Garrison, W. F. Richardson, J. Campbell White, Bert Wilson, Dr. Dye, R. A. Long, R. A. Doan, James Small, and many others. During the student meeting the Disciple students and missionary secretaries present held an enthusiastic meeting in the Independence Boulevard Church on Friday afternoon, presided over by President A. McLean. One thing the student Volunteer convention did that our conventions ought to do, writes E. E. Elliott, and that is, it sang entire hymns, no "one verse" of this or that hymn, but an entire hymn. Everybody sang. It was a feature of the convention. Another thing was the periods of silence.

The Christmas number of the College Vista Budget, issued monthly by the Englewood church, Chicago, gives a very exhaustive report of all the departments of the church. It is an exceedingly readable number and will be of especial interest to all Chicago Disciples. Charles G. Kindred is the pastor of this enterprising church.

In getting ready to participate in the Men and Millions Campaign, Drake University has decided to raise the sum of $200,000 to meet certain debts that have accumulated within the last few years. Three months dating from Dec. 1, 1913, will be devoted to this work.

Walter S. Rounds of Arcola, Illinois, preached at Jackson Avenue Church, Kansas City, December 28. Mr. Rounds had been asked to come to Kansas City to look the field over with a view to receiving a call to become the pastor. He was favorably impressed, but at last accounts had not determined fully in the matter. He has a satisfactory work at Arcola and is loath to leave the delights of a small community for the hard work which comes with a large city congregation.

Dr. S. H. Creighton, New President Bethany Park Association.

President C. T. Paul, of the College of Missions, Indianapolis, has been ill, and at this writing it was uncertain if he would be able to attend the Student gathering in Kansas City where he had several important duties to perform.

The Bible Chair at Lawrence, Kan., is still without an occupant. Professor and Mrs. W. C. Payne, though ostensibly living in Indianapolis, will not remove their goods until their successors are ready to occupy the manse.

Preachers seem to be scarce. "Who is going to Omaha, First; Kansas City, Jackson Ave.; Des Moines, Capitol Hill; Kokomo, Indiana; Marshall, Mo.; Richmond, Ind.; Petersburg, Ill.; etc., etc."

"Making Good in the Local Church," the new booklet prepared by the Brotherhood National Secretary, has been adopted as one of the text books for the Adult Division of the Des Moines Sunday-school Institute.

The Year Book for 1914, published by the American Christian Missionary Society, is now on the press and promises to be a compendium of words and wisdom, facts, figures, and items of general interest.

G. W. Foley, minister at Bethany, reports a new organization of men in his church. They meet weekly in a Bible class and are planning to observe the Brotherhood Movement's program.

In reporting the Columbus, O., work, it should be said that $7073 was raised for all causes and that the church is supporting Mrs. L. F. Jaggard as missionary.

The Men's Brotherhood at North Yakima has been reorganized under the stimulation of J. W. Tapp, the assistant of W. F. Turner, pastor.

From far away Paso Robles, California, comes word of the organization of a Men's movement in the church there.

A Men's Brotherhood is in the making at Weleetka, Oklahoma, where P. B. Hall has just taken charge as pastor.

PENSIONS FOR AGED MINISTERS.

We are encouraged to report a marked growing interest in the welfare of our old preachers and preachers' widows. More and more these old soldier-saints are being given the consideration due them from the church which they have so long and faithfully served. We believe we are perfectly safe in saying that Ministerial Relief is coming into its own among the Disciples of Christ. The demand for literature preparatory to the December offering was by far the greatest in the history of the work and just now the returns are beginning to come in. It looks like the Disciples of Christ were going to be able to stand up before the world and say, we care for our disabled ministers of the gospel. The following contributions of $20,000 and over indicate that the foregoing statements are correct:

Christian Board of Publication, $250; Church, Marysville, Missouri, $25; Church, Bethany, Missouri, $25; Independence Boulevard Church, Kansas City, Missouri, $50; Mrs. C. C. Miller, $20.10; Church, Crawfordsville, Indiana, $30; First church, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, $28.52; F. M. Simon, $30; Central Church, New Castle, Pennsylvania, $25; Mrs. Sarah J. Cathcart, $50; Harlem Avenue Church, Baltimore, $37; Euclid Avenue Church, Cleveland, $50; First Church, Pomona, California, $50; First Church, Lincoln, Nebraska, $25; Church, Brenham, Texas, $50; First Church Bedford, Indiana, $25; Central Church, Youngstown, Ohio, $40; Crockett Mills Church, Tennessee, $25; Broadway Church, Lexington, Kentucky, $100; Bethany Church, Evansville, Indiana, $25; Mrs. Mary B. Culver, $20; Mrs. Ruth E. Dodsworth, $100; First Church, Wichita Falls, Texas, $50; Church, Burksville, Kentucky, $25; Wilson Avenue Church, Columbus, Ohio, $37.75; Fourth St. Church, Winston-Salem, North Carolina, $20; George F. Rand, $50; Church, Knobnoster, Missouri, $24.60; Church, Healdsburg, California, $23.25; First Church, El Paso, Texas, $25; Church and Bible School, Liscomb, Iowa, $23.49; G. H. Waters, $100.

With these contributions come a much larger number of smaller offerings, no less appreciated, and which indicate the same interest as those contributing the above amounts. We hope this sentiment of appreciation and care will continue to grow until every church in the brotherhood will have fellowship in this holy ministry. Every church not already contributing by special offering or through the budget plan should make this year the beginning of its fellowship in the most sacred and tender ministry among the Disciples of Christ.

BOARD OF MINISTERIAL RELIEF.

Indianapolis, Indiana.

BETHANY PARK NATIONAL SUMMER SCHOOL.

The Bethany Assembly Board of Directors at its last meeting voted to hold a Summer School the coming season, and J. M. Alexander, pastor at Crawfordsville, Ind., was chosen President. The school will be divided into two terms of ten days each, the first term being held July 21-31, and the second term Aug. 4-14. The first term will include the following departments, each of which will be under the direction of a dean: Ministerial, Prof. C. W. Morro, Butler College, Dean; Evangelistic, W. T. Brooks, Ladoga, Ind., Dean; Rural Church, J. W. Street, Mackinaw, Ill., Dean; Evangelistic Singers, W. E. M. Hackleman, Dean; Character Building Studies for Parents, A. W. Conner, Dean. The second term will include Bible School Methods, Garry L. Cook, State Supt., Dean; Christian Endeavor Methods, C. E. Hill, National Secretary, Dean; School of Missions, Prof. C. T. Paul, College of Missions, Dean.

At this meeting the resignation of C. W. Cauble, as President, who had become Corresponding Secretary for Indian Christian Missionary Association, was accepted, and Dr. S. H. Creighton, Indianapolis, Ind., was elected to the position. Dr. Creighton is well known to our brotherhood. He is a graduate of the Bible College, Lexington, Ky., and after graduation was an evangelist in his native state, Illinois, for four years, under the direction of the State Board. He was called to the pastorate of the church at Crawfordsville, Ind., where he labored successfully for four years or more. Compelled to resign on account of acute throat trouble, he came to Indianapolis, and entered the Indiana Dental College, and after graduating became a practioner in Irvington. Later he turned his attention to real estate, and is now a thorough-going business man. He is active in church work, especially in modern Sunday-school work, having been President of Marion County Sunday School Union, and Superintendent of Downey Ave. Sunday-school for nearly eight years. He is teacher of the large men's class in Downey Avenue Sunday-school, which numbers over 125 men.

Dr. Creighton will take charge of the campaign recently inaugurated to raise the indebtedness, over half of which is pledged already, and the selling of the additional $25,000 stock. A committee of 100 of men and women have been appointed on a committee to assist in this work, which is known as the Bethany-Century Committee. Every indication points to the success of this campaign, and to a successful and profitable year. The stockholders and the Board of Directors covet the hearty sympathy and support of every Disciple in making the coming sessions the very best.

THE TOLEDO SCHOOL OF METHODS.

The honor of having the first School of Methods under the auspices of the Bible-school Department of the Ohio Society goes to Toledo. This school was held for the benefit of all Bible-school workers within a radius of 50 miles of Toledo. The attendance was as follows:

Toledo Central	53
Toledo, Norwood	45
Toledo, East Side	15
Toledo, South Side	13
Other Disciple churches	16
Other bodies in Toledo	10
Other bodies out of Toledo	6
Total	158

This is not to be understood as meaning that 158 different people were in regular and constant attendance upon the school. It does mean, however, that 158 different people were reached for at least one session of three periods. It is safe to say that if the Toledo brethren could have been convinced in advance of what those who attended found out to their very great profit and satisfaction, namely, that there had been brought to their very doors a quartette of Bible-school specialists second to none in the country, there would have been a very much different story to tell about the attendance. As it was, the average attendance, kept carefully day by day, was 52. There were present for all or part of the sessions:

Pastors	7
Superintendents	7
Teachers	53

Vermilion, Genoa, Forest Grove Union, North Baltimore, Findlay, Fostoria, Lyons and Bowling Green were represented in addition to all the Toledo schools. There were visitors from Rockville, Ind.; Swanton, and Sylvania, Ohio, representing Baptist, Methodist, Congregational and United Brethren organizations.

Too much cannot be said of the fine work of Messrs. Thornton and Stevenson and Misses Lewis and Maus. Those who heard them were enthusiastic in their commendations of the work done by them and it was unanimously voted to bring the same faculty back next year for a second School of Methods. Indeed, it was voted to make the school an annual occurrence.

The high standard set for recognition possibly had to do with the paucity of certificates granted. It is doubtful if there has been another School of Methods among the Disciples, barring of course, the splendid Summer School at Bethany Park, Ind., where the standard of requirements has been so high. Thirty periods of instruction were provided, attendance upon twenty-five of which, together with satisfactory notes on same, were required to receive the school certificate. Seven persons qualified. These are not to be considered graduates of the school. The certificate simply indicated that they had come up to the standard as above. They will be required to furnish a book review of not less than 300 words on something along the line of their specialty within 90 days, to receive the Gold Seal for their certificates. All seven of those who participated in the recognition services have already indicated their intentions so to do and have selected their books for review. They are:

Miss Katherine M. Netz, Toledo.
Miss Veda Wilcox, Toledo.
Mrs. F. E. Outerbridge, Toledo.
Mrs. F. L. Stone, Toledo.
Mrs. Blanche M. Potter, Toledo.
Mrs. Sarah Wynkoop, Continental, O.
Mr. Hiram N. VanVoorhis, Vermilion, O.

Plans are in the making for two or three other Schools of Methods to be held in other parts of the state. In time, there should be a regular chain of points, covering every section of the state, where there will be held each year a School of Methods, to which the workers may come and spend a week in quiet study and consideration of the methods of their work and receive inspiration and have their vision broadened. This manner of reaching the Bible-school folks is approved both by the experience of several years and the verdict of those who attend.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR DAY OBSERVANCE THE FIRST SUNDAY IN FEBRUARY.

The first Sunday in February is the one day in the year when Christian Endeavor should have the right of way. There are many reasons why every society and every church among us should make much of this day. Here are a few of these many reasons:

1. Christian Endeavor has had a splendid history. It has enriched the life of the church. It has led multitudes of young men into the ministry of the gospel. It has inspired many young people to a larger service for Christ and the Church. It has caused many to see and feel the need of more workers in the dark places of the world. Christian endeavor has always been fired with the missionary passion. It has not only furnished workers, but it has increased the missionary offerings. It has cultivated the spirit of heroic service. It has borne burdens. It has led young people to do hard things. It has helped to lift the Church out of indifference. It has made the Church mean more to the local community and to the world. It has had a splendid history.

2. Christian Endeavor is today an active force in all the churches. It is full of vitality. It is a living, growing movement. It is a simple, practical organization of young people. It stands for union on the fundamental things of the Christian religion. It is helping break down the barriers. It has set itself against narrowness and provincialism. It stands for union in service.

3. Young people are the hope of the Church as well as the hope of the Republic and the world. Christian Endeavor is a young people's organization. It does not appeal to set or class, or clique. It cultivates a broad spirit. It stands for action. The future Church is found in our young people. We cannot do too much for them in the way of training. And there is not better training school than Christian Endeavor. Then Christian Endeavor has always stood for good citizenship. Christian Endeavor has had something to do with the movement against the liquor traffic; with the movement against vice, with the movement for better city government. It has touched for the better every phase of our National life. It is helping raise up a class of independent voters.

4. The observance of Christian Endeavor Day will help to invigorate and renew interest in Christian Endeavor. It will lead the Church to appreciate the young people. It will increase the interest of the young people in their own work. It will interest other young people. It will fire up some of the older members and lead them to take a new grip in the work. It will strengthen the local society and arouse the whole church.

5. Christian Endeavor Day should be observed because the first Sunday in February is set apart for that purpose. It means a great deal to move and act together. Thousands upon thousands of societies in all churches, all over the world will give a special program on that day. Let us fall into line. We have always moved with the procession. Let us do so now. Every society among us should observe the day.

6. We owe the observance of this day to the "Grand old man of Christian Endeavor" Francis E. Clark. No other man in this generation has done more for the kingdom of God. He has not spared himself. Day and night for over thirty years he has worked and watched and prayed for the young people of the world. He has traveled everywhere and endured all sorts of dangers and hardships in behalf of this mighty movement. He has despised riches in order that he might faithfully serve this cause. It is his wish, hope and prayer that the day be universally observed.

We owe it to ourselves—to our own cause—to our National Board of Christian Endeavor—to our own men who have brought out a program for our societies. These men have worked without pay. They have prepared a most excellent program, entitled "Christian Endeavor and Christian Missions." No better program is offered the societies of any church. It is complete in every respect. It will provide a great, helpful meeting with comparative little effort. Any society can use it.

8. We owe it to the cause of missions, to all our missionary agencies, to the cause of Christ. We need education in Christian missions. This program will educate. It will stir the heart. And we owe it to our own Christian Endeavor interests. We must not drop behind in Christian Endeavor. We are well up in front now. Let us stay there. The National Board of Christian Endeavor will help keep us in front. But the board must have funds to work with. The Endeavor Day offering will furnish the funds. Order the program. Get ready. Have a great day of it. Get a great offering. Order program from and send the offering to Claude E. Hill, National Superintendent, Valparaiso, Ind.

IMPORTANT CONFERENCE.

140,000 College Students Concerned.

A Conference will be held February 3-5, at Indiana University, Bloomington, Indiana, to consider the religious instruction and leadership of one hundred and forty thousand American college students. It will be the Seventh Annual Conference of Church Workers at State Universities. The State University affiliated Bible College, affiliated Seminary, Bible Chair, University Pastor, University Church, Guild House, and Dormitory men of all the churches at the various State Universities hold an annual conference concerning the religious problems of State University students. A good program has been prepared. All who are engaged in State University work representing churches are eligible to membership in the conference. All pastors, Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. secretaries, representatives of missionary boards, educators, and any other interested in this growing problem in religious education are invited to the conference as visitors and fraternal delegates.

There are one hundred and forty thousand students in State Universities and Colleges this year. These are all seeking an education in institutions unable to offer religious and Bibical instruction and Christian leadership. The Disciples now enroll far more of her church children in these institutions than in all their colleges put together. Therefore so far as our own church is concerned the conference at Bloomington February 3 to 5, will have to do with the Religious education, Christian leadership, and Church activity of more of our church children than a conference of the representatives of all our church colleges combined.

Speakers will be on the program representing the best thinking of men who have been active in this work for many years. Additional information and programs will be mailed by addressing a request to

NOTES FROM THE FOREIGN SOCIETY.

A Chinese gentleman, who now resides in this country in the service of the Chinese Government, has bequeathed his entire property to the cause of missions in China. He expects to return to his native land at the close of his present service and spend the remainder of his life in preaching the gospel to his own people.

Miss Jessie Asbury is now settled at Sendai, Japan. She lives in a Japanese house.

Miss Winifred Brown, who has just gone out to Tokyo, says that she is enjoying her new home in Japan and is very busy with the study of the language.

Miss Edith Parker, Takinogawa, Tokyo, Japan, expresses great happiness in knowing that they are to have a new building in connection with the Girl's College. She says the whole school seems to be taking on new life.

F. E. Meigs, Nanking, China, says that Nanking is now very poor. The half has never been told about the looting. The schools have suffered very greatly.

W. H. Scott, Lucknow, India, after being in India a little over a month, expresses himself as greatly interested in all he has seen. He is hard at work on the language. The missionaries gave him a very cordial reception.

O. J. Grainger, Mungeli, India, reports thirty-four baptized from caste. He expects others soon. There is difficulty at Mungeli on account of the failure of the crops. If the Government makes no provision the people in and around Mungeli will have to go to other parts of India, or starve.

Dr. C. L. Pickett, Laoag, P. I., says that there never was a time in the history of our work when more people were hearing or more people being influenced by the gospel, than today. The work is going forward all along the line.

Dr. W. E. Macklin, writes from Nanking, China, very encouragingly about the work. A great Red Cross work is being accomplished. Sometimes there are over 400 patients at a time. Dr. Macklin is hoping to get the Chinese to give him a few acres of land near the hospital for the contagious disease patients and the very poor people.

C. P. Hedges, reporting from Longa, Africa, says that the missionaries and the Christians assembled at 5:30 in the morning for prayers, and after a season of public worship the confession of 35 people was taken, and by seven o'clock in the morning they were through baptizing them. Edgar A. Johnston, the newly appointed missionary assisted in the baptism. During the quarter there were 217 baptisms at Lotumbe, 25 at Monieka, 61 at Bolenge and 35 at Longa, making in all 338. He says they are sending out 30 evangelists during the quarter.

A. F. Hensey, Bolenge, Africa, writes: "I was at Longa for a month, then went with E. R. Moon on the S. S. "Oregon" up the Ubangi and Njiri rivers. We baptized 42 people while there and visited seven outstations.

W. R. Hunt, Chuchow, China, says that the church there is a mighty factor in the social and civic life of the city.

F. M. RAINS, Sec'y.

ENDORSEMENT OF UNDENOMINATIONAL RELIGIOUS ORGANIZATIONS.

A plan has been formed whereby the Chicago Church Federation Council investigates and when approved endorses all local organizations appealing for funds whose work is primarily religious and which are without denominational oversight. These organizations include the various undenominational Sunday-school agencies, missions and other undenominational religious movements.

A plan has been developed by mutual agreement between the Chicago Church Federation Council and the Chicago Association of Commerce Subscriptions Investigating Committee. The latter committee, as is well known, has now established service for investigating and endorsing all "local philanthropic and charitable organizations." The Subscriptions Investigating Committee announced in the official organ of the Chicago Association of Commerce October 31, 1913, the plans relative to the transfer of the investigation of undenominational religious organizations to the Church Federation Council.

The following is a provisional list of the organizations which have been investigated and endorsed by the Council up to the present date:

The Gideons, 22 W. Quincy St., Chicago, Ill.

The Kirkland Mission, 122 S Halsted St., Chicago, Ill.

The Sunday Evening Club, Chicago, Ill.

The Pacific Garden Mission, 67 W. Van Buren St., Chicago, Ill.

The Council has under consideration at the present time endorsement for other organizations than those listed above and announcement will be made from time to time as these are investigated and endorsed.

The Council has adopted the following requirements:

1. Management by a representative board of local Christian people.
2. Incorporation.
3. Definite evidence of need of the work.
4. Avoidance of duplication and willingness to co-operate heartily with similar movements.
5. Auditing of accounts by public accountants.

Chicagoans now have ample resources for determining the worthiness of local religious and philanthropic organizations. The following resources are available:

1. Denominational year books, etc., giving complete information regarding the standing of all churches, missions, etc., under denominational supervision.
2. The Chicago Federation Council issues lists of endorsed undenominational religious organizations. (Write for this to Rev. W. B. Millard, D. D., 19 S. La Salle St.)
3. The Chicago Association Commerce issues a handbook of endorsed local philanthropic and charitable organizations. (Write for copy to Chicago Association of Commerce, 10 S. La Salle St.

TIMES OF DECISION.

Jan. 14. Neh. 24:15.

"Great souls have wills; feeble ones have wishes." Chinese proverb. "Decision of character will often give an inferior mind command over the superior." In emphasizing the importance of decision we proceed upon the assumption that to live is to do and that to live well is to do what reason and conscience approve. Decision is action. If it were mere impulse, we should waste our time by discussing it.

THE PARTING OF THE WAYS.

"Once to every man and nation comes the moment to decide,
In the strife of Truth with Falsehood, for the good or evil side;
Some great cause, God's new Messiah, offering each the bloom or blight,
Parts the goats upon the left hand, and the sheep upon the right,
And the choice goes by forever 'twixt that darkness and that light."

There was offered to Israel the choice between a religion whose God was the supporter of justice, the defender of the honest man, and a religion which satisfied the consciences of the few while they ate the bread earned by other men. A religion of comfort we need and must have, but it must comfort us because it is true and because it will not suffer us to do wrong.

DECISION AND INTELLIGENCE.

Many of us dislike to make important decisions. We all beg to be excused from deciding certain questions. Yet we should be indignant if we were told we lacked in intelligence. Our intelligence would be of a low order if we were not forced to meet complex situations and make our choices after painful deliberation. Parents who volunteer to do all the thinking for their children are doing their best to give the world incompetent men and women. Despots reason that they know more about government than the people and therefore they should deny to the people the right to speak for themselves. Having kept the people in subjection for centuries, these same despots blame them for their ignorance. When the resources of a nation are controlled by the few, the opinion prevails that the many have no financial ability. As disciples of Jesus we are bound to give men a chance before we decide that they are by nature inferior. We are to follow Jesus when we judge men; despots, whether political, ecclesiastical, or financial, must not be allowed to think for us.

DECISION AND CIRCUMSTANCES.

The man with opinions ready for use under any circumstances is familiar to us all. He can decide offhand questions that have been left open by the wisest of all ages. This man and those who admire him have no faith in God. They are unwilling that God should speak to them through the progress of mankind. They know what ought to be and they demand that God live up to their requirements. The man of wisdom and faith expects to learn something every day. He is not ashamed to say that he is uncertain what is the best thing to do when conditions are new and tangled. He has learned that it is often the part of wisdom and faith to wait and watch for some indication of the meaning of events. Waiting is hard for us all, especially for those of us who have been taught that we can turn the world upside down at any time we wish to exercise our power. The success of the modern man in bringing the forces of nature to do his bidding has caused him to forget that nature obeys him because he obeys her and that he must always wait upon her pleasure. Religion puts God in the place of nature and bids us learn his will.

"Our wills are ours, we know not how;
Our wills are ours, to make them thine."

"In thy will is our peace." There is no peace to the wicked for the reason that the wicked have not waited upon the divine will.

Acts 2:37-39; 10:30-32; Rev. 3:15; Rom. 8:38-39; I Cor. 15:58; 16:13; Eph. 4:14; I Ki. 18:21; Hos. 6:4.

International Sunday-school lesson for January 25, 1914.

Luke 8:1-3; 9:57-62; 10:38-42.

Memory Verses, 10:40-42.

Golden Text.—Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these my brethren, even these least, ye did it unto me.—Matt. 25:40.

American Standard Bible.
Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons.
(Used by permission.)

8:(1) And it came to pass soon afterwards, that he went about through cities and villages, preaching and bringing the good tidings of the kingdom of God, and with him the twelve (2) and certain women who had been healed of evil spirits and infirmities: Mary that was called Magdalene, from whom seven demons had gone out, (3) and Joanna the wife of Chuzas, Herod's steward, and Susanna, and many others, who ministered unto them of their substance.

9:(57) And as they went on the way, a certain man said unto him, I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest. (58) And Jesus said unto him, The foxes have holes, and the birds of the heavens have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head. (59) And he said unto another, Follow me. But he said, Lord, suffer me first to go and bury my father. (60) But he said unto him, Leave the dead to bury their own dead; but go thou and publish abroad the kingdom of God. (61) And another also said, I will follow thee, Lord; but first suffer me to bid farewell to them that are at my house. (62) But Jesus said unto him, No man, having put his hand to the plow, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God.

10: (38) Now as they went on their way, he entered into a certain village: and a certain woman named Martha received him into her house. (39) And she had a sister called Mary, who also sat at the Lord's feet, and heard his word. (40) But Martha was cumbered about much serving; and she came up to him, and said, Lord, dost thou not care that my sister did leave me to serve alone? bid her therefore that she help me. (41) But the Lord answered and said unto her, Martha, Martha, thou art anxious and troubled about many things: (42) but one thing is needful: for Mary hath chosen the good part, which shall not be taken away from her.

Verse By Verse.

Ch. VIII, v. 1. Good tidings: Or "Gospel."

v. 2. Mary—Magdalene: She lived in Magdala, a town on the Sea of Galilee. Not "the woman who was a sinner" who anointed Jesus' feet with her hair.

Ch. IX, v. 57. A certain man: A scribe, Mt. 8:19.

v. 58. Jesus said unto him: He doubted the speaker's sincerity, and apparently discouraged his step.

v. 59. Follow me: Jesus believes in this man's sincerity, and urges him to leave all, even his deceased father, to work with him. Different treatment given to different people, in wisdom.

v. 62. Jesus said unto him, No man, etc.; This man was sincere, but needed encouragement to give undivided attention to the service he was undertaking.

Ch. X, v. 38. A certain village: Bethany.

v. 39. Mary—sat at the Lord's feet: Mary, the contemplative.

v. 40. Martha—cumbered with much serving: Martha, the practical.

At the Heart of the Lesson.

By A. Z. Conrad.

A phonograph can recite a creed or repeat a prayer. Only a Christ aspiring soul can realize the covenant and pray. A parrot can repeat a profession. Only piety can give point and power to the claim of discipleship. Confession costs little. Co-operation demands much. A declaration of discipleship is as easy as breathing. A demonstration of devotion costs us both faith and courage. Multitudes thronged Jesus who never became Christians. Camp-followers never become soldiers. The temple is most profaned by false profession. We are saved to serve. We must live the life or cease to profess love.

CONFESSION AND CONDUCT.

Not words but works prove reality and sincerity. The world is more convinced and convicted by conduct than my confession. We are hearing in our day a great deal about "restatement of faith in modern terms." What is really wanted is a living faith that will heal the sick and raise the dead, cleanse the lepers, open prison doors, give sight to the blind, hearing to the deaf and holiness to whosoever seeks it. The terms of statement count for little. The triumph for much. We are far less concerned about a general's statement of army tactics than whether or not he can win a battle. Not a parade of new words but a true expression of power is what the Christian world is waiting for. Millions had heard the thunder and seen the lightning but it remained for Franklin to fling his kite to the clouds and call down the electric current. Others had defined but he demonstrated. Morse and Marconi cared little what you called it if it would only come when called. A technical knowledge of an automobile is good but what sells the car is the ride. Why waste time in wordy wars when the world is dying for the want of bread and water? A hungry multitude want food, not new phraseology.

SAVING WITH SELF AND SUBSTANCE.

The women who first followed Jesus gave both self and substance. They caught the spirit of true ministry. With them conversion meant consecration. A call involves a contribution. They sacrificed social position for spiritual possession. They preached by providing. They rightly understood that substance is no substitute for self. Pew rent can never take the place of pew-presence. There are no proxies for personalities. Salary is only half-support for a minister. It is bad business and worse religion to pay a preacher to address a lumber yard Sunday evenings. The minister cares more for you than yours. Even Jesus needed atmosphere in order to achieve. "He did not see there many mighty works because of their unbelief." Mat. 13:58. Joanna, Susanna and the Marys subscribed to the new cause, self first, then substance. Unsought immortality of reputation is theirs because they worked out their salvation in service. We are urged to: "work out your own salvation." That contains no faintest suggestion of salvation by works. You can work out only what has first been worked in. Christ saves and we serve. The women who followed Jesus invested all they had in the kingdom. They relieved Jesus from the burden of providing earthly bread so that he might give all his time to the distribution of the bread of life. A wise church will relieve its appointed minister of material cares that his whole energy may be given to the King's business.

RELIGIOUS ENTHUSIASM.

"Lord, I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest." Luke 9:57. It was a righteous resolve. It was the impulse of a soul thrilling with joy at the vision of Christ. It was a zeal created by contact with Jesus. Just to be near the Lord was a new life so alluring that this man desired to continue it. It was a kind of holy abandon, ready to sacrifice all lesser things for the mere pleasure of companionship with the Nazarene. There is no danger of undue emotionalism in the religion of our day. The call for repression is an absurdity. In everything else people applaud and approve emotional earnestness. In religion it is frowned on and called excitement. Do not permit the aspirations of your soul to be wet-blanketed. Icicles never inspire. The demand for the heroic is never answered by speculators or calculators.

DEALERS IN STATISTICS NEVER SUFFER FROM FEVER.

Men and women who never let themselves go, secure no following for a worthy cause. Religion is the realm of reality. Here more than anywhere else in the world an enthusiasm which is an arousement to the apathetic is indispensible. The answer of Jesus, "The foxes have holes and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head," was not uttered for the purpose of suppression but to develop seriousness. It was simply a warning that whoever followed him would travel a rough road with no luxuries. No false hopes were ever held out to the disciples of our Lord. The delights of obedience were not minimized but they were to be enjoyed sometimes at the cost of martyrdom. Following Jesus has always meant criticism, scorn, contempt, to be endured uncomplainingly for his sake who was willing to go to the cross to save a world. No utterance of our Lord more pathetically portrays the humiliation of the incarnation than these. He made the world, yet had no place in it he could call home. He was going steadily to a cross to save humanity and yet there was no habitation in all the world of which he could say, "This is mine." He had a higher purpose. He desired that his home should be in the hearts of men and women who answered love with love.

URGENCY OF KINGDOM BUILDING.

Jesus cautioned and commanded as conditions required. He warned the enthusiastic convert of the perils of the way, but now he is dealing with a different type of man. The amenities of life are of more concern to this man than the new kingdom. Jesus said to him, "Follow me." He did not decline. He was favorably disposed, but it must be when he could do so conveniently. He appreciated the importance of religion and seemed to have no doubts as to the right of the claim of Jesus to his service. He did not however seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness. He answered, "Lord, suffer me first to go and bury my father." It is more than possible that this referred not so much to actual sepulture as to the customary seven days' mourning and all that pertained to the extended services associated with the dead. Two things were perfectly manifest to Jesus. First, that it was not necessary, because of circumstances with which Jesus was familiar. Secondly, that the urgency of the kingdom must now be impressed on this soul or he would never enlist. The Lord's answer is certainly not to be interpreted as indifference toward those expressions of respect and love due to the departed. We are to interpret the separate sayings of Jesus by his whole life. Compassion and sympathy were predominent characteristics. The answer of our Lord was certainly a rebuke to such extended ceremonials of mourning, no matter what their form, as shall lead to a neglect of the living. We dare not let our most poignant grief blind us to the urgency of kingdom building. Sorrow must not crowd out service. The burdens of bereavement are lessened more than in any other way by bearing comfort and blessing to others in distress. "Go thou and preach abroad the kingdom of God." This was itself to be the panacea for his pain. It has proven such to thousands.

MAKING SPIRITUAL THINGS PARAMOUNT.

The incident of Mary and Martha must be read with care or we shall misconstrue its significance. (Luke 10:38-42). Jesus had come to Bethany and was the guest at the one home which was his earthly paradise. "Jesus loved Mary and her sister Martha." He found in them sympathetic and responsive souls. He was a frequent visitor at this home. The sisters represented two very different types. Both are necessary and both are measurably to be commended. Martha was all propriety. Mary was all piety. Martha was diligent. Mary was devoted. Martha placed physical comfort relatively higher than did her sister. Martha appreciated the importance of bread to the body of a weary man, while Mary was so absorbed with food celestial that she seemed quite to forget the common needs of life. Martha expostulated, "Dost thou not care that my sister did leave me to serve alone?" In the absence of other evidence we would say her appeal was justified. The reply of Jesus is not to be understood as a rebuke so much as a revelation. "Martha, Martha, thou art anxious and troubled about many things." She was unduly absorbed with the material. It is a fitting word of caution against unnecessary worry about things which are merely temporary and temporal. Values are relative. Duties never conflict. Mary had chosen "that good part." What was, "That good part?" Fellowship with Christ. The routine of daily duties are never to be despised but they are to be transmuted.

NEW BALLOT AND ILLINOIS WOMEN.

Illinois women will have upon all questions and propositions submitted in various divisions of the state. Less attention was focused on this sentence in the bill than any other, while perhaps it is one of the most important, increasingly so as the idea of the referendum is developed and practiced. It will have the immediate effect of making the School Suffrage Law more valuable.

A RADICAL CHANGE.

Up to this time Illinois women could only vote for the local school officials and trustees of the state university, but they had nothing to say about the amount of money which those officials might use to make the schools better. Now they can vote upon all questions of issuing bonds for building new school houses, provide up-to-date equipment and to pay adequate salaries for the teachers. Illinois women have already in several school elections carried the day for such improvements, and as a result of the suffrage for women I look forward to a day not far distant when no rural school district will be disgraced by these little rectangular boxes of school houses, dirty, battered, unpainted, uncomfortable; three windows on each side, which are never raised in winter or screened in summer, devoid of pictures, libraries or anything but ugliness and sordidness. I draw no imaginary picture. I hope that no children from now on will have such memory pictures of the citadels of learning where they have passed so many uncomfortable hours. I hope that votes for women will immediately institute a day when school houses will be as antiseptic as hospitals, well ventilated, lighted, beautified and with all necessary equipment. I look forward to a speedy day when there shall be fewer $35 and $40 a month teachers, and more $75 a month teachers in the rural schools.

This section of the bill also puts it into the power of the mothers of Illinois to protect their homes from the home's worst enemy, the legalized saloon. The vote of 3,000 women in Jacksonville recently, who felt the saloon to be a business extravagance, a social anachronism and an ally of crime, as against 600 women who either held the opposite view or were cast down by pessimism, is an indication of the antiseptics of the women's vote. Whatever opinion one might hold of the saloon question, it is difficult to see why one would object to the mother having the same power to protect her home if she feels that need, that the saloonkeeper has to protect his institution.

A NEW DISCOVERY.

When we come to consider the municipal political powers of women the field is more obvious, for women have been educating themselves for a number of years to see that municipal government is enlarged housekeeping, and that it has innumerable reactions upon the home. We have come to realize that thousands of things outside of the four square walls of the home make for the peace and happiness or for the degredation and misery of that home. The zallot has become more desirable. because women have discovered that it is the door to civic opportunity, freedom and service. The practical housekeeper comes into contact with problems of government every day. Gas, water, electricity, markets, honest weights and measures, proper disposal of garbage, clean air and protection of health are all questions of municipal regulation. Municipal politics decides on the normal and physical condition of the streets where your children walk, the number of saloons and gambling dens in your ward, the cleanliness of the baby's milk. It concerns itself with the transportation question which affects the thousands of wage earning women and the general public, fire protection, efficient police service, abatement of crime and enforcement of law. Servants of the city nurse the sick and care for the poor.

THE NEW IDEAL.

No woman should admit that she could be satisfied today in a world that is crying for help; satisfied in a time that is taxing the world's thinkers; comfortable while about her are children who suffer from neglect, cold or hunger; indifferent while all about are the underfed, the drunk, the criminal, those suffering from preventable diseases or cursed by preventable poverty. At the risk of verifying the charge of the anti-suffragists that we idealize the power of the ballot, I dare to prophesy that after the women of Illinois have settled down to the serious contemplation of the needs of this new field of service that Illinois towns and cities will soon feel the propulsion of a great moral energy. The sordid and ugly will gradually give place to beauty. They will work to the time suggested by our Illinois poet:

"Where every street is made a reverent aisle,
Where music grows and beauty is unchained."

The Highway to Efficiency

in the Sunday School is

The Bethany System

What some of our Leaders say of it:

"Nothing Could Pry Us Loose"

We began using the Bethany Graded Lessons at their first issuance and have increased the supply from year to year as the literature for all grades was published. There is nothing in the series that is not now used by our school. Nothing could pry our superintendents and teachers loose from these lessons. They meet the needs of pupils of all years and make the teacher's work a joy. We have no word with which to express our satisfaction with the series.

H. H. HARMON,
First Church, Lincoln, Neb.

"As Nearly Perfect as Can Be"

We have used the Bethany Graded Lessons for three years, and the longer we use them the better we like them. They are the latest and best thing in Sunday-school material, and when all of the text books have been prepared it will offer a Sunday-school course as nearly perfect as can be. They certainly make teaching and learning easy, and cover in a most adequate way the whole ground of education in Christian service. The teachers' text books are especially valuable and constitute in themselves a course in Sunday-school pedagogy.

H. D. C. MACLACHLAN,
Seventh Street Church, Richmond, Va.

"Thoroughly Edited"

I have recently had the pleasure of examining closely a set of the Bethany Graded Lessons, together with a recent copy of "The Conquest." I want to congratulate you upon the high quality of this literature. It is certainly a great satisfaction to feel that we are now able to put into the hands of all our Sunday-school pupils, material so splendidly classified and so thoroughly edited as is the above mentioned.

L. J. MARSHALL,
Pastor Wabash Ave. Church, Kansas City, Mo.

"We Would Not Turn Back"

We are using the Bethany Graded Lessons. We would not turn back. The service our Sunday-school specialists are giving us as represented in this course is making a new day in religious education.

FINIS IDLEMAN,
Pastor Central Church, Des Moines, Ia.

"Unanimously the Bethany Series"

After a campaign led by Miss Eva Lemert of Kansas City, Mo., resulting in the thorough grading and departmentizing of the school, we had to decide the matter of graded helps. A committee of three was appointed, consisting of the pastor, superintendent and one member of the Executive Committee. This committee made an individual examination of lesson helps and decided unanimously in favor of the Bethany series, arriving at their decisions independently and solely upon the merits of the literature. So far as I know these lessons are giving entire satisfaction.

EDGAR DeWITT JONES,
Pastor First Church, Bloomington, Ill.

"Nothing to Compare With Them"

We have been using the Bethany Graded Lessons from the time you began to publish them and we are very highly pleased with them. We have often had occasion to compare them with the publications of other houses and thus far can say we have found nothing that compares with them. I am teaching a young men's class in the course, "The World a Field for Christian Service," and am glad to say that it seems to me the best adapted for young men of high school age of all courses I have ever seen. My class is becoming very enthusiastic over it.

P. J. RICE,
Pastor First Church, El Paso, Tex.

"Have Created Enthusiasm"

Over a year ago our school adopted the Bethany Graded Lessons, upon vote of our teachers, who had examined personally the texts for their respective grades. They are a delight to all. The missionary lessons appeal very strongly to pupils and teachers. The first year Senior lessons have created enthusiasm on the part of both pupils and teachers I most heartily commend the Bethany Graded Lessons to all who may think of grading their schools or have found other lessons unsatisfactory.

T. E. WINTER,
Pastor First Church, Fulton, Mo.

"Delighted"

Our Sunday-school, which has lately begun the use of the Bethany Graded Lessons, seems to be delighted with them. I have heard no word of unfavorable criticism and very many words of appreciation. Our teachers like the form and material of these lessons.

GRAHAM FRANK,
Pastor Liberty, Mo.

"Best on the Market"

The Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse is fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, the Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, EDITOR HERBERT L. WILLETT, CONTRIBUTING EDITOR

The Glory of the Lord

Now and then the somnolent centuries waken at the call of a prophetic voice. Darkness covers the earth, and gross darkness the people. Then the midnight blackness throbs with a prophetic voice, "Arise, shine, for thy light is come!" Some of the people sleep on. Others wake, and after a resentful protest sink back to slumber. But the prophet will not be silent. From his watchtower he has seen the spires of day. The morning star is already visible to him. Only a few believe, and some of these do not heed. But the recording angel turns a new page. A new day has come to the dawning. The celestial scribe prepares to record new events. Soon the nations will be astir. The Gentiles will come to the light, and kings to the brightness of the rising morn.

How did the prophet know? What voice of God stirring in his own soul assured him that it was time for his message to be shouted in the ears of a sleepy and reluctant world? We know in part only; but of this we are assured—with such voices the world begins anew.

It began anew after the Exile in Babylon, and its sign was the victory of Cyrus. In that military and political event the prophets found a spiritual call. It began anew in the days of Caesar Augustus, and its sign was the shining of a star. In the light of that astronomical phenomenon some men were able to discern a path to the cradle of the Christ. It began anew with Luther, with the Pilgrim Fathers, with George Washington, with Abraham Lincoln. In every one of these epochs darkness covered the earth, and gross darkness the people. Then came the word of the Lord to a man of prophetic vision, and the people slowly saw, and flowed together, and the forces of the nations fulfilled the word of God. There is no one way in which God certifies the coming advent of the new era.

In some way that they knew in their souls to be true, brave men received, yes and they still receive, messages from God. God still speaks to men, and in different ways, imparting his truth to successive generations. Whenever his prophets have wisdom to understand, rightly to interpret, and fearlessly to proclaim the truth, and the people have grace and strength to hear and heed, history begins a new chapter.

There are signs just now that the world is ready for a new spiritual awakening. Men are dissatisfied with the smug self-content of a civilization boastful of its material progress.

We have been measuring our advance in terms of things material. We have assumed that we were better because we were living faster, building higher, and riding more swiftly. We were mistaken. That is not the way to measure progress. As the African native said to Dan Crawford who told him of the glories of civilization, "To be better off is not to be better."

Here and there men are awakening just now to the need of a more spiritual note in our present life. Listen to this word:

"We have lost one of the elements of sweetness and health. We have been robbed of something for the lack of which our spiritual life becomes poisonous, and our intellectual life weak and flighty and our social organization breaks down."

What preacher said that?

Bird S. Coler said that. He said it not in a pulpit but at a banquet of the Industrial Club in the Blackstone Hotel in Chicago, in December, 1913.

Who is Bird S. Coler?

He is a Democratic politician. He has been a prominent figure in its national conventions. He is a banker, and has been controller of the City of New York. He went on to say, "I say we have lost the religious inspiration. Preachers have told the world so, but I am telling it to you, not as a preacher but as a plain business man."

Winston Churchill wrote "The Inside of the Cup." It left the reader in some doubt as to the writer's real attitude toward some of the questions discussed. In the December "Century" he says:

"What is it we have lacked? What is it has made us lukewarm and unhappy? Is it not that somehow Jesus has lost his incandescence as the one all-inclusive Personality, as the only begotten Son of God, who suffered and died for our sakes, that we might have life and have it more abundantly?"

Hear these voices from outside the pulpit, calling men to waken to a sense of the darkness which surely engulfs the world if it loses the Sun of righteousness.

From every side come voices reminding us of the hopelessness of life without great spiritual illumination. And with them come other voices, striking a higher and accordant note. They cry out to us that the set time has come for God to visit his people.

Shall we not rise to the call of God so variously uttered? "Arise, shine; for thy light is come; and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee."

College Days and Early Preaching

CHAPTER IV OF "A DOCTRINAL AUTOBIOGRAPHY."

A generation ago students preparing for the ministry at Disciples' Colleges took their theological training as they went along through their academic course, rather than as in other schools, and now in most Disciples' Schools, as a graduate course following the acquisition of their academic degree. As a result of this custom the smaller churches within a hundred miles of one of these colleges were ministered to on Sundays by young students many of whom were Freshmen and Sophomores, and some unable even to classify as Freshmen. The writer of this autobiography had this characteristic experience and tells of this period of his doctrinal development in the present chapter.

WHEN I began to think of the ministry as a life's calling, the chief difficulty in the way of my ambitions was the lack of funds. I had never been able to save anything, and a youth of twenty without any backing was not looked upon as a desirable risk in financial circles. Moreover, I did not receive the encouragement which I thought should have been given me, but I can understand now that men of means would not be likely to vie with each other in urging the claims of the ministry upon a young man who hesitated only because he had no money. There were others who felt that some way would be provided and I gladly accepted that hopeful view. But for a time I trembled in the balance.

AN EARLY SETBACK.

A letter received from the president of one of our educational institutions did not cheer me much. I thought he would say something about the lack of ministers in a world dying for want of enlightenment, and would congratulate me upon the wisdom of my choice of the ministry as a calling; but he did no such thing. He never even referred to me or the ministry, but only said that the institution over which he presided afforded excellent opportunities for the study of the Bible, and that some well known teachers were members of its faculty. I wondered that the president of a Bible college could be so indifferent to the enthusiasm of a student like myself.

When my prospects were at their lowest ebb a friend as poor as myself offered to provide the funds with which to make a start, and though I knew he was not able to do much, I accepted his offer and proceeded to make my plans for an early matriculation in the college that was then standing for the "purity of the plea." Everything was moving according to schedule when within a month of the time set for my departure, the friend who had risen up in the moment of my extremity rose again to break the news to me, as gently as the circumstances would allow, that he had been disappointed in "raising a loan,"—I shall never forget those words as long as I live; they fell on my ear like the sentence of death—and that he could see nothing now but the abandonment of my plans. In this crisis which kept me in the valley of shadows for days, even the church meetings no longer cheered; I found that there were limits to the consolations of religion.

"THE EVERLASTING YEA."

But as hope springs eternal in the human breast it sprang in mine, and I determined not to be defeated. Go to college I would though I had to walk every step of the way. I lost my air of dejection and announced to my small circle of friends that I intended to carry out my plans with funds or without them. Fortunately a gift fell into my hands just a few days before the time set for my going, sufficient to pay railway fare and tuition. As may be imagined my joy knew no bounds. From that moment and for a long time after I became a believer in special providence; I chided myself for my despondency; I saw new meaning in the text, "The Lord will provide."

I was also confirmed in my belief that the Lord wanted me to preach. I could hardly regard with friendly eyes those brethren who thought I was taking a great risk to go so far from home on an empty pocket. I thought they were questioning my right to walk by faith. Would I allow my son today to go a thousand miles or more from home with a mere pittance in his pocket? Yet that sort of an experience might help any lad to stand on his own feet as I was helped to stand upon mine. We cannot be certain of our ventures until after we are dead, save venturers in theology of which some are so sure that they denounce their fellows who will not accept their affirmation that theological dogmas are the same yesterday, today and forever!

LEAVING THE OLD HOME.

It was a sad day when I left the old home and the church to which I had become attached by so many interests. I had only been away from home once before, and for less than a week. I bade my mother good-bye with an aching heart, neither of us expecting to see the other again. She was old and the many miles between gave no hope of a reunion. Months passed before I recovered from the effects of that parting ordeal which could not have been more harrowing had either been attending the funeral service of the other. Fortunately we did meet again, and I had the satisfaction of her companionship for several years.

It took me many months to become adjusted to my new surroundings. There was no church that would compare in spiritual power with the one I had left. The city churches were too large for me; those in the country were so primitive that I found little enjoyment. Students were so numerous in the city, and especially ministerial students, that they attracted no attention; only those with aggressive natures who could always feel at home in any circle were noticed at all. In the country I had to become accustomed to the use of tobacco which I had been brought up to believe was a vile habit, and to that type of Christian which can prove his right to church membership only by a reference to the church register.

CHAOTIC CHURCH SERVICES.

Then my astonishment at the general ignorance of the people, and particularly their ignorance of the Scriptures, often led me to say ungracious things to many who believed themselves well read on subjects of general interest. The order of worship in the country churches shocked me week after week; every thing was left to the accident of the moment. There was no plan for the hymns, or rather the "songs." The service began when the people came. All was chaotic. And I am sorry to say the conditions in the country churches are not much better after twenty years.

Then I thought our people were too familiar with sectarian ideas: we were not distinctive enough. I was sure that even some of our teachers were warming serpents in their bosoms. I had but one standard of judgment and that was the congregation I had left. If others did not conform to that in every particular I felt that they were in error. I had many discussions with my fellow students on points of doctrine and worship. But gradually, I found myself less worried because of these variations, and within a year I was adjusted to the many changes which played so important a part in my new surroundings. Without realizing what was taking place I had received my first lesson in the mutability of beliefs, and in the inevitable doctrine that environment helps to determine our thinking as truly as the birds and beasts take their color from the objects among which they live. Self preservation depends upon harmony of color in the field, and upon harmony of ideas in the state. The isolated few are so conspicuous that if they remain separate from the mass for any length of time they are forgotten. But let no one conclude that I was either a tolerant or a broadminded Christian, for I was neither. My fealty that had been given to a congregation was now transferred to what might be called the "denomination," or to the interests of the church in a larger way than I had ever known.

I also found out that those from whom we differed both in my earlier days and the period of my college life were as little and narrow as I had been.

All the churches were growing in the same climate of opinion; all were contending for what they believed to be the truth. If I said sharp things they never replied in velvet tones so far as I remember. If I smote them hip and thigh they did their best to put me on the invalid list. If I was sectarian so were they. The knowledge that I had of the workings of my own mind and of our own congregation enabled me to see our weaknesses better than I could see theirs. And even to this hour I meet members of various churches who are as intolerant as I was a quarter of a century ago. I have learned that tolerance is a plant that grows outside the churches more rapidly than within, that it grows within amid many vicissitudes that are calculated to hinder.

"ALONG WELL-BEATEN PATHS."

Had I been prepared to receive modern ideas of the Bible or of the progress of the world I could not have received them from my teachers who regarded everything modern in Biblical studies with abhorrence. Consequently, I was led along well beaten paths, even treated at times to a lecture on the sinfulness of the organ in worship. Liberal ideas were not to be had from the teachers at whose feet I sat. It may be just as well that I had to work out my own salvation. I was thoroughly indoctrinated with our view point of the Bible, and what we know as first principles.

I proved myself a fairly good student, but I cannot say that I enjoyed my college life. For some branches I had no aptitude whatever, particularly mathematics. My absorption in the work of Sunday preaching which, by the way, provided me with the means to continue my course, was so complete that my mind was not as fully engaged in my technical studies as it should have been. I longed for the day of graduation when I should be free to preach the gospel far and wide. In the rural churches to which I ministered during all of my college life, I had a fair degree of success, but far from what I desired. I was not able to inspire such loyalty to the plea as had been inspired in me, and that was a daily burden to my heart. I could only rouse our people to a sense of the impregnable character of our position when combatting the errors of some neighboring sect. I wish now that I had reserved some of the energy for old age that I expended on such occasions.

I was a genuine son of thunder.

THE COUNTRY CHURCH PROBLEM.

I was sure that no man could answer my arguments, though, as in the old home church, the "sects" did not surrender as unanimously as I thought the merits of my sermon demanded; they continued to sound out their errors after the assault as zealously as they did before, much to my amazement. I concluded that like all other evils sectarianism dies hard.

What is now known as the country church problem was a problem then. I can remember a few churches that had life enough in them to thrive, but the great majority in my college days were living at a poor, dying rate. Many of them could pay just enough to cover my railway fare, and leave a few dollars for board bills. Many depended on the annual protracted meeting for resuscitation. Between times the regular monthly sermon was more of an anticipation of the annual revival than a triumph. But as the phases of country church life have been so completely covered of late in books and magazines it is not worth while to go into details here.

A LOYAL CRUSADER.

My readers must pass over several years with me to prevent this story from being too long. But during those years I worked with the phases of doctrine and under the influences described. I was a warm advocate of the "Christian Standard" and its policies, always undertaking its campaigns with enthusiasm. I enjoyed the war it made upon Rome and on those who it claimed were subverting the plea. Its fighting spirit I interpreted to be that of the holy crusader, while its constant encouragement of the evangelists and its discouragement of any criticisms of them kept me in line all the time. My work in the parishes to which I ministered went along in an average way. I had learned by experience that in many of the churches of all denominations there was great need of a restoration of apostolic Christianity.

After locating in my first field I read Dr. Richardson's "Memoirs of Alexander Campbell," and the wonder now is how this book had escaped me up to that moment. That work, be it said, is as fine a compendium of Mr. Campbell's views as can be found anywhere. It also has preserved for us Mr. Campbell's tolerant spirit, despite the claims of the legalists. That work was a seed-sower to me. Aylesworth's "Moral and Spiritual Aspects of Baptism," was another humanizing work which did me great good in modifying my rigid views of baptism.

GRADUAL MODIFICATION OF VIEWS.

Association with pious people in the various churches began to shake my faith in my early thinking. I met the people of the communities in which I lived in the spirit of a teacher, and that changed my entire attitude toward them. As a youth I had met them as aliens resisting my arguments, and courtesy was not dominant in the discussions. As a preacher I soon found out that I could not antagonize every person with whom I differed and be respected. I was learning prudence; I began to see what a nuisance I must have been before I entered college. Still, I was dyed in the wool with the early training, and for quite a while when I had my doubts about the correctness of that training I threw up new fortifications and shut my eyes to difficulties. I have learned since that the only safe and sure way to meet a difficulty is to keep one's eyes wide open.

Another influence that helped me to modify the severe views was the weekly visits of the "Christian Evangelist," which became familiar to me a year or two after graduation. I accepted the verdict of its rival that it was timid, if not cowardly, but there were so many good things in it that I began to question that verdict.

A DOWN TO DATE CONTROVERSY.

Then the controversy over Professor Willett's teachings shook my faith for the first time in the wisdom of my favorite journal. Not that I disapproved of its attacks on the teaching, for that was painted in gruesome colors, and I took the picture as I took my meals, without questioning; but the spirit of the entire crusade was drastic and arrogant and intended to ruin the usefulness of a great scholar. Had not Dr. Willett been able to earn his bread without any dependence upon our people he would have been driven out of our fellowship, and possibly out of the ministry. The attack upon Dr. R. C. Cave of St. Louis had met with the approval of the brethren, and why should not all the heresies of the brotherhood be exploited and their advocates exiled or damned? So the heresy-hunting crusade among us amounted to a frenzy, to use a mild word, which can find a parallel only in the Salem witchcraft scare. Communities as well as individuals sometimes become insane, and for twenty years a suspicion of heresy has given us a mental ague. The fact that the crusade against the conclusions of the scholars has been so violently overworked has made the heretic rather popular among us!

Still, I was far from dissenting from the teachings of my boyhood's inspiration, except that I thought I saw a disposition to dominate and observed the development of a spirit of uncharitableness.

FIGHTING THE "ASSURED RESULTS."

I recall now my first efforts to drive back what I thoroughly believed to be the tide of German rationalism. I even preached a few sermons on the dangers of modern scholarship, making merry over the "assured results," as the custom then was. If anyone had asked me what I meant by the assured results I would have been as far out at sea as some others who were writing as familiarly as if these were next door neighbors; but those to whom I preached must have thought that the "assured results" were a new denomination that had come into being and had challenged my wrath. I assumed as did many others that everybody was familiar with the aims of the Higher Criticism; and I am ready to confess that while many use the phrase as a death's head to frighten, there are now few well read preachers who have escaped its influence, while thousands of prominent laymen in all the churches have accepted as settled in favor of the newer views the issues over which the scribes are contending. We know today that we do not have to give up the Bible because we give up a belief in witchcraft; and that Prof. James Orr could still die in the faith if he did say that "we are not to take the account of Eve's creation too seriously;" and all of us may still be counted among the faithful though a "day" in the book of Genesis may mean to us an indefinite period, and that we are not infidel if we decide that the earth is more than six thousand years old.

BITTER STRUGGLE.

But fifteen years ago, and less, to my way of thinking the man who questioned the statements in the early chapters of Genesis and dared to say that possibly a talking snake may be an Oriental creation, as Coleridge said on one occasion, had no right to preach and should not be retained in the fellowship of the church. I was so overwhelmingly orthodox that I now shudder to think how many able and pious men I have damned. A climate of opinion was being developed in which my early views of Christianity were slowly dying, though I did my very best to keep them alive, and read many books devoted to the refutation of so-called "infidel" teachings with that end in view.

The Message of the Bill-Boards

BY ROBERT BARTON.

Illustrations Copyright by Poster Advertising Association.

A BILL-BOARD told of a beer "the choice of royalty;" "America's graceful women" wore the advertised corsets; an electric washer made "Monday a holiday;"—there was a fourth board resplendent in its many colors. In the center, near a manger, stood an artisan strangely garbed. At the right knelt three Wise Men in humble homage, while shepherds, awed by what they beheld, hung back, and from their position near the cattle gazed at the fair young Mother and the tiny Babe that lay in the manger.

Before the bill-board stood a cosmopolitan group, collected automatically as each individual, bent on his own errand had paused for a moment, attracted not only by the beauty of the picture, but by the novelty of seeing such a subject treated in such a way. The small audience was representative of the many types that daily see and read the diverse appeals of the posters. Held by the common force, informality was natural. The artist started it.

"An old subject, but a very new and masterly treatment," said he.

"It's awful pretty," said the Wash-lady.

"Wonderful," said the Lady-in-Furs.

"I wonder who's doing it," remarked the Man-in-the-Derby.

A little shawl-covered Italian mother, who with her baby in her arms, might herself have posed as a Madonna, became suddenly conscious of those about her, and reverently crossing herself, hurried away.

6,000 BILL-BOARDS USED.

On December 19, 1913, six thousand bill boards across the country were decorated with lithographs portraying The Nativity. The pictures were made in the size known as 24-sheet, that is, nine feet high and twenty-one feet long, and were printed in eleven colors. The cost of printing alone was three dollars per poster. The space occupied by these pictures during the month of December had an advertising value of $25,000. And business men bore the expense.

At the meeting of the Advertising Clubs of America, held in Baltimore last June, a huge electric sign flashed out the keynote of the assembly—TRUTH; truth in advertising. But the Poster Advertising Association has gone still further in its endeavor to strike a higher note in its line of work. The members of the Association are bearing the expense of evangelizing America through the bill-boards.

The movement is the work of a committee of fourteen men appointed by the Association at its meeting at Atlantic City, last August. At that gathering of men, Joe Mitchell Chapple, editor of the National Magazine, was one of the speakers. In the course of his speech he mentioned that in his mind was a phantom dream, a vague idea of using the boards for the cause of national uplift. His speech closed the day's session, and he was preparing to leave the convention when he met on the hotel porch, Bernard Link, one of the poster men.

"About that uplift idea of yours," suggested Mr. Link.

"Sit down," said Mr. Chapple, and the two men sat together on the hotel veranda and evolved from Mr. Chapple's idea a definite plan.

Next day when Mr. Link presented the finished proposition before the Association, its hearty reception was shown by a unanimous rising vote. Enthusiasm was high, and the constant discussion of the plan by the delegates indicated that the uplift campaign was by far the most popular move of the convention. A committee was appointed and through its efforts and the co-operation of the members of the Association, the picture of The Nativity has been posted in 3,347 cities of 3,000 or more inhabitants. Action began immediately following the closing of the meeting. The United States Lithograph Co. took the contract of furnishing the poster and began at once to hunt a suitable design for the lofty subject. Six hundred dollars was the price paid for the initial sketch of the successful competitor.

AN IDEALIST AS POSTER PAINTER.

Edward Volkert, formerly a poster artist, but now retired from that line of business and engaged in the painting of animal life, was called upon to make the preliminary design. Mr. Volkert is an idealist and a religiously-minded man, and into the designing of the poster he put not only the results of years of experience, but his heart and his desire to make the picture a beautiful one. The result was a composite picture of two familiar scenes of the Christmas time, the Holy Family in the stable and the visit of the Wise Men of the East. Across the bottom of the picture runs the caption, addressed to the rising generation, "Ask your Sunday-school teacher to tell you the story," and beneath, a facsimile of a brass plate bearing the verse, "And when they were come into the house they saw the young child with Mary, His mother, and fell down and worshiped Him." Critics viewing the picture have spoken in highest terms of the artist's skillful treatment of the subject.

The Nativity.—By Edward Volkert.

The original order was for 5,000 posters. The "paper" was distributed among the members of the Association in proportion to the population of the various cities and their relative amount of available board space. Notice was given, however, that additional posters would be supplied the members of the Association at their own expense. New York wired for 300 more; Chicago for 200, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and other cities asked for additional supplies. The poster-preachers had received their inspiration.

EARLIER SIMILAR ACHIEVEMENTS.

Although this is the first time this particular plan has been attempted in any country, it is not the first time that the poster has been used for the uplift of humanity. For several years at Christmas time bill-boards have urged the general use of the Red Cross stamps. Posters have been used in the interests of temperance, to augment "Safety First" crusades, to advertise "Go-to-Church Sunday" and for many other good and worthy movements. It was only last summer that the Ghetto of Chicago was posted with lithographs urging proper food for babies. Those who could not read the printed words grasped the message from the picture of the thin emaciated baby with the beer and sausage before it and the fine healthy infant with its bottle of milk.

But there have been societies behind these campaigns, people willing to pay for the service they received. And the posting plants have sold them their space gladly, but no more gladly than to automobile manufacturers or other advertisers. Now on their own initiative and at their own expense they have started a distinctly religious campaign which has received the immediate and universal attention of the Association.

Meanwhile the committee is busy planning the posters which are to follow The second one of the series will illustrate the life of General Grant and is intended to inspire the youth of the country with a feeling of patriotism. The poster will present a view of his humble home, his success at Appomatox and his residence at the White House. The poster will bear this title and question, that their labors may produce the best results through earnest efforts and careful selection of subjects.

The Association is being widely congratulated on its new interest in spiritual things. Poster advertising has been open to criticism on the ground that it displayed so prominently, and not always neatly, things vicious and often obscene. The members of the Association felt the harm of criticism of this character and at their last convention there were many suggestions for improving the moral tone of the bill-board. In their decision to better conditions they are being supported by the right thinking people of the country. Letters are pouring into the offices of Association, saying, "Today while riding the range, I noticed a crowd in front of every poster of The Nativity. This campaign is the finest thing we have ever done."

The appeal of the poster is universal and its message is to all classes of men. It is well, then, that so wide spreading an agent should be the means of telling the gospel story, and of stimulating better citizenship. For the child born and raised among the bill-boards what better means could there be of telling of Jesus? How could the message come to him more naturally than through a channel with which he is familiar? Nor is the story for the less cultured class alone. To the poor man who has no

The Grant Poster, to be used in the Uplift Campaign.

"What one poor boy accomplished. What are you doing with better opportunities?" The poster is lithographed in six colors and is the same size as the Christmas picture. It will be posted for display during the month of January.

Additional subjects for posters are under consideration, and the committee having the selecting in charge have laid their problem before people of religious reputation for their help. Miss Jane Addams of Hull House, Chicago, has been consulted; the committee has conferred with the Sunday-school Association, and with patriotic organizations in order the various plants from ministers and laymen, Sunday-school workers and civic leagues, expressing entire confidence in the high purpose of the Association in its new move.

CAMPAIGN MAKES POPULAR APPEAL.

And the interest the public is taking is stimulating the poster men. They are contributing their best positions in order that the movement may receive the greatest impetus they may be able to give it. They have posted the pictures carefully and have noted the reception the public has given them. The manager of a plant in Wisconsin wrote to the offices of the Bible, to the busy man who "has no time" to read one and to the rich man who has forgotten his, the bill-board has an appeal potent, unusual, irresistible.

The world will experience no immediate religious awakening; the direct results of this outlay of time and money may never be calculated, but even if no single mortal should ever say that his salvation had been brought about by the posters, they will still have served their purpose in linking more closely together those two spheres so often reckoned as totally independent, the "business world" and the "religious world."

A Nation's Prayer

By Thomas Curtis Clark.

THOU God of nations, Thee we seek,
Who only can the nations bless;
In triumph's hour O keep us meek,
To follow in Thy righteousness!

Still guide us by Thy perfect light,
Lest, blinded by the pride of power,
We wander from the path of right,
To perish in an evil hour.

Without Thee we should build in vain
The walls which it is ours to raise;
Forsake us not, but still sustain
And guide our hands in coming days.

Still may we, as the years unfold,
Make way for Freedom's endless reign;
By word and deed may we uphold,
Her honor, that she bear no stain.

Let righteousness still be our throne,
Our sceptre love, from malice free,
And truth the crown Thy name will own
Through all the years that are to be.

Student Volunteers at Kansas City

Report of the Great Convention Held in the Missouri City, December 31-January 4.

NEARLY four thousand students, professors and other representatives of 775 institutions of learning of the United States and Canada met at Kansas City, December 31 to January 4, in the seventh international convention of the Student Volunteer Movement for Foreign Missions. Two hundred and seventy-nine secretaries, missionaries and other representatives of the Foreign Mission Boards of North America; fifty-three editors and correspondents of the religious press, 365 special delegates and guests; and 350 laymen representing the Laymen's Missionary Movement, made a total registration of 5,031, exceeding by nearly 800 the attendance at any previous convention of the Student Volunteer Movement. The number of institutions represented was also in excess of any of the earlier quadrennial gatherings, while the presence at the convention of nearly 200 oriental students—Chinese and Japanese for the most part—contributed a new and unique element to the convention personnel.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CONVENTION.

The purpose of the convention, as of its predecessors, was to bring together the leading Christian students and professors of North America and the leaders of the foreign missionary enterprise for helpful association and conference; to consider unitedly the problems of the evangelization of the non-Christian world; to gain inspiration and a vision of the foreign missionary responsibility of the church, and to pray and earnestly to resolve to enter with greater consecration upon the work of extending the kingdom of Christ among the non-Christian nations.

The general sessions of the convention were housed in Convention Hall, seated to accommodate six thousand, this providing for a thousand Kansas City patrons and hostesses whose generosity and hospitality helped so much to make the convention possible. Afternoon Section Conferences were held for the most part in churches of the various denominations.

The great themes of the convention turned upon the larger discovery of God; a greater appropriation of the spiritual resources available to every worker for foreign service; the message they are to deliver; the development of an adequate financial base at home; and the significance of the general out-reach of North American social, intellectual and commercial life as well as that distinctively missionary.

SOME NOTABLE SPEAKERS.

Among the notable speakers at the main sessions were Dr. R. F. Horton of Great Britain; Bishop L. L. Kinsolving, of South Brazil; Dr. Robert E. Speer, perennial inspirer of North American students; Dr. W. D. Mackenzie, of Hartford Theological Seminary; Dr. S. M. Zwemer, Cairo, Egypt, Christian apostle among the Moslems; Prof. Charles R. Henderson, of the University of Chicago, Barrows lecturer in India last year; G. Sherwood Eddy, student evangelist in Asia; Hon. H. B. F. Macfarland, the great layman of Washington; J. Campbell White, of the Laymen's Missionary Movement; Dr. Shailer Mathews, president of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America; J. A. Macdonald, editor of the Toronto Globe; Hon. William J. Bryan, Secretary of State of the United States, and Dr. John R. Mott, Christian leader of students throughout the world.

The present status and the future task of the Student Volunteer Movement were set forth in the Report of the Executive Committee of the Movement as read by its chairman, Dr. John R. Mott. Here are some of the most significant paragraphs:

JOHN R. MOTT'S ADDRESS.

The distinctive purpose of the Volunteer Movement is to secure student volunteers who will actually go forth from the United States and Canada and spend their lives in non-Christian lands in the work of establishing Christ's kingdom. The supreme and only sufficient test by which it should be tried and judged is its efficiency in this vital respect. It is a ground for sincere gratitude, therefore, that in the lifetime of the movement 5,882 of its members have sailed. They have gone out to the foreign field under the auspices of over seventy missionary agencies, practically all being connected with the recognized missionary societies of the various Christian communions of the United States and Canada. They are distributed throughout the non-Christian world as follows:

Africa	638
Arabia	26
Central America	40
China	1,739
India, Burma and Ceylon	1,133
Japan and Korea	743
Latin and Greek Countries of Europe	28
Mexico	168
Oceania	67
Persia	51
Philippine Islands	163
Siam, Laos and Straits Settlements	104
South America	357
Turkish Empire	22
West Indies	177
Other Countries	225
	5,882

Most gratifying is the fact that during the four years which have elapsed since the Rochester Convention 1,466 volunteers have sailed. This is a far larger number than have gone out during any preceding quadrennium. It exceeds the number who sailed during the first twelve years of the life of the movement.

During the last four years a larger number of new volunteers has been enrolled than during any corresponding period in the history of the colleges of North America. This is all the more remarkable because the recruiting methods of the movement have become more conservative from year to year; and because experience has shown that it has become more difficult in recent years to secure candidates owing to the multiplying demands and attractions for workers on the home field. It should be a source of encouragement and thanksgiving for all to know that the present student generation is not lacking in willingness to respond to the heroic appeal and to the stern requirements of missionary service.

The volunteers now at the front have become the greatest single human force in the promotion of co-operation and un-

MODERN WOMANHOOD

Conducted by
Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison

A Christmas Drama By an American Woman

The sweetest of all the Christmas books this year is "The Wolf of Gubbio," by Josephine Preston Peabody (Mrs. Lionel Marks). She is also the author of that exquisite medieval drama, "The Piper," and in my opinion, is the first of living American dramatists. I know many playgoers will challenge this statement, and ask,

"Where are Bronson Howard, and Clyde Fitch, and Percy Mackaye, and August Thomas?"

Possibly those gentlemen (and other theatrical authors) may excel Mrs. Marks as playwrights, but I believe no one of them can touch her as a dramatist—for one might write many successful plays, and still have no claim to be numbered with the noble army of dramatists.

"The Wolf of Gubbio" is built on a beautiful legend, taken from the life of St. Francis of Assisi, about whom so many charming books have been written in recent years; though the gentle saint lived seven hundred years ago, yet there is something in his life and words, that appeals to the heart of today, as it did to the people of Italy in the dark Middle Ages.

His talisman was love—not only love for his God, and his fellowman, but for all created things. The old Chronicle, "I Fioretti," tells of how his little sisters, the birds, flocked about him, and of how all cattle and beasts came fearlessly at his call. The only little creature that he did not seem to take to his heart was the fly—to call any one "Brother Fly," was the harshest term in his vocabulary—that is surely a point of agreement, that these modern days have with the good little saint!

The stories of his power over animals, even the fierce and shy wild beasts, are more credible to us now, than to those of former times; we have an example in Yellowstone Park, where no one is allowed to harm any living creature, of how tame and friendly bears and buffaloes, and all other animals there become under the law of kindness. One may see there, bears foraging around a camp like dogs; I remember meeting in the road a deer with her two little fawns, and they took no more notice of me, than if they had been household pets.

In "The Wolf of Gubbio," the action falls within the space of twelve hours, the time is the day before Christmas seven hundred years ago, and the principal characters are St. Francis and the Wolf. The other persons in the play are two companions of St. Francis, the people and children of Gubbio, King Louis of France on his way home from the Crusades, two thieves, and a man, woman and baby from Foligno, a neighboring town. This little family had desired to stay in Gubbio, through the Feast of the Blessed Nativity, but the innkeeper refused to take them in, because of their small store of money, and because of the baby, that he called "A swaddled creature—wauling day and night." So the father and mother and babe started on the weary tramp over the mountains to Arezzo, though the woman was unfit for the journey, because the little one was recently born—a "child of days," as they called it. On the way, they were attacked by two thieves, and while the husband was struggling with them, the mother hid the babe under a j[illegible] snow. After the bri[illegible] man over a cliff, the[illegible] an, taking her cloa[illegible] leaving her fainting

But St. Francis stretches out his arms and says sweetly,

"Welcome, Brother Wolf."

And then the Wolf reveals his sad and lonely heart; he says,

"One by one, the Pack died out;
And here am I, a Wolf, behold!
The world's the world—and it is cold,
And I am old."

In answer to the Saint's tender questioning, he reveals his secret longing to be a man, and to be good.

St. Francis tells him, that "while longing lights the lovely fire," it is not enough, and says:

"Wilt thou earn
A man's own peace? Then work, and learn!
Back to the world; and there make good
All thou hast dreamed of brotherhood.
Hope and lose, and hope again,
And remember, and forget,
With us all; for men are men,
But not brothers;—no, not yet."

The Saint demands that he prove his repentance by going with him to Gubbio, where he had done such wrong in the past, and the Wolf consents—but does not confess his theft of the baby; having it in his den, he goes to the town, where he is taken for the Saint's big dog. Assunta, the poor mother is brought in by Fra Leo, and the innkeeper grudgingly gives her shelter in his cattle shed, where his ox and his ass are stalled.

St. Francis was the first to make Christmas a children's festival, and it was his custom to arrange a spectacle of the Holy Night, especially for them; so a representation of the scene in the stable at Bethlehem was given at Gubbio, with the poor mother in the cattle shed for the Madonna. The last act in the play brings beautifully before us, how the irresistible love in the heart of the good little saint, with the tender appeal of the divine story, pictured by the Mater Dolorosa in the innkeeper's stable, vanquishes the selfish stinginess in the townspeople, the brutality of the thieves, and the savagery of the Wolf. The mute voice of the empty crib is too much for the penitent Wolf; he brings the lost babe from his den and lays it in the manger, and is joyously embraced by the people as, "Brother Wolf of Gubbio." Everyone is happy, and St. [illegible] these in the best manner possible.

NEW YORK WOMAN WINS BIG PLACE.

Dr. Katherine Davis of Bedford Reformatory Slated as Commissioner of Correction.

For the first time in its history, New York City is to have a woman at the head of one of its most important departments, according to those in close touch with the plans of Mayor-elect John Purroy Mitchel. Miss Katherine Bement Davis has been selected for Commissioner of Correction.

Graduated from Vassar College in 1892, Miss Davis has a degree of Ph.D. from the University of Chicago and of LL.D. from Mount Holyoke. Since 1901 she has been the superintendent of the Bedford Reformatory, in Westchester County, where her work has received the widest and most favorable notice. The institution cares for wayward women and girls.

As Commissioner of Correction Miss Davis would have charge of the Tombs, the seven district prisons in Manhattan, the penitentiary at Blackwell's Island, the workhouse on Riker's Island, the New York City Reformatory of Male Misdemeanants on Hart's Island, and the city prisons in Brooklyn and Queens. The salary of the office is $7,500.

Prominent suffragists have been interested in obtaining the appointment of Miss Davis. Mrs. J. Borden Harriman is said to have been the first person to suggest it to Mr. Mitchel.

The appointment of Miss Davis would undoubtedly mean a thorough reorganization of the present unsatisfactory system. It would mean the humane treatment of prisoners and the elimination of graft. It would also give a great impetus to the movement in behalf of equal rights for women. Press dispatches say that it would be "one of the most important, concessions the suffragists have won in the East."

Secretary of the Navy Daniels, despairing of an appropriation from Congress sufficient to put a chaplain on every battleship afloat, is now urging the Young Men's Christian Association to put one of its secretaries aboard every vessel under the flag. The $2,000,000 bequest of Mrs. Butterfield for army and navy work will likely be used in considerable part for this purpose.

THE FATHER AND SON MOVEMENT.

THE Father and Son movement has our hearty commendation. There is no one thing America needs at the present moment more than a closer knitting of the ties of home. We need more manhood at the backbone of our national life and church life. We cannot make manhood out of anything but manhood.

There comes a time in the life of every boy when he thinks he is a man and his father thinks he is a child, and both are wrong. That is the time of danger, but it is the time of great opportunity. A boy never needs his father so much as at the moment when he is chafing most under parental restraint, and the father is in despair with the feeling that he cannot do anything with his boy.

We have been ruled by an utter and cowardly fallacy that if a boy had a good mother and a good woman day school teacher and a good woman Sunday-school teacher he had no need of masculine supervision and companionship. Hell is happy over that wicked error. Boys need their fathers.

It is often remarked that the Old Testament ends with a curse; but few people seem to remember what that curse is. It is the curse that comes when the hearts of fathers are turned away from their children and children from their fathers, and it is a curse as inevitable as the decrees of fate or the Word of God. That curse has already bitten deep into the American home and church. It will bite deeper unless fathers and sons come closer together in the great concern of life.

THE CONQUEST OF TYPHOID.

THE time is in sight when it will be as disgraceful to have typhoid fever as to have lice or the itch. The latter were supposed necessary evils not very long ago, and typhoid is now just passing out of the category of inevitable providence. into the sphere of filthy and needless pests.

The army got through the year 1913 with only two cases of typhoid fever in the enlisted strength of more than 80,000 officers and men. One was that of a man who had not been immunized with the typhoid vaccine and was believed to have contracted the fever before he enlisted; the other case was among the troops in China, and though the man was immunized in 1911, the history of the case is in doubt.

The navy, which adopted the vaccine later than the army and did not make its use at once compulsory, had among its 50,000 jackies only seven authentic cases of typhoid in the year ending last June. Four of those were treated at a remote tropical station, where the vaccine had deteriorated.

Such is the wonderful record of the prophylactic treatment, which has wiped out one scourge among the nation's defenders and which many medical officers believe has had something to do with the decreasing rate of tuberculosis.

Under the direction of Surgeon General Blue of the public health service, many thousands of sailors on merchant ships have been treated with the serum at the government's marine hospitals.

Before the resort to immunization typhoid cases in the army averaged about three per thousand enlisted strength, or in the neighborhood of 250 cases a year. In 1910, before the beginning of the treatment, the rate was 2.32 per thousand; in 1911 it dropped to .80; in 1912 to .26; this year the rate is practically nothing.

Some scientists have thought that the prophylaxis involved an increase of liability to tuberculosis. Army surgeons who have been analyzing their figures feel that they have established the fact to be exactly contrary.

Here are the latest figures showing the number of cases of tuberculosis among the soldiers:

In 1909 there were 4.70 per thousand, in 1910 the rate was 3.79, in 1911 it was 3.74 and last year 3.49.

It is admitted by the surgeons that the reduction is due in some degree to the more careful examination of recruits, but the figures at least show that the prophylaxis treatment has not increased tuberculosis.

THE WITHDRAWAL OF THE MORGANS.

THE decision of the firm of J. P. Morgan and Company to withdraw from the directorates of the large corporations is the beginning of a new policy on the part of that firm, and it is likely to be followed by other great banking corporations. It is done in acknowledged recognition of public sentiment demanding that the money power be not lodged in the hands of a few men. It is the voluntary surrender of "the System" to popular demand. The interlocking directorates by which the enormous corporations headed up in one or two great Wall Street firms seem likely to end. We trust it will be done gradually and without disturbance of business confidence; for those who have assumed these vast responsibilities owe to the public this added duty, that in leaving them they provide that they be safely transferred to other and strong men who can manage these large interests for the public good. The time is coming, and has almost come, when righteousness must rule in the money marts.

THE MAN WHOM CHRIST SENT HOME.

IT was part of the work of the Lord Jesus to organize a band of trained apostles. It was no less a part of his work to establish in various places unofficial friends of the Gospel who could bear consistent testimony to the work of Christ. Just at the time when he was pressing some men into service as preachers, he was sending others home.

The man from whom the demons were gone out prayed him that he might be with him: but he sent him away, saying, "Return to thy house, and declare how great things God hath done for thee." And he went his way, publishing throughout the whole city how great things Jesus had done for him.

The man whom Jesus healed had an impression that he was called to preach. So he was, but it was quite a different call than he at first supposed. Not for him was the privilege of being one of the apostles; other men were called to that task but no such glory was reserved for this humble friend of Jesus. You may read the lists of the Twelve Apostles, but you cannot find his name in any of them. A miracle had been wrought upon him, but he himself was to work no miracles. The sphere of large usefulness which suddenly opened before his vision was for some other man, not for himself. Many men are called to the service of Christ who have no call to preach. This man was one of them. It must have been a disappointment to him when he offered his life and service to the Lord Jesus and Jesus told him that for this sphere he had no fitness. His was the humbler ministry that lay nearer to his hand. His was the task of going among his old neighbors and telling them how great things the Lord had done for Him. Jesus needed him in Decapolis. He did not need him in the glorious company of the apostles.

It cannot be said that this situation is quite parallel with that of the average layman today. There is no great throng of men pressing to enter the Christian ministry. The long years of preparation, the small financial return, the uncertain tenure of office, the probability of being set adrift when middle life is reached, together with the multitude of small annoyances and petty cares have taken the glamour and romance away from the vision of the pastoral office.

THE FOOL WHO CRIES FIRE.

BY this time in the world's history there are some acts of simple folly that ought to have become impossible. The Calumet horror illustrates anew the wickedness of the cry of fire in a crowded church or hall. Every minister ought to consider the possibility that sometime in his ministry there will be a fire alarm in his congregation, and should know just what to do in that emergency. The man who in such a moment can show himself master of the situation, and by his own moral and physical courage and cool judgment avert a panic is one of earth's real heroes. Every minister should carefully school himself in preparation for such a test of his fitness to be a master of assemblies. There should be frequent inspection of exits from churches and public halls. And above all, there should be a training of school children and of men and women as to conduct in moments of danger. We need popular instruction in the essential elements of heroism.

CHILD LABOR DAY IN ALL CHURCHES.

FIVE thousand clergymen throughout the country, members and correspondents of the Social Service Commission of the Churches, have received from the National Child Labor Committee a reminder that January 25 is Child Labor Day. The Committee is also asking several hundred college presidents, school superintendents, principals, and teachers to bring the subject of child labor before their students and pupils on Monday, January 26. To all who wish to observe Child Labor Day, three pamphlets will be sent upon request, free of charge, by the National Child Labor Committee, 105 East Twenty-Second street, New York City.

METHODISTS DISCUSS PUBLICITY BUREAU.

ON the final evening of the great Indianapolis meeting of Methodist men, at Indianapolis, Rev. Ralph Wells Keeler, chairman of the Publicity Bureau, was the subject of a presentation by his fellow journalists for his faithful and kindly service throughout the meeting. In response to this presentation Dr. Keeler said:

I may say that I have learned, and especially here, that the daily press and the Church press is ready to spread the news of the gospel of the Kingdom when those men who represent the gospel of the Kingdom are willing to bring it to them in news form. To my mind one of the great failures of the Methodist Episcopal Church to grasp opportunity is the neglecting to inform the world that the Church is alive. As a Church, we have no place where a press association or a newspaper may get adequate information of the Church at large, and the result is that we have all sorts of mix-ups in the daily press throughout the country—misrepresentations for which the press is not responsible. And I believe, from the attitude of these men who have served here from the press of this city, and the city editors of this city, that they and all other newspaper men throughout the country are anxious to print the news of which this meeting is representative. And I trust that among other things we may consider the letting of the world know that we want the world to come to Christ, over the wire and through the pages of newspapers that are waiting for us to say something in an adequate way and in terms of everyday speech.

The Northwestern Christian Advocate, of Chicago, remarks that the statements of Dr. Keeler are quite correct. It is almost impossible, this paper declares, for the ordinary reporter, who knows nothing of the theological or temporal history of the denomination, who has but little knowledge of the nomenclature, to properly sense or adequately report the proceedings of ecclesiastical bodies. It is thus that many ridiculous paragraphs are seen, causing embarrassment not only to the paper publishing them, but to the Church. It would assuredly be a wise move for the Church to establish a publicity bureau that could give out to the secular press such information as would be of value to the world and that would act as a guard against the issuance of false and perverted reports. This bureau could also investigate such published statements as from time to time are of doubtful authority, and make an effort to correct them in the best manner possible.

DEMOCRATIC CONVENTIONS.*

"ADVISORY AUTHORITY."

EXCEPT when applied to the Lord himself Disciples of Christ have always been chary in the use of the word "authority." The declaration of Dr. Z. T. Sweeney at the Toronto convention, last October, to the effect that "God delegated all authority to his son, Jesus Christ, and the Son delegated his authority to the apostles, and the apostles never delegated it to anybody else," won great applause. Waiving the legalistic implications of such a form of statement, the substance and purport of it are sound and true. Christ's is the only word that has authority in the conscience of the believer.

But the declaration brought confusion rather than light into the discussion, because the word "authority" as applied to a form of organization for the accomplishment of church work denotes a different kind of authority altogether. It is not authority over the conscience, over the souls of men: that kind of authority none but Christ can exercise. It is simply the determination of a place of final appeal in the sphere of practical action by a social organism.

Disciples locate ultimate authority (of this human sort) in the local congregation. This, as we said last week, has stood well the tests of Scripture and of practice. It is democratic and divine. The community congregation is autonomous and free. Whatever form of organization the larger social entity called the Body of Christ, or the Church, assumes, and whatever tasks it engages in, must depend upon the action and consent of the constituent community churches.

But there is no reason either in Scripture or in experience why these free churches may not unite representatively in a convention for counsel and common action. On the contrary, it is the bounden duty of each church to engage actively in the promotion of the well-being of the whole Church, the Body of Christ, and to hold itself subordinate to the larger body, in all things, up to the point where the authority of Christ is closely involved.

Neither divine revelation nor human wit has devised a better plan by which a social organism of many members may act together for common ends than the democratic plan of a representative convention or congress or council. Such a convention is simply a clearing house of thought, and a means for the solution or compromise of differences of opinion, in order to secure unity of action among the many free members of a common enterprise.

The resolution adopted in haste at Toronto, and intended to "explain" the status of the "General Convention of Churches of Christ" by declaring that the Convention possessed no "authority" whatever over the existing missionary societies except authority of an "advisory" character, was ambiguous and misleading. Of course the Convention, as a convention, has no authority of any kind. It is not a source of authority, but a medium of authority. It is simply a device by which the will of the sovereign churches is carried out, a channel through which the united purposes of the larger brotherhood may flow.

If this be so it is an affront to the churches themselves to affirm that they, through their representatives in convention, shall not exercise authority, absolute authority, over all or any of the volunteer missionary and benevolent societies which look to them for support, even to the point of absorbing the functions of such societies should the churches wish so to do.

But if the churches have not the right to exercise such authority over their societies, then is our congregational sovereignty already surrendered and the so-called "explanatory resolution" explains only how far we have drifted from the democratic position of our history and of the New Testament.

*Several typographical errors occurred in the article under this heading in last week's paper. In the fifth paragraph the word "co-operative" should be "corporate," the word "signed" should be "sized," and "it" in the sixth line should be, obviously, "them." In the sixth paragraph, "reconstructive" should be "reconstruction." Two or three other errors are too obvious to call attention to reviewers and correspondents will kindly note these corrections.—EDITOR.

METHODIST EDUCATOR PASSES AWAY.

With the recent passing of Dr. J. T. McFarland the Methodist brotherhood loses one of its most useful leaders, especially in the field of education. Beginning his ministry in 1873, in Iowa, Dr. McFarland was, from 1882 to 1891, connected with Iowa Wesleyan University, first as vice-president, and then for seven years as president of the school. He was pastor of Grace church, Jacksonville, Ill., for five years, of New York Avenue church, Brooklyn, three years, and was in his sixth year as pastor of First Church, Topeka, Kans., when the General Conference of 1904 elected him corresponding secretary of the Sunday-School Union. Doctor McFarland was a member of the General Conference of 1896, but had the distinction of being elected to an important position in the church by a General Conference of which he was not a member. In 1908 the Board of Sunday-schools was organized with a corresponding secretary, and Doctor McFarland was elected editor of Sunday-school publications, to which office he was again elected in 1912.

Speaking in appreciation of this deceased leader, The Pittsburg Christian Advocate says of Dr. McFarland: "Dr McFarland had a very high appreciation of the supreme value and place of the Bible. He delighted in finding and setting forth its deeper spiritual lessons. He had a great love for children and the young people of the church and Sunday-school. He felt keenly the need of religious training. He yearned to furnish the very best of aids to the most wholesome and highest spiritual culture. He believed that the more thorough knowledge of the Bible and of human nature and life which has been gained through modern research had only served to make more available the agencies which God has provided for the religious education of the race. He believed that the assured results of criticism have not impaired in the least, but have rather heightened, the real value of the Holy Scriptures, "which are able to make wise unto salvation," and "are profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction and for instruction in righteousness."

METHODIST YEAR BOOK'S REVELATIONS.

The most interesting information, especially to general readers, revealed by the 1914 year book of the Methodist Church is that which concerns increase in the membership of the church during the past year. The editor has given this increase by episcopal areas, which we reproduce:

Atlanta	2,038
Boston	2,979
Buffalo	12,182
Chattanooga	5,245
Chicago	9,205
Cincinnati	32,689
Denver	527
Helena	1,649
New York	3,723
Oklahoma City	4,245
Omaha	6,616
Philadelphia	10,475
Portland	1,073
St. Louis	3,435
St. Paul	3,536
San Francisco	6,065
Washington	16,467

Only one area, New Orleans, deviated from this uniform report, with 1,124 decrease.

The different foreign areas make the following showing:

South America, decrease	119
Europe, increase	1,788
Eastern Asia, decrease	3,126
Southern Asia, increase	19,286
Africa, increase	885

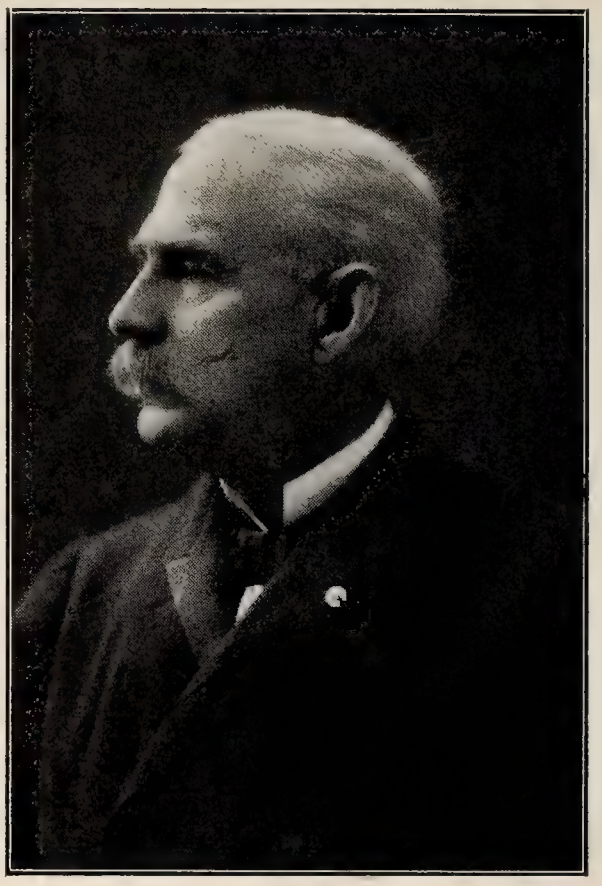
This makes a total increase of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in its world-wide ministration, of 139,739.

An interesting note is that regarding the salaries of pastors. In 1907 the average salary of pastors was $826.08. The average pastoral salary for 1913 is $945.67.

CANADIAN CHURCH UNION MOVES FORWARD.

The recent meeting of the church union committee of the Presbyterian Church in Canada, at Toronto, resulted again, just as at every test heretofore, in an overwhelming vote to proceed with the proposal for merging Presbyterians, Methodists and Congregationalists into one denomination, which has been in the air for several years past. So The United Presbyterian informs us. The Minority in the committee, according to that paper, once more tried to force an abandonment of the whole proposition on the ground that it was disturbing the church, but the majority adopted instead by a vote of thirty-one to eight a motion for proceeding "in the hope that union may be consummated without any unnecessary delay."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR DAY, FEBRUARY 1.



The first Sunday in February will be observed in wide awake churches as Christian Endeavor Day. Dr. Francis E. Clark, founder of the movement, is a strong believer in Christian Endeavor as a permanent factor in Christian training, and has chosen this day as one for a reconsideration of the claims of this wonderful movement. Doctor Clark has sent The Conquest an article telling why he believes Christian Endeavor has a future. This will be published in the special Christian Endeavor number of The Conquest, which will reach its readers on the great day of celebration.

NOTES FROM HERE AND THERE.

New Pan-Presbyterian General Secretary.

The committee of the Pan-Presbyterian Alliance appointed to choose a successor to Dr. George D. Mathews, the general secretary of the alliance, who died last summer at his home in London, announces the selection of Dr. R. Dykes Shaw, pastor of Hope Park United Free church, Edinburgh. Doctor Shaw, who entered the University of Edinburgh in 1871, and was ordained to the ministry of the United Presbyterian Church in 1880, has been pastor at Hope Park since 1892. He is well know as an efficient denominational leader.

Unitarians in Missionary Conference.

The first Unitarian missionary conference was recently held in Boston. There have been Unitarians who have gone out to spread the faith and lack of faith which the Unitarians declare, but the recent conference expresses a larger and more definite view as to opportunities and purposes, especially with regard to work in foreign lands. The attendance on the conference meetings was not large, nor was there any popular enthusiasm. There were at the conference some distinguished men of the Church. Dr. Charles W. Eliot, recently back from the Orient, urged mission work. Prof. Peabody, of Harvard, was urgent in advocacy of showing more interest.

Episcopalians Give $2 per Member.

According to the annual report of the Episcopal church, just published, gifts to the Church in this counrty during the past year amounted to $20,000,000, which is just $2 per member. The report shows that the larger part of the ministerial supply of the Episcopalian church is furnished by ministers coming into it from other denominations.

ity. It would be strange were this not the case. Here are over 7,000 able men and women who, during their student days, though belonging to different Christian communions and nationalities, worked together as members of a common movement, animated with a common objective. In that plastic, vision-forming period they learned to respect, trust and love each other. Now they stand face to face with a task so stupendous, so difficult and so urgent, that they are convinced that they are necessary to each other, that nothing less than a policy and practice of co-operation and a spirit of Christlike oneness will prevail. On every field, therefore, they may be found in the forefront in all wise, constructive efforts to draw together the Christian forces. Moreover, their indirect influence on the cause of unity at the home base is destined to be both extensive and profound.

RAPID GROWTH OF MOVEMENT.

For a number of years the Student Volunteer Movement of the United States and Canada was the only organization of its kind in all the student world. Under the influence of one of its founders a similar movement was later developed as an organized force in the British universities. Still later the volunteer idea was transplanted, either from North America or from the British Isles, to many other lands, such as the Scandinavian countries, Germany, Holland, Switzerland, Australia and South Africa. The North American Movement has never lost its deep interest in these sister movements, but continues to follow their development with keen and prayerful interest.

Each afternoon the convention broke up into sections, once for the consideration of specific fields, again, into denominational groups; and a third time for consideration of special problems pertaining to the promotion of missionary intelligence and activity on the part of the students. Two special groups held most interesting afternoon sessions each day—the editors of college papers, and the Chinese students, the former about seventy-five in number, and the latter 160, including not a few young women.

Between sessions the students interested themselves in a large and comprehensive exhibit of literature and accessories for use in up-to-date mission study classes.

More interesting and impressive than any speaker, longer to be remembered than any one feature of the program, however great, was the convention presence itself. Probably never before in Christian history has there been so large a number of Christian college men and women together, and among these were the largest number of intending missionaries—student volunteers—ever assembled at one time. Slow indeed must have been the imagination of any delegate or visitor which was not set aglow by the sight; ideals of life service already high were being heightened; consecration already genuine was being deepened; views of world need and world opportunity were being broadened; the lives to be devoted to foreign service, already significantly numerous, were being added to hour by hour. In such a presence and amid such processes, significant for the extension of the Kingdom to earth's farthest bounds, were the days spent.

At the farewell meeting on Sunday night there was read the honor roll of sailed volunteers who had died during the four years since the convention of 1910; a large number of volunteers who are expected to sail during 1914 stood while in prayer and song they were commended to the Father's care; and farewell charges were delivered by Mr. Eddy and Doctor Mott. The message of the convention as a whole can perhaps best be summarized in the series of telegrams read at this closing session:

London.—British Student Movement greets convention. God hath done great things, but His greater works in us and in the world lie ahead. Job. 26:14, Revised Version.—Tissington Tatlow.

London.—There remaineth yet very much land to be possessed.—Robert E. Wilder. (One of the founders of the Student Volunteer Movement).

Neuchatel, Switzerland.—"God wants you."—Swiss Student Movement.

Kiev, Russia.—Pray for tragic Russia. Uphold heroic Russian leaders. Sustain your North American comrades. We welcome you to the glorious fellowship of Christ's sufferings.—Day.

Stambout.—Stricken Turkey realizes greatest needs are moral. Undreamt of possibilities challenge Christian world to reveal the uplifting power of Christ.—Volunteers in Turkey.

Assiout.—Greetings from Assiout. Unprecedented evangelistic and educational opportunities throughout Moslem world invite you.—Volunteers in Egypt.

Tacoma, Washington.—Let the American churches cease neglecting the nations of their own hemisphere, amid the new necessities and possibilities which are making urgent the glorious work of Pan-American evangelization.—T. Wood.

Montevideo. — Awakening continent presents an opportunity which calls urgently for volunteers of faith and power. —South American Volunteers.

Ten Big Reasons Why

BETHANY GRADED LESSONS are being adopted by so many of the best schools among Disciples.

1. There is more to them—at least a third more—than is contained in any other series.
2. They are rich, vital and full of suggestion to teacher and pupil.
3. They are free from the sectarian spirit.
4. They are soundly and fervently evangelical.
5. They are truly artistic in all their illustrations.
6. They are printed on better paper with better binding and in better taste than any other series.
7. Every lesson writer is an expert of interdenominational reputation.
8. They are a monument to the modern spirit of unity—several leading denominations have co-operated to produce them and are now using them.
9. The Disciples possess full editorial rights, through the editor, Charles Clayton Morrison.
10. Every Disciple school that uses them participates in and promotes a great Christian union enterprise.

Of Human Interest

The "Way" to Bill Nye.

A few steps aloft, and the visitor entered a large bare room, where, amid the visitor, who went down the main street, turned a corner, and paused before a livery stable, could find him by this sign:

Laramie Boomerang,
Walk down the Alley,
Twist the Gray Mule's Tail,
Take the elevator immediately.

A few steps aloft, and the vistor entered a large bare room, where, amid the click of type and the rattle of press, a tall, thin, sallow man sat before a rude wooden table, his bald head studiously bent over his newspaper copy. That was Bill Nye.

Noted Novelist's Parable.

"Men are idealists, women are realists," said Mrs. Wilkins Freeman, the noted novelist, at a tea in Metuchen.

"Woman's realism, which begins in childhood, makes her seem cynical, whereas she is only perspicacious. Take, for example, the story of little Mary:

"Little Mary, a Metuchen child, was set to watch a flock of chickens. The hens kept together very well, but the rooster was inclined to wander inquisitively toward another flock of chickens next door. Time and again she had to turn him back.

"After a while she thought she had him cured of his wanderer's habit, and took up her doll a moment. But when she lifted her head, there were the hens together in the corner, and there was the rooster strutting, calm and important, across the lawn toward the next yard again.

"'Come back here!' cried Mary. 'Come back to your own family!'

"But the rooster kept straight on.

"Mary looked at him a moment disgustedly; then she said in a low, bitter voice:

"'That's just like you men.'"

More Wilson Philosophy.

"President Wilson's sangfroid is unfailing," said a diplomat, "as unfailing as his fund of anecdote.

"Apropos of the shipping rebate, I complimented the president on his sangfroid the other day. He replied, with his dry smile, that he tried to imitate the grave digger.

"A grave digger, he explained, had the habit of visiting the cemetery every night at about midnight to see that all was going well.

"Some boys decided to play a trick on him. They dug a trench in a dark spot which the grave digger always passed over, and one of their number clothed in a white sheet, hid behind a tree.

"The grave digger at midnight duly appeared, and sure enough, he stumbled and fell into the grave.

"Then the boy in the sheet stepped forth and said, in hollow tones:

"'What are you doing in my grave?'

"'What are you doing out of it?' the grave digger calmly replied."

Timothy Woodruff on College Girls.

The late Timothy Woodruff once attended an alumni dinner in New York—the dinner of a co-ed college—and at this dinner, in the course of a toast, the president of the college said:

"You can always tell a woman who has taken a university degree."

"Tell her!" Mr. Woodruff interrupted. "What can you tell her? You can't tell her anything. She knows it all."

The Way She Understood It.

Mark Twain, about the time that he was working hard upon one of the earlier books that brought him fame, sailed for a tour of Europe with his family.

He kept up his writing on shipboard and left it only at intervals for brief recreation.

One day, so the story runs, an approaching storm drove him inside the cabin and he went back to work, leaving word with his daughter, then a very little girl, to explain his absence.

"If they ask for me," he said to her, "say that I won't be long—I am only going to write an anecdote."

A little later the child was accosted by a passenger.

"Where has your father gone?" was the inquiry.

"He won't be long," lisped the child obediently. "He saith he ith only going to ride a nanny goat."

Helen Keller's Philosophy.

My share in the work of the world may be limited but the fact that it is work makes it precious. * * * Darwin could work only half an hour at a time; yet in many diligent half-hours he laid anew the foundations of philosophy. * * * Green, the historian, tells us that the world is moved along, not only by the mighty shoves of its heroes, but also by the aggregate of the tiny pushes of each honest worker.

The World Is Growing Better

Auto Manufacturer Distributes Profits.

The greatest melon ever cut in Detroit was sliced there last week for the benefit of the employes of the Henry Ford Automobile Company. Henry Ford, president of the concern, announced that $10,000,000 would be distributed among every one of the 26,000 persons in the employ of the concern in this and other cities.

Beginning January 12 and continuing monthly, the wages of all men over twenty-two years old were doubled, regardless of the length of time they have served the corporation.

According to officials of the company, Henry Ford has expressed himself as being against the unequal division now existing between capital and labor. The officials of the company have made arrangements for 1914 whereby employes would work but eight hours per day instead of nine, and receive the larger wages. About 300 women and 500 men under twenty-two years of age will be investigated and a special provision made for them sharing in the increase.

In the Ford plant proper 15,000 men are employed and 7,500 others are in the various assembling stations throughout the country. Four thousand men will be added immediately to the pay rolls, making a total of 26,500 employes to be sharers in the fruits of their labor.

According to the plan, men over twenty-two years old will receive the benefit of the increase under the profit sharing system. Their pay will increase from $2.34 to about $5 a day. Ninety per cent of the Ford employes are of this age. They will reap benefits each month, beginning January 12. The money is to be paid monthly, instead of yearly.

Men receiving $6 and $7 a day for expert services will receive an increase under a special plan, so the expert may still be classified as above the average workman.

The cost of cars will not be raised, it being announced that the increase is to come directly from the pockets of the stockholders of the Ford company.

"It is our belief that social justice begins at home."

This statement made by Henry Ford explains in a nutshell why the Ford Motor Company decided to take the action it did.

"We want those who have helped us to produce this great institution and are helping to maintain it to share our prosperity," went on Mr. Ford. "We want them to have present profits and future prospects. Thrift and good service and sobriety, all will be encouraged and recognized.

"Believing as we do, that a division of our earnings between capital and labor is unequal, we have sought a plan of relief suitable for our business. We do not feel sure that it is the best, but we have felt impelled to make a start and make it now. We do not agree with those employers who declare, as did a recent writer in a magazine, in excusing himself for not practicing what he preached, that 'the movement toward the bettering of society must be universal, we think that one concern can make a start and create an example for other employers, and that is our chief object.

"The public need have no fear that this action of ours will result in any increase in prices of our projects. On the contrary, we hope to keep up our past record of reducing prices each year.

"We may have to make changes in our plans. If hard times should befall then we may have to reduce or modify our distribution of profits, but the outlook now is such as to justify this distribution for the present year."

Church Houses Jobless Men.

Homeless and jobless men are to find a refuge in at least one of Chicago's large churches.

The announcement was made last week at the fellowship dinner held in connection with the celebration of the eightieth anniversary of the organization of the First Presbyterian church at Forty-first street and Grand boulevard, Chicago. The pastor, Dr. William Chalmers Covert, made the announcement.

The church which is to be opened to needy men for sleeping and shelter is the building formerly occupied by the congregation at Indiana avenue and Twenty-first street.

The announcement came as a climax to a review given by various speakers in after dinner speeches of past achievements of the church.

"The old church has not lost its usefulness," Doctor Covert said. "The cry of the 5,000 jobless and homeless men in Chicago has come up to us. Our church officers held a meeting yesterday and the plan was proposed of opening up the old church.

"The intention is to give sleeping accommodations to these needy men for the next six weeks. Arrangements are not yet complete, but we hope at a meeting tomorrow the details of the plan will be completed."

Disciples Table Talk

"New Plan" at Champaign Church.

What is called the "New Plan" for the morning work was inaugurated January 4 at University Place, Champaign. The plan is "One Service for Bible Study and Worship." The Sunday-school period will begin at 9:30, the worship at 10:30, closing at 11:30. The "Junior Congregation" comprised of the Beginners and Primary pupils will hold parallel sessions in their department under the leadership of the elders of the church. Everybody is enthusiastic over the new plan. At the "yearly meeting," held New Year's afternoon and evening, the best reports in the church's history were given. During the four weeks' meeting held by home forces in February and March, 60 were added to the membership of the church; 73 were added at regular services during the year. Total additions, 133. Total net resident membership, 894. The total of all money collected and paid out during the year was $17,000. Of this $9,000 was applied on new building debt. The total for benevolences was $1,338. A four weeks' meeting was begun January 4. Miss Katharine Netz, of Toledo, is assisting the pastor and will have charge of the choruses and aid in the personal work.

Annual Meeting Closes With Consecration.

The annual meeting of First Church, South Bend, Ind., held Dec. 31, closed with a consecration service from eleven to five minutes after twelve. The first half hour was under the lead of the excellent Christian Endeavor society of the church and the closing period was in charge of the pastor. As the stroke of twelve announced the new year the congregation was in the Lord's prayer, praying the words, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done as in heaven so on earth." The total amount of money raised by the church from all sources was $9,176.60. Of this amount $6,83.78 was for missions and benevolences. Over $2,000 was applied on the building fund. Old arrears in the general fund were met and the year closes with bills provided for to date. The report of the clerk of the church showed a total increase in the membership of 282, of whom 185 were by confession and baptism. The net gain was 248.

Missourian Makes Great Record.

J. W. McKean, of Lebanon, Missouri, state superintendent of the American Sunday-school Union, is hunting for the Missourian who has the record for the longest period of Sunday-school attendance. He says: "I am anxious to find out who in Missouri have been attending Sunday-school the longest time without a miss. I will give a copy of Schaff's Bible Dictionary to the one more than 20 years old who can claim this honor, and to the person less than 20 years old who has attended longest without missing I will make a present of another book. Will not all who read this help me to find out who can claim these prizes? There are no 'strings' or pulls to this, but merely a desire to create an interest in Sunday-school attendance."

And now the Hannibal Morning Journal comes out in big type, and declares that the search is over—that J. W. Mounce, of Hannibal, is the man! Here is the record of Mr. Mounce:

Age 77. Regular Sunday-school attendant since May 15, 1852. Missed not over twenty-five Sundays during the past sixty-one years, six of them in California in the winter of 1900. Twenty-four years at Paris, Mo. Four and one-half years of this time, he was in business in Hannibal, but retained his membership in the Paris Christian church, going each Saturday evening to Paris and teaching a class on Sunday. Two years in Quincy, Ill., and was librarian of the Sunday-school while there. Thirty-five years in Hannibal. Has been treasurer of the Sunday-school for the past thirty-three years and treasurer of the First Christian Church for about thirty years. Now teacher of the women's Bible class.

The St. Louis Republic is helping Mr. McKean in his good work, and, in addition to the prizes mentioned, that paper, "in an endeavor to establish incontestably the honor where it belongs," will give valuable prizes, to be announced later, to the Sunday-school to which the winners belong.

For the correctness of Mr. Mounce's record the Morning Journal refers the Republic to the following: S. S. Bassett, Paris, Mo.; C. B. Edgar, former pastor at Hannibal, now of Oklahoma City, Okla.; F. W. Allen, pastor at Paris; S. D. Dutcher, former pastor at Hannibal, now of Eldon, Mo.; Levi Marshall, former pastor at Hannibal, now of Nevada, Mo.; George A. Campbell, pastor at Hannibal, Mo.

Farewell to F. W. Burnham at Springfield.

The seating capacity of First Church, Springfield, Ill., was found insufficient to accommodate the large number of residents of Springfield who gathered to hear farewell words and to have a final handclasp with F. W. Burnham, the church's retiring pastor. The reception was held December 29. The large crowd that was in attendance testified to the popularity of the departing minister, who during the seven years that he has occupied the pulpit of First Church, has made friends in every sphere of life, regardless of religious denomination. The affair was in the nature of an old-fashioned reception and "open house." Mr. and Mrs. Burnham took their departure for the Chicago & Alton station about 11 o'clock, where they boarded the Alton Hummer for Los Angeles, where Dr. Burnham will assume the pastorate of the Wiltshire Boulevard Christian Church at once.

Among the speakers during the evening were: W. H. Cannon, pastor of Central Church, Decatur, Ill., the pulpit of which was occupied by Mr. Burnham before he came to Springfield; Prof. R. E. Hieronymus, of Eureka College; Edgar D. Jones, of First Church, Bloomington, Ill. Judge Charles P. Kane, of Mr. Burnham's congregation, gave an address in behalf of the church.

Louisville Preacher Lauds Church.

We quote from a recent sermon of E. L. Powell, the "Voice" of Louisville: "And for the church of the living God there is a future so splendid that faith can proclaim the victory as almost imminent, nothing spectacular, nothing dramatic, but the outreachings of the church's influence and gospel, speaking of brotherhood, speaking of love, speaking of good will toward men, until every nation shall know the power of that divine love which broke its heart on Calvary. At last the church with her message, and her message is the divine person of the Son of God, is the key that shall unlock all the future."

Illinois Star Sunday School Contest.

For the last three months of the old year the Sunday-schools of Litchfield, Jacksonville, Champaign and Paris, carried on a vigorous contest. It was based upon attendance, collection, and the presence of officers and teachers on time. Paris won by a large plurality. Litchfield made 16,192 points; Jacksonville 17,709 points; Champaign, 22,488 points; Paris, 24,294 points. This gave Paris the lead by 1806 points. A new contest between Champaign and Paris was immediately launched.

Real Christmas Spirit at Norfolk.

Nothing more in accord with the true spirit of Christmas was ever reported than occurred in Norfolk, Va., on Christmas eve. The Carol Club of First Church, visited the Ballentine Home for old ladies, and St. Vincent's and Norfolk Protestant hospitals, a musical program being rendered by them at each place, to the delight of the inmates. The singers were graciously received at each institution—between 6:15 p. m. and 8:15 p. m. There were vocal selections, with organ accompaniment, violin solos, and the distribution of flowers and Christmas cards. At the Ballentine Home the twenty-seven old ladies were attired in their best, and gave the party an old Virginia welcome.

St. Louis Church Makes Novel Gift.

Mrs. W. J. Loler of Hamilton Avenue Church, St. Louis, aided by the Men's Bible Class of that good church, made a splendid Christmas gift to the boys of the St. Louis institution, the Christian Orphans' Home. This gift consisted of eighty-five neat, durable and well made waists. No doubt added blessings will be called down upon the heads of these friends by the grateful prayers of these motherless, homeless boys whom they have thus befriended. Other beautiful gifts from St. Louis churches have been received and many churches throughout the brotherhood have sent Christmas donations to the various Homes of the National Benevolent Association. All offerings for this great work should be sent to the National Benevolent Association, 2955 N. Euclid Avenue, St. Louis, Mo.

J. S. Hughes Talks on "Revelation."

With some misgivings the Ministers' Conference of a certain Michigan town consented a month ago to permit Jasper S. Hughes to speak ten minutes at its meeting on the book of Revelation. When Mr. Hughes had finished the majority wished he could have talked an hour, states a local paper. In a few minutes, according to this publication, Mr. Hughes so impressed the conference with his simplicity of method and breadth of spirit that he will be invited to present his subject fully at a later meeting.

J. F. Findley Enters Evangelistic Field.

J. F. Findley, after spending a number of years in pastoral work, the last seven of which have been spent in Colorado, has decided to evangelize. During his two years' pastorate at Monte Vista, Colo., there have been 148 additions to the church and every department is well organized and in good progress. In addition to his pastorates, Mr. Findley conducted a number of meetings with marked success, the last of which was at Lamar, Colo., which resulted in 105 additions.

Disciples Fill Kansas City Pulpits.

Prof. J. G. McGavran, of the College of Missions, at Indianapolis, filled the pulpit at Budd Park, Kansas City, January 4: J. C. Todd, of Bloomington Bible chair, preached at Wabash Avenue; O. N. Roth, of Phillips University, at Jackson Avenue: J. A. MacDonald, editor of the Toronto Globe, at the Independence Boulevard Church: Bert Wilson, Layman's secretary, spoke at Liberty, Missouri; A. E. Cory, of the Men and Millions Movement, at First Church, Kansas City. All these men were attending the Student Volunteer Convention.

Pleasantville, Ia. Church Makes Strides.

With financial receipts 50 per cent above those of all previous years, number of persons added to membership 100 per cent over any recent year and 50 per cent increase in church membership, the Pleasantville, Ia., congregation and their pastor, W. B. Zimmerman certainly have reason to rejoice. For missions, $734.05 was expended; for evangelism, $790. There were 236 persons added to the membership, the total membership now being 664.

Jackson Boulevard Church, Chicago, Reports

Jackson Boulevard Church, Chicago, where Austin Hunter ministers with efficiency, does not require special evangelistic services to increase its membership. Every Sunday is an evangelistic campaign, as well as week days. During the past year 141 persons were added, and all ot these at regular service. Money raised during the year amounted to $11,210.48, the largest for several years. Last fall the long standing mortgage of several thousand dollars was cleared. Miss Ora Haight, of India, is supported by the C. W. B. M. of this church. Missions received $1,072 from Jackson Boulevard last year. The Sunday-school had an average attendance of 370, the Chinese school of 35.

J. D. Hull Leaves Metropolitan, Chicago.

J. D. Hull, who has been associated with C. R. Scoville in the Metropolitan Church, Chicago, since 1910, has resigned. With his brother, A. W. Hull, an experienced singer, Mr. Hull will enter the evangelistic field. J. D. Hull is a graduate of Bethany College, and while yet a young man has been seventeen years in the ministry. During that time he was three years principal of a normal and business college. During the three years of associate pastorate, Mr. Scoville reports, the Metropolitan Church has made some of its greatest achievements. He heartily commends the Hull brothers to churches desiring help.

Transylvania Drops Preparatory.

At a meeting of the Executive Committee of Transylvania University, held recently, the following resolution was adopted: "In view of the increasing number of efficient and satisfactory High schools in the State of Kentucky and the territory from which Transylvania University draws most of its students, and because of our desire to segregate our college students, thereby bringing our educational practice more in harmony with college ideals, therefore: BE IT RESOLVED, That after the present session, ending June 11, 1914, the Preparatory School of Transylvania University be discontinued." This does not mean that students whose entrance preparation is deficient may not receive the necessary instruction to fulfill the requirements, reports President R. H. Crossfield. Professor A. C. Kuykendall, former President of McLean College, will conduct a training school in Lexington, beginning next September, and an arrangement has been made whereby conditioned Transylvania students may take such courses as are necessary under him.

Bruce Brown to Leave Fullerton.

Bruce Brown is soon to leave Fullerton, Cal. Mr. Brown has been more than the pastor of a local church. He has been a community asset. Every good organization and institution has felt his helping hand under its burdens, reports a committee of the church. A right royal farewell service is being planned for the retiring pastor. It is to be a real community affair.

A New Evangelistic Team.

A new evangelistic team to work on sane lines is announced. John W. Marshall, of Chicago, and J. C. Mullins, of Carlisle, Indiana, have joined forces. Mr. Marshall is well and favorably known to a great part of the brotherhood. While it has been his privilege to see thousands brought to Christ under his preaching, he has never resorted to questionable methods in securing additions. His work is noted for its saneness of methods and permanency of results. He has, perhaps, had more recalls for meetings than any other one of our evangelists. J. C. Mullins is a fine chorus director and a singer of splendid persuasive power. After graduating from Texas Christian University, he traveled and sang second tenor in the famous Chicago Glee Club. Later he held pastorates in Oklahoma, Chicago and Indiana. For several years he has given special attention to the study of the modern Sunday school in all its psychologic, pedagogic and organic phases.

Macomb, Ill., Makes Good Start.

With ten additions, eighty dollars collection, and a wedding at the parsonage on Jan. 4, the Macomb, Ill., church, led by Allen T. Shaw, is starting off the new year well. Among those added to the membership were two professors of the State Normal at Macomb. The choir of this church is attracting attention by the splendid service it is giving under the leadership of Miss Lucile Wyne, of the Conservatory.

Wellington, Kan. Church Flourishes.

The Wellington, Kan. church, ministered to by O. L. Smith, spent $462.83 for evangelistic services during the past year; $1144.46 for improvements, $868.72 for missions. The C. W. B. M. has a living link missionary in V. C. Carpenter, whose field is Porto Rico. A present active membership of 425 is reported. Of the 121 additions of the year, 96 were the result of special evangelistic effort.

CAN'T IT BE HELPED?

John E. Gunckel, writing to the editor of The Conquest regarded the great work that he is doing as founder of the Newsboys' Association of Toledo, makes this interesting but rather startling statement:

"After working for nearly two years trying to get boys into the Sunday-schools, and having such wonderful success, I have another plan started to have one of my members in each of the Sunday-schools of Toledo, and make report to me each week. I find that the first reports, from the boys of the street —the raw material— are alike, in substance and effect: 'We find the Sunday-schools are not as pleasant as pool rooms and saloons. Some are so dark and dingy we couldn't see to read the hymns. Some are cold, smell musty and everything works mechanically," etc. Now there is some truth in these reports. Our Sunday-school rooms are not always as bright and cheerful as they should be. I have letters from nearly every state asking, 'How can we hold the boys of fifteen to twenty in the Sunday-school?'"

How is it in your Sunday-school? You would be interested in reading the account of Mr. Gunckel's work in The Conquest.

Franklin, Ind., Church Promoting Unity.

Last summer the congregation at Franklin, Ind., began a series of visits to the other churches of the town. The series ended with a delightful visit to the Methodist church, where W. J. Wright, pastor at Franklin, reports they were joyously received. A splendid spirit of fellowship prevails, Mr. Wright states, instead of the old one of strife and alienation brought on long ago by a meeting in which a negative message predominated. The feeling now is that though meeting in different parts of the town, the Christian forces of the town are all one. The church and Sunday-school at Franklin rendered splendid service to the poor at Christmas. The aim was to provide for every needy family in the town. The Home Department of the Sunday-school alone sent out twenty-two baskets of provisions and other good things to those less fortunate than themselves. Thus the church enters slowly upon its social service as well as its ministry to the diseased soul.

Central, Terre Haute, In Great Work.

George Darsie, pastor of Central, Terre Haute, is evidently a man of energy. Besides the routine work of a minister, which included for Mr. Darsie 1,000 pastoral calls and seventy-five special sermons and addresses, the Terre Haute minister prepared fourteen special articles, edited forty-eight copies of the church weekly, and superintended a school of 640 average attendance. The reports show 155 added to the membership; church enrollment, 1,260; Sunday-school enrollment, 1,336; total raised by school, $3,089.04, two-thirds of this going to missions, benevolences and the church debt; total receipts from all sources, $15,650.39. The minister is assisted in his work by Miss Leah McCune, who is the paid secretary of the church, and by Miss Beatrice Talbott, the paid secretary of the Sunday-school. These secretaries work under the direction of Mr. Darsie. They have an office in the church where they keep all records and do the detail work of the congregation and Sunday-school. They are introducing business methods and adding greatly to the efficiency of both the Sunday-school and the church. Miss McCune has been in the work since the opening of the office more than one year ago. Miss Talbott began her work last June. (Moral to church boards: Be businesslike, and give your hard-worked minister an assistant. Ed.)

Atlanta, Ill. Entertains Dr. Dye.

The annual meeting of the Atlanta, Ill., church could not have been a cut and dried affair; for Dr. Royal J. Dye was present with his great message. The annual report of this church presents the following facts and figures: Present resident membership, 336; 69 added during the year; Sunday-school enrollment, 438, of these, 175 being enrolled during the year; the Sunday-school has attained "front rank;" the missionary society has a membership of 116; the Aid society and sewing circle raised $2,500 during the past year and a half for the new church; about $13,000 was paid on the new church, with pledges to more than cover the expense; given to missions, $450.

J. H. O. Smith Begins Work.

J. H. O. Smith in his opening remarks to his new congregation at Little Rock, Ark., among other things, said:

"Come to church yourselves and ask others to come. My business is to preach. If one of you is sick, if one of you is in trouble, if one of you is in distress, come to me. I pledge you that I will stand with you as a friend. But I will not go out on social visits or calls. I will not go to a member of the congregation and say: 'How are you today?'" here Doctor Smith lowered his voice in shrill mimicry. "And 'How are you today, brother?' I will not be that kind of a minister. My business is to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ and this will I do."

As mentioned in a recent issue of this paper. Mr. Smith has begun union activities in Little Rock.

During 1913 111 persons were added to the church membership, at Central, Youngstown, O., where W. R. Ryan ministers; making the total membership nearly 1,100. Amount raised for all purposes, including cash received for building fund, was $16,340.72. Of this amount more than $2,000 was for missions. This congregation supports W. H. Erskine in Osaka, Japan. All bills are paid and a balance in treasury of $137.69. During the last quarter of the year the Sunday-school had an average attendance of 700. The C. W. B. M. raised $550. Mr. Ryan is in the fourth year of his pastorate.

The January program of the National Men's Movement discusses the financial policy of the local church, and should be the subject of sane attention of the men of thousands of our churches. These programs are published each month in the weekly papers, The Front Rank and The Conquest, and copies of the calender of programs for the year may be had upon application to the Brotherhood Office, Kansas City, Mo.

Frederick F. Grim, for a number of years secretary of The New Mexico-West Texas Christian Missionary Society, has accepted the position of assistant principal of Beckley Institute and pastor of the church at Beckley, W. Va. The Institute is one of the mountain schools of the C. W. B. M. Raymond A. Smith, formerly of Indianapolis, is the principal of this school.

Talcott Williams, known around the world by reason of his school of journalism in New York, says the way to obtain more space for religious affairs in the newspapers is to make the cities cleaner so that much that is bad will not happen and there will be more space for the good things to be published. He was speaking to the laymen when he said this.

The congregation of First Church, Youngstown, Ohio, made its pastor, Levi G. Batman, a Christmas present in the form of an increase in salary of $500 per year. It also voted to continue the pastor's secretary, Miss Edith Thorne, and to place her salary on the regular budget. Mr. Batman has been with the First Church for four years and a half.

Dr. E. S. Ames, of the Hyde Park, Chicago, church, recently preached on "The Church As a Home," and at the close of the service thirty-five came forward to receive a welcome and be introduced to the congregation. It was a beautiful service in every way. Additions continue to come every Sunday.

The annual report of Third Church, Danville, Illinois, wherein labors James A. Barnett, will show the greatest year in history of that congregation. Practically all bills are paid together with $1,500 of previous indebtedness and $700 paid into the missionary treasury of the church. This is a most happy showing.

A country parson who is making good is the original Nelson H. Trimble. Mr. Nelson is editor and chief pilot of a modest bimonthly newsletter to the members of his several country flocks. A recent number gives almost the entire space to the "Farmer's week' 'at the great state university, at Columbia.

The Local Brotherhood cards for 1914, issued by the National Brotherhood Movement, Kansas City, are now ready and may be secured upon application to E. E. Elliott, the National secretary, R. A. Long Bldg. These cards are models of the printer's art and the men of our churches should carry them increasingly.

Dr. W. E. Garrison, president of the Claremont School for Boys, in California, has been secured as superintendent of religious education in the Claremont church. With a Sunday-school averaging close to 600 per week in attendance and a church booming in every way, he ought to find enough to do.

A letter from a Disciple layman who is a member of a Congregational church in Wisconsin says that there is some feeling among certain Congregationalists regarding the way in which all the best Congregational pulpits in the state are being filled by Disciples as fast as they become vacant.

Frank L. Bowen, city evangelist of Kansas City, is holding a week's meeting at the Jackson Avenue Church, beginning January 11. This is the old home church of Mr. Bowen. He preached for this church in its mission stages for thirteen years, leaving to take up the work of city evangelist.

Fillmore Brothers, publishers, of Cincinnati, have recently issued a neat song book for men, entitled "Quartettes and Choruses," The book is most tastily gotten up and contains 221 numbers, many of the old, and some of the newer hymns with masculine arrangement.

E. L. Powell, of First Church, Louisville, will serve as university preacher for the University of Chicago the week of February 8-15. He will also deliver an address before the Chicago Y. M. C. A. on the afternoon of Feb. 8, and at the Sunday Evening Club, Feb. 15.

A feature of the Students' Convention at Kansas City was a conference of editors of religious newspapers regarding the missionary propaganda. The Disciples were ably represented by J. H. Garrison, editor emeritus of the Christian Evangelist.

W. J. Minges and Company are starting a meeting at Harrisburg, Pa., this week, after a few days spent with home folks during the holidays. Mr. Minges was an interested spectator at the Student Volunteer Conference at Kansas City.

John H. Booth, secretary of the Board of Church Extension, is moving to Kansas City from Des Moines where his family has been for a year while he has been actively in the field for the work of church extension. Youngstown, O., Central Reports.

The history of our work in Illinois, which N. S. Haynes has been preparing, is soon to appear. Mr. Haynes has spared no pains and effort to make this one of the most complete documents in our permanent archives.

Rumor has it that First Church, Springfield, Illinois, whose pastor for so long has gone to California to work and live, is making overtures to Finis Idleman, of Des Moines, Central.

O. F. Jordan has resigned as secretary of the Chicago City Missionary Society after a service of five years. Mr. Jordan will devote all his time to his work at the Evanston Church.

The new addition to the First Church, Kansas City, is progressing toward completion, but it will be springtime before the building is ready for occupancy.

A devoted sister sending $50 to support her own native evangelist in Africa, says: "I have earned this money myself by canvassing guaranteed stockings, baking bread, keeping roomers and institute boarders, and in various other ways. I hope each dollar will mean a saved soul in Africa."

W. Remfry Hunt writes: "The six hundred disciples in the Chuchow district churches are having vividly brought to their remembrance the conditions that existed in the early days of Christianity in the Roman Empire. The gospel here is doing a full orbed work. It touches the Christians in their relations and duties as members of civil society, and as to their whole conduct toward the heathen around. The street cleaning, the morals of the market, the beneficent officers of the Red Cross, the giving of the city children a park for playground, the instituting of a "Good Citizens League" and the fostering of road building, these and other practical and common sense ideas and plans of our Central Christian Church in Chuchow are some of the achievements of the Christ in the once hostile. heathen and filthy town we entered and claimed by faith for our Lord some twenty-five years since."

The missionaries at Manila, P. I., have bought a splendid property for a Christian Hospital, at a cost of $7,000. It is located on Taft Ave. It is an ideal location. The missionaries have been offered $2,000 more than the cost price for the property.

SOME RESOLUTIONS

Adopted by the Official Board of First Christian Church, Portland, Ore.

Whereas, our beloved pastor, W. F. Reagor, because of continued ill health, has felt constrained to temporarily retire from active service in the ministry of the gospel and to that end has tendered his resignation as pastor of this church effective at the pleasure of the offical board:

Whereas, Mr. Reagor came to us nearly five years ago, a man of splendid physique, a man of ripe scholarship, a pulpit orator of extraordinary ability, a man thoroughly equipped for his chosen life work, that of preaching the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and above all, a man filled with the love of our master for his fellow men:

Whereas, during his entire pastorate here, he has labored faithfully and unceasingly in the upbuilding of the cause of Christ in both this church and city and has broken in health while giving to that service the best years of his life:

Now therefore, Be It Resolved that the elders and deacons of the First Christian Church of Portland, Ore., in regular session as the offical board of said church, unqualifiedly endorse the labors of Brother Reagor during an unbroken period of nearly five years, as those of a capable, conscientious Christian leader who has ever striven to increase the power and influence of the Gospel of Jesus Christ and who has faithfully ministered during all that time to the people under his charge.

Be It Further Resolved, that it is with deep regret we recognize the necessity of a complete rest for him for an indefinite period in order that he be restored to his accustomed physical health, and because of that necessity, we accept his resignation as pastor of this church.

Be It Further Resolved, that the resignation take effect as of March 1, 1914, the date when he will have completed his full five years' ministry with this congregation.

Be It Further Resolved, that he be relieved from all responsibility in connection with the church work, January 1, 1914, and that he be given a leave of absence during the months of January and February, 1914, on full pay.

NOTE. The above resolution was passed by unanimous vote at the regular monthly meeting of the board of the First Church, Portland, held at the church, Monday evening, December 1, 1913.

SOME CONVENTION SUGGESTIONS

BY GRAHAM FRANK.

I have recently attended the Seventh International Convention of the Student Volunteer Movement for Foreign Missions, in Kansas City. It is thought by many that this is the most important missionary gathering in the world. It is one of the most unique, and the most religious convention I have ever attended. I enjoyed it, was profoundly moved by it, and as I studied it, I decided to write of some features of it in the hope that those who plan our conventions and those who attend them may be profited by these suggestions.

There was no address of welcome. Mr. Mott, the chairman, opened the Convention with a short address setting forth the purpose that had brought the convention together, and we were at once launched into the deep things of the meeting. This grows out of the fact that the Convention is not regarded in any sense as a local matter. All of the management of the Convention is in the hands of the officers of the Convention itself. The city where it is held furnishes the place of meeting and co-operates in furnishing homes for the delegates, but the Convention is altogether set up and carried forward by its officers. Hence it lives its own life. It is my judgment that our Conventions should be thus planned and carried through.

There was no applause. There were frequent provocations for it, but no one applauded. Imagine Mr. Bryan speaking to five thousand college students, and you have the "ne plus ultra" in applause-provoking situations! Yet there was no applause. The influence of suppressed emotion was more powerful than any noisy expression of it could possibly have been. Much time was saved, and the quietude of a religious assembly was preserved.

The exhibits were closed during all sessions of the Convention. These missionary exhibits were the most extensive and interesting I have ever seen. But they were not kept open in competition with the Convention itself. Why should we spend a year and much money in preparing for a convention and then have the missionary, educational and publishing-house exhibits kept open during the sessions?

The sessions were not prolonged to the exhaustion of those who attended them. Prof. Shailer Mathews, Dr. J. A. MacDonald, and Mr. Bryan all spoke on Saturday evening, cards were distributed for subscriptions to the Convention report, and for the morning watch, four hymns were sung, prayer was offered, announcements were made, and the entire session was only two hours long. The morning sessions began at 9:15 and closed at 11:45. They never closed later than that hour and frequently a few minutes ahead of time. The afternoon sessions were sectional. You could attend every session and keep fresh and have mind and heart ready. Do we not lose far more than we gain by crowding our Conventions beyond the limits of human endurance?

No one was permitted to enter or leave during any address. There were frequently as many as eight thousand present, yet it was as quiet as a prayer-meeting. There was no moving about the hall, no coming and going. Even the secretaries, the ushers and the preachers kept quiet!

There was much prayer. The most impressive hour of each day was the closing period of the morning session—the period of united intercession. With every head bowed, someone led by saying "now let us pray for China," "now for the islands," and thus on until the world was girdled with prayer. These were the holy hours. May God soon lead us to have many such hours in our great gatherings.

In introducing the speakers the emphasis was always placed on the theme and never on the speaker. The themes were vital, religious, and were regarded as far more important than those who spoke on them.

The Convention was a unit. Its power would have been much lessened, had it been a procession of conventions instead of the one, growing, united Convention that it was. If we might have just one Convention like this and have all our missionary organizations bring their reports and plans before it, and have the representatives of the churches prayerfully hear these reports and prayerfully consider these plans, who can doubt that it would be a great gain? Those who attended this Convention in Kansas City, did not just happen to be there. They were selected and sent. They came with a feeling of responsibility. So may it come to be with us. Not to set some ecclesiastical machinery in motion, not to favor some scheme, but to come from our churches—selected and sent by them—to sit reverently, prayerfully, quietly together as brethren to hear what the servants of the churches have done through the missionary organizations and to plan for the further extension of the kingdom, may these be our aims, and may the Father quiet our hearts and restore to us that love of each other which will make it possible for us to do these things.

As I sat through this truly wonderful Convention in Kansas City, my heart literally ached with longing for such a Convention in Atlanta. Just one such Convention would be worth more to us than all the discussions of it that our wisest and most Christian men could furnish our papers in a millennium! May we set our hearts to the purpose of having such a Convention!

AN APPEAL TO THE CHICAGO PUBLIC.

More persons are suffering the sting of poverty this winter than ever before, according to reports of the United Charities of Chicago. During the fiscal year ending Oct. 1, 1913, the United Charities befriended one out of every thirty-two persons living in Chicago, while only one person out of every three-hundred and twelve contributed to the support of the work. An appeal to the public for enlarging funds was issued by the directors of the United Charities.

The appeal reads:

TO THE PUBLIC OF CHICAGO

Shall the United Charities continue to answer all the appeals coming from the poor, sick and unfortunate, which are increasing daily in alarming proportions? For fifty-seven years the United Charities, and the societies it has succeeded, has conducted its work for Chicago's poor in an efficient and honorable manner through the generosity of the public. The United Charities belongs to the public and it is merely its instrument for carrying out man's duty towards his neighbor.

The demand this year is unusual and beyond any experience the Society has ever had. The increase is from 28 to 400 per cent in various departments of our work. This requires an increase in relief disbursements. We have not increased the number of our employes, but we have been working them almost to the breaking point in order to meet the situation. There has been an increase in contributions within the last six weeks, for which we are thankful but at least $148,000 additional is needed if we are to meet the situation in full.

Although the weather has not been severe, it is well known that there are more people out of employment than for years past. Illness, intemperance, discouragement and family desertions are its aftermath. The health department bulletins already show there is more sickness than for a number of years. We know that most of this is in the homes of the poor. A large portion of the unemployed are small wage earners and married men with families. Thousands of touching appeals covering pathetic human tragedies are coming to us! Shall we let them go unanswered?

If you, who are employed and comfortable, do not feel our full work should be carried on, we shall have to curtail it. We ask an immediate response from every citizen able to give assistance.

Just Off the Press!

The Mid-Week Service

By Silas Jones.

TOPIC FOR JANUARY 21.

The Church and Social Service. Jas. 2:14-17.

Certain enemies of the church are fond of saying that it is much more interested in the life that is to come than in the life that now is. These enemies are not all persons whose testimony is unbiassed; they are often moved by ignorance and malice. But when devoted sons of the church offer the same criticism, we may reasonably accept it as true in part. Any institution that asks the support of hard working men and women must give them in return something for the life that now is. But before we proceed to form a program of social service for the church we ought to know a great deal about the present needs of the world. It is still true, as it has always been, that man does not live by bread alone.

THE END TO BE SOUGHT.

If there has lived in recent years a man who had a right to speak on the mission of the church, that man was the late Canon Barnett. He saw before many others saw it the necessity of new kinds of church activity, and he acted according to his vision. He states his object thus: "Our object is to help our neighbor to live the perfect life. It is not enough to make him profess our belief, to come to church or to be a communicant, it is not enough even if we make him turn from drunkenness or sloth and become sober and active; it is not enough to give him assurance of Heaven hereafter. It is his whole character we want to mold; we would open his mind to see meaning in silence and noise, in nature and in art, so that he might have interest in things; we would make him conscious of his power, conscious that everything is possible to noble effort, so that he might yoke himself to noble purpose; we would help him to hear the voice of God telling of the advance of right, the strength of good, the glory of the future, so that he might have joy and rest."

RESULTS.

Canon Barnett has a word to those of us who will not work unless results come promptly. He realized that the spiritual life is of slow growth and that the good we do is not always seen by us. "In aiming at such an end, there must be much done from which no results can be visible. I would urge you not to look for results. Doing so, efforts will be diverted from the best to the expedient, and means will be used which are of the world and not of God. It is in answer to this demand for results that excitement and sensation have now so large a part in religious and philanthropic work. The means which bring large numbers and rapid conversions can hardly be means of forming men's character: we want to mold; we would open his life. It is not by appeals to hope or fear, it is not by excitement that men will quietly grow in knowledge, or gain the power of separating the true from the false; the ugly from the beautiful.

THE CHURCH AS THE GOOD SAMARITAN.

It has been the work of the church to teach the world to educate the young and to relieve the distressed. The church established schools. When the state was ready, it took upon itself the responsibility of providing schools for the children of all the people. The state is now accepting its responsibility for the dependent classes. It is the business of the church to go to the neglected man and care for him as best it can until the world learns its duty. When it ceases to run counter to race prejudice and class pride, that it may show love to the unfortunate, it ceases to have the spirit of its Master. At the present day it is the obligation of the church to preach and practice the social gospel.

Luke 11:1-13. Memory Verses, 9, 10.

Golden Text.—Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you.—Luke 11:9

American Standard Bible.
Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons.
(Used by permission.)

(1) And it came to pass, as he was praying in a certain place, that when he ceased, one of his disciples said unto him, Lord, teach us to pray, even as John also taught his disciples. (2) And he said unto them, When ye pray, say, Father, Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. (3) Give us day by day our daily bread. (4) And forgive us our sins; for we ourselves also forgive every one that is indebted to us. And bring us not into temptation.

(5) And he said unto them, Which of you shall have a friend, and shall go unto him at midnight, and say to him, Friend, lend me three loaves; (6) for a friend of mine is come to me from a journey, and I have nothing to set before him: (7) and he from within shall answer and say, Trouble me not: the door is now shut, and my children are with me in bed: I cannot rise and give thee? (8) I say unto you, Though he will not rise and give him because he is his friend, yet because of his importunity he will arise and give him as many as he needeth. (9) And I say unto you, Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you. (10) For every one that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened. (11) And of which of you that is a father shall his son ask a loaf, and he give him a stone? or a fish, and he for a fish give him a serpent? (12) Or if he shall ask an egg, will he give him a scorpion? (13) If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him?

Verse by Verse.

v. 1. As John also taught: Perhaps John taught his disciples definite forms of prayer, as did the rabbis.

v. 2. The prayer form here given is different from that in Mt. 6. How different? Hallowed: To be reverenced.

v. 3. Our daily bread: In the Greek, "our bread for the coming day."

v. 4. Bring us not into temptation: Authorized version says "lead." Is there a distinction?

v. 5. At midnight: Night travel is not unusual in the East.

v. 7. Trouble me not: This vexation is natural with man, but would be unnatural with God.

v. 8. Importunity: Greek, "shamelessness."

v. 9. Ask, and it shall be given, etc.: These words reveal the attitude of the Father, different from that of a man who gives because he can't help it.

v. 11. Shall his son ask a loaf, and he give him a stone: These were similar in appearance. So also the fish and serpent.

v. 12. Give the Holy Spirit: Which is the perfect gift.

At the Heart of the Lesson.

By A. Z. Conrad.

Resource measures the possibility of progress. The glory of Christianity is its relation to an inexhaustible treasury. Whatever is necessary is available. No one fails in spiritual undertakings because of a lack of capital. All the wealth of the Infinite is offered and the true Christian has the key. Prayer leads to the realms of mystery and might. Prayer definitely connects two worlds. A universal need leads to universal petition. There is no place, no race, no class where prayer is not. Religious intuition, an immediate knowledge of God leads to petition. A consciousness of the Infinite has led people everywhere to desire communication and co-operation. Both aspiration and action call for the supernatural. Natural ability is not commensurate with our duties and opportunities. Purpose demands partnership. Alone and unaided we are baffled and beaten. Our very longings mock us until we find God. Our ideals crush us because they are so far beyond us in demand. Then we breathe a cry for enablement. We feel a desire to know what no man can teach us. We must break with our limitations in some way or beat our lives out against them. We desire to see beyond, to reach beyond, and to live beyond, that which is physically visible and tangible.

LIFE'S LARGEST LESSON.

The supreme lesson of life is the prayer-lesson. Whoever has learned to pray has the key both to knowledge and power. To have learned the secret of effective petition is to have made available the wisdom and the power of God. Prayer softens and beautifies the wildest and most violent nature. It cuts the diamond so that the imprisoned sunlight pours forth. It is cultural and soul refining. It develops courage and in turn requires caution. It intensifies zeal, awakens holy purpose. It produces an atmosphere favorable to the growth of grace in the heart's garden. We are brought into saving and sanctifying relations with God by petition. We become acquainted with the very attributes of deity which draw the heart to him when we really pray. His sympathy, his compassion, his love, his power may only be understood by the soul that supplicates.

REALITY LARGER THAN RITUAL.

The answer of Jesus to the request, "Lord, teach us to pray," was an abbreviated form of "The Lord's Prayer." He had before presented it as a model. Without doubt many of the important teachings of Jesus Christ were repeatedly given at various periods of his ministry. Jesus did not present a form or model of prayer intended to be slavishly followed. It is more like the outline sketch of the artist to be filled in in detail. It is simply a working model. It is doubtful whether our Lord regarded it in any sense as ritualistic. Indeed the illustrative incidents he related indicate that what he designed was to reveal the true attitude of mind and heart when addressing God. The elements of spontaneity and inspiration are of the greatest importance and a slavish adherence to any ritualistic form kills both. Utterance from the tongue outward, however perfectly phrased, is not real prayer. Ten thousand times ten thousand are the varying conditions and varying needs of the human heart. Prayer must meet them all. Capacity for God is largely determined by the expression of heart-hunger and soul need in prayer. The larger life is possible only to one who is in communication with God. Superman is realized only through those inter-relations between man and God developed through petition. No formulary can be as large as the reality.

BEAUTY AND POWER.

The first word of the prayer lesson is "Father." Method of address and attitude are much. No other name of God is so comprehensive and inclusive and at the same time so affectional. Immediately we are placed in the relations of kindly fellowship. The thought of personal interest and devotion and willingness to bless, all these are involved in the name, "Father." It was not a new term. Old Testament revelation abounds in the thought of the fatherhood of God. There is a certainty of a fatherly interest in his own children which increases the fervency of petition and the joy of communion. If there be fatherhood then there must be brotherhood. The children of a common father are brothers. The true basis of the brotherhood is found in the prayer taught by Jesus. "Hallowed be thy name." To hallow is to revere as holy. The request is for such a reverential revelation as shall make impossible an unworthy use of any name that designates God. No thoughtless or superficial employment of the holy name is to be indulged in. It not only opposes the habit of profanity but pleads for such a conscious identification of the name of God with his holy personality that misuse of the holy name will be impossible.

THE RULE OF RIGHTEOUSNESS.

"Thy kingdom come." This prayer sees in glad vision the day when God will be recognized as the supreme ruler of the world. The underlords will cease to tyrannize. Selfish sovereignty will give place to benevolent imperialism. Such a desire carries with it the will to realize the kingdom. Nothing short of soul enlistment to the service of the Eternal King can give reality to the prayer, or point to the program. Definitely connected with this petition is the further one, "Thy will be done." This is the all comprehensive appeal. It means a surrendered life. It calls for a willing co-operation with God It carries with it personal obedience to every heavenly vision. The first place to realize the kingdom is in the individual heart.

BOUNDLESS BEAUTY.

"Give us this day our daily bread." We have here a two fold request. It seeks a common supply for a common need. Bread stands for the simple necessities of life. Jesus authorized no appeal for luxury. There is an interesting feature in this petition. The word, "Epiousios," which is translated, "daily," is found nowhere else in all Greek literature, but only in connection with the Lord's prayer. The Patristic Expositors and some modern scholars like Dean Plumptre interpret it to mean, "That which is spiritual," "the super substantial." In any case it suggests that the source of all bounty is God. It pleads for reënforcement.

PARDON AND POWER.

"Forgive us our sins." Nowhere did Jesus deal lightly with sin. In this universal petition he recognized a universal need. Sin is not dealt with as mere misfortune. It is not called "error." It is something to be abhorred and to be eliminated. It is a wickedness to be repented of. It is a violation of or failure to conform to God's holy law. It must be forgiven or prove fatal. Forgiveness is not that cheap easy thing which many people think it is. It is a tremendously costly process. God made the provision by atonement whereby he might exercise forgiveness and yet not destroy goodness. God's attitude is one of continuous forgiveness, but to make it effective it must have response in the human heart. The attitude of the physician toward the patient is health, but unless there is a response to treatment health is not secured. Vaccination does not avail anything unless it "takes." Neither does forgiveness. Hence we find this complemental thought in this petition, "Forgive us our sins, for we ourselves also forgive everyone that is indebted to us." The prayer is futile unless the attitude of the petitioner is one kindred to the very thing which he desires, namely, forgiveness. This is true of all prayer. It involves a state of mind and heart correspondent with the thing desired, or prayed for. "And bring us not into temptation." It is a prayer for such guidance as shall lead us to avoid solicitations to evil which we would not naturally be able to resist.

PERSISTENT IN PETITION.

There is great danger of misinterpretation of the illustrative lesson Jesus used. He pictures to us the unfriendly friend who is appealed to at midnight for assistance. "Friend, lend me three loaves." The man appealed to makes his friendship merely a matter of convenience. It is not convenient for him at this hour for him to arise and respond to the request. He asked to be let alone. Through persistence and importunity the petitioner prevails and his request is answered. The importance of persistence and importunity in prayer is what is taught. It is not designed to represent God as indifferent to our requests or as negligent of our needs. This side of the matter is not touched at all. Jesus is presenting the necessity of praying through. The reasonableness of this is manifest. It is by persistent appeal that we come into that attitude of mind and heart which makes it possible for God to grant our request. Unyieldingly and unremittingly we are to appeal for the things we need, or ought to have, until God reveals to us the fact that some other course is wiser. "Ask and it shall be given to you, seek and ye shall find, knock and it shall be open unto you." To deny the efficiency of prayer as a procuring cause is to flatly contradict the most direct and definite utterance Jesus ever made regarding prayer.

BY ARTHUR GORDON.

Religion in Social Action. By Graham Taylor. There are some of its citizens of whom Chicago is very proud, and in this list Graham Taylor has a conspicuous place. He was one of the pioneers in the study of sociological questions, and among the first to organize a course of study in this field, adapted to the needs of theological students. With that department at the Chicago Theological Seminary he has been identified through all the years of his professional life. Yet he was early convinced that there was need of a laboratory for the closer study of the problem of human betterment. This idea, joined with the desire to contribute directly to the creation of a new civic life in some neglected but promising part of the city, led to the establishment of Chicago Commons, a social settlement which has exerted a profound influence on the neighborhood, and shares with Hull House, the University of Chicago Settlement and other similar institutions the burden and the glory of much of Chicago's civic betterment.

No man has given more freely of his time and strength for the public good. He was an efficient member of the Vice Commission, which presented the most exhaustive and convincing study ever made of the social evil in a great city, and was one of the most earnest advocates of the policy which finally won completely unanimous approval in the Commission—that of persistent repression of commercialized vice with the object of securing its complete destruction.

His service on the commissions which brought about wholesome legislation in behalf of the protection of workers from dangerous machinery and unsanitary conditions was notable and in many other ways Prof. Taylor's influence has been used for good.

No one knows better than he the strength of the forces working in the interest of social demoralization and civic ruin. Yet the dominant note of this book is one of unyielding, though not unreasoning, optimism. And the secret of that optimism is first the healthy, hopeful feeling that much of the lost motion, friction and suffering of the present industrial order is unnecessary and remediable. As Miss Jane Addams remarks in her admirable "Introduction" to the volume, "Many a person whose attention is fixed and whose emotions are absorbed by the vast and stupid atrocities of contemporary life—its aimless waste, its meaningless labor, its needless suffering—finds his only relief from the abiding horror over the existence of such things in the certain conviction that they are not inevitable."

Dr. Taylor has that faith but there is a much deeper note of confidence in the book, and that is the religious conviction everywhere revealed, that God is working out, through human instruments, a new social order wherein dwells righteousness, and that the church, silent as it is, and imperfect, is the best of the means for the realization of that ideal. He rightly puts the religious, basic facts of life in the foreground, and then proceeds to consider the present situation in the light of those facts.

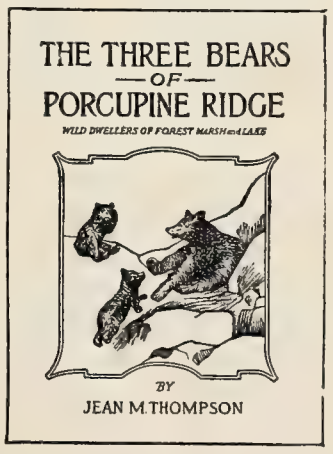
The chapter headings will show this development of the theme: "Life and Religion," "Personality," "Effective Service," "Changing Conditions," "Human Relationships," "The Family," "Neighborship," "Industry and Religion," "Organized Industry," "City and Church," and "Church and Community."

His authorities, too, are significant. He knows the statistics and the literature of the subject, but his quotations are mostly from the big human masters of thought who have supplied the literature of power—John Bunyan, John Ruskin, Robert Louis Stevenson, Phillips Brooks, De Tocqueville, Horace Mann, Horace Bushnell, Augustine, Paul and the Christ.

I like this book. It helps one to understand why Graham Taylor is so loved and trusted and believed in by a multitude of people up and down the land. It is because of his faith in God and in men, and his love for both, his tireless enthusiasm for the causes he has elected to serve, and his confidence that the City of God is being built today, and that everyone may share in the big adventure.

Not the least of the values of the book is the well-selected bibliography, classified according to the contents of the chapters. (Dodd, Mead & Co., $1.25, net.)

Misery and its Causes. By Edward T. Devine. The author of this book is one of that growing class that combines academic position and competence with practical effort for social betterment. He is Professor of Social Economy in Columbia University, General Secretary of the Charity Organization Society of New York, and editor of "The Survey." Like Professor Graham Taylor, he is both a student and a worker. The book was first published in 1909, but so useful has it been that it is now republished in more accessible form. In six pregnant chapters Prof. Devine discusses some of the burning phases of social unrest and discontent. He emphatically dissents from the easy and frequent dictum that poverty is usually the result of vice. He says, "The question which I raise is whether the wretched poor, the poor who suffer in their poverty, are poor because they are shiftless, because they are undisciplined, because they drink, because they steal, because they have superfluous children, because of personal depravity, personal inclination and natural preference, or whether they are shiftless and undisciplined and drink and steal, and are unable to care for their too numerous children because our social institutions and economic arrangements are at fault." Very illuminating, in this first chapter on "Poverty and Maladjustment" is the discussion of suicides, convicted criminals, the courtezans, and the dependents. Not less valuable are the following chapters on "Out of Health," "Out of Work," "Out of Friends." Very dramatic and informing are some of the situations described. In the final chapters on "The Adverse Conditions," and "The Justice and Prosperity of the Future," the author gives ample statement of his gospel of social sympathy and effective uplift. (Macmillan, 50 cents, net.)



The Three Bears of Porcupine Ridge. By Jean M. Thompson. A nature book of just the sort to please and instruct children. It is not a story, but a series of studies of the dwellers in forest, marsh and lake, written in untechnical and attractive style, with attention both to fact and form. Such chapters as "The Three Bears," "Tracked by a Catamount," "The Last Wolf of the Pack," and "The Keeper of Tamarack Ridge" are just what a boy would delight to read. (Wilde, $1.00, net.)

LITERARY NOTES.

"I think," says Jacob Riis of Theodore Roosevelt's recently published Autobiography, "that few of the great things Colonel Roosevelt has done for our people are as excellent as the giving us this story of his splendid stirring life that sounds a call to arms in the fight for better citizenship in the better day he has done so much to bring on. No man can read the volume without feeling that it is up to him to go out to make that day come and come quickly."

The demand for Rabindranath Tagore's books is still on the increase. Hardly had the latest supply of Gitanjali been received before it was all sold and the "stock out" sign displayed once more. Sadhana, The Gardener and The Crescent Moon have all had to be reprinted this last week.

The twelfth and thirteenth parts of Assyrian and Babylonian Letters, edited by Professor Robert Francis Harper, of the Department of the Semitic Languages and Literatures in the University of Chicago, have just been issued by the University of Chicago Press, and represent Professor Harper's recent work in the Department of Egyptian and Assyrian Antiquities of the British Museum.

"Othello" has been Japaned and is a great work, according to A. H. Exner in his recent book "Japan as I Saw It." (Stokes.) The scene of the play is moved from Venice to Formosa to gain local color. The Moor is Governor of Fai-Wan on Formosa, by name Muro; the Doge is Prime Minister of Japan, by name Marquis Uyemish; Desdemona is called Fomone; Iago, Lieut. Sya Goyo; Cassio, Major Katsu Toshio; Brabantio, Count Fura; and Bianca the Geisha Biaki.

Dr. Milo Milton Quaife, the author of Chicago and the Old Northwest, 1673-1835, which has just been issued by the University of Chicago Press, received his Doctor's degree from the University in 1908, after two years of study in his special field of history. His new volume on the beginnings of Chicago has already attracted wide attention and discussion, and is generally received as the first authoritative history of early Chicago and the development of frontier life in the Old Northwest. Important new documents, as the basis of the history, has been brought to light, and much of the author's narrative has almost a dramatic interest.

Professor Abel Lefranc, Professor in the College de France and Director in the Ecole pratique des hautes etudes (Sorbonne), who has recently been appointed by the French government as Exchange Professor in the University of Chicago, will give two courses at the University during the Winter Quarter. The first course, "Explication de Rabelais," will be for graduate students only, but the second, "Moliere et les grandes questions de son temps," will be open to the public. Professor Lefranc will lecture twice a week during the quarter.

Four lectures on the "Aspects of Islamism" will be delivered at the University near the end of the Winter Quarter by the professor of Arabic at the University of Leiden, Dr. Christian Snoucke Hurgronje. During a year's leave of absence from his work as lecturer on Mohammedan Law at the University of Leiden Dr. Hurgronje spent most of his time in the city of Mecca itself—the only European to spend an extended period of time in the Holy City of Islam. The result of his studies he published in a standard work on the subject "Mekka." At present Dr. Hurgronje is not only professor of the Arabic Language and of Islam at the University of Leiden, but also adviser to the Ministry on Colonial Affairs. His lectures at the University of Chicago will be on the following subjects: "Mohammed; Past and Present Views of His Life and Work," "Features Common to Mohammedanism and Modern Thought," "Features in Mohammedanism Opposed to Modern Thought," and "Possibilities of an Understanding."

Peter Clark Macfarlane has written one of the best articles he has to his record on the personality and work of Winston Churchill. The article appears in last week's Collier's.

THE CONQUEST CONQUERS!

Enthusiastic Words from Many Leaders Regarding Our New Weekly for Adults and Young People

Rev. Claude E. Hill, National C. E. Secretary—"This paper ought to have a wide circulation among the young people of our churches. I like, especially, your treatment of the Endeavor Topic. I certainly wish the paper abundant success."

Dr. J. H. Garrison, Editor-Emeritus Christian Evangelist—"I have examined The Conquest with care and with pleasure. If you can maintain the high ideal which is so well realized in your first issue, you will be making a valuable contribution to our Sunday school literature and to the religious training of the young."

Rev. J. H. Goldner, Euclid Ave. Church, Cleveland—"I like The Conquest immensely. The treatment of the Sunday school lesson, C. E. and midweek prayer-meeting topics is fresh and satisfying. In addition there is an abundance of readable and informing matter of a high order. The paper merits a hearty reception."

Rev. H. D. C. Maclachlan, Seventh Street, Richmond, Va.—"I am very much pleased with The Conquest. It is a good augury for the success of the Sunday school and the Disciples Publication Society that you are putting out such a publication."

W. O. Rogers, of the Sunday School Times Staff—"I have examined the copy of your new paper, The Conquest, with great interest. It looks interesting, which is the first requisite. Then it is interesting, which is the second. It has a fine tone. I predict for it a real success."

Dr. Loa E. Scott, Author of "The Life of Jesus"—"The Conquest is indeed a credit to the Disciples Publication Society. There is need among us for just such a paper, one that takes a broad outlook upon the world and upon the problems of the church and Sunday school."

Rev. Cloyd Goodnight, Uniontown, Pa.—"I like the virility and admire the study pages of The Conquest. Am sure you have a fine combination of page and column features, such as will make the paper not only attractive but valuable. It has the modern touch."

Mrs. Jessie Brown Pounds, Author—"I am sure you are putting out just the kind of a paper our young people need."

Robt. M. Hopkins, National Bible School Secretary—"It has been a great pleasure to read this first issue of The Conquest. I may say I have read every word of it including all the advertisements. In my opinion you have given to our Sunday schools a most excellent journal. If you can maintain this high standard in its mechanical appearance and its literary contents, The Conquest will soon find a place in a large number of our senior and adult classes. Let me wish for you and this paper every success."

Rev. G. L. Lobdell, Stockton, Cal.—"I am very favorably impressed with The Conquest. It is Christlike in spirit and scholarly in tone, yet sufficiently simple to meet all needs. The department of Modern Science and the World's Work, is alone worth the subscription price."

Garry L. Cook, Indiana State Sunday School Superintendent—"I want to say that The Conquest looks good to me. I certainly like the general appearance of the paper. It is neat and dignified and attractive. I also like very much the different departments that you are going to use in the paper. I see no reason why you will not find a place for this paper. I am sure that we have schools that will find The Conquest just what they have been looking for. Congratulations!"

The Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse is fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, the Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

The Peril of the Untenanted Soul

The great need of the present age is more of the religion of Jesus Christ. That is not our only need, but it is the greatest need we have. We have put other needs first, and to our loss. We have no other necessity so great as this. It is a positive need. We have been too readily content with negative goodness.

Jesus uttered a profound truth in the sphere of practical psychology when he told of the homeless wandering of the unclean spirit, and his return with seven other and worse spirits to his swept and garnished habitation. The soul of man, true to a condition which prevails throughout nature, abhors a vacuum.

We have been busy casting out evils. We have had innumerable committees at work drafting new statutes to oust this, that and the other evil from our civilization. We have under way programs of thoroughgoing reform, as we suppose, by means of restrictive legislation. We have laws against what for the purposes of the campaign we are calling "the white slave traffic." We have minimum wage laws. We have laws to prevent this and that and the other form of sin. All this is well. But Eve did not fall because of low wages. The "white slaves" are not, as a class, tearfully seeking escape from their sinful life. There is sin in high society as truly as in the slums, and it is a more hopeless kind of sin.

Who of us that has waged a long and bitter fight against lawlessness has not learned a lesson from its insistent recurrence? We have fought, and we have won. We have closed the saloons, and driven out the dives, and sent the gamblers to jail or into secret flight, and we sit down, weary and triumphant, exulting that we have had a great victory. In five years we have it all to fight over again. First it creeps back insidiously; then it comes openly and, before we know it, things are as bad as before or maybe worse.

We cannot save society by mere restriction. We must provide positive good instead of the evils we have cast out. It is not enough to vote out the saloon; we must give something in its place.

The constant habit of saying to children, "Don't, don't!" is the most ineffective of all failures in family government. The mother who sets her baby in a high chair and, first putting molasses on his fingers, gives him a feather, and lets him pick it from one hand to the other, is a wise woman compared with the one who forever says "Don't." Children must have positive occupation, not mere negative restriction.

We are casting out many things from our religion. Many people have cast out the fear of hell. They congratulate themselves that they are not so barbarous as their fathers, who gloried in their thought of a burning hell. Well, and what have they given to men to take the place of it? The love of God? Yes, but what kind of love? The love of indifference; the love of impotency; the love that has no discrimination between good and evil? Better a burning hell than that. Better the fiercest hell that the imagination of Dante ever devised than an impotent love of which men could say, "the Lord will not do good, neither will He do evil." We want to know which side God is on. A literal lake of fire has at least this advantage—it leaves no doubt on which side of the problem of good and evil God stands.

Go through the old doctrines that we have so jauntily thrown into the scrap-pile, and make an inventory of them. They were crude, impossible dogmas, do you say? Well, let us grant it for argument's sake. But what have you in place of them? What positive truths have you formulated and wrought into a consistent system that stands four square against evil?

Make no mistake about this business of conquering the world for righteousness. It is no easy task. It involves the casting out of demons. But after they have been cast out, what then?

Our lives are full. They never were so full. Yes, and never so empty. We worry ourselves into nervous prostration over trivialities. We have our date-books positively illegible with conflicting engagements. And what does it all amount to?

We sometimes imagine our lives are very full when indeed they are merely swept and garnished and ready for the next foolish fad that calls itself religious or social or philanthropic. Fads flourish in lives that are spiritually empty. They come into vacuity and give it an apparent and superficial plentitude. But they are as empty as ever, or filled with what has in it an invitation to things evil.

But the life that really is full has no room for sin, and it gives only the corners of its home to life's lesser interests. The expulsive power of a great affection has proved the eviction of many an evil that went not out by any other process.

Be not content with the casting out of evil nor with the sweeping and garnishing of the house. Let the life be filled with grace and goodness, and there will be no room for evil.

Some Difficulties Met by an Instructor in an Oriental School.

BY HERBERT L. WILLETT, JR.

TO rehearse the full list of activities which one finds in progress on the campus here, would demand more time than a Staffite ever has to spare, but it seems to me that an outline of the three divisions of an instructor's task will furnish data for some acquaintance with what we find to do.

A Staffite, be it understood, is a man who comes here to work for three years, pledging himself to fulfill cheerfully any task assigned him, and to hold himself ready at all times to take the place of anyone who happens to be disabled, be it President or chief cook. There are this year about forty men on the staff, over half of them native graduates of the college; the rest of us are American and French, young men generally just out of college, who wish to have a part in the work of the missionary field without necessarily taking that as a career. Since we associate on close terms with the students and do most of our best work by example rather than through instruction, the faculty takes great pains to select men of the best moral fibre and very few are the mistakes made.

ARABIC A DIFFICULT LANGUAGE.

Since all instruction, except that in technical language courses, is in English, we are not under the necessity of mastering Arabic—a rather difficult part for one not abnormally gifted as a linguist. It is often a source of wonder that the students progress as rapidly as they do when they have classes with men from Boston, Chicago, London and Montreal, but the accent seems to bother them very little.

When a Staffite arrives he is assigned to a course and has only the time from the date of his arrival until the opening of college to outline his work, prepare his lectures or find out what the subject is all about, according as he has had training in that line. The faculty attempts to give to each instructor the course for which he is best prepared, but when a man especially qualified in history discovers that he will have to teach physiology the second term, and does not know a nerve tissue from a contagious disease, it is easy to see that he may find plenty to do in the way of preparation. It is fortunate that the students regard us as living dictionaries so that we are seldom cross questioned as is the custom at home.

At last school begins, and the young Staffite finds himself facing four classes a day, in the same subject or in four different subjects as the case may be. One has the advantage of needing much less time for preparation, but the test of one's qualities of self control is stupendous. Not only must the lesson be made interesting but it must be put in the simplest English and in such a form that the dullest intelligence can grasp it. The ability of some of the boys one meets here to be dull is astonishing, too. Then there is the small matter of memorizing eighty odd names, all of them unpronounceably overladen with gutterals, and of attaching them to the proper faces. (At the end of one month I was letter perfect in twenty-two). So much for the class work—it is the least of our troubles.

STARTING OFF THE DAY.

Bells begin to ring at six every morning, regardless of how dark or how cold it may be, and as it is impossible to sleep thereafter, owing to a propensity of several football enthusiasts for practicing from that time until breakfast, it is as well to get up and see that the boys are all astir, incidentally giving an example of fearlessness in the matter of icy shower baths. At seven comes breakfast and at seven-fifty chapel. If one is at all able to play hymns he is sure to be pressed into service, and I have the pleasure of officiating every morning at the piano for the Preparatory Department worship. Classes begin at eight and last until four, with an hour for lunch; prayers then end the school hours, as they began them, and we are free until supper at six. During this period every man is supposed to take some form of exercise or oversee student games. Officially the evenings are for study, but in reality we find that prayer meeting, Y. M. C. A., staff meeting, choir practice, debating club and any other meetings which may be arranged fill the time pretty regularly. Sunday is especially full, for chapel starts at nine-fifteen and then one has to hurry to get to the Anglo-American Mission Church where some of us sing, for the eleven o'clock service. Sunday-school is at three, when each instructor has a little group of students to teach on some religious or moral topic, and as many of the boys feel that compulsory Christian Sunday-school is a hardship to men of other beliefs, this class is often a difficult one. At seven comes evening service followed by a reception at the home of the President. If we have called the first division of a Staffite's life "classes," we may designate this second part as "services."

The third would come under the heading "duties," I suppose. A rule providing that English be spoken at the table makes it necessary for an instructor to be on duty throughout every meal, moving about among the students' tables. Inspection comes at ten-fifteen each evening and every private room and dormitory must be visited to make sure that all the boys are in their places. There are four study periods each day, and someone has to be on hand to keep order and help the students who find difficulties in their work. Each day one Staffite is in charge of the campus, must be within hail at all times, and is responsible for any disturbance. He it is, also, who accompanies the students to the sea during bathing season, and sees to it that no one fails to get back to the school, for permission to leave the campus is given only on Saturday afternoon and students are carefully kept off the streets.

Once a week the students have a few hours on the athletic field, aside from team practice and games, and then the teacher, who perhaps has never seen a hockey stick or a game of association football, must become coach, referee, umpire, time keeper and attendance taker all in one and all at once.

DIFFICULTIES OF THE WORK.

Finally, each instructor acts as advisor to a certain number of students, whose work he has to watch and direct. The "duties" are assigned weekly to all in turn, but there is seldom a day when one does not feel the weight of some task falling upon him. Far different it is from the life of a teacher in our American colleges, where the chief duty is to attend class, and even that is on occasion neglected. But let it be remembered that we are missionaries rather than teachers and that when twenty-five hours of work are crowded between two sunsets we cannot complain nor threaten to strike. It is a life of service on our part, and we know always that what is asked of us is all for the good of the students, mentally, morally, and physically.

Learning Religious Tolerance

A ministerial friendship and what came of it. Being put "on the fence." Books that brought new light. A period of disillusionment.

CHAPTER V IN "A DOCTRINAL AUTOBIOGRAPHY."

IN one of my pastorates I met a neighboring Disciple minister who filled me with admiration for his scholarly attainments and his successful ministry. Through him I was made acquainted with the mine of devotional treasures of the Christian world only a few of which we are permitted to scan, so vast is their number. He had accumulated a valuable library and was a painstaking student. Although he said nothing of the critical problems of the Old and New Testaments in his pulpit, his days and nights were given to the study of them. While he admired the writings of the late President McGarvey because of his knowledge of both sides of the critical problem, he shocked me more than once by his assertion that our foremost Bible scholar never realized the meaning of the Higher Criticism.

A MIDDLE-OF-THE-ROAD PREACHER.

This pastor was wholly committed to the newer views of the Scripture but managed to maintain a middle of the road course throughout his entire ministry. No man ever accused him of heresy, and at the time of his death one of our conservative journals held him up as worthy the admiration of any man who would succeed in the ministry. So if I learned anything from him I need not fear the headsman's ax, for I never dared to delve into the problems with which he concerned himself, nor to go as far out to sea in speculative matters as did he. Even to this hour, I find myself hugging the shore because of the remnants of my early training that still survive in me.

From him I learned how to appreciate both sides of an argument and to retain my seat instead of jumping at conclusions which, until I came under his influence, it was a sort of second nature for me to do. I saw that a man could be a scholar without being an infidel, and I had always had grave doubts on that point. I learned that a man could attempt to master some of the difficulties that are perplexing some of the greatest minds of the age, and yet preach on the fundamentals with great success. He was the first man who really steadied me on my mental feet, who taught me to think and question. He convinced me that it was not wise to take for granted many things I had learned from my teachers. He destroyed my confidence in the certainty of many things I had considered impregnable. In brief, he put me on the fence.

"SAVING THE LOST."

But let it not be supposed that he did this without a struggle on my part. I argued as I had never done before. I thought I was commissioned to save him from destruction and spent hours in his study. I went away many times bearing the marks of defeat, yet I felt all the time that there was an argument to set aside his arguments if I only knew where to find it. He never seemed to be trying to convert me to his views; possibly my crude views gave him the opportunity to do home missionary work, which he accepted. Because of his years of experience and his finely trained mind I was but clay in his hands, though I did not think so at that time. I read again and again, unknown to him, the books that had been prescribed for a "failing faith,"—for I was sure his was gone and mine going,—some times with satisfaction, oftentimes without. I even prayed that his faith might not be allowed to disappear altogether. I determined in my own mind, when his arguments seemed unanswerable, that I would hold on to my faith in spite of my ignorance. But my method of holding on was as futile as the method of lifting one's self over the fence by one's bootstraps.

I never went over to his side then or since. I never read any of his books on the problems of Scripture raised by the scholars. I have never had much interest in them, probably because I have neither the time nor the money that such a study would involve. But I began to read a different order of literature, such as "The Seat of Authority in Religion," by Martineau, and "The Place of Christ in Modern Theology," by Fairbairn—dry and heavy reading, no matter what any man may say, and read only because of their superior merit. Following these came the works of Marcus Dodds and Professor Bruce. "The Religions of Authority," by Sabatier, and later "The Church and the Changing Order," by Shailer Mathews, held my divided thinking at this period. I read often the works of Dr. Channing, not only for his interpretations of Christianity and his fine style, but for the moral courage he showed in his discourses on slavery which put iron in my blood. The sermons of Beecher and Phillips Brooks were a tonic to my disorganized mind, and gave me a breadth of vision that I never had before. The scholarly pastor had created in me a temper of mind that made these volumes and many more like them both delightful—if we except the first two—and helpful, without any exceptions. Ten years earlier such volumes would have been enigmas in my hands, and puzzles to my faith.

Naturally, my views with reference to the teaching of our people were undergoing a change. I discovered that others may be right in many of those particulars which I had been taught to believe, upon their lips, were an affront to the Almighty. My hard and fast system which could not be unlocked except with the key which I and those who thought as I did could furnish, I came to see was badly out of joint with the age, and needed repairs. A new age had dawned on the world since my teachers at home and in the college had done their work, and the conditions it created seemed at variance with those which had prevailed in the days of the Campbells. Fundamentally, I believed then as I believe now that our position is correct, but my interpretation of it had been such that only wooden minds would be likely to see any virtue in it. It could make no appeal to men of vision.

GROWING CONCILIATORY.

And with the idea of revision thoroughly wrought into my mind, my preaching began to have in it a conciliatory rather than the belligerent note. I began to say that there were Christians in every church, and to my astonishment I found that the majority of the congregation were in full accord with that view, and were trying to forget the intolerant and cock-sure eras of our history. I thought I was saying something radical, and had some misgivings of the effect such "boldness of speech" might have on our ruling elder, who I expected would object to my latitudinarianism on the ground that such a concession would make unnecessary the plea. (That mode of reasoning is not wholly extinct in this year of grace). But nothing of the kind happened, the people were far in advance of the preacher. They were already at home in an atmosphere which he had just discovered. It was here I had my first break with my traditional and legalistic past.

It is pitiful to contemplate that I who was trying to save people from sectarianism had need to be saved myself. The pot was calling the kettle black. Like some who are yet warning us not to fall into "the pit out of which we had been digged," they now and I then had need to ask whether we were not digging the pit deeper?

LEARNING TO THINK.

Meanwhile my favorite journal was becoming more and more distasteful to me. It was thrusting its roots deep into soil that I had ceased to till. While I was growing tolerant it was becoming intolerant. While I was seeing our future greatness from a new point of view, strong influences were at work to rally the fearful to the old point of view. I was hopeful while these influences scarcely dared to hope. For the first time in my life I began to do my own thinking, caring not a jot for what the powers that be had to say. A few reactionaries became insistent to do the thinking for the entire brotherhood, and demonstrated how easy it is to have all the insignia of human authority while professing to have rejected all authority except the divine. An unwritten creed had been framed, so exacting that, later, men began to wonder whether we would not be the gainers if a bishop had the rule over us, sitting in the seat of authority in form as well as in fact. The idols of early life, the men whom I had followed as guides, seemed to grow more human with the years.

SCHOLARSHIP DISCOURAGED.

In many ways the retrogressive influences among us discouraged the ambitions of scholarly men, accepting as final the declarations of the few concerning the worth and status of present day Biblical scholarship. These influences warred on the pope, and assumed his functions; lampooned sectarianism, and created in us all a sectarian spirit; counselled peace, and continued war; exhorted us to be men of vision, and kept up a controversy over big "D" and little "d." They stood as exponents of progress, yet set the bounds beyond which if one pass he must do so at his peril.

As in my youthful days we always returned to a discussion of baptism, no matter from what point we started in our arguments with the "sects," so those in the assumed seats of authority formed the habit of resolving all dissent from their positions into heresy, and did their utmost to ruin the suspected or to drive him from our ranks. Their decisions were final, the ne plus ultra of wisdom. By these so many of our best men were intimidated that when silence ceased to be a virtue, they felt constrained to make an apology before asking for a hearing. Never in an enlightened age have a people been so completely awed by the voice of a self-imposed authority as our people have been.

RUINOUS POLICIES.

While I was striving for liberty of thought and speech, the catholic influences of Isaac Errett's day seemed to be dying out of our literature. There seemed to be influences at work which were endeavoring to make liberty among us a figment of the brain. A ruinous change of policy made it possible for the few self-appointed leaders to sing serenades to the anti-brethren, in the hope of some sort of a union, but, for reasons best known to all concerned, the match-making ended in failure. The war in recent years on our organized interests has been as unrelenting as any that was waged during those days when Isaac Errett gave the strength of his life to preserve the organizations which the fidelity of his brethren had created. Yet there are today the prophets of perfection who claim that all things among us continue as they were from the beginning of creation.

All such retrogressions and many like them would not sit lightly on the chest of a man who was growing into an appreciation of the changes which were humanizing the modern world. Some of my early teachers, I saw, were harking back to days that are dead forever; I was going on in the living days. I had moved in one direction; the forces that had inspired my youth were moving in another. There could be no bond of fellowship between us, and I awoke one morning to find that a few more of my idols had been shattered. I had to wave to some of these antiquated influences a farewell, but more in sorrow than in anger. I knew that a few influential men among us were trying to do an impossible thing—to dramatize the issues of pioneer days in the hope of beating back the tides of the modern world. And nothing can be read with more certainty than the record of all such failures. As unambiguous to our eyes are they as the story of wrecks when bleaching ribs lie ghastly in the yellow sands.

I also knew that if much that passed through some of our journals represented apostolic Christianity it was our duty to ignore rather than to restore.

What Serving Christ Means

A Bit of Testimony From a Labrador Missionary.

WILFRED T. GRENFELL IN THE CHURCHMAN.

GOD and men have approved Solomon's choice of wisdom as the chief necessity for mortal man. But never in the history of the world has the lesson been more clearly emphasized than now—that the wisdom which is from above is always, first "pure," then "peaceable," and that as an effective force, a vital dynamic, "the fruits of righteousness are sown in peace of them that make for peace." Our faith should give us this practical asset, in spite of every possible eddy of "the current of science."

A DERELICT.

Only last week, the report came in: "Doctor, a large, deserted schooner, level with the water, is battering against the rocks outside the harbor." As agent for Lloyd's, Underwriters, the great caretaker of all vessels in trouble, it was my duty to "report." The poor, battered, submerged hull was scarcely recognizable; and yet—yes, it was, a real old friend of mine, the buoyant "Laughing Water," now a hopeless, useless wreck. As in so many previous years, merrily she had passed north on her quest of the yearly harvest that made her life-work, when suddenly she struck an iceberg and sank, carrying with her her captain. As she lay at the bottom, the cargo of salt, which she had carried for her work, dissolved out, and, rising to the surface, she had come drifting, forlorn and helpless, along this rough and rocky coastline—only, after all, to drift off seaward again before a westerly gale, having no longer life to meet the head-winds successfully. There she must become only a menace to the world's business, till she shall perish miserably in the mighty ocean.

Just so, year in and out, human derelicts from the strain and stress of the "modern" voyage of life reach us down here, seeking refuge from the nerve storms, which they think are "purely physical." But the incidents that tell on the fabric of our human frame are universal, even if less oppressive here in these wilds, where we are so near to Nature undisturbed.

The rest and peace, of which the hustle of life in the world's big centers deprives men, must come from within, if the world's life is to go onward, as it must—for stopping means the end, always and everywhere.

In the old world, it was fighting "without," which called most loudly for the message of peace. The drama of strife, which the great world has been watching of late in the south of Europe, seems already almost like the revival of some bygone play, and the very man-in-the-street now sees the pity of it all. But the war "within" claims today an unending list of victims, and the new world is realizing its peril and calling for some message of relief.

In our schools of surgery, we are taught that we may speak of our experience, and, however young and unknown, expect a hearing. The chatter of our theories most often brings us ridicule.

It has been my privilege during a quarter of a century of voyages to tow many a craft to safety. A large American vessel has just sailed by our harbor mouth, "bound north." Five years ago, after hours of fighting, with such heavy damages that we ourselves almost abandoned the effort as hopeless, we raised her and brought her home to a new spell of life and usefulness. A thrill of joy went through me as the watchman, taking down his long glass, said: "There goes the 'Stormwind.' Isn't she a beauty now?" For I knew how she had come by her new lease of opportunity.

"THE UNSPEAKABLE GIFT."

So, only, can I venture to try to speak of the truth which, to me, has always been "the unspeakable gift;" the one and only, and yet the inexhaustible and ever-ready remedy, that, facing life, to say nothing of facing death, has so often been to me everything I needed, yet that nothing else could give, or sell; the gift which the Master promised to give to faith, "not as the world gives." Peace "without" is being given. The world's pessimists have to acknowledge it. Peace "within" is being given, also, and the world's optimists believe that this peace will be universal. Jesus, the supreme optimist, inspired us with faith that it should be the sign-manual of His kingdom.

I want to add my tiny protest, not only to my supreme confidence in its coming, but also to my experience of the one sure way of attaining it for one's own soul—to see, and to know, and to trust, Him who is invisible.

They who have been Christians may never miss it. They will know of the environment. And further that it will develop the abounding life in the individual only as the church is itself "doing things." Fortunately that is what Christ wants and at the same time what manhood can rejoice in. The appeal that by believing we may verily escape the righteous punishment of our wrongdoing is a mean one anyway, and the resulting faith is too often of that sickly variety that we surgeons frequently see. "When the devil was sick the devil a saint would be; when the devil was well the devil a saint was he."

A CALL TO SERVICE.

The call to Christ's service to which I myself responded was that of D. L. Moody. Let each man of the thousands who answered it interpret his view as he likes. I understand their mental attitude well enough to have a tender place in my heart for all those who think honestly that the success of that message was, "You have only to believe to be saved from punishment." A man who did things and whose permanent monuments of practicality are at Mount Hermon, Northfield, Glasgow, Chicago and elsewhere, can be excused if, like Browning, societies should have to be formed to study his meaning. But to me Moody taught the one and only thing that could have interested me and that was that God Almighty really wanted such work as I could do to help him out. That had never occurred to me. I had thought service as far as God was concerned means unattractive conventional gatherings which I loathed and went to sleep in if I could. Thus, to defend a boy who was being bullied against his enemies was sport to me; but that would have been the last thing I should have thought of as being "religious service." That that was a finer means of grace to my soul than the good of books, or the too stereotyped Sunday, had no more been taught me than the eating of my porridge for my breakfast was. And yet that is a means of grace and to teach that it is so is divine service.

How many hundreds of men, good-natured, honorable, unselfish, in the busy world downtown does one meet who would laugh right out if you said, "I want you to come and preach the gospel with me"—men who would instantly help in any genuine effort to "help others out," enjoy it, jump at the chance of it, and yet will smile again afterward, when you argue that the rendered service was really divine service, was preaching the gospel; and if so why not acknowledge it? For my part I at once recognized it as true, for I felt this was as essential to explain things as was immortality. It gave a dignity and intelligence to life. I had never dreamed that Christ's call was to follow him. The transient joys of meat and clothing and even athletic honors I well knew never satisfied anyone worth while.

THE REAL "SERVICE."

However much we owe to the old method of exhibiting the remedies for loss of life we must look at facts squarely, and act just as we doctors do who agree with teachers of religion as to the great value of psychical treatment, and yet differ from the Christian Scientist as to the value of training the leucocytes with vaccines, or even making use of the knife. If we can realize the truth of this—we who work among sailors and fishermen, advocating the claims of the Master on their lives; a body of men as emotional as any in the world, as tender-hearted and unsophisticated as any class anywhere—then how much more must this be true where the childlike nature that responds most readily to sentiment has been hardened and made callous by blatant and shallow skepticism and the bitter experiences of life in big cities?

The service of Christ is the real "service" and the preacher who seeks first to conserve energy and save men's lives for "service" looks not for a community hereafter of men who have escaped punishment, but a world of men now who are rendering the "service of their reason."

To them heaven is a place not merely of men singing because of their escape, but a place of which it can be said that "there His servants serve him;" religion means not the holding of services but the rendering of them—not a cerebral process so much as a manual one. Is it our hand or merely our brain action God wants?

D. L. MOODY'S MESSAGE.

This was to me Moody's message. And I believed and still believe that it was Christ's. Hundreds of young men from colleges, universities and wealthy homes have paid their own expenses these past years to come and do anything, even dig drains, when it was helpful. More than half my colleagues are volunteers. Men are eager to accept a gospel so satisfying and that gives such zeal to life. They know the hollowness of conventionalities. So I believe in the inspiration of this gospel of the Christ. Why? Because it is such a desirable gospel. It is just exactly what in the bottom of my nature I wanted, and I know it's the same with every man. It is an interpretation about which in my bluest moments of life and in many hours facing death I have never had one single doubt. Just as I want to live again, so I want to believe I am of use while I am alive. And this is the one justification I can find. When things look darkest it has never failed me.

First Experiences in Africa

A New African Missionary Gives First Impressions.

BY E. A. JOHNSTON.

WE arrived the evening of the first of October exactly two months from New York. We start early tomorrow for Longa and the emergency conference which will determine our plans. How thankful we are that this work was pressed upon our hearts so heavily a year ago. It seemed then that I could not give up Africa. How little we knew then the necessity that would thrust us into the work on our arrival. We were hardly in the country—it was just about the hour we first put feet on Congo soil, that Mr. Eldred's noble soul fled to a higher life.

We learned of his death more than a week later while we waited at Leopoldville getting ready for the up-river trip. We had a letter from him among a number welcoming us to the work. We have sent it home and it will be forwarded to you. I, having known him slightly at home and having been much impressed by his message and his personality, had really begun to count on him very much as a teacher and friend for these early days. We both looked forward to having him as such and to being some comfort to him and help in his loneliness. You will know that his death was a great blow and our hearts are sad when we think of it. We feel very weak and inefficient to have to stand in the gap his going makes in our ranks. It will appear great to you at home; it is almost terrifying to us. We need the prayers of the brethren now if ever. We feel sure that we have them.

"REALIZING" AFRICA.

It has been a little difficult to realize that we are in Africa, that it is not all a dream and we shall awake soon amid familiar scenes. Indeed, so many of the scenes resemble the home countryside as it appears in places and the people immediately around us are so many of them like intelligent American negroes in appearance that it lends force to the illusion. It is hard to believe that they live in mud huts and were lately naked savages, most of them.

The children impress one. We have not seen many heathen children but even they, what we have seen of them, show bright and pleasant faces. It is the older folk that show the terrible marks of their awful existence, for that's about all it is. The children of the Christians are particularly good to look at and there are numbers of them at Bolenge. There are many truly good-looking faces—pretty babies, and it is not only the woman's heart that warms to them.

We have seen sad sights, too. Our doctor has been busy for hours at a time although knowing only a little of the language. Sometimes he has literally sent them away in order to eat his meals. He has had medical cases by the score, a case of pneumonia among them. He has dressed ulcers by dozens and one day cut an infected gland from a workman's groin. The people here rejoice in Dr. Widdowson's return—they want a doctor so badly. They have crowded our doctor almost hourly since we arrived—old withered crones, strong men, mothers and babes in arms. But the saddest sight I have seen was a poor blind baby. They say his case is hopeless. He sees a little with one eye, but both are blue with a film. He stood alone by the side of the path with a bit of iron for a plaything in his hand. As I bent over and patted his little bare shoulder and tried to say a cheerful "Oleko," he turned those poor big blurred eyes up to my face and his baby lips quivered; the big tears starting from his eyes and no response from the drawn little mouth. How I wished I could lay my hand on those eyes and make them see! And the doctor has to turn away cases about which he does not know or cannot make a diagnosis or that are beyond his power. I console myself with the thought that there is after all a thing we can give that is better than sight, or health and we pray daily for wisdom and strength to give the message well.

"Ultima Veritas"

DR. WASHINGTON GLADDEN has resigned as pastor of the First Congregational Church of Columbus, O., after a pastorate of thirty-one years. He will remain as pastor emeritus at a salary of $2,500. Dr. Carl S. Patton, associate pastor of the church, will succeed Doctor Gladden.

Doctor Gladden, who has been known as "the first citizen of Columbus," is the author of many books, especially of religious and social import. He is seventy-eight years old. He will remain in Columbus a large part of the time.

His resignation was due to a desire to be free of responsibilities from the leadership of the church because of his advanced age.

The retirement of Doctor Gladden reminds us of the debt of the church to him not only as a preacher and author of books but also as the writer of some of the best religious poetry of his generation. His "O Master, Let me Walk With Thee" is one of the best American hymns; and his "Ultima Veritas" speaks a calm word of faith in a period of religious unrest.

In the bitter waves of woe,
  Beaten and tossed about
By the sullen winds that blow
  From the desolate shores of doubt,

While the anchors that faith had cast
  Are dragging in the gale,
I am quietly holding fast
  To the things that cannot fail.

I know that right is right;
  That it is not good to lie;
That love is better than spite,
  And a neighbor than a spy;

I know that passion needs
  The leash of a sober mind;
I know that generous deeds
  Some sure reward will find;

That the rulers must obey;
  That the givers shall increase,
That Duty lights the way
  For the beautiful feet of Peace;

In the darkest night of the year,
  When the stars have all gone out,
That courage is better than fear,
  That faith is truer than doubt.

And, fierce though the fiends may fight,
  And long though the angels hide;
I know that Truth and Right
  Have the universe on their side;

And that somewhere, beyond the stars,
  Is a Love that is better than Fate;
When the night unlocks her bars,
  I shall see Him, and I will wait.

"I'm Growing Old"

Famous poem of John G. Saxe suggested for publication by a subscriber, following Hugh Macdonald's article on "Growing Old" in issue of January 1:

MY days pass pleasantly away;
  My nights are blest with sweetest sleep;
  I feel no symptoms of decay;
I have no cause to mourn nor weep;
My foes are impotent and shy;
My friends are neither false nor cold,
And yet, of late, I often sigh,—
    I'm growing old!

My growing talk of olden times,
My growing thirst for early news,
My growing apathy to rhymes,
My growing love of easy shoes,
My growing hate of crowds and noise,
My growing fear of taking cold,
All whisper in the plainest voice,
    I'm growing old!

I'm growing fonder of my staff;
I'm growing dimmer in the eyes;
I'm growing fainter in my laugh;
I'm growing deeper in my sighs;
I'm growing careless of my dress;
I'm growing frugal of my gold;
I'm growing wise; I'm growing,—yes,—
    I'm growing old!

I see it in my changing taste;
I see it in my changing hair;
I see it in my growing waist;
I see it in my growing heir;
A thousand signs proclaim the truth
As plain as ever truth was told,
That, even in my vaunted youth
    I'm growing old!

Ah me! my very laurels breathe
The tale in my reluctant ears,
And every boon the hours bequeath
But makes me debtor to the Years!
E'en Flattery's honeyed words declare
The secret she would fain withhold;
And tells me in "How young you are!"
    I'm growing old!

Thanks for the years!—whose rapid flight
My sombre Muse too sadly sings;
Thanks for the gleams of golden light
That tint the darkness of their wings;
The light that beams from out the sky,
Those heavenly mansions to unfold
Where all are blest, and none may sigh,
    I'm growing old!

"Kansas"

NICHOLAS VACHEL LINDSAY IN THE FORUM.

O, I have walked in Kansas
  Through many a harvest field
  And piled the sheaves of glory there
And down the wild rows reeled:

Each sheaf a little yellow sun,
A heap of hot-rayed gold;
Each binder like Creation's hand
To mold suns, as of old.

And we felt free in Kansas
From any sort of fear,
For thirty thousand tramps like us
There harvest every year.

She stretches arms for them to come,
She roars for helpers then,
And so it is in Kansas
That tramps, one month, are men.

Everybody's Saint Francis

BY MRS. IDA WITHERS HARRISON.

I reviewed last week, "The Wolf of Gubbio," a Christmas drama, in which St. Francis of Assisi was the central figure; since then, I have read another holiday book about him, called "Everybody's Saint Francis," and that is what he is; he belongs to the Roman Catholic Church and to the thirteenth century, but he also belongs to you and to me, and to the universal heart of mankind. There is an appeal in the life and words of the little brown-eyed, brown-robed Friar, that we do not find in the founders of the Benedictines, the Dominicans, or the Jesuits. Why is it, that this "less than heart of the saints," as he loved to call himself, is so dear to us, and that so many loving studies of his life are being written today?

HIS POVERTY.

All of the religious orders took the triple vow, to chastity, obedience, and poverty; but the vow to poverty in Monastic bodies was seeming, and not real; while the individual owned nothing, the community had often rich possessions, so the monk frequently fared sumptuously, in spite of personal destitution.

But the vow of St. Francis and his followers was to absolute poverty; his was an order of mendicant friars, who were not only forbidden to own property, either collectively or individually, but were not allowed to make provision for their simplest daily necessities. With no garment but the coarse brown gown of their order, with a rope girdle, bare-headed, bare-footed, they were to depend on charity for their daily food. One of the saint's early biographers says:

"Because they possessed nothing earthly, loved nothing earthly, they were secure in all places; troubled by no fears, disturbed by no cares, they lived without anxiety, waiting, without solicitude, for the food of the coming day, and the lodging of the night."

Francis was wont to speak of "Holy Poverty," and "My Lady Poverty," and said,

"That poverty was the treasure hidden in a field, of which we read in the gospels—and to buy which, a man should sell all that he hath."

The mendicant order founded by St. Francis, was a needed (though unconscious) protest against a church, whose temporal power was at its height, and whose absorbing aim was earthly glory and riches. The convents and monasteries vied with the castles and palaces in their possessions—the bishops and great churchmen rivalled the feudal lords in their secular authority; the church under Pope Innocent III was the greatest sovereignty in the world.

This son of a rich father, who voluntarily became poor for Christ's sake, was using the same methods to reach the needy multitudes as did his blessed mother; their life was a daily struggle for daily bread, and his reward for identifying himself with them was the same as that of Jesus—"the common people heard him gladly." Is there not a profound psychology there? Can we reach the great, breaking heart of humanity, unless we become one with them?—walk on their plane, live their lives, and speak to them in their own vernacular? May we not find here some explanation of the widening gulf between the laboring man and the church? Are we not in danger of over emphasizing the outward and unessential, and neglecting this plain and simple path to the hearts of our fellow men?

But I have a number of things to say about that beatitude, Blessed are ye poor, and that must be another story.

St. Francis' emphasis on poverty, however, is not the only thing that makes him the beloved of all times. Another mendicant order, the Dominicans, with an equal emphasis on poverty, was formed at the same time as the Franciscans, and Dominic, its founder, has no point of contact with the life of today.

FRANCIS, THE EVANGELIST.

There was nothing ascetic or penitential in the movement started by St. Francis; he was as much an apostle of happiness as Robert Louis Stevenson himself, and the idea of Monasticism was as foreign to him as to the thought of our day. His teaching was as social as that of our Lord; he loved his fellowmen, and, like Paul, always had a group of them about him; his little inner circle is called the Three Companions, so constantly were they with him. There was no question of cloistered quiet or secluded learning with him—life for him was active service for the succor and salvation of others. His heart went out to the sick, the needy, and the sorrowing—especially the lepers of whom there seemed to be a great many in Italy in his day. But the great task of the little friar and his followers was preaching the gospel—they longed to be heralds of God to the world, proclaiming and hastening the coming of his Kingdom. It was one of his sayings, "That there were only two things in the world, God, and a man's soul—and to know God, and purge one's soul of all that was unlike God—that was all!"

THE FIRST OF ITALIAN POETS.

The mother of Francis was a Provincal, and in his childhood she taught him the songs of the land of Troubadours. All of his life, he loved music and song, and like Luther and the Wesleys, he made much of singing in his preaching. Before him, all the Canticles of the church were in Latin; Francis was the first to use the sweet Italian tongue as a medium for verse, and so became the first Italian poet—the forerunner of Dante, and Tasso, and Petrarch. Only two or three of his hymns have come down to us, and they have an irregularity of cadence and rhyme which is not without a certain charm. In his "Song of the Creatures," he calls on Mister Sun, and Sister Moon, and Brother Wind, and Sister Water and Mother Earth.

HIS LOVE OF ALL CREATED THINGS.

There is a flavor of out of doors about him, as about our Lord. His life is a record of long walks from one place to another, and always about him are the woods rustling, the soft airs blowing, the light falling on earth and church. The flowers were his friends, and frugal as he was, he would have flowers in every garden. He would not tread on a little plant, because it might be a lily, beloved of our Lord. All things, animate and inanimate, were dear to him, and in his tender speech, all were his little brothers and sisters. The old chronicle, "The Little Flowers of St. Francis" is full of marvels of his influence over bird, and beast, and cattle; in some of them, he is represented as preaching to the birds, while they flocked about him. It was an age when miracles were told of every saint—but granting that many of these stories are legendary, there is no doubt that his heart was full of love to all God's creatures—why should they not return so artless and innocent a passion? He said once at Christmas time,

"If I could talk to the Emperor, I would beg him that, for the love of God, no lark should be trapped or killed; and that on the day of our Lord's birth, all rulers should have grain strewed upon the roads, so that our sisters, the larks, might have enough to eat. And because on that day, the Son of God was born in a manger, between an ox and an ass, that all who have oxen and asses might out of reverence be forced to feed them well."

Is it any wonder that his biographer tells "that because he loved the larks, it pleased the Lord that these blessed birds should show him some sign of affection at the hour of his death; for on the evening of Saturday, after vespers, the night on which he departed to the Lord, a great number of these birds came on the roof above his bed, and flew about, singing very softly."

Who would have the heart to doubt so sweet a story? And who can fail to love and honor this dear Saint, whose life is as fragrant today, as when he walked and talked in Italy seven hundred years ago.

AN EPOCH-MAKING EVENT.

By J. N. Haymaker.

The Men and Millions Movement is an epoch making event among the Disciples of Christ.

The amount of money to be given is of even less importance than the new spirit of devotion and liberality that prompts the giving.

The inclusion of our colleges in the Movement is a far-sighted, far-reaching, and statesman-like conception. Christian education is fundamental to our plea, and, in larger terms, is fundamental to the growth and prosperity of Christianity itself. Our church cannot grow without an adequate supply of ministers.

We cannot be an educated church people without an educated ministry. Hence, both the number of our ministers and their quality are primarily dependent upon our schools.

If we put our colleges upon a permanent foundation; if we raise the standards of education; if we have well trained faculties, better equipment and higher educational ideals, it will not only mean more and better ministers but more of our own sons and daughters in our own schools, hence, in its broader aspect, it will mean a general uplift of ministry, church and people.

Our example will stimulate other communions and the Men and Millions Movement in our church may influence the whole Christian world. God give us a vision to see the wonderful possibilities of this movement. God give us a spirit of consecration to devote our wealth, our talent and ourselves to this important work.

Of Human Interest

A Point for Preachers.

The story is told of Dr. Lyman Beecher that in the early part of his career he once engaged to preach for a brother minister, whose church was in a remote district, peopled by a sparse and scattered population. It was midwinter; the day was unusually stormy and cold, and the snow lay so deep in some places that he could hardly proceed. On his arrival, although he saw no one, he took his seat in the pulpit. Presently one man came in and sat down, and at the appointed hour the preacher began. The service was closed with the benediction, when the solitary hearer departed, and left the preacher alone.

Twenty years after, Dr. Beecher was traveling in Ohio when a stranger accosted him by name.

"Do you remember preaching," he said, "twenty years ago to one man?"

"Yes, yes," said the doctor, grasping his hand "that I do, and if you are the man, I have been wishing to see you ever since."

"I am the man," was the reply, "and that sermon saved my soul and made a minister of me, and yonder is my church. The converts of that sermon, sir, are all over Ohio."

Helen Keller Meets Great Teacher.

A noteworthy interview took place in New York recently. Dr. Maria Montessori met for the first time Helen Keller and her teacher, Mrs. John Macy (Anne Sullivan). They had heard of each other for years, and both the Italian educator and the deaf, dumb and blind American girl were much moved when they first came face to face. The Bostor Herald says:

Miss Keller stood with her hands on Dr. Montessori's shoulders. Then she said distinctly: "Blessed are the feet of her who comes across the sea with a message of liberty to the children of America."

"Tell her," said Dr. Montessori, "that my children understand her, they know the triumph of the soul over difficulties. But the children of the future, the men of the future, will understand her even better than men do now, for they will be liberated, and will know how the spirit can prevail over the senses."

"You are fighting for the freedom of children," said Miss Keller. "We are fighting for the freedom of the parents, for the industrial revolution."

"But it is all one," said the Dottoressa. "The complete revolution is external and internal, too. I began as a sympathizer with political revolutionists of all kinds. Then I came to feel that it is the liberation of what we have in our hearts that is the beginning and end of revolution."

"But, surely," said Miss Keller, "we never can have the Montessori system or any other good system of education so long as the conditions of the home, of the parents, of the workers, are so intolerable."

"Certainly, that is true. But we must educate children so that they will know how to free themselves and others from bondage. And the first thing is to bring our children under the care of worthy teachers. You and Mrs. Mary symbolize such education, the education of the future, the development of a soul by the union of an inspiring teacher and the child whose soul has grown freely with such stimuli as it needs, and without the stimuli that debase and hinder growth."

"When you think of the appalling conditions under which people live," said Miss Keller, "it sometimes seems a miracle that the children grow up at all to intelligence and decency."

There was a moment's pause, during which every one seemed to be thinking of the mountains to be moved. Then Montessori said: "Queen Margherita is much interested in you."

"I have heard that she is a sweet and noble woman."

"Indeed she is."

"And they tell me the king, too, is a good man. All the same, we must get rid of all kings."

The Dottoressa nodded, and Mrs. Macy laughed. "You see," she said, "Helen is an uncompromising revolutionist. She won't allow even a good king, though I suppose we should be grateful for a good one, once in a while."

Dr. Montessori was studying Miss Keller's face. "In spite of all you say, Mrs. Macy, all your explanations of how she was taught, I do not see how her spirit has such vision. She seems like a special revelation of God."

"Every child," said Miss Keller, "can be a special revelation of God, if he is taught properly, and is allowed to live under right conditions."

"Helen was a revolutionist before I was," said Mrs. Macy. "Two or three years before I cared for them she had all these ideas. You see, I could have moulded her in my own likeness, I could have made her a copy of myself. But I left her free to think."

"That is it. Liberty to think."

"Did it ever occur to you, Dr. Montessori," asked Mrs. Macy, "that the same ideas spring up in many parts of the world at about the same time? I did not know of your work, nor you of mine. What is it? Is it the spirit of the age manifest here and there in one and another individual?"

"It is all in what we want," said Miss Keller. "We ought to want more, for what we want we get, if we want it hard enough. For example, women want the vote, men want better conditions of labor and children want more freedom. And remember, what we really want we get."

Hiding the Worst.

We miss President Wilson's quiet and trenchant wit sadly here at Princeton," said an instructor in Greek.

"I remember at one of President Wilson's receptions, I complained of a man who boasted of his bad habits.

"'When a man,' said the president, 'boasts of his bad habits, you may rest assured that they're the best he has.'"

A Bryan Story.

Secretary Bryan in one of his eloquent chautauqua addresses said of drunkeness:

"A frequent cause of drunkeness is the desire to drown sorrow. No sorrow can be drowned, though, in any such way.

"Once in Paris I found a promising young friend seated on a cafe terrace swallowing glass after glass of absinthe hurriedly.

"'My boy,' I cried, 'what on earth are you doing?'

"My young friend made a gesture of despair, and, looking up at me with bleared and sorrowful eyes, he replied:

"'Mr. Bryan, I am trying to drown a care that has learned to swim.'"

William Sulzer, Optimist.

"I am an optimist again," said ex-Governor Sulzer at a banquet in New York. "I was an optimist before my impeachment. Then I lost my optimism temporarily.

"An optimist," the ex-governor added dreamily, "is a chap who doesn't know what's coming to him."

The World Is Growing Better

Altman Workers Get Million.

Checks aggregating more than $1,000,000 have been distributed in the last few days to about 400 employes of B. Altman & Company, New York City, who were entitled to legacies under the will of Benjamin Altman. In about five days the trustees of the Altman foundation expect to announce the details of a profit-sharing plan for employes and of gifts to charitable and educational institutions. Mr. Altman bequeathed $5,000 apiece to eleven store employes and $1,000 apiece to three employes. To employes of twenty years' service he left $2,500 each; to all employed less than twenty and more than eighteen years $1,500 each, and to those employed fifteen years, $1,000 each.

Corporation Gives Time for Religious Meetings.

The Interborough Rapid Transit Company of New York has given fifteen minutes of the company's time for noonday meetings to be conducted in its shops by the religious department of the West Side Young Men's Christian Association. Formerly the men who attended the meetings did so on their own time after eating their lunches. Including its work in these shops this branch of the Young Men's Christian Association conducts twenty-two shop meetings with an aggregate weekly attendance of 2,200 men. men.

Wettest Block Is Drying.

In Kansas City, Mo., the "wettest block" is going dry. Not because of a diminishing supply, but because of a lack of patronage. Since the saloons were closed on the Kansas side the 1,700 block on West Ninth Street has had the reputation of being the "wettest block," But the old order of things is changed now. When the famous block was at its zenith, it boasted twenty-five saloons built on twenty-eight 25-foot lots. The number has dwindled now to thirteen.

California Working Girls Work Eight Hours.

The holiday season in the California stores has been completely revolutionized since the eight-hour work-day for women was established, says the San Francisco Bulletin. It has not only given the saleswomen a new lease on life and a chance to share in the joys of Christmas, but it has reduced the hours of work for the men in the retail stores and lifted some of the holiday burdens from off their shoulders.

Many of the stores closed as early as 5:30 during the late holiday season.

MODERN WOMANHOOD

Conducted by Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison

A Heroine's Letter

With a Message to the Living.

The following is one of the last letters written by Mrs. Frank Garrett, before her death in Des Moines, October 11, 1913. This letter was written to Miss Emma Lyon, who is at the head of the Girls' School, Nanking, China. The letter reflects her own good heart, as well as her devotion to Miss Lyon, and to the School founded by Mrs. Carrie Loos Williams, and withal it is an expression of her genuine faith in Christ's power to save and her hope of the life to come.

Des Moines, Iowa, Sept. 10, 1913.

My Dear Emma:

I have made just one speech at home so far, Emma, and that was in Seattle. I tried to tell a company of ladies about the development in your school in the 17 years we have been in China. And really, as I tried to tell these others of what you have done, it made me marvel myself at the wonderful growth of your work. I feel more proud of you than I have ever done before. There have been times when things went hard, and you were nearly ready to give up, were you not? But let me tell you, you have been a Spartan to remain at the helm all these years through so many hard places and you have a rich reward in having done so much that is really worth while. And don't ever give up the work whatever happens to discourage, except for health reasons. Not that I am afraid you will, in fact I feel sure you won't, however much you may sometimes be tempted to a place of less responsibility, and I hope you may have many years yet of happy service in the work for which you were born.

You don't know with what a yearning my heart turns to you all and the work, there, since it seems more and more probable that I cannot return. We have seen the best doctors in the United States, and they can give us very little encouragement. My arm, which was painful when I left China, has given me much trouble since, and there are other evidences that the trouble is developing down deep where it cannot be reached. However, I have never given up hope entirely. We are taking the X-Ray at present and it seems to be doing some good. In the meantime I am keeping myself as busy as I can and am not worrying at all about it. There are so many things I need to do for the children. It is only when it comes to this that I dare not think. Emma, I wish I could see you to-night. There are many things that we might talk about that I cannot write. The Lord has been so wonderfully near to me these last few weeks. So often I have thought, what would life be to us without this glorious hope that is ours, and then think of the millions of poor people over there, who must go down into the valley of the shadow alone. I am more thankful than for anything else that we have worked in China these years and I trust have brought this beautiful hope into some lives. And you have brought so many from darkness into the light, and will lead many more, let us hope.

"I know in whom I have believed," and am willing to walk where He shall lead me, and I do praise Him for the joy He has given me in dark hours and the perfect assurance that "All is Well."

And now I must close and go to bed. Emma, dear, I want you to know that I love you with a deep abiding love. You have the right ideals of the things that are worth working for, and you have helped me in so many ways to keep to these ideals. Give my love to every one of the girls, tell them they will always have a tender place in my heart. May it not be that in the "Heavenly Pastures fair" you and I may some day roam the hills with numbers of these girls whom we have loved, even as we have done many times in China. I pray that it may be so, and we shall "know even as we are known." Very lovingly yours,

ETHEL B. GARRETT.

HOW MRS. BALLINGTON BOOTH WAS CALLED.

Over seventeen years ago Mrs. Booth was invited by the prison authorities to preach to the convicts in San Quentin Penitentiary, Cal. It was at this time she recognized the hopelessness of the convicts and the great need of the preaching of the evangel of hope throughout the prisons of our country.

This visit proved to be the call to the great work she is now doing, and the greater yet to be done and to this call she gave instant heed, but we will let her tell of the genesis of this new departure in evangelism. She says:

"I had become deeply interested in prison work through my visit to San Quentin Prison. I had recognized there the hopelessness of the men and the great need of the preaching of an evangel of hope throughout the prisons of our country. At that time I was still with my husband in command of the Salvation Army. I should have found it impossible in that organization, governed as it is by arbitrary rule from a foreign country to start any such organization with freedom. The Volunteers of America, which is an entirely separate and different organization from the Salvation Army was started in March, 1895, and as one of its special objects we determined that the prison work should be undertaken if God should open a door."

One year after the organization of the Volunteers of America, Mrs. Booth was invited by the prison authorities to visit New York, where she met with great success. Of this visit Mrs. Booth writes:

"After the first conversions in Sing Sing, the men expressed themselves as very desirous of being enrolled in some kind of organization—hence the forming of the League which is now commonly known throughout the country as the Volunteer Prison League."

Persons, in becoming members of the League, must agree to the following rules or pledge.

1. To pray every morning and night.
2. To read the Day Book faithfully. (This book consists of a Scriptural selection for each day.)
3. To refrain from the use of bad language and abstain from the use of intoxicants.
4. To be faithful in observance of prison-rules and discipline so as to become an example of good conduct.
5. To earnestly cheer and encourage others in well-doing and right living, trying where it is possible to make new members for the League. Each man who joins the League is given a small white button on which is our blue star emblem and our motto, "Look Up and Hope." He also receives a certificate of membership.

Mrs. Booth's efforts have so far met with marked success. There are at present over 75,000 members of these Prison Leagues. Organizations exist in twenty-three prisons, located in eighteen states. It will be seen by this that not half of the state prisons have yet been reached, for no other reason than for want of time. The work already accomplished by this wonderful woman is without a parallel.

BATTLES DEATH WITH POST CARDS.

Kansas is going to try the post card in its campaign to improve the health of the people and prevent the spread of contagious and infectious diseases. Thousands of cards are being sent generally over the state containing some general health epigrams and advice which fit all ordinary human ills.

Here are some of the health epigrams:

Swat the fly!

An open window is better than an open grave.

Warm rooms have killed more people than ever froze to death.

Avoid patent medicines as you would a pestilence.

FROM MRS. A. F. HENSEY.

These verses are offered in memory of our beloved friend and faithful co-laborer, R. Ray Eldred, who, here in Congo Belge, entered into rest September 3, 1913.

Softly bear him and slow,
Our latest hero-saint.
To his narrow bed and low,
While our hearts are sad and faint.

Bury him here with psalms
Chanted by Afric's sons;
Bury him 'neath the palms
Where the swift Lokolo runs.

Ah, he was one who wore the armor well!
Bearing the Word that fears nor death nor hell,
Faced he right on into the battle's heat,
Scorning to name the coward word defeat.

Into the jaws of sin's dark hell, with song
Marched he, amid the vile and savage throng,
Lifting the Cross before their wond'ring sight,
Pointing the day-star of death's age-long night.

He was not one to reck the bitter cost
Of winning Christ these tribes sin-bound and lost—
Father and mother, sons, and native land
Left he uncounting, at his Lord's command.

Yet unto him a hundred-fold and more
Have these been multiplied, within the door
Of Africa's sad heart, where he laid down
At last the burden for the star-bright crown.

The race for the goal ultimate is run!
The good fight valorous at last is won!
Almost our eyes can pierce the far Unknown
And see him victor-glad, close by the Throne.

EDITORIAL

WHAT IS IMPORTANT NEWS?

IT IS instructive to compare on any morning the headlines of the several daily papers in a city and to judge of the judgment of the several editors. Sometimes it will be seen that they all agree as to the most important event of the day. In each of the issues it will appear at the top of the right hand column on the front page. But rarely is there unanimity. What is front page news for one editor goes on the inside in another's estimate of importance. It would be a good thing if editors would seek to give greater prominence not to the incidents of passing importance, whose prominence makes the daily paper a series of explosions, but to find the incidents of really true importance.

"The most noteworthy difference," says the new Unpopular Review, "between European and American Journalism, as regards news, is the prominence we give to what is technically called the news of the day. Let a great liner be sunk or saved and all the newspapers, even the most conservative print page on page of repetition, story or comment, playing on the emotions from every point of view. No European paper would feature even the most affecting news on any such scale. Doubtless our American practice is a natural enough tribute from the editors to the mobility of our sympathies, not to say the flightiness of our minds. What the enthralled reader does not realize is that to provide him with the complete modulated thrill of the day scores of important items of routine news have been curtailed to meaningless epitome or wholly suppressed."

"I NEVER HAVE."

SERMONS have become popular from the text of Peter's answer to the voice from heaven, "Not so, Lord, for I never have." Most of the sermons, doubtless, have been wise and good. Some things, however, are to be held in mind.

It was altogether to Peter's credit that up to that time he had never eaten anything that according to the Jewish system was accounted common or unclean. That was the only standard by which, until then, he had any moral right to judge of his own conduct. An intelligent conservatism is very precious. A habit founded on conscience is a blessing. If you are asked to drink liquor or to gamble, you are under no obligation to enter then and there upon all the reasons which lie back of your refusal. It is enough to say that you are not accustomed to these indulgences. You will go abroad some day, and will be asked to drink beer in Germany and wine in Italy. Your hosts will be good people who could not possibly understand your refusal. Wine and beer to them are as tea and coffee to Americans. The guest is under no obligation to preach to them, nor on the other hand is he under the slightest obligation to drink. The theory of some travelers that one must drink wine and beer in Europe is absurd. It is not necessary. All one need do is decline, and say that it is not according to his custom. If they ask him further he may give his reasons, but there is no obligation on either side. It is enough that he decline courteously and say that it is his custom, based on a conscientious reason, to abstain from all liquor. They may not understand his scruples but they will understand that some reason that seems to him a good one lies back of his custom. Often the testimony of a habit, deliberately formed, and conscientiously adhered to, is the most effective testimony.

It is to be remembered that Peter was a Christian, and a very good, and on the whole, a very consistent one. He probably was the most open-minded man among the twelve. It might even be said that he probably was the only one on whom it was safe to try the experiment of the sheet let down from heaven. It is altogether possible that some of the twelve would have been horrified at the suggestion, and that others would have come down to lunch saying, "I had a very strange dream; is lunch ready?" And that would have been the end of it.

There come times when God wants Christians to do some good things they have never done before.

There are ways in which God lets down sheets with suggestions to Christians that they take up new duties.

Often these suggestions come to Christians who already are doing fairly well, but who from this time on ought to do better.

When that time and message come, it is no suitable answer to God, "Not so, Lord, for I never have."

It would be a good thing for every Christian who reads this editorial to think over the various activities in his own church that need to be strengthened, and try to discover in which of them God wants some Christian to do a new thing.

This editorial is a sheet let down from heaven with a suggestion to reverent souls.

What good thing is there which you ought to do for Christ and the Church?

DENOMINATIONAL TITLES AS THEY REALLY ARE.

BISHOP WILLIAMS of Detroit, according to an exchange, illustrates for his Episcopalian friends the absurdity of carrying American denominational distinctions into China or other mission fields, by citing the result of the attempt to translate "Protestant Episcopal" into the Chinese tongue. The title which sounds so dignified in English turns in Chinese to the disconcerting literalness of the "Church of the Kicking Overseers." No wonder "change of name" has been popular in China. Presbyterianism hardly fares better, for the best China can do with "Presbyterian" as a church name is to translate it "Church Ruled by Old Men."

A UNION CHURCH.

EDITOR THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY:

FOR a year past I have been preaching at a point three and a half miles north of Daytona. We meet in a house erected as a union meeting place. The time has come when the people are demanding organization. As they see it, they cannot unite on any one of the nine plans represented in the communiity. I have made several suggestions regarding the matter, and I am pleased to tell you that nearly all of my suggestions are being carried out. They are requesting me to preach to them every evening next week, presenting the church from the New Testament point of view, looking toward organization on the following Lord's Day afternoon. Already several have asked for immersion, and only one person seeks to be sprinkled, and the M. E. pastor of Daytona promises to perform that office. They will want me to continue as pastor for them, just as I have been for the past year.

My object in coming to you is that you may give me some suggestions as to procedure and organization. Your immediate attention to this will be greatly appreciated. I will have about twenty names to send you in a few days; names of persons to receive The Century.

Bear in mind, please, that there are nine bodies represented among those who seek a church organization. I will appreciate your help.

S. L. Jackson.

We feel like heartily congratulating any man whose Christian ministry finds a field like this for its exercise. No denomintional fetters to bind him! No dogmas that he must preach! No traditions that he must conform to! Only the simple message of the gospel to tell and the love and power of God to demonstrate in practical service! Would that every pulpit were so placed!

We have no counsel to give except to keep straight on in the good way in which the work has been begun. There are two good models for procedure in such a situation. One is the New Testament and the early church, the other is Thomas Campbell's Declaration and Address and the Christian Association of Western Pennsylvania.

Mr. Jackson is evidently already consciously following the New Testament. That authority makes a very simple personal faith in Christ as the Savior and Lord the basis of fellowship, and gives us many examples of the prompt initiation into the Church of those confessing such a faith. This initiation, or baptism as it is called in the New Testament, was always performed by means of the physical act of immersion in water which then was and is yet the most appropriate outward symbol of the essential baptismal act. Moreover, it is accepted without controversy by all Christians, and furnishes, therefore, a basis of agreement for such an undenominational church as is desired in the situation described above.

A CONSTRUCTIVE WEEKLY

As to organization, we would suggest to follow the New Testament in providing a very simple one. If there is difference of opinion as to the name of officers let it be borne in mind that the different words, elder, bishop and pastor were used in Jewish, Greek and Roman communities, respectively, to denominate the same officer. It is not the name that is important but the function and the service. The New Testament organization was not a hard and fast thing; it was elastic and pragmatic. So should this organization be devised to meet the real needs of the community.

Keep the church close to the community. There is where its real life is. Its real life is not in its connection with a denomination. A denominational connection will hurt its real life, as it hurts the essential life of any church. Let it find its ecclesiastical affiliations with all other churches of Christ in its immediate community, on the basis of common aims and service rather than on the basis of common creed or polity or ritual, as denominational churches do.

And let it keep its door wide open to receive into its fellowship everyone whom Christ has received into his Church, embodying thus the earlier but soon forgotten ideal of Alexander Campbell to open the door of the church as wide as the gate of heaven.

Thus it will be a true church of Christ.

SHORT PASTORATES AND MINISTERS' CHILDREN.

IN a thoughtful article in The Forum some months ago Rev. E. M. Chapman reviewed the extravagant fulsomeness of Kittredge's biography of Robert G. Ingersoll, and himself attempted some estimate of Ingersoll's influence.

Particularly he brings into the light the lack of any adequate historic sense on the part of Colonel Ingersoll, his failure in perspective, and inability to understand historic development. In the earlier part of his article, in a biographical outline, he calls attention to the detachment of Ingersoll as a result of his boyhood experience.

The main features of Ingersoll's life must now be sketched. He was born in Dresden New York August 11, 1833, to the Rev. John Ingersoll and his wife, Mary Livingston. The father was a Congregational minister who spent a rather peripatetic life in the service of many churches, most of them Presbyterian. He was an earnest man; well educated, too, and always a reader; a rigorous but by no means cruel disciplinarian in his home, his son bearing witness that he was a kind and loving man, and that there was no sacrifice he would not and did not gladly make for his family. The mother seems to have been a woman of force, character and charm; but she died when Robert was still an infant, and her influence upon his career was that of an ideal and a memory. She bore five children, two girls and three boys, of whom Robert was the youngest. The elder Ingersoll was an evangelist and a militant abolitionist. It was natural under these circumstances that he should have passed on from Dresden soon after his son's birth, to New York, where he acted as co-pastor with the celebrated Finney and where Robert was baptized; then to Cazenovia; then to Belleville, and later to Oberlin. Later still he seems to have preached in Wisconsin, Michigan, Indiana and Kentucky. The family was thus of the pioneer type and rootless so far as local habitation went. How profoundly this peripatetic habit of life and mind has influenced American political and social history is yet but partially understood. It is not merely the nomad habit in actual experience; it is quite as really the will and expectation of change that has entered deep into the constitution of multitudes of Americans, making them as eager, resourceful, and self-reliant as they are impatient, bumptious, and extravagant. No more competent people for the devising of practicable means for getting on and bringing things hastily to pass has probably ever lived; but the defects of wastefulness, intolerance of experience, and a disrespect for the past that frequently develops into a fundamental and pervasive irreverence, have followed close in the wake of these qualities. Ingersoll admirably illustrates this. His education was of the most informal and desultory character, gained partly from such schools as the family wanderings brought within range, gleaned in some measure from his father, and supplemented by pretty wide general reading. As a recent critic has observed, he was a "completely uprooted man."

This suggests an interesting question. What, logically, is the result of the short pastorate in its influence upon the family of the minister?

DEMOCRATIC CONVENTIONS.

SOCIETIES OR THE CHURCH ITSELF.

THERE are two ways by which the democratic authority resident in local churches may be exercised to control the great catholic enterprises of missions, benevolence, education and social reconstruction.

We may first consider the method utilized for fifty years by the Disciples of Christ. A half century ago the churches, as churches, were indifferent to these great common tasks. But some individuals were not indifferent. They saw the fields white for the harvest; they heard the Master's call for workers, and banded together in volunteer societies to educate the churches, to secure funds and workers and to administer the tasks according to their best wisdom.

These societies are technically independent of the churches as churches, but they are in fact wholly dependent for their support upon the favor with which the churches regard their administration of their several tasks. In the main the work of these societies has been most satisfactory to the churches. They have been the means of arousing interest, conveying information and virtually creating a conscience among the Disciples on the great enterprises for which they asked our gifts.

But societies organized by individuals are neither the Scriptural nor the democratic way, nor, in the long run, the most effective way, of carrying on the business of benevolence, missions and social reconstruction. They came into being as a temporary expedient because of the hardness of the Church's heart.

The control of a society by the churches is expressed not by instructions duly deliberated upon, but by the crass and perilous method of withholding gifts from its treasury.

The Church is the Scriptural and logical and truly democratic missionary society. To be that thing is the essential reason of the Church's existence. It has no other business. Missions and education and benevolence and the bringing in of a better social order—these tasks should engage not only the gifts but the deliberations of the churches. The churches have no right to turn their tasks over to corporate societies, no matter how well such societies may perform them. Even though the administration of these tasks by the churches be not in specific instances so expert as a society's administration, in the long run the moral value of the churches' engaging directly in the tasks is of immeasurable importance.

The societies were the schoolmaster to bring the churches to the New Testament way of doing their work.

The organization of the General Convention, representative of the churches of Christ, can have no other interpretation, so far as The Christian Century's eyes can see, than as the assumption of their New Testament responsibility by the churches themselves, a responsibility which they did not feel a half century ago, but which, through the long instruction and inspiration of the societies, they have come to feel and to acknowledge.

If there is any other substantial and worthy task upon the doing of which an august convention, representing the sovereign churches of Christ, may make it worth while to come together, except these educational, missionary and benevolent tasks now administered by independent societies, we will be grateful to any one who will point it out to our readers.

The absurdity of the resolution in which the Toronto convention disavowed for itself and its sucessors! any authority over the societies save the right to give them advice! grows more apparent as we analyze the situation more deeply.

Lest some uninformed reader should imagine that the societies were in any way responsible for that resolution, it should be stated plainly that they had nothing to do with it. There is not a society among us, nor a secretary, that would not look with almost Simeon-like ecstacy upon a movement whereby the churches themselves should become responsible for and actually undertake the administration of their great unselfish and constructive tasks.

Every society would be prompt to say, "Let thy servant depart in peace! We have seen Thy glory!"

AT THE END OF THE DAY

AT HOME WITH A GUEST.

EDITOR THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY:

MANY thoughts have been burning in our hearts as, gathered around the evening lamp, we spent the hours at the end of this day in eager conversation. It was one of those evenings when by common though unconscious consent every member of the household seemed drawn to the hearthstone—or what passes for a hearthstone in these degenerate days of housebuilding.

Evenings like these never pass out of our memory, especially if there has been present a guest whose admittance to the intimate circle of our home serves, quite apart from his contribution to the talk, as a kind of marker in our minds, and we refer back to it in after months and years as "the evening when Mr. So and So was with us."

This evening we had such a guest, a distinguished leader in the Church, a man who knows all the other leaders and who talked with us about them and about the problems and prospects of our Church-life, and interpreted to us from a new point of view the happenings and tendencies of our brotherhood.

We were all charmed and quickened in our thought by his words and his manner. When the dinner was but half done I could see that my intention to take our guest off to my study for our talk would have to be revised, for the other members of the family were finding him and the subjects that his presence naturally suggested so interesting that I knew it would be disappointing to them (and, it occurs to me now, to him, too!) to keep him to myself. And right glad am I that I did not.

We talked all the evening about the Disciples of Christ, about their place in the Christian world of today, about their teachings, the changes they have undergone, the deep-going reconstruction they are now passing through, the wrenching conflict of tendencies in their organized life, the forces that make for their disintegration, the forces that make for their unification, and so on and so on.

WE talked about the newspapers, the societies, the colleges, the Men and Millions Movement, the new General Convention, the Christian Union Commission—well it would seem that nothing related at all to the Disciples escaped us. We talked about persons, too: about our secretaries who lead our organized endeavors, about our college men, some of our pastors, the new generation of ministers just coming out of the seminaries, our missionaries, the men who have recently left us for other communions—my friend added several more to the list which I indicated several weeks ago had been compiled by another friend and myself—and about you editors also!

I think we talked more about our editors than about anybody else. Our emotions quickly passed through moods of indignation, pity and pride, while we discussed your craft, Mr. Editor.

A copy of the latest Christian Union Quarterly lay on the table and I opened it to an article by Rev. Robert Graham Frank on the question, "Are Denominational Papers a Help or Hindrance to Christian Union?" and read aloud this paragraph:

> Religious journals may give encouragement to the pioneers who are actually bringing about union in their respective local fields of work. We are sometimes led to wonder whether or not we really desire union! When it begins to come, there are always those who brand it as counterfeit, saying, "this is not the kind of union we want," and there are usually those who in the supposed interest of what they regard as real union do what they can to retard the progress of those intermediate steps which must be taken before the final goal can be reached. If Christian union ever comes, it will come by Christians in local communities learning to know and love one another until nothing but union will satisfy their hearts. There is a place of large usefulness for conferences, committees, discussions and friendly exchange of views, but the final scene of the union of Christendom will be in the thousands of local fields where Christians of various names live and work together.

OUR guest appeared to think that Mr. Frank had in that paragraph struck the nail squarely on the head. He told of visiting a church recently, composed of Baptists, Disciples and Congregationalists, a union church including practically all the Christian people of the community. It wore no denominational name; it set up no human creed, but the divine creed only, as a test of fellowship; it received all Christians into its membership by letters from all evangelical churches; it practiced immersion only in baptizing converts, yet it had been contemptuously referred to by a Baptist and a Disciple paper as a "hybrid" church. It had been made to feel its detachment, if not ostracism, by other churches and had been left alone to fight for the ideal which everybody else is engaged heroically in just talking about!

You will be grateful to my guest, Mr. Editor, to know that he spoke to the congregation of this church an interpretative and encouraging word. He told them that they must not think it strange when denominational papers showed scant sympathy for them, because as a rule the very life of these denominational papers depends upon their keeping intact the denominational organization. That was pretty plain talk, and I would not quote it here if I had not a pretty clear recollection of seeing a similar statement in The Christian Century some time ago.

OUR conversation became somewhat grave when we discussed the conflict of forces in our brotherhood. It is difficult to analyze the present situation so as to determine whether our pains are growing pains or something worse. Recently the forces of reaction have, by clever strategy, gained a point of temporary advantage. The adoption of what our guest called the "give away" resolutions at the Toronto convention last October has enabled the newspaper organ of reaction to rally its retreating forces for another stand.

It was an interested family group that followed the analysis of the general condition of our brotherhood. Our guest made us see that the present hour is a critical one in our history. He interpreted the Men and Millions Movement to us in such a way that we could see in it immense possibilities for progress, and likewise immense possibilities for crushing progress. "This movement," he said, "is the brotherhood in action. It is the whole brotherhood making an inventory of its educational, missionary and benevolent agencies and giving its means through a single treasury to support them all, the portion divided to each being determined by the claims of all the rest."

That is to say, every giver to this six million dollar fund will be giving to the whole round of our unselfish activities. Part of his gift will go to missions, home and foreign, part to benevolences of various sorts, and a part will be divided among more than twenty-five educational institutions on a basis agreed upon by a competent commission. The idealism of the movement as our friend interpreted it grew upon us. It will broaden the interest and enrich the heart of every one who participates in it.

I hope, therefore, that the privilege of designating gifts to this or that institution will not be too strongly emphasized by the leaders. We need just now to overcome the extreme individualism that has characterized and hindered us in the past. In my judgment the appeal of these united enterprises will call out much more money than the total fund collected by each institution or a considerable portion of the institutions working each "on its own hook" for gifts especially for itself.

Of course it is evident, as you have pointed out, Mr. Editor, in the editorial columns, that such a movement must not be launched in a partisan spirit nor by partisan hands. The men who propose to give great sums to such an enterprise must not imagine that their gifts, however large, can buy the convictions of our brotherhood or hush them even temporarily. I do not know the inwardness of the decision to omit the Disciples Divinity House from the list of beneficiaries, and our guest did not, though he strongly suspected that its omission was made the condition of a certain large gift or two. But I am sure that the whole brotherhood will see the injustice of such an exception, and that even the man who may have insisted upon the exception can be made to see, if not the injustice, at least the indiscretion, of an act which cannot but be interpreted as an attempt by means of money to crush the movement for higher education and progressive ideals among us.

These themes that lie so near our hearts absorbed us until a late hour. We shall read The Christian Century with increased eagerness and watch with more awareness the unfolding of events in our brotherhood on account of the fresh interpretations which this evening's talk has given them.

ROCHESTER CHURCHES WITH COMMON FRONT.

Seven churches of the northwestern section of Rochester, N. Y., have united for common warfare on the evils of the community. Two of these churches are Presbyterian, two Episcopal, one Methodist, one English Reform, and one Baptist. They began last year with a publicity campaign. First a general circular was distributed, talking with the people about the place of the church in their lives but saying nothing about any church in particular. Two weeks later another circular was distributed with a word about the local churches and bearing the picture of each under the motto, "Not Competitors but Coöperators." A few weeks later the people were asked to resort to the church of their neighborhood, regardless of whether their membership was there or not and a booklet was distributed describing the work of each church in some detail. Union mass meetings, simultaneous revival services, and so forth have followed. There is a "Federated Men's League of the Northwest Churches" which is an important civic factor.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH AND SOCIAL SERVICE.

"Is the Presbyterian Church for Social Service?" is the question Dr. Charles Stelze asks and attempts to answer in a recent issue of The Continent. Closing his article, Dr. Stelzle writes:

For ten years the Prsebyterian Church has been given the credit of being the most advanced of the denominations in social service in general, and in its attitude toward the workingman and his problem. From this place of leadership the church is on the point of falling back into a minor position. Will it consent to that? This question must be squarely faced during the coming year by the entire church, and the discussion will undoubtedly culminate in definite action at the next meeting of the General Assembly in May in Chicago.

Probably for the first time the Presbyterians of the United States will in this decision be compelled to confront the question of real social service. They will be compelled to deal with it not from the standpoint of mere "sociability." The commissioners will be called upon to say whether or not they will stand for complete social and economic justice—which may mean blood and sweat and sacrifice and suffering. It will involve a program that cannot be carried out merely by the passing of resolutions, but will demand the actual doing of bigger and better things than have yet been attempted by any denomination.

METHODIST WEEKLY URGES CHRISTIAN UNION.

A recent number of the Northwestern Christian Advocate, published in Chicago, is noteworthy for the amount of Christian union teaching and news it contains. An especially fine article by President Francis L. Strickland, of Simpson (Ia.) College, is included. President Strickland discusses "The Specific for Sectarianism," and the key note of the article is struck in the following paragraph:

Now there is a very close relation between modern higher education and the acquiring of this largeness of view and breadth of spirit. Indeed it would not be far from the truth to affirm that modern Christian scholarship is the only way out. Education, therefore, is the specific for sectarianism. There is nothing which is keeping Christian young men of broad education out of the ministry today to compare with the feeling most of them have that the well-trained man will too often find his hands tied by conditions which he will be obliged to face in his church. It will take time to realize the curative power of higher Christian education as a specific for sectarianism, but it will cure. Every well-trained, broad-minded worker who enters the service of the church with the higher vision of Christ's gospel for the modern world, is a factor in helping to end the reign of denominational narrowness.

The Editor of the Northwestern Christian Advocate, commenting on the article, says:

In this issue under the title, "The Specific for Sectarianism," President Strickland treats a vital theme in a discriminating fashion. The picture he gives of a small town overburdened with half-nourished churches can be duplicated in hundreds of communities. It is the most pathetic, the most distressing fact that confronts Protestantism today. We preach the spirit of at-one-ment between the denominations; we discover that beneath the veneer of denominational nomenclature there does exist the body of truth that all possess. Occasionally the congregations of two churches are possessed of sufficient consciousness of this oneness of spirit to forget all else in their desire to give tangible expression thereto. But these cases are far too rare to create an enthusiastic hope for a marked improvement soon.

The power to effect federation—or, better still, union—in such places where the elements are propitious rests largely with church leaders, particularly with pastors, declares the Advocate. More than once have we heard the story of how one deeply interested pastor solicited and secured the cooperation of a fellow pastor whose congregation had become weakened, and with his assistance led both congregations to see the folly of remaining in separate folds. The author's conclusion that the solution for sectarianism rests largely in an educated ministry is in accord with reason and experience.

PRESBYTERIANS IN SETTLEMENT WORK.

In one of the congested districts of New York City, filled mostly with foreigners from Southeastern Europe, the National Board of Presbyterian Home Missions, under the direction of the New York Presbytery, is doing a successful settlement work. One evening of the week is occupied with a social hour, another furnishes an open forum where all sorts of people discuss all sorts of topics. The board of education gives public lectures to assist the people in wholesome hygienic living. But the supreme aim is the cultivation of the positive Christian life. This is accomplished through the religious forum, midweek devotional meetings, the Sunday-school, and the Sunday evening preaching service.

NEW MOVE IN RELIGIOUS EDUCATION.

We learn from an exchange that Rev. Ernest A. Miller, a graduate of Toronto and Boston Universities, has been appointed director of religious education for the Methodist Episcopal churches of the Cleveland District, giving Cleveland and suburbs the honor of being the first to have a specialist to link school work with the church. The duties of the new official will be to increase efficiency in teaching, to grade Sunday-school lessons so they may be suited to children of all ages, and to train leaders of night schools where children and adults of foreign birth may learn the English language.

PASTOR RUSSELL STILL IN BUSINESS.

Pastor Russell, who has heretofore confined his activities in New York chiefly to the borough of Brooklyn, now announces an invasion of Manhattan. All the New York dailies have been furnished press notices announcing that the International Bible Students' Association (Russell's familiar alias) had purchased a theater in West 63rd Street near Broadway, which it is rather boastfully stated "cost several hundred thousand dollars." Here is being exhibited an elaborate film play called the "Photo Drama of Creation." This is presented every afternoon and night, free to all comers.

EVANGELISTS POPULAR IN ENGLAND.

After three months of continuous evangelistic services in Glasgow prior to the Christmas holidays, Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman and Charles M. Alexander were invited by the Glasgow committee cooperating with them to return there in March and conduct a mission for a month in the "Zoo" building, which will be seated to accommodate audiences of about 6,500.

PROTESTANTISM EXPLOITS HERSELF.

The Protestant churches of Washington, D. C., have recently held a great theater mass meeting, not to attack the Catholics but to explain to the public the great principles of Protestantism and its function in our society. The daily papers of the city gave generous space to the meeting and its utterances.

Disciples Table Talk

Dr. Ames Again at Harvard.

Dr. E. S. Ames, of Hyde Park Church and the University of Chicago, has just finished the first half of his second year's appointment as University Preacher at Harvard. He goes again in June for two weeks more of service. The duties of the University Preacher consist in daily sermons at the chapel exercises and Sunday sermons in the church, together with daily office hours for conference with students and members of the faculty upon religious and practical problems. During Dr. Ames' stay he also spoke at the chapel service of Wellesley College, and attended the National Philosophical Association meeting at New Haven, where he read a paper and spoke at Yale University. Last Sunday was spent in New York City with Disciple churches. During his absence the pulpit of Hyde Park Church has been filled by Vaughan Dabney of Yale University, Prof. C. M. Sharpe, Prof. H. L. Willett and C. C. Morrison.

Peter Ainslie En Route.

Peter Ainslie sent the following message to his flock, at Christian Temple, Baltimore, as he started on his journey abroad, on Christian Union "business:"

"On the Rotterdam—Two hours out of New York—Tuesday.

"My Dear Friends:

"With pleasant memory of the great services on Sunday, and your happy goodbyes, I am on a magnificent steamer bound for Europe. My travelling companions—Dr. Smyth, of New Haven, Conn., and Dr. Roberts, of Philadelphia—are with me. The day is bright and beautiful. The passenger group is not large. We have every indication of a delightful voyage. My blessing upon you for every good during 1914.

"Your servant in Christ Jesus,
"Peter Ainslie."

Mr. B. H. Melton will supply for Mr. Ainslie during his trip abroad.

Pastor Suggests Resolutions for Flock.

Roger T. Nooe, pastor at Frankfort, Ky., still believes in New Year's resolutions. In his church paper he suggests the following, to be adopted by the members of his church: "I will strive to be more faithful in my attendance upon the church services. I will not neglect the Sunday morning worship, for there is spread the table of our Lord and I want to remember his death and honor Him in this observance. I will attend the Sunday evening services, that I may close the Lord's Day in fellowship, worship and praise. I will come to prayer-meeting and profit by the opportunity this quiet hour affords for the deepening of the spiritual life. I will attend Sunday-school for the special study of God's word and for the example that It gives to others, especially to the young. In the attendance of these services it will be a joy to know that I am enlarging my own life, encouraging others to faithfulness, strengthening the hands of the pastor, and honoring Him, the giver of every good and perfect gift.

"Since it takes money to conduct my church as well as my home, and all that I have is from God, I will give during the coming year regularly and cheerfully. That the church may reach its highest efficiency, I will strive in every way to help it to adopt business methods. I will not give into the treasury of the church just what is left after all wishes and needs are gratified; I will think of the several calls for missions as opportunities and privileges, and I will give gladly and generously for the spread of the gospel throughout the world.

"I will cultivate the presence of God by reading His word daily and keeping a window open toward Jerusalem. I will trust Him more implicitly, getting rid of many a worry, many a fear. I will walk closer to Him, that I may not fall in the hour of temptation. I will guard my thoughts, for these leave their impress upon my life. I will be forgiving, for I need to be forgiven. I will serve rather than be served. I will be cheerful in appreciation of God's good mornings and the day's tasks and duties. In a word, I will to myself be true. I will keep an open heart toward all and walk humbly before God."

Columbia, Mo., Has Good Report.

The following facts and figures will give some notion of the work of the church in Columbia, Mo., during the year 1913: Amount given for current expense, $4,272.09; amount given for missions and benevolences, $1,885; amount given for repairs and improvements, $1,400; amount given for protracted meeting, miscellaneous expense, $1,338.41; total amount given by the church and its organizations, $8,895.50.

This church rejoices in the support of Dr. Jennie Fleming, Living Link in India. Amount given for her support is $600. An organization in the Sunday-school, known as "The Edith Circle," has just made in the past year, the concluding payments on a $450 piano for a Girls' School in Tokyo, Japan. Miss Edith Parker is a teacher in this school. The present enrollment of the Sunday-school is 725. It is a graded school and certificates of promotion are given school to another. The average offering per Sunday was $11.21 and the average attendance, 369. Number of additions to the church in the past year is 111; net increase in membership, 85. The present member- of the church is about 1,000. The church closes the year 1913 with all bills paid and a few dollars, not many, in the treasury. Madison A. Hart ministers to the Columbia church.

Sane Development in Michigan.

Nearly three years ago Frederick P. Arthur, then State Secretary of Michigan, with the keen foresight of a prophet saw the condition, as it existed, of that state spiritually considered, and lifted his voice and wielded his pen and caused to be published an article on "Insane Evangelism," that created a sensation and caused everybody to commence an inventory. The result of that "stock taking" showed in figures, that "did not lie," the real condition in the religious world—especially in Michigan. Large ingatherings were reported, from various quarters, in special, spasmodic, evangelistic effort, but when the "smoke of battle" cleared away and those who "tarried by the stuff" sent in a true report, it was evident that the numerical growth was insignificant, and the spiritual condition of the churches having experienced such violent exercise was below par. Actual reports, made up at the close of the missionary year, and marked in plain figures in the Year Book of the Disciples of Christ, indicated no advance in numbers. The total membership for the state stood at 8,000.

The present secretary, J. Frank Green, instituted a campaign of education along the line of saner evangelism, and laid special emphasis upon the importance of pastoral work. As a result, the office of the ministry has been exalted. The churches have grown in grace and liberality. The membership has increased by more than one-fourth. The growth has been permanent. The new members have been grafted in and have become vital parts—fruit-bearing branches. The present membership of Michigan churches totals 11,040 as compared to 8,000 only three years ago.

Quarterly Assembly of Chicago Churches.

The Quarterly Assembly of the Chicago Missionary Society will be held in First Methodist Church, in the loop, on Sunday afternoon, January 25. It is to be a Sunday-school gathering, with Robt. M. Hopkins as chief speaker. All churches and schools are urged to send large delegates to the rally if they cannot attend en masse.

Champaign Church Building Burns.

Report comes through the newspapers that University Place Church, Champaign, has suffered several thousand dollars loss on its building by fire.

Spokane University Takes Forward Look.

Great enthusiasm is manifested at Spokane University, with the inauguration of President I. N. McCash's administration. A $50,000 building is being planned for use this year. President McCash and the executive committee believe the opening of Spokane university is most auspicious. The opening of its doors in Spokane, the strategic railroad, industrial and commercial center of the Inland Empire, a municipality with 104,400 population and high school attendance of 2500, is timely. It is believed that the policy outlined by President McCash and enthusiastically endorsed by all who have been made acquainted with its details, that the calm, persistent working out of his plans for the university by the sane business method which eliminates all extravagant claims and fictitious pretentions will bring the value of university property and endowment to $500,000 in five years, with an attendance of 1,000 students under the efficient training of 50 competent professors and instructors.

The type of school maintained will be similar to Drake university, which stands for Christian education without sectarian or denominational prejudice. There is no attempt to change by its instruction the home faith of any of its students, yet there is every effort made to develop the threefold nature—physical, intellectual and moral—of each student.

The Spokesman-Review of Spokane, devotes a half page of a recent issue to a statement of the plans of Spokane University.

Lima, O., Reports.

At the annual meeting of Central Church, Lima, Ohio, the following facts and figures were reported:

There were forty-seven additions to the church during the year. The revised membership roll shows 534 resident members. The congregation contributed for all purposes, $7,347.75. There was a small deficit in the current expense fund. The Sunday-School is the biggest organization connected with the church.

The Ladies' Aid Society raised almost $1,000 last year. They have paid their pledge of $3,000 to the building fund in full. But they say they have no idea of letting up until the entire debt is paid. They will soon have the piano paid for.

University of Chicago Notes.

In his opening address as Roosevelt Professor at the University of Berlin on November 1 Professor Paul Shorey, head of the Department of Greek in the University of Chicago, spoke before a large audience on the subject of "The American and His Hopes." Among those present at the lecture was Prince August Wilhelm, who represented the German Emperor. The general subject of the series of lectures to be given at the University of Berlin by Professor Shorey is "Culture and Democracy in America," and he will also conduct a seminar in Aristotle's philosophy.

Sixty-five students from the University attended the sessions of the Student Volunteer Convention held in Kansas City from December 31 to January 4. They went by special train from Chicago on December 30.

The summaries at the close of the new Annual Register show that 6,802 different students were registered during the year ending with July 1 1913; that there were 1,883 students in the Graduate Schools, and that the total number of graduates from the University up to July 1, 1913, was 7,551. By far the most numerous class are the teachers, 3,287 in number; next comes the ministry with 618; and then, in order, law with 584, mercantile 455, medicine 348, literature 114, science 107, finance 76, manufacturing 53, agriculture 49, art 49, government 44, engineering 38, transportation 11, and 1,263 specify no occupation.

Plans are being considered at the University for the new women's building, to be presented to the University by Mr. La Verne Noyes, of Chicago, in memory of his wife. The building, which will include a gymnasium and club-house for the women of the University, will probably stand on the Midway in the block bounded on the east by Kimbark Avenue and on the west by Woodlawn Avenue. The cost of the building will be $300,000, and plans for its construction are now being prepared by the University architects.

A Memory of James Ware.

The report of the death of James Ware, for many years the leader in our missionary work in Shanghai, China, brings to mind a letter received from him under date of Oct. 25. He had at that time just returned to his work from a serious operation in this city. Neither the surgeons nor his own family expected his recovery. Yet with characteristic optimism he wrote: "I shall be glad of a continued interest in your prayers in my behalf, and thanksgiving also for what the Lord has done for me, and that He may raise me up again to a newness of service, which I believe He is going to do. I am still very weak, but hope this winter to be able to do some quiet work among our native Christians, perhaps in my own home."

In and Around Atlanta

LOOKING FORWARD TO THE 1914 CONVENTION.

The stranger coming into Atlanta is immediately impressed with the hustle and bustle of its inhabitants. The Eastern folks say "why, this reminds us of New York," the Western fellows say, "why, this reminds us of Chicago or Kansas City," and the Southern Colonel says, "why, this is certainly good old Atlanta, and I'm glad I'm within her gates." But what makes Atlanta the great metropolis of the South? It's because of the intense loyalty of her citizens for one another and above all for the city. It's what the native Atlantian calls "Atlanta Spirit." Here's an example of it: Within nine hours over $75,000 was raised for the entertainment of the great Shriners (May) 1914 Convention, and it was no trouble when one considers that about one-half the male population of Atlanta are Shriners. $250,000 was raised within one month by Atlanta to reestablish the Oglesthorpe University, which before the war between the states was one of the great institutes of the South. It's no trouble for Atlanta people to raise money, when Atlanta's reputation is at stake. No one in Atlanta would think of allowing the reputation of their beloved city to suffer. Is it any wonder then that Atlanta has grown in bounds and leaps since the great Civil War? This is the style of city that will entertain the great Convention of the Disciples in 1914. Already preparations are being made for this convention and when the people composing this convention begin to arrive they will find Atlanta ready for them with open arms. The hospitality of the South is praised far and wide and it will be in evidence when this convention date arrives.

Who has not heard of "Uncle Remus?" How many know that Atlanta was the home of Joel Chandler Harris (Uncle Remus). His home has been bought by an organization in Atlanta, and it has now been turned into a sort of "rest cottage." It's located on Gordon street in the West End, not very far from our West End church. Every one loves Uncle Remus, for he was a kind and good man.

Who has not read the quaint and humorous writings of Frank Stanton's, in the Daily Constitution? Frank still lives, and writes his droll articles in the Constitution. He's a national character, and perhaps the greatest mimic of country life in America.

Then Atlanta has a Chief of Police, who does things. Afraid of nothing. It's Chief Beavers. When he was elected Chief of Police he told the powers that be, if they had any laws which they did not wish enforced they had better take them off the Statute Books, for all there was on the books would be enforced. They laughed at the good Chief, but he's cleaned up Atlanta. The lawless element shake their fists under the Chief's nose, but he goes right on, and does his duty; he's fearless and they all fear him. This is the man who while a patrolman a number of years ago, when a negro who had run amuck in Pittsburg, a negro settlement, was barricaded in a cabin, with gun and whiskey, and had wounded several citizens and police, walked up the front walk of this cabin, broke open the door and brought the negro out, although he was badly wounded. Fear is not in his make-up. That's the kind of a man who is Chief of Police of Atlanta.

Then who has not heard of Governor Slaton? A man so universally loved that every one calls him "Jack Slaton!" He has promised if he lives, to address the convention, because he loves to have good people the guests of dear old Atlanta. Governor Jack Slaton is a Sunday-school man himself, teaching a large class of young ladies at the Trinity Methodist. Governor Jack Slaton will make you welcome, for he loves his fellow men.

Then the sights around Atlanta. Who, even though he has never been in Atlanta, has not heard of Whitehall and Peachtree streets, as well as Ponce de Leon and St. Charles avenues? Then the battlefields around Atlanta, where your fathers fought in the Civil War; Fort McPhearson, the Federal Prison, the State Capitol; the great sky scrapers which have helped largely to make Atlanta famous, her many hotels, her Auditorium, which contains the second largest pipe organ in the country; her Sunday-school which broke the world's record for a time, and that Sunday-school belongs to your own good brotherhood. Oh, Atlanta is full of good and wonderful sights; we, of Atlanta, swear by her; we dote on her; and no city on earth is as dear to us as is our own beloved Atlanta. Come to the great convention in October, 1914, and Atlanta will show you she knows how to be the gracious and kind host.

Des Moines Church Makes Remarkable Record

There is no church among the Disciples that stands for permanent, sane development, any more than the University Place Church, Des Moines, to which Chas. S. Medbury ministers. But some of the facts and figures embodied in the "Tenth Annual Report" sound almost like some of the telegrams of some of the evangelists of the brotherhood. A truly remarkable growth has characterized this church during the years.

A total of 2,412 persons have entered the fellowship from other Christian relationships during the past ten years, 184 of these during the past year; 1,066 have come by confession and baptism. The "living roll" of today numbers 2,766, of these approximately 2,000 being resident members. Out of the 2,766 less than 500 were members ten years ago.

An official board of 132 men and women minister to the needs of the church. The Sunday-school employs seventy-five officers, department superintendents and teachers. The Christian Woman's Board of Missions has on its roll 330 persons; the Belle Bonnett Missionary Society, 90; the Burgess Missionary Circle, forty-two. The Ladies Aid Society, during the past year, nas paid $650 on their building pledge.

The several Endeavor organizations have memberships of 126, seventy-seven, fifty-three, seventy-five and 187.

From a pledge list of about ninety-two dollars, January 1, 1904, the church finances have grown to a present list of more than $200 per week.

Besides the missionary offerings of other organizations, the missionary gifts of church and Sunday-school run as follows:

JOINT OFFERINGS OF CHURCH AND SCHOOL.
Foreign Missions		$1,200.00
Home Missions (The National Field)
American Christian Missionary Society	$700.00
Board of Church Extension	200.00
Board of Ministerial Relief	100.00
National Benevolences	100.00
Negro Education and Evangelization	100.00	1,200.00
Iowa State Missions....	300.00
City Missions 300.00		600.00
Total Budget		$3,000.00

Dr. Medbury closes his inspiring message to his church with the following "last word:"

"Ten happy years have closed. Other years have opened, and by your love and honor the household that you welcomed in 1904 continues in its life among you and my own ministry goes on. In opening word today I tried to voice my gratitude, our gratitude. Perhaps little remains to say and yet I cannot withhold that little. You must pass judgment upon the service rendered. Only this I know, and I can say it before our God without shame. I have tried to render worthy service. I have done what I could. You are not as conscious of mistakes as I am. You cannot count up as many things neglected as I can. Nor, on the other hand, can you feel my sorrow in these mistakes or my burden in these neglects. But you do not wish me to try to explain anything. You are good enough to take me at my word and grant that I have tried. Nor as to the future is there anything to promise, save this, that I shall not withhold from you one single thing I have or am. The work is my very life. It is joy to give it all. You have called me, in great kindness, to an indefinite period of service. None of us knows today what length of time that may mean. As I have said in smaller circles, I am standing at a day in my life that thrills me through and through. Ten or twelve unpurchaseable years lie on before me that should yield my life's best service to the Lord and to the world. Later years, if granted, should be precious, but not of the aggressiveness on the one hand or the daily pressure on the other. It will be mine then to hold up others hands. It is mine now, a holy privilege, to grapple with the glorious task myself. And moved profoundly by your affection and loyalty in relation to me and mine, and by your devotion to God, and thrilled by the possibilities of your field of strategic touch with the wide, wide world, I want to say to you today, from the deepest depths of my heart, that these best years of mine are yours, to the day that our common thought decrees that the cause we love better than we love each other would be advanced by other leadership."

The First Church at Charlevoi, Penn., reports 49 accessions to the church. Eugene N. Duty is the pastor.

*Loss.

In this quarter of last year, there were 73 names on our roll and the total amount of pensions paid was $3,806.13. This year the circle has grown to 101 and the payments to $5,163, an increase of $1,356.87. All the veterans who are accepted are real heroes of the cross and in actual want. We cannot discriminate among them, but must provide for all.

The loss in receipts from the churches is only temporary, we believe, and due partly to the third Sunday of December coming later this year than last, but principally to the large number of churches changing to the budget plan. Where the day was observed more thorough preparation was made and a longer time is needed to gather up the results.

We believe this is a true explanation, but we are sure that explanations will not buy fuel and food. We depend upon those who look after the offerings to be both prompt and faithful in making their remittances.

Breaking Up Denominational Barriers

A Sign of the Times, From Texas.

BY P. J. RICE.

The El Paso Morning Times, under date of Jan. 1, 1914, published the following announcement:

"Lydia Patterson Institute, on the corner of Third and Florence streets, will be open to the public January 1, from 2:00 to 5:00 p.m., and all who desire are most cordially invited to visit and look through the building between the hours mentioned. This beautiful building was erected and donated to the M. E. Church, South, by Mr. Millard Patterson, in memory of his sainted wife who is affectionately remembered by many people of this city. There will be no services."

OF GENERAL INTEREST.

This announcement would not be of general interest save for a single reason, namely: Mr. Millard Patterson, the donor of the institute, is an elder in the First Christian Church of this city. He is a Disciple of the old Missouri type, from which state he came to this south-western country many years ago. He is a man of fixed views and intense temperament and yet he has given to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, a building which cost approximately $50,000, to be used for teaching and training of Mexican boys, many of whom it is confidently hoped will devote their lives to the ministry of the Word among their own people. The primary motive prompting this unique donation is the fact that Mrs. Patterson, deceased wife of the donor, whose name the institute bears, was, during all her life, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; she was devoted to her church and interested in the uplift of the Mexican people with whom she came in contact here in this border city. The building is intended as a loving tribute to her memory, and it is, indeed, a fitting and worthy monument. Notwithstanding this fact, the donation of this equipment is also an indication of the broader Christian sympathies which are gradually coming to possess us all. It is a forcast of the time when men will be broad enough and charitable enough to recognize not only Christian status of people belonging to other communions than their own, but will recognize also their competency to instruct the young in the fundamentals of our faith and thus prepare them for the Christian ministry. The gift in no sense betokens any disesteem on the part of Mr. Patterson for his own people. While he is not a rich man as the modern world counts riches, he is possessed of a considerable fortune and loves to use his means for the advancement of the Kingdom of God. For more than a quarter of a century he has been the mainstay, financially, of the church of which he is a member, and he still gives very liberally toward its support; he also gives liberally to all of our missionary, benevolent and educational enterprises and follows intelligently the vicissitudes of the Disciples movement. He is a very modest man and, doubtless, would much prefer that nothing be said about the donation of the building above mentioned. Indeed, until about a month or six weeks ago his nearest friends knew nothing of his intentions in this regard and the city at large was wholly ignorant of the sources from which the funds were coming for the erection of the institute until the publication of the above notice.

The First Christian Church of this city greatly rejoices in the liberality of heart and purse which one of its honored members has thus displayed. Probably no country in the world is more in need of missionaries than the Republic of Mexico. Priest ridden and war driven as it is, one can not but feel the supreme urgency of missionary activity among its people. Just at the present the doors of opportunity are pretty nearly closed, but it is more than likely that after the present strife is ended the doors will be thrown open more widely than ever. The evangelization of the Mexican people can not be accomplished in a day; it will take generations of patient plodding ministries to bring the masses of Mexicans to any considerable appreciation of the Gospel of Christ. In such institutions as the one Mr. Patterson has provided, the foundations for this work are being laid and we who know the situation greatly rejoice.

U. OF I AND COUNTRY MINISTERS.

In connection with the annual "Short Course" of the College of Agriculture of the University of Illinois there has been arranged a two days institute on "The Country Church." The dates are January 26 and 27. Some of the special lecturers are Dean Eugene Davenport of the College of Agriculture, Rev. Matthew B. McNutt, of the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions, C. J. Galpin, Professor of Rural Sociology at the University of Wisconsin, Miss Mabel Carney, Leader of the Country Life Movement in Illinois, and others. There will also be present about a dozen ministers of various denominations who are actually making conspicuous successes of country pastorates. They will relate their experiences at informal conferences.

A GREAT AND POPULAR CHURCH MUSIC BOOK

The New Praise Hymnal

EDITED BY GILBERT J. ELLIS AND J. H. FILLMORE

There is no equipment of the church more vitally related to its spiritual development and growth than the kind of hymnal it uses. In other words, a church makes no better investment than the purchase of a good hymnal. It is a serious mistake to buy an ordinary gospel song book for use on the Lord's Day and the Wednesday evening prayer services. Such books cheapen the worship.

The New Praise Hymnal comes as near being the ideal church hymnal for the present day as could well be conceived. It is a handsome book, dignified in appearance and make-up. It embraces in its contents as nearly everything demanded to-day as could be gotten into a book of 600 pages.

The New Praise Hymnal is practical in every way; everything in it is available for use in the average congregation. It contains also what is used by the most advanced churches.

The setting of the hymns and music is engaging to the eye and pleasant to read and sing.

It is a book that grows in favor as it is used. New beauties are discovered from time to time as its pages are tested by use. The hymns and tunes of the church universal are found in The New Praise Hymnal, also the best available Gospel Songs that the modern church has found to be necessary to its various activities.

The New Praise Hymnal is widely used in our churches. We believe it to be the favorite book of the church.

DARKNESS AND LIGHT.

International Uniform Lesson for Feb. 8.

Luke 11:14-26, 33-36. Memory Verse, 23.

Golden Text.—Look therefore whether the light that is in thee be not darkness.—Luke 11:35.

American Standard Bible.

(14) And he was casting out a demon that was dumb. And it came to pass, when the demon was gone out, the dumb man spake; and the multitudes marveled. (15) But some of them said, By Beelzebub the prince of the demons casteth he out demons. (16) And others, trying him, sought of him a sign from heaven. (17) But he, knowing their thoughts, said unto them, Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation; and a house divided against a house falleth. (18) And if Satan also is divided against himself, how shall his kingdom stand; because ye say that I cast out demons by Beelzebub. (19) And if I by Beelzebub cast out demons, by whom do your sons cast them out? therefore shall they be your judges. (20) But if I by the finger of God cast out demons, then is the kingdom of God come upon you. (21) When the strong man fully armed guardeth his own court, his goods are in peace: (22) but when a stronger than he shall come upon him, and overcome him, he taketh from him his whole armor wherein he trusted, and divideth his spoils. (23) He that is not with me is against me: and he that gathereth not with me scattereth. (24) The unclean spirit when he is gone out of the man, passeth through waterless places, seeking rest, and finding none, he saith, I will turn back unto my house whence I came out. (25) And when he is come, he findeth it swept and garnished. (26) Then goeth he, and taketh to him seven other spirits more evil than himself; and they enter in and dwell there: and the last state of that man becometh worse than the first.

(33) No man, when he hath lighted a lamp, putteth it in a cellar, neither under the bushel, but on the stand, that they which enter in may see the light. (34) The lamp of thy body is thine eyes; when thine eye is single, thy whole body also is full of light; but when it is evil, thy body also is full of darkness. (35) Look therefore whether the light that is in thee be not darkness. (36) If therefore thy whole body be full of light, having no part dark, it shall be wholly full of light, as when the lamp with its bright shining doth give thee light.

Verse by Verse.

v. 14. Casting out a demon: This power was used by Jesus on other occasions.

v. 15-16. Beelzebub: They ascribed his miracle-working power to Satan. Sign from heavens: They sought some spectacular proof that it was from God.

v. 17. Knowing their thoughts: He knew the insincerity of their assertion.

v. 18. Satan: This is the Hebrew word.

v. 19. By whom, etc.: The Pharisees claimed to cast out demons. Jesus answered their insincere charge, by inquiring by whom their followers cast out demons.

v. 20. Finger of God: Power of God. Then is the kingdom of God come: Jesus is indicating his Messiahship.

v. 21-22. When the strong, etc.: Here he points out that his power is greater than that of Satan.

v. 23. He that is not with me: There is no neutrality in this conflict.

v. 24-26. Prof. Francis Peabody says this parable emphasizes the peril of emptiness. The creation of a vacuum in the soul is not sufficient. Moral reform must come by substitution.

v. 33. When he hath lighted a lamp, etc.: The purpose of light is to light.

v. 34-36. When thine eye is single: The "single eye" is the pure eye; it is the clear-seeing eye. Look, therefore: Be careful lest you lose the little light which you now possess.

At the Heart of the Lesson.

By A. Z. Conrad.

Of one thing there was no question, viz., the actual eviction of evil spirits. Jesus mastered all malignity. No disease, not even death could defeat him. He met every challenge and left the field with a defeated antagonist. He never wavered in the presence of any foe. He willed and won. Enemies and friends alike witnessed and recognized his power. Demoniacal possession was not defined or explained, it was attacked. The program of Jesus was not explanation, it was expulsion. In his teaching and doing Jesus assumes the fact of a kingdom of evil. He concedes the truth of demoniacal possession. He clearly accepted the fact of a principal or chief of the confederacy of evil. He finds in evil spirits the source and secret of the world's undoing.

There is not the slightest reason to believe that Jesus was merely accommodating himself in language to the prejudices and superstition of his day. He acted with sincerity always, and plainly declared that he was dealing with invisible personalities called evil spirits. Repeatedly he addressed himself to the distinct work of evicting demons.

Sometime between October and the time of the last passover Jesus was on his way to Jerusalem. The church authorities at Jerusalem were extremely jealous of his popularity and were at their wits' end to find a plausible reason to destroy him. Appointed emissaries were watching him daily. His wonderful works of healing and his successful eviction of demons they could not deny and did not attempt to. The miracle of eviction in this particular instance was absolutely unchallenged. There was no doubt as to the fact.

DESTRUCTIVE CRITICISM.

Where facts are opposed to purpose and desire, there is always a way to challenge their origin and motive. The spirit of antagonism to supernatural revelation must find some way to nullify the influence of it. Compelled to accept the fact, the Jerusalem critics make the bold and infamous accusation that Jesus was in league with the very spirits he was evicting. Beelzebub was the heathen god of Ekron as we are told in II Kings, 1:3. A Jewish legend made him the prince of evil spirits. Angered because they could not deny the marvelous power of the popular Galilean Rabbi, his critics take this method of discrediting him. It is astonishing to what ridiculous absurdities the spirit of destructive criticism leads men. When truth is approached either in the Person or the teaching of Jesus with violent prejudice and with predetermination to bring it down to the common level of ordinary human thought, there will be scant courtesy shown to anybody or anything that stands in the way.

SUPERFLUOUS SIGNS.

Ver. 16. "Others tempting him sought of him a sign from heaven." The evidential value of miracles is not to be questioned. But miracles are incapable of convincing those who have prejudiced all statement and all action. You cannot convince one who has settled the case independently of all evidence. That is why no amount of evidence avails for the opponents of Gospel revelation. For the open mind and the responsive heart miracles are a precious seal of the reality of the supernatural. They authenticate the doings and sayings of Jesus. Though they all had beneficent purpose they were intended to establish the claims of our Lord and are never to be denied their rightful place as witnesses to the Lordship of Jesus. What more conclusive testimony could Jesus have given of his Messiahship than he is daily giving in his expression of miraculous power over evil spirits and over all manner of disease! It is safe to say that no multiplication of miracles today would materially change the belief of men. People are not lost because of a lack of evidence. No possible demonstration of Divine power would or could convince men of high moral standing, but wise in their own conceits and who have already determined the case by asserting: "Nothing above the natural order," or that other large class of people who want their own way and are unwilling to accept anything as truth, that rebukes sin.

INEXCUSABLE INCONSISTENCY.

Nothing is more inconsistent than unbelief in any or all of its forms. These people accused Jesus of casting out devils through Beelzebub. Argument avails little against prejudice. But with marvelous patience Jesus proceeds to reason with them. He reduces their statement to absurdity. It assumes that the Kingdom of Evil is arrayed against itself. Beelzebub would be casting out his own emissaries. "If Satan also be divided against himself how shall his kingdom stand?"

In the face of overwhelming evidence nothing is so irrational as unbelief. The facts that call for faith are so many and so incontrovertible that atheism in all of its forms is irrational, inconsistent and absurd. The reasonableness of Christianity is its glory and its power. Any attempt to explain the Gospels of the Christian church as merely man-made, ignominiously fails. It falls of its own weight. Unfortunately the very last thing that concerns destructive criticism and unbelief is consistency.

SUPREMACY SUFFICIENT EVIDENCE.

Jesus uttered a great truth and presented a great and guiding principle when he said, "But if I, with the finger of God, cast out devils, doubtless the Kingdom of God is come nigh unto you." His claim was the claim of supremacy. The final evidence of divineness is sovereignty. Whatever finally and permanently overcomes evil is of God. The test of truth is its sovereignty. The claim of Christ to recognition was his sovereignty. Therefore Jesus reduced all tests to the test of sovereignty. . . . He made the great question the one of sovereignty. He claimed for himself the power to control the emissaries of evil and on that fact claimed the right to recognition as the Son of God. To this same test he would bring all that offers itself as Truth. Has it the mark upon it of sovereign power. The imperial power to command the powers of darkness was the all-sufficient sign. This sign he had already given and for those who rejected it no other evidence would be convincing.

Ver. 21-22. The "stronger" who has come relates to Jesus himself. He has come to the world and in the victory of "The Temptation" he has worsted the arch enemy of goodness and virtue. This is offered as the surest evidence of God-hood.

IMPOSSIBLE NEUTRALITY.

Ver. 23. "He that is not with me is against me." To the thought of Jesus no attitude was more contemptible than that of attempted neutrality. He declared such a position not only reprehensible, but impossible. He saw about him many who desired to stand well with both parties. They were non-committal. But to be non-committal is to be committed against Him. It was a stinging rebuke to the insipidity of indecision. Without doubt immediate reference is to the would-be exorcists, but it is equally applicable to all who simply decline to record themselves either as believers or unbelievers. Agnosticism in its many forms boasts of a superior wisdom. It assumes extraordinary discretion. Jesus rebukes the attitude as one of actual antagonism. He is an opponent who is not an ally, when war is on. In these words is compelled a show of hands. Not to confess Christ is to deny him. There is no escape from it. Negation is denial. In the matter of life and death there is no middle ground. Physiologists tell us that when we cease to grow we begin to die.

THE GLORY-FLOODED LIFE.

What can be more inspiring than the conclusion of this discourse of Jesus. The picture is doubtless taken from the Transfiguration. Ver. 36. "The whole shall be full of light as when the bright shining of the candle doth give thee light." O the splendors of the Christ-filled soul! Not only lighted, but illuminated. Radiation is the glad thought. We become lesser lights telling the story of the permanent triumph of Christ over all evil. Ours becomes the life radiant and resistless. Our persuasions are like the calls of sunbeams to the sea. The Christian life is filled with heaven-born splendor. Because mastered it becomes masterful. It is the sovereignty of Jesus Christ in the soul that gives life its touch of imperial beauty.

There is a burden of care in getting riches, fear in keeping them, temptation in using them, guilt in abusing them, sorrow in losing them, and a burden of account at last to be given up concerning them.—Matthew Henry.

The Mid-Week Service

By Silas Jones.

TOPIC FOR JANUARY 28.

Proclaiming the Message.
Rom. 10:14-17.

The first thing is to have a message. It is the word of the Lord we are to proclaim, not my word or yours. We have to work hard in order to get this word of the Lord. It does not come to us when we are lazy and indifferent. "Men must live on the words which proceed out of the mouth of God, the words are many and come through many channels." It is easy to mistake partisan zeal for love of the truth. The liberty which we have in Christ is never fully ours until we are able to rejoice in the good that is done by methods strange to us and that is connected with opinions that differ from ours.

LIVING THE MESSAGE.

The preacher must begin with his own life. What is the message which he is daily proclaiming to his neighbors? We should doubt his modesty if he should publicly invite men to follow him as an example of upright living. If he is a sensible man, fully aware of his imperfections, he will not issue this invitation. Nevertheless, he knows that the world looks at his conduct before it passes judgment upon what he says and assigns to his words the value his character imparts. The church is back of the sermon of its preacher. It speaks when he does. If insincerity and sentimentality prevail in the church, the impassioned utterance of the preacher causes the world to smile and to make the cynic's comment. Rampant militarism of nations that profess to practice the principles of Jesus puts obstacles in the way of the missionary. Has not the missionary been suspected as the advance agent of the army and navy and has there not been in the conduct of the nations from which the missionary comes ground for the suspicion?

EXPLAINING THE MESSAGE.

It is possible to trust too much to right living to the neglect of the teaching of the truth. There is need of interpreters of the good life. Truth can be maue attractive by clear and persuasive statement. The life of love can be understood on any level of intelligence. The dog and the horse respond to kind treatment with a confidence that makes them delightful friends and servants of man. We are not so foolish as to discuss with them the principles of right conduct. In many situations in which human beings are involved the act of kindness explains itself. But in the tangled relations of races and classes profound thought is required that we may put into operation the law of love. We become Christian by rationalizing our impulses. We do not like to cause suffering to our neighbor whom we know. How shall we avoid injuring through our vote and our business men whom we do not know and whom we help or hinder by our political preferences and our efforts to gain financial independence? We must know. Christ puts us into right relations to all men and to God. We must know men, how they live, what they think. We must know God, how he works, what sort of being he is.

WHO SHALL DELIVER THE MESSAGE?

In the interest of good order and efficiency the church sets apart certain men to the ministry of the word. This act of the church does not make wise men of fools nor does it make the good man any more of a saint than he would be without his ordination. That he is trusted by the church may cause him to be guarded in his words and actions lest he cause offense. His training ought to give him skill in explaining the message. He is doing the work of the church. That he is a specialist is no reason why he should do all the work of delivering the message.

Matt. 28:16-20; Acts 8:3-8; Rev. 22:17; 1 Cor. 1:17-28; 1 Thess. 2:3-8; Acts 5:20; 20:24, 32; Rom. 1:16; 1 Cor. 9:16-18; 2 Cor. 10:4-5; Eph. 3:8-11:

Our Readers' Opinions

EDITOR'S NOTE: No issue of the Christian Century in many years has brought such an abundance of correspondence to the editor as did the issue containing the letters from ministers who had recently left the Disciples for another communion, and the Open Letter by the editor to a young minister who was contemplating taking a similar step. A taste of this correspondence we had intended to give our readers several weeks ago, but have not been able to find the space for it until this issue. A few of these letters are purely personal and therefore their names are withheld.

EDITOR THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY:

To say that your issue of Dec. 11 is of greatest interest in our home is putting the case mildly. At the risk of being trite, "it marks an epoch." Where are the good old days when we gave a full page to "Why I Became a Christian Only," or "How a Methodist Preacher was Saved?" Would that your position were "our position," as you so optimistically state in the Open Letter when you insist that the Disciples have changed. Are you not writing of things as they should be, as you want them to be, as, doubtless, they will be, but not as they are? I incline, strongly, to the idea that you are looking at things from your own standpoint and Messrs. Armstrong, Rowlison and Burns are more accurate in their statements of what the everyday, general position is.

These articles give me an excuse for writing on a matter which has been on my mind for some time, that is as to ministers and lay members who are leaving us for such movements as Christian Science. A few years ago, one of our most consecrated and earnest ministers, F. Elmo Robinson, pastor of Rodney Ave., Portland, after several years' study became a Scientist. I strongly urged him to remain, and if he had found a truth which we are not preaching he should stay and give it to us. For a time, I think he was inclined to follow my advice, but is now a practitioner.

One of Portland's leading Congregational ministers recently told me of a remarkable healing which he experienced years ago. He has held many positions of honor and trust in the Christian world, but rarely mentions this healing. Which man took the right course?

Should you care to give room for discussion of this question of healing, which is certainly a "live one" in this part of the moral vineyard, I will do my best to get articles from the above mentioned brethren, if you wish. Both are men of unquestioned sincerity, ability and intelligence.

Portland, Ore. J. J. HANDSAKER.

Our view is that Mr. Handsaker's advice was wise counsel. If there is anything in the healing of the body through the action of the mind there is no reason why it should not be appropriated by us without taking on the outlandish thought system of Christian Science. We could not say in advance what our judgment of such articles as are suggested would be.—THE EDITOR.

EDITOR THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY.

I have just concluded reading your article, "An Open Letter." I congratulate you on your diagnosis. I believe you are entirely right. Those of our number who seem to feel, and there are not a few, that the modern view cannot be held by the man preaching in the average church of Disciples are mistaken. The difficulty with many of those who "are being persecuted for righteousness' sake," is that they have felt called upon to present all their most advanced notions, and just as rapidly as the press and publishing houses could furnish them with new material. I recently heard one of our young Disciple ministers punctuate his sermon every three minutes with, "This is the modern view." This is no time for a pedantic presentation of the gospel. The man that is not too anxious that his congregation should be familiar with his scholarship and will enter sympathetically into the great problems and tasks and opportunities of the Disciples will find just as much "liberty" among the Disciples as any in other religious body. Thanking you again for your timely article and hoping that many of our young men may read it, I remain, very sincerely,

D. O. CUNNINGHAM.

EDITOR THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY:

The last issue of The Century with its clinical features, with its mortuary honors for the four former exponents of propaganda of the Disciples of Christ, webbed me with fascination as I perused their apologia and rose from the mazes thereof to your challenge to a suppositious young fellow with possible inclinations to do likewise.

The four stand in the not un-respectable company, whose distinction is a "great refusal." Their sincerity need not be questioned; good wishes need not be withheld from them; their misapprehension of the implications of the great prospects they forsook, for the easier, less remote and less poignant path of interpreting the mind and will of the Christ for this age, can only be commiserated by one who would wish that loyalty had held until honor had come though the way was set with thorns of suffering.

Your "Open Letter" Mr. Editor, is entirely heartening. Ours is the age when "sinister" forces and "invisible governments," in so far as they actually exist, will reform or perish under the withering light of an unrestricted publicity. Its healing for the wrongs, rife in the conditions of our day, is as inevitable as the stamping out of a plague under sanitary and hygienic assault.

Of course loyalty is costly; only the illy bred will tabulate its cost. Paul felt himself a fool when cataloguing its sacrifice. It is for the royal, loyal souls to hold the treasure aloft and keep busy with its exploitation as the pearl of great price, unmindful of aught save the joy in the agony of loyalty.

I am not with you, Mr. Editor, in the full length of the path you have trod as an interpreter of our mission, but as I look to you and listen to you from week to week, I'm thrilled with the thought that your walk with the heart and mind of God is closer than mine—and you give me heart and hope. Keep on toward the mark for the prize in our high calling. E. F. DAUGHERTY.

Vincennes, Ind.

EDITOR THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY:

I wish to thank you for the splendid Open Letter in the last issue. It was counsel that all of us need. The great trouble with us young fellows is that we go around with our noses turned up at all the disagreeable things we see. If we use our eyes, we will find so much of good and worthfulness in every great movement that we will find no just cause for a supercilious or cynical attitude toward it. This is especially true I believe of our own movement. Faults it has to be sure. But it seems to me that to turn away from it because of these faults in teaching or practice (unless they are fatal to all Christian progress) is foolish.

Most of the men of whom I know, who have left the Disciples, have left us because they had a hobby and rode it rough-shod over sacred convictions. Are not the deepest convictions of men's hearts of some value? Are we to try to uproot these convictions by main strength and awkwardness when at the heart of every conviction there is the very thing we want to implant and develop? As a rule when a congregation gets sore on its minister it's because he has used a meat-axe instead of a scalpel. There are exceptions, of course. Especially is it true that in almost every church there are a few heresy hunters, who stand ready to consign to everlasting punishment every preacher who does not kow-tow to their whims.

I am perplexed and puzzled about a good many things. But I feel that the fundamental principles of this movement are right; the bulk of its members at heart are right; and the minister who will walk in love before his people will find them following him as fast as he dares to expect them to: that is, as fast as they are convinced of the truth.

Minneapolis. S. G. FISHER.

EDITOR THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY:

Have just finished this week's Century from "kiver to kiver" and enjoyed all of it. I think your open letter to a young minister is a masterpiece. I surely appreciate the position and have much sympathy for Messers. Burns, Rowlison and Armstrong. Have a notion that I could hazard a very good guess whom you are answering in the open letter. I believe you have covered the ground so thoroughly in your letter as to be of great help to a host of good men.

"The End of the Day," continues to be fine. Tell that elusive man, Hugh Macdonald, that at least one reader is helped by his meditations. ROBT. E. HENRY.

Havana, Ill.

EDITOR THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY:

Few utterances in your excellent paper have been more timely than the correspondence that appeared last week from ministers who have left Disciple pulpits to preach in other denominations. And especially is your own open letter to the real or hypothetical young minister helpful and to the point. I need not tell you that I have no criticism on their conduct. Each man must in the last analysis face his own situation and his own conscience; these are strictly individual factors upon which no generalization can safely be based. And yet I am sure we can not too often call the young minister's attention to the duty he owes to his own communion. The farther a denomination is removed from the modern religious spirit, the more solidly it is bound to the crystalized forms and accidents of our religion, the greater is the challenge it offers to the prophet and the more imperative is the need for his message. I know one of our ministers who belongs to the class you describe in the opening paragraph of your letter who for the last few years has had repeated and insistent invitations from many of the prominent members and preachers of the Disciples all over this land to leave its fellowship for that of other communions, and who has had flattering overtures from other denominations. But to all these he has persistently replied: I shall stay with the Disciples till I am cast out, and then I shall preach from a soap box on the street; for it is the church of my choice, and I am in sympathy with its purposes and ideals and at heart I am a loyal Disciple.

I am ready also to concede that a publication conducted purely for commercial and private ends has greatly added to the present state of religious intolerance in some sections of the country. I do not believe however that any amount of idealizing of our brotherhood can blink the fact that the average Disciple church furnishes excellent soil for the kind of tyranny that has been exercised by the paper in question. Nor do I believe it is possible to trace all of the mischief to the editorial rooms of the "Standard." Not that I am refending it. It is a paper I can not afford ever to read. We as a people are practically in the grip of a tyranny far more dangerous than any one paper, and that is the tyranny of traditionalism. Now I am well aware that every denomination is threatened with traditionalism, but ours is the tradition of the covenant theology with all the formalism that inevitably goes with it. And this which in its day was our most valued defense can also, when turned against ourselves and our own members, be the most destructive instrument. In theory, it is true a host of our ministers and laymen have abandoned its main tenets, but in practice it still remains as the crystalized sentiment of the majorities that govern our organization. Behind its intrenchments the "safe" men of our movement find shelter when great issues confront us.

Permit me to be specific. Within the last year half a dozen young ministers in California North, of university training and in sympathy with the great trend of present day movements in the intellectual, the social and the religious world have become objects of suspicion in the state. These men were reared in the Disciples' fold, many of them have held prominent churches here or elsewhere, and their ministry, judged by any fair standards, must, in every instance, be pronounced an unqualified success. In many instances they have been subjected to open persecution and not infrequently the leading members of our organized work have led the persecution. Like the priests of the middle ages they preach the funeral of the condemned and light the faggot at the stake. And this they do in the name of what they suppose to be Christianity. In two instances, that I am sure of, persistent efforts were made on the part of leading brethren in the state to unseat these young men in their own pulpits and agitation was initiated from outside sources. In another instance when one of the young men was a candidate for the pastorate of one of our churches, and the sole applicant for the pulpit, three of the members of the state board used the authority of their office to disqualify him on the ground that he held certain opinions on the subject of Christian fellowship though he had never preached these opinions or urged in private their practice.

I might go on multiplying instances, but the point I wish to urge is this: As long as we are in the grip of a traditionalism by which good men think they are doing God's will and are promoting his kingdom in the world by openly or secretly persecuting their fellow ministers in this fashion, just that long will there be unmitigated tyranny in the Church of Christ. We may thunder from our pulpits and journals all we please about our liberty, but the true test of liberty is to be looked for in our practical crises. I know of several ministers in California North, as brave and loyal Disciples as you could find anywhere, who have been discredited by "certain ones from James," and they have been discredited not as free men in a free democracy before the judgment bar of their peers, but by innuendo and star chamber councils. If for any reason these ministers thus discredited should want to enter another pulpit they would find every door barred in their way and if they are to continue their ministry the only obvious path open to them is to seek for an opening in another communion. And this moral heresy on the part of the persecutor is entirely justifiable by our appeal to a formal piety that is both unethical and utterly un-Christian.

H. J. Loken.

Editor The Christian Century:

The Century came to hand this noon. I have read with great interest the symposium on "Why I left the Disciples" and your Open Letter. I want to express my deep appreciation of the "Letter." You have diagnosed the case admirably.

As you know, I have felt the pressure of the situation. There was a time when I felt keenly the hostile temper of some of our people, and I was tempted to go elsewhere. As I look back over the experience, I am conscious that the difficulty lay in an unfortunate change of pastorates at a critical period. I could have remained at A———, and been at peace. The church was accustomed to my way of thinking and preaching and was satisfied. I was not able to adjust myself to the entirely different attitude of the church at B———. This was as much my fault as it was the fault of others.

I think, however, if I had been allowed to pursue the course I had chosen, unmolested by outside influences, I could have weathered the storm. But the readers of the Standard in that church made the odds too great.

I had opportunities to go to the Baptists and to the Congregationalists. As I think back over it, I was not strongly tempted. I think the reason for it was partly the fact that I was compelled to give careful study to our century-old movement, to prepare for an important address. I felt reassured concerning the Disciples after that and I have never given up hope.

Of course I learned some things by the experience in B———, and with that added information and the fact that I have not been in the least molested by the Standard, I have been enabled to pursue a course of real freedom. I think I am as free as I could be anywhere and I am happy in my work.

You have done a good service in writing the Open Letter. We must not allow the local to blind us to the general, and we must weigh the forces that are at work.

Who is Hugh Macdonald? I have had a guess all along, but still I wonder. Is he G. A. Campbell? * * *

Editor The Christian Century:

I am sending my list of subscribers for The Century, and have selected those who I can assure you will read it carefully. Let me thank you for your Open Letter in the current issue of the paper. I have not been tempted to leave my pulpit for some other denomination, but have been on the point of leaving the pulpit for good, and your Open Letter set me to thinking anew. Let me tell you, I think many of our people are clinging to the old way, and hounding the preachers who do not preach about the "scheme of salvation," because it is the easiest way. There is a loophole for lots of selfishness in the old formula of attaining salvation by way of faith, repentance, confession, baptism; and to come to the ideal you are urging—and with you a great host of our younger men, especially—will cost something. It will cost money; it will make a man look upon his own selfishness as a greater sin than his brother's lack of immersion. God bless you. May the "Century tribe" increase! * * *

Editor The Christian Century:

I have read with interest the articles on "Why I left." There's point and punch to what Mr. Armstrong says. I hope the matter may have a fair and thorough discussion in your columns. To my mind the Disciples must inevitably come to see themselves simply as a denomination among others, and find their significance not in any peculiar contribution which they have to make to the lives of other denominations, but in what they can do for the Kingdom of God in co-operation with others, and be willing to lose a church, where the interests of the community demand it, as they will expect others to lose to them where the interests of all point in that way. But I am glad you are bringing the matter to the fore. * * *

FROM THE CONGREGATIONAL POINT OF VIEW.

Charles Clayton Morrison of the Christian Century—in a literal sense the leading organ of the Disciples—has done a real newspaper stunt in his current issue. He wrote to eight pastors who had more or less recently left the denomination to accept pastorates in other folds and asked them to tell why they did so. As it happens, interesting enough to Congregationalists, six of the eight came into our pulpits. Only four have divulged their heart secrets and all of them are now in Congregational churches—three in Wisconsin as an especially favorable atmosphere for insurgency. They are: Rev. C. C. Rowlison of La Crosse, Rev. H. F. Burns of Oshkosh, Rev. C. J. Armstrong of Superior and Rev. H. C. Garvin of Eldon, Mo. Their stories, together with Mr. Morrison's "open letter to a young Disciple minister contemplating" following their example, are significant contributions to the literature of Christian unity.

Their letters are notable for a gracious frankness, although Mr. Garvin's—who twenty years ago was a "heresy" victim and, as Mr. Morrison declares, no doubt "suffered grave injustice"—shows the rankling of the old hurt. Nevertheless, the younger men too had their struggle and their pain, as is attested by their expressions: "When this discovery was forced into my consciousness I will admit I became somewhat desperate." "These were the bitterest hours of my life." "Now I am happy that the struggle is past." They seem to have been forced over the line by that same underlying cause; they yearned for a liberty which was not. They wanted to foster Christian unity and found it circumscribed "upon the basis of a fixed, dogmatic statement of faith." And then came the struggle of breaking the old ties, the misjudgements and the repudiations and the final decision "for conscience' sake." Thus Congregationalism came to be the gainer by the accession of some very real and tested Pilgrims who entered our fellowship, not as into an organization, but as into a congenial atmosphere.

The impressions which these young pastors report of Congregationalism ought to be significant to all of us, that we may unite to perpetuate the spirit they sought and believe they have found. Says Mr. Burns, "I am now enjoying perfect freedom in the pulpit, a deep desire on the part of the church to help meet the serious moral and religious problems incident to a period of transition, a response to any pulpit message which has in it the ring of reality and not only a conviction as to the need of unity, but an earnest desire to co-operate with others in every possible way." Mr. Armstrong puts it even more tersely, "Because I wanted to invest my life where it would count most in helping to solve the social problems of our day, in bringing about unity of the church and in saving the world, I became a Congregationalist."

Mr. Morrison's appeal is written in an irenic vein and truly as he says in his opening sentence, to men "between whom and myself there is no radical difference of conviction." Any one who knows the earnest and progressive young editor of The Christian Century will recognize this to be true. The argument, if one there be, simmers down, then, as to whether the insurgent shall urge reform within the fold or fight for his principles outside its bounds. It is, if you please, the question whether one shall be a Roosevelt or a La Follette. Mr. Morrison is optimistic enough to think that these young come-outers have not understood the new spirit among the Disciples and that, on the other hand, they have been misled by "the coarse and unscrupulous leadership which a commercial publication house has given to the forces of reaction." Possibly he is right in his diagnosis, but he is enough of a democrat to realize that these separating brethren have distinguished examples in their decision. It may be to all such, not only among the Disciples, but in all denominations, and in the great struggle which is today facing the whole Church, the great question must be enlarged. It is not only, "What think ye of Christ?" but "What thing ye of Paul, who led us out of Judaism, of Luther, who led us out of Catholicism, of the Pilgrim forbears, who led us out of ecclesiasticism?"

THE SECOND COMING.

By Ella Wheeler Wilcox, in the Delineator.

How will Christ come back again,
How will he be seen, and when?
  Where his chosen way?
Will he come at dead of night,
Shining in his robes of light,
  Or at dawn of day?

When will this sad world rejoice,
Listening to that golden voice,
  Speaking unto men?
Lives there one who yet will cry
Loud to startled passers-by,
  "Christ has come again?"

List the answer: Christ is here!
Seek and you shall find him near,
  Dwelling on the earth.
By the world's awakened thought,
This great miracle is wrought,
  This the second birth.

While you wonder where and how Christ shall come—behold him now,
  Patient, loving, meek,
Looking from your neighbor's eyes,
Or in humble toilers' guise—
  Lo! the Christ you seek.
Search for him in human hearts;
In the shops, and in the marts;
  And beside your hearth;
Search and speak the watchword
    "Love."
And the Christ shall rise, and prove
  He has come to earth.

THE CONQUEST CONQUERS!

Enthusiastic Words from Many Leaders Regarding Our New Weekly for Adults and Young People

Rev. Claude E. Hill, National C. E. Secretary—"This paper ought to have a wide circulation among the young people of our churches. I like, especially, your treatment of the Endeavor Topic. I certainly wish the paper abundant success."

Dr. J. H. Garrison, Editor-Emeritus Christian Evangelist—"I have examined The Conquest with care and with pleasure. If you can maintain the high ideal which is so well realized in your first issue, you will be making a valuable contribution to our Sunday school literature and to the religious training of the young."

Rev. J. H. Goldner, Euclid Ave. Church, Cleveland—"I like The Conquest immensely. The treatment of the Sunday school lesson, C. E. and midweek prayer-meeting topics is fresh and satisfying. In addition there is an abundance of readable and informing matter of a high order. The paper merits a hearty reception."

Rev. H. D. C. Maclachlan, Seventh Street, Richmond, Va.—"I am very much pleased with The Conquest. It is a good augury for the success of the Sunday school and the Disciples Publication Society that you are putting out such a publication."

W. O. Rogers, of the Sunday School Times Staff—"I have examined the copy of your new paper, The Conquest, with great interest. It looks interesting, which is the first requisite. Then it is interesting, which is the second. It has a fine tone. I predict for it a real success."

Dr. Loa E. Scott, Author of "The Life of Jesus"—"The Conquest is indeed a credit to the Disciples Publication Society. There is need among us for just such a paper, one that takes a broad outlook upon the world and upon the problems of the church and Sunday school."

Rev. Cloyd Goodnight, Uniontown, Pa.—"I like the virility and admire the study pages of The Conquest. Am sure you have a fine combination of page and column features, such as will make the paper not only attractive but valuable. It has the modern touch."

Mrs. Jessie Brown Pounds, Author—"I am sure you are putting out just the kind of a paper our young people need."

Robt. M. Hopkins, National Bible School Secretary—"It has been a great pleasure to read this first issue of The Conquest. I may say I have read every word of it including all the advertisements. In my opinion you have given to our Sunday schools a most excellent journal. If you can maintain this high standard in its mechanical appearance and its literary contents, The Conquest will soon find a place in a large number of our senior and adult classes. Let me wish for you and this paper every success."

Rev. G. L. Lobdell, Stockton, Cal.—"I am very favorably impressed with The Conquest. It is Christlike in spirit and scholarly in tone, yet sufficiently simple to meet all needs. The department of Modern Science and the World's Work, is alone worth the subscription price."

Garry L. Cook, Indiana State Sunday School Superintendent—"I want to say that The Conquest looks good to me. I certainly like the general appearance of the paper. It is neat and dignified and attractive. I also like very much the different departments that you are going to use in the paper. I see no reason why you will not find a place for this paper. I am sure that we have schools that will find The Conquest just what they have been looking for. Congratulations!"

Clarence L. De Pew, Illinois State Secretary—"Very favorably impressed."

Rev. R. H. Heicke, Kansas City, Kan.—"I have just examined The Conquest and I consider it the superior of any Sunday school paper for seniors and adults among us."

Rev. E. F. Daugherty, Vincennes, Ind.—"Spicy, with variety, and well balanced in treatment of devotional and study topics in church life. I believe this paper will fill a real want in the brotherhood."

Rev. C. A. Kleeberger, Columbus, O.—"Fine! If you keep it up it will deserve a place in any school."

H. D. Williams, Newton Falls, O.—"It is the best I have seen."

Rev. L. N. Pennock, Plainview, Tex.—"It is a most valuable paper and will be a potent factor for Christ and the Church."

O. H. Loomis, Pratt, Kan.—"It looks good to me. Short, spicy articles; terse facts and big ones too."

J. C. Knupp, La Habra, Calif.—"Fine!"

Rev. Ralph V. Callaway, Clinton, Ill.—"I am much pleased with The Conquest."

Rev. O. L. Smith, Wellington, Kan.—"The Conquest is clean, clear, and filled with a grade of news that will instruct and inspire, and this is given in fine digest form."

Rev. A. I. Zellar, Petersburg, Ill.—"I have just read a copy of The Conquest. It is fine. The material is good, and I am especially thankful for a Sunday school paper devoid of medical advertisements. Congratulations!"

Miss Virginia Finley, Supt., Crittenden, Ky.—"I take much pleasure in giving this present to our school, for I feel sure that the paper is going to be very valuable to us."

Rev. B. H. Sealock, Illiopolis, Ill.—"Quite well balanced. The field of Sunday school journalism is as difficult as it is great. The editor has made a good start and bids fair to supply a great need."

S. E. Brookins, Teacher of Class of 190 Adults, Jackson, O.—"I am much pleased with The Conquest."

Rev. A. H. Seymour, Arlington, S. Dak.—"Is substantial and has real merit."

H J. Loken, Berkeley, Cal.—"I am well impressed with the paper."

Mrs. Celeste B. Givens, Des Moines—"The Conquest brings us an advance step, this new year, over efforts of the past. Success be yours."

The Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse is fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, the Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Good Things Out of Nazareth

Three good things came out of Nazareth. A sweet maiden, lovely in her purity and radiant in her virtuous love came out of Nazareth. She had a trained mind and a retentive memory; she had stored in her thought the poetry of her nation till it sang itself over in a wonderful song of her own. The Magnificat is the product of her rapt imagination using as its material the lore of the Hebrew nation. This lovely girl was willing for the sake of the coming glory of her nation and the world to endure pain, reproach and misunderstanding. She consented even to put in peril her own good name and risk the losing of her lover; she gave herself to that whose full meaning she could not know, but knew that a sword would pierce her own heart. She bore the sweet sorrow of the nativity and the years that followed; she saw the child she loved growing up to where she could not understand him. She watched him as he hung upon the cross. She kept in her heart and wondered the things whose full meaning she could only vaguely guess, but she held in her arms the hope of the redemption of the world. The glory of her maidenhood has transfigured all womanhood. The wonder of her maternity has cast a halo of the incarnation over all sweet womanhood. Woman stands on a higher pedestal throughout the Christian world because of what she was and did. But she lived in no palace; her name was not on the roll of fame. None of the people who knew her suspected that she was different from other young women or too great or too good for the town where she resided.

An honest man came out of Nazareth. His name was Joseph, and he was a carpenter. He earned his bread with the toil of his hands, but they were skilled hands. He spent his life in poverty, but it was self-respecting poverty. It was poverty not devoid of simple comforts. It was poverty not shut out from access to reading and thought. It was poverty that still estimated the value of an education and realized that a boy born into a home such as that of Joseph must be taught to read as well as work, to think as well as toil, to aspire as well as to perform the daily tasks. This honest man, Joseph, proved not only to be a strong laborer and skillful carpenter, but a man with a knightly, generous soul. He stood between a slandered maiden and reproach. He shielded her with his strong right arm, his unsullied honor and his good name. He took her with him to his ancestral home that he might be with her in the hour of her need. He carried her into Egypt and earned a living for her at the time when her child was in peril. He provided the resources that were necessary for an expensive journey, for a somewhat unusual education which he gave to Mary's son. He stood under his burden modestly, unobtrusively, and heroically, and performed his difficult part with a fine manly heroism.

Another good thing came out of Nazareth, a child born in humble life. The son of an indigent maiden, the apprentice of a village artisan grew up to feel in his soul the passion of a nation and the love for all humanity which has given Him a name above every name. Working at his bench he wrought out also the convictions of a divine call to more than prophetic service. Living and loving and serving and helping he became the companion of men, yet felt within him and made others feel the indwelling love of God. In Him men understood God as they never had understood God before and never have understood God since except as they have seen God revealed in Him. Confident of his heavenly mission, feeling assured within Him that He was the Son of God, He still lived without ostentation and trod the humble highways of Galilee as an itinerant teacher of truth, meeting bravely at the end a shameful death which He foresaw and might have escaped but which He endured rejoicing to lay down His life a sacrifice that thereby the world might be saved.

Nazareth never was very large nor very great. There was and is nothing about it which distinguishes it from other Galilean towns. It still nestles against the shoulder of the higher hill and looks out over the plain of Esdraelon in unostentatious quiet and calm repose.

The world has need of its Nazareths. We never can be sure from which of them God will raise up some wonderful gift to men. We never are justified in coining a proverb by which we declare it impossible for God to give to men some wonderful and abiding gift bestowed upon us as through some humble vehicle, some quiet and obscure locality, some little known and perhaps despised personality.

Who knows what Nazareth has yet to give to the world? Nazareth still exists. If out of its life came into the life of the world such contributions to the betterment of mankind, who dare say that Nazareth has nothing more to contribute? And who dare say that Nazareth is the only place from which God can produce Christ-like lives? Out of very humble places God has called His prophets. The Nazareths of history have been full of surprises for the world.

A Doctrinal Autobiography

CHAPTER VI. SOME GREAT TEACHERS CONSIDERED.

Editor's Note:—The frequent references in these chapters to the religious newspapers will seem to some readers an over-emphasis on a source of influence which should occupy a wholly secondary place in the life of a growing minister. But among Disciples of Christ the religious press has always been a most pronounced and potent influence. It has had more to do in determining the character of this communion than has the college. Its papers circulate more widely and are held in greater esteem than is the case in other Christian bodies. The three most influential leaders covering the three generations of the Disciples movement have been editors. The author of this autobiography, therefore, could hardly avoid oft allusion to the newspapers as either factors or significant symbols in his doctrinal evolution. The final severance of pastoral relations with a reactionary church and the assumption of happy relations with a congregation of broad mind and generous practice would seem to prove that those are in error who say that there is no place among the Disciples for men of progressive ideals.

FROM this period on I turned to the "Christian Evangelist" for leadership, and found it helpful, conservative, and generally on the right side of questions. I liked its pacific spirit and its breadth. It did not assume that all the questions in the universe had been settled, or denounce as heretics all those who did not accept its views. It was willing to think for itself, and to allow others to do the same. For many years it maintained the open mind with reference to pending questions, and put more love into its logic than did some others who seemed to say that wisdom would die with them. Above everything it was tolerant, and that feature appealed most strongly to me. I often wished for a more vigorous policy in its dealing with the perplexities of the brotherhood, but it may have done well in keeping its foot on the soft pedal when others were shouting their differences at each other from the housetops. But admitting its defects Dr. Garrison kept the "Christian Evangelist" in the front of the procession for many years, and refused to be entangled in endless controversies. Had we followed his counsels more steadfastly our people would have been better off than they are.

A "DISCREDITED" JOURNAL.

I learned to enjoy The Christian Century a few years ago on account of its scholarly and brilliant writers, and the fearlessness with which they faced the issues of the hour. The editors put everything fanatical and obsolete under the ban. They realized fully that a new world was being born and that the old formulas could never be retained or revived. While others were content to propagate a theology acceptable to those who were the least competent to judge of its merits, The Christian Century took counsel of the Christian scholarship of the age, and sowed in the hope that even the slowest would be persuaded to quicken their pace. It preferred that the rear should advance rather than that the leaders should retreat to the rear. It endured all manner of opposition, but never swerved from its course. The Christian Century never waited to see what the brethren would say, nor counted the cost when conscience was summoning a "forward march" nor declared vauntingly that it was the spokesman for the majority. Like all reformers it has disturbed some people's peace: an offense to those who were in charge of the denominational order, it has been a thorn in the side of the guardians of the patronage flesh pots. Some of the reforms that it has wrought are now the common property of all, notably those demanding a better order of evangelism and the higher education of the ministry. But better than anything else to me was the opportunity it afforded for many men of many minds to have a hearing. It stood resolutely for that freedom of speech, without which progress is impossible. As a journal called "discredited" by its competitor, it exerts a greater influence among our reading and progressive preachers and intelligent laymen than any other force among us. It is something more than a recorder of history.

It was while pastor of a church in which the reactionary views of the Disciples were paramount that I saw how hopelessly out of joint these views were with humanizing influences of this progressive age. I discovered that those who in that community were trying to restore apostolic Christianity were looked upon with the same indifference with which I had been accustomed to regard Adventists and Mormons. It seemed as if my best efforts were spent in trying to save a lost cause or to lead a forlorn hope. The world was moving so rapidly that both the church and its newspaper guide were in danger of being left high and dry. People of intelligence were not coming our way.

Dr. J. H. Garrison, of whom the autobiographer says: "Had we followed his counsels more steadfastly, our people would have been better off than they are."

A GROWING RIFT.

I tried to explain to the congregation, as opportunity offered, that the indifference of the thinking element of the neighborhood to us was not due to the lack of a religious spirit, but to an excess of it, that our issues were not the issues of the hour, that while they were true, people had no interest in them once they found themselves in line with the practical and philanthropic movements of the age. I had little success in ventures of this sort. That faithful congregation could see only an evil heart of unbelief when their overtures were rejected. I began to feel strangely out of place. There was no community of ideas between me and the congregation. They lived on one hemisphere while I lived on another.

They were interested in the discussion of first principles all the time, believing that upon them hung all the law and the prophets; I was interested in the discussion of other themes as well. They read little apart from their favorite church paper which developed in them an aggressive and bumptious militancy; I read more widely and was growing more irenic all the time. I had renounced all my belligerent intentions some years before, realizing that peace on earth, good will to men, is not likely to be introduced at the point of a bayonet, steel or verbal. I was breathing a different atmosphere from those to whom I preached. Theirs was almost the zone in which I had been reared; I heard the old slogans, I became familiar again with the old phraseology, I had been transported back to the days when I thought as a child.

I regard my experiences with this sacrificing band as the final attempt of that Power which shapes our ends to show me how impossible it was to put new wine in old bottles.

TWO WAYS OF SEEING.

The differences between us could be expressed with the plus sign. I believed much of what they believed, but I believed much more. For instance, they wanted to keep alive the controversy on baptism. I had come to see that such a controversy could do no good. I was interested in the study of missions, believing the modern triumphs of the gospel to be as mighty an apologetic for the divine origin of Christianity as those which Dr. Storrs has recorded in his valuable work. They saw in missions a challenge to benevolence; I saw a challenge to our faith. They were a missionary people, but their conception of that great cause rose and fell with the rise and fall of revenues. They knew nothing of social salvation; I saw in it a great goal and a task for all the churches. They saw in the annual revival a cure for almost every ill of the church; I had come to see its shallowness as most ministers have come to see it, because it is an artificial process. They believed in hell fire, and saw through the eyes of the Middle Ages the doom of the impenitent. I cared nothing for the aids which horror lends to the imagination, knowing that whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap.

I did not regard the Bible as a level book; they did. To them it was all the same from Genesis to Revelation. They saw miracles many times in what was intended to be a hyperbole or a metaphor. They knew nothing of the difference between oriental poetry and the supernatural. They accepted old age interpretations of the Scriptures as final; I held that every generation should interpret the Bible for itself as every generation had done. They accounted for the rejection of their interpretations by almost every device known to the perplexed. They lived under the tyranny of dead ages; they were holding fellowship with the grave. I believed that one can live justly only under the influence of his own age which includes all ages; and that the voice of the living prophet must not be ignored any more than the voice of the dead prophet. They believed that all the prophets were dead, an extinct race. To me the Bible was a growing book; to them it was a sealed book. They quoted the Pilgrim pastor when he declared that "God had more light to break from his word," but straightway forgot the content of such a sentence.

THE MISSION OF THE CHURCH.

We differed as to the mission of the church. They held that the church was an ark in which the favored few were to be carried through the flood, a city of refuge in which the sinner could flee for safety, views which such a safe and conservative teacher as Dr. Charles E. Jefferson holds are no longer tenable among thinking men. I accepted his teaching that,

> The ages in which the church stood dreamy and idle, waiting for a new heaven and a new earth, have gone, never to return. Individual redemption is the starting point, but world redemption is the goal. Religion is more than a personal possession of security and peace and joy, it is a service, a sacrifice, a gift to others. Religion is now seen to concern this world no less than the world which is to come. The good things which have been promised are not all to be waited for until we put on immortality. We have a right to hope, not simply for the rescue of a few of the ship's passengers, but for the saving of the entire ship.....This transfer of emphasis from the other world to this is one of the mightiest of all the changes which have been wrought in Christian thinking within the last hundred years, and it brings to the front for fresh discussion the question, What is the mission of the church?

This and much more thinking of the same character I was ready to accept, had accepted, but my congregation was not ready. They did not seem to believe that the same laws of change, which exempt nothing sublunary, apply to religion. the traffic from the land; how his soul I decided that they would do better with a preacher who was in sympathy with their views, and I with a congregation that was in sympathy with mine. We parted on the best of terms, without discussions of the differences between us. They had no trouble in finding a preacher, nor I a church. I was done with mechanical and legalistic forms of religion forever. I in my new field and my successor in my old field, seem to be doing a satisfactory work, a fact which proves what most of us believe, that there is room among our people for progressive and conservative, and that both can do a good work if only the powers that be will elect to allow us all to live in peace.

At this period I did the most constructive work of my life. I went over again the grounds of Christian belief, and found help which it is impossible to exaggerate from such men as Prof. James Orr, Prof. Borden Parker Bowne, Pres. Henry C. King, and others of that type. I enjoyed the reverent and conservative spirit of Prof. Orr, who, while not always consistent, has ever a reason for the hope that is in him. "When in doubt hold to what you have," seems to be his rule. I surely enjoyed the calm and philosophic temper of the other two leaders who are trying to reconstruct our thinking in harmony with the demands of the age.

"THE NEW EARTH."

Men like Prof. Rauschenbush and Prof. Peabody have done much to help us to understand that the new earth is a possibility while we are still upon it —they have taught me that Christianity is a religion for the city as well as for the man. From Dean Stanley I learned something of the breadth of English Christianity, its culture and its fruits. Dean Farrar opened up mines of investigation and knowledge that may become the most treasured possessions of the preacher. I have spent days and nights with Fairbairn, Forsythe, Clifford, Edersheim, Conybeare and Howson, Fisher, Bushnell, and Schaff, all of whom put strength into my faith as to the realities of things unseen. I have followed the ministries of men like Dr. Charles E. Jefferson, J. H. Jowett, Hillis, and Gunsaulus, whose labors are regarded as eminently successful. These men have accepted the modern point of view. We should like to ask: To whom can we turn for messages more vital than theirs, where can we find greater loyalty to Christ and his Church and his Word than in their teachings, where can we find men who more fitly represent the Kingdom of God than they?

"THE FINAL MESSAGE OF LOVE."

From such teachers I have learned to regard the Word of God as the final message of Love to our race, inspired as no other book is inspired, making a place for itself, and working miracles today which on its pages would be called "wonders," and "signs." Like the sword borrowed from Ahimelech, the priest, by David I can say, "There is none like that; give it to me." And as for the prophet who arose out of Galilee, as he was the hope of Israel, so I believe him to be the hope of the whole earth; the one to whom the kings of the earth shall bring their glory to be fashioned into crowns; the one who must reign until he shall see of the travail of his soul and be satisfied, and until all enemies shall be put under his feet.

My experiences have not been those of a doubter; I have never halted between doubt and faith. I have been uncertain, I have been perplexed, I have been on the fence—a good place to be occasionally. But I rejoice that mine is a Christian faith, I can say that Christ is to me the solid rock; that because I believe in him the sky is clear, and that the future has no fears for me. Mine has been the problem of adjusting myself to new conditions, a facing of stubborn facts and dealing with them according to the light that was in me. I have tried to—

> "Think whate'er the Spirit thinks,
> Feel myself whate'er he feels,
> Drink at fountains where he drinks,
> And reveal what he reveals."

The Romance of Missions

Signs of the Coming of the Kingdom In Many Lands.

BY CHARLES T. PAUL.

WE are told that the romance of missions has passed. It has for those who have no eyes to see or no time to look. Modern missions are the chivalry of God doing exploits, athrob with the dramatic and ablaze with heroic appeal. Our future missionaries are challenged today by the signal triumphs of missionary work registered and spelled out in plain pictures in those parts of the world where once, humanly speaking, success seemed impossible.

During the past year the Christian world observed the centenary of David Livingstone's birth. You remember how, as he pierced the heart of Africa, the slave-trade pierced his own heart; how he was dogged and sickened by it as he saw the rivers gorged with the bodies of those who were slain in defending their captured kinsmen. You know how the great man vowed to sweep traffic from the land, and how his soul was stirred with indignation when he came down to Zanzibar and found that city the center and stronghold of the Arab slavers and the big market with its whipping-post thronged with black-skinned victims. What would Livingstone say if he could come back to Zanzibar today and walk into the great cathedral, seating 2000 Christians, which rises from the same market-place, and hear the gospel preached from a pulpit which stands on the very spot where slaves were beaten at the post? What would he say if he could see the great "open sore of the world" now almost healed in Africa and mission stations established all along the paths which he blazed? What if he and Stanley could have accompanied Professor Harlan P. Beach on his recent visit to the great Mengo Church in Uganda with 600 children in its Sunday-school, and the Girls' School at Gayasa, where at the feet of the missionary sat the sister of Uganda's king "with all the beauty and grace of an Oriental princess" and another girl —the Christian daughter of the man who murdered Bishop Hannington?

And now from the very innermost and remotest jungles after 23 years of hidden and unbroken service among the Bantu peoples of East Central Africa, emerges Dan Crawford, in the spirit and power of Livingstone—yea a second Livingstone as surely as Elijah wrought again in John the Baptist, telling us how the black tribes of the far interior are translating into their "black thinking" the white thoughts of our "crystal Christ." See the power of Christ not only in the redeemed subjects of the bloody king, Mushidi, but in the succession of great missionary lives. We thought our Livingstone was dead! We thought his heart lay buried in Chitambos village. But Livingstone's heart is alive today because Livingstone's Christ lives and works in Dan Crawford, who in his latest published interview, said, "The gospel is what they, (the Bantus) need. The night cometh when no man can work. Afar the golden crested crane is calling. I must go back to Africa"—back to spend the remainder of his life with his beloved Bantus among the tall grass, to finish carving out of the darkness "a new heaven and a new earth" and eventually to mark with his grave the advance of Christ's kingdom a few hundred miles farther inland from Ilala where Livingstone fell.

A SIGNIFICANT EVENT IN INDIA.

Read the signs of Christ's demonstrated power in India. When Henry Martyn arrived in that country in 1806 he was not allowed to reside in Calcutta. British sea-captains had been ordered to land no more missionaries. A British regiment garrisoned a temple in Calcutta and fired salutes to the heathen gods. The Brahmans opposed Henry Martyn and sought to control the religious policy of the English colonial government. The ardent young missionary retired to his famous little pagoda, twelve miles from the Ganges, where he translated the New Testament into Bengali. Again he sought to gain from the Brahmans a hearing for his Christian Message. At last his faith failed him, and moving on to Persia he declared he would as soon expect to see a dead man raised to life as a Brahman to become a Christian. Recently in that same pagoda was held a meeting of native Indian Christian leaders from all parts of the empire—Brahmans. Mohammedans and low-castes who, honoring the name of Martyn, devoted themselves afresh to his Master and theirs for the carrying of the gospel to the unreached parts of India.

Two years ago at Delhi there occurred that gorgeous pageant which taxed the wealth, color and pomp of the East. I refer to the Durbar and the ceremonies attendant upon the coronation of their majesties, the King-Emperor and the Queen-Empress of Great Britain and her over-sea dominions. Seated in their coronation robes upon the throne, under the canopy with its roof of white fretted marble and golden dome, attended by titled and turbaned Indian officials—the great amphitheater gleaming with white helmeted regiments and thronged by vast acclaiming multitudes—the royal sovereigns, after the proclamation, received the homage of the native princes. Unparalleled for splendor was that procession of state monarchs dusky of countenance, glittering with the jeweled "wealth of Ormuz and of Ind" borne in ancient chariots or upon richly caparisoned elephants, and alighting at the foot of the throne stairs to salute their imperial rulers and acknowledge their allegiance to the British crown! It is difficult to imagine a more striking and spectacular demonstration of the power of the British government in that land.

"A TRIUMPHAL MARCH."

During the present year there has been a less gorgeous but equally impressive witness to another power in India which is something more than political. The recent visit and journey of Dr. John R. Mott and Mr. Sherwood Eddy representing the Continuation Committee of the Edinburgh Conference was like a triumphal march. In city after city from Colombo to Madras, from Madras to Bombay, and so on through Jubbulpore, Allahabad, Lahore and Calcutta, the largest theaters were crowded by great audiences of Indian students numbering from 1000 to 2000 at each attendance. The platform became the throne as the two evangelists, undecked by any worldly regalia, and unattended by any retinue-at-arms, avowed advocates of a religion alien to that of their hearers, proclaimed for four or five sessions in each city the searching gospel of Christ. The awakened intellect, the modern mind, the educated classes of all India, Brahmans and sons of Brahmans bowed and respectful in the presence of the ambassadors of Christ! There was never a greater miracle than this, unless it be that Dr. Mott preached also in the Mohammedan College at Aligarh, and finished his tour by a series of meetings at Rangoon, Burmah, with an attendance of 1500 non-Christian students, mostly Buddhists. Christianity has shot through the very life of India with its leaven. What did the census of 1911 reveal? That in the decade ending with that year the increase of Protestant Christians in that land was 48 per cent, twelve times the percentage increase of Hinduism, its strongest rival, and seven times that of the entire population. Before the close of this century India will be Christianized. And now the Christian Woman's Board of Missions is about to perform another miracle of uplift and emancipation by establishing right in the heart of the empire, on a hill at Jubbulpore, a college for the higher education of girls.

The breath of God's upon the world:
It blows fresh down on the Aryan brown,
From the crystal glows of Himalayan snows.
It purges the grime of the ancient time
And loosens the throes of ancestral woes
Which have darkened the heart and sullied the mart
Of millions born to a lot forlorn.

The clouds are shifting that have lain,
For a thousand years o'er India's plain!
Castes are cleansed from custom's stain.
The breath of God's on India's strand,
The patriot's heart to flame is fanned,
And a larger hope dawns o'er the land.

MODERN MIRACLES IN CHINA.

Christ is getting to himself a new Republic in China. The old Empire thought it had crushed out the foreign superstition in 1900. The streets of Pao-ting-fu ran with blood. Horace Tracy Pitkin, the brilliant martyr of Yale, died in the Boxer rage, and his head was impaled on the city arch. A few weeks ago I heard Sherwood Eddy tell of the great meeting he held there in the spring of last year. Over two thousand people, including the officials of the city, gathered to hear America's student-ambassador of Christ. A thousand were turned away. The arch was covered with Christian mottoes. Mr. Eddy preached the gospel and exhorted to discipleship. He was speaking to some of the men who had helped to murder Pitkin. He told them that following Christ might mean to them some day what it had meant to Pitkin. But one hundred men at the close confessed and enrolled themselves as Christians. No wonder Fletcher S. Brockman said that with miracles like this happening in China, he would not go round the corner to see the Jordan dried or the walls of Jericho fall!

Let us seek the desert spaces where the Christless hordes are waiting,
Let us journey to the needy lands we know;
There's a whisper in the midnight, there's a star above to guide us,
O, the East is calling, calling, let us go!

MEN FOR THE MINISTRY.

By Charles M. Sharpe.

The problem of securing an efficient ministry is absolutely central and fundamental to the whole enterprise of the church. Primarily the problem does not relate to quantity so much as quality, though it includes both. We are in a critical transitional time as regards the whole attitude and method of our religious work. It is a time that calls for the keenest, most alert and best trained minds. Explorers, experimenters, builders are needed—men of vision and initiative. They must be men who, through competent study, are able to enter into the treasures of the past. They must be men who know the facts and forces of these new times, and are able to knit the past into the present, in order that we may not lose our Christian heritage.

The Disciples especially need a ministry of superior intellectual power and equipment—a ministry trained to a clear understanding of the things involved in essential Christianity. As an advertising agency publishing the merits of Christian unity the Disciples have been a brilliant success. But can we deliver the goods for which such a tremendous demand has been created? Can we even enter an efficient combination for the purpose of supplying the market? That is one important phase of the problem of an efficient ministry for the Disciples.

Consecration, earnestness, and moral character are, of course, assumed. Granted that he possesses these, the minister must also have in him the stuff of which successful specialists are made, and he must have the knowledge and training that makes specialists.

In our quest for men for the ministry we should lay all possible stress upon the fact that now as ever the altar of God calls for the best. A high ideal of ministerial preparation held up persistently and insisted upon strenuously will go further than anything else in constituting an effective call for hosts of men that God can best use.

Shall Pastoral Calling Cease?

A New Point of View on a Much Discussed Question.

BY C. O. REYNARD.

I HAVE never been able to understand the repugnance expressed by some of my friends in the ministry, to this part of the minister's duties. Some men now out of the active ministry have said that the duty of making pastoral calls was one of the perponderating influences that led them to leave the work that was otherwise quite congenial. This has been said mainly by men who have spent only a few years in the ministry. But I have also heard much the same sentiment from men many years my senior, both in actual age and in term of ministry.

The fault, it seems to me, is with the minister. He does not appreciate the opportunity of the "call," both in its bearings upon his hostess and upon himself. I am thinking mainly of the call which he makes upon the home, in which he seldom if ever finds the husband at home. The call upon the man in his place of business must be considered from a somewhat different angle, yet much that applies to the one form, applies also to the other.

"Red blooded men in the ministry," it is said, "must object to making pink tea calls at the home, where the husband is not present." Now I think I am about as red blooded (I yield to many in the blueness of it) as the average man in the ministry, but I have never yet met with any experience that would lend point to that objection. It is not altogether impossible that the red blooded man may also be forceful in self control and in qualities of confidence and physical wholesomeness that will lend great value to his visits upon the sick, upon the discouraged, and upon the positively sinful and vicious, if his ministry takes him among such. "Pink tea" calling is a term that I do not understand, although I have enjoyed quite sincere hospitality over a cup of tea. It is my impression that those who repeat such phrases most constantly are persons who would, perhaps, sup their tea out of a saucer. The point to the objection which is relevant is that of the frittering away of time in purely social calling, and to that objection I give a hearty second.

The call is for ministry to others than himself. If he can minister, really minister, in a social way, well and good. But the average minister will find his time quite fully occupied in ministering to more fundamental and serious needs than that. The call upon the sick ought not to end with an airy "I hope you get better soon." The sick will be ministered unto in feeling that the minister has laid hold upon God in their behalf, and hardly otherwise will the patient be satisfied. The sick room should experience more of Bible reading and prayer on the part of the minister. The minister should be quick to apprehend the signs of the discouraged life among his people. There is a quite numerous body of people these days, members of churches, who are, for various reasons, wondering whether religion really has anything of value to offer to one in the hard, hand to hand struggle with poverty and other forms of adversity. They sit in the pew, hearing none of the sermon. But, be assured, they hear the prayers! And here must the minister succeed or fail most tragically in ministering to the discouraged. The personal call during the week upon such burden bearers may indeed be as the meeting of the Cyrenian with the burdened Christ.

Rev. C. O. Reynard.

The minister himself faces constant danger of losing the common touch, genuine fraternity with his people. He may become more interested in books, or bugs, or the Saturday Evening Post (isn't it delightful?), than in his own people and their needs. This must not be. And that it shall not be, the minister must visit the hearthstones of his people. He may be perplexed as to "what to preach." Visit your people and learn! He may be vexed by failing support on the part of some prominent member. Visit your people, and find whether there your ministry is still needed and welcomed, and go back to prepare a Big Sermon! And is your own faith growing "faint with many scars?" Visit the bedside of the invalid old saint, and offer prayer there!

Indeed, it seems to me that if our ministry is to be anything more than a busied hurrying about, concerned with machinery and campaigns and conventions, we must find in the pastoral call both an opportunity and a sacrament of divine grace. We who are too busy for it will soon be not fit for it. And to shun or slight or misuse this form of our ministry is one of the surest indications of growing worldliness in us and of ineffectual, spiritless ministry in other directions, to others.

Leaders of Men and Millions

W. HUME LOGAN, OF THE BUSINESS MEN'S COMMISSION.

A MAN of fine judgment, catholic spirit and forward looking faith"—in these words, Rev. E. L. Powell, his pastor, characterizes Mr. W. Hume Logan, a member of the Business Men's Commission of the Men and Millions Movement.

As a business man he has been preeminently successful, and has always carried conscience into Big Business. No more accurate or painstaking worker, either in the church or in business, could be desired.

Mr. Logan was born Nov. 28, 1864. He came to the city of Louisville in 1885. There were back of him his associations in Lexington, Kentucky, as a student in what is now known as Transylvania University, both in the College of Arts and the College of the Bible. It was Mr. Logan's intention, perhaps, to study for the ministry; at any rate he was a Bible student and found good use for his Bible knowledge in his subsequent activity in the church. From the very beginning of his residence in Louisville he has been a man, serious, consecrated and an earnest church worker. "For the twenty-five years the present pastor has been leading in the work of the First Christian Church," says Doctor Powell. "Mr. W. Hume Logan has been his constant and faithful ally as Superintendent of the Sunday-school." He is at present one of the elders of the congregation.

His father-in-law, the Hon. Z. F. Smith, and Dr. Powell were members of the Board of Curators of Transylvania University for a number of years, both resigning about the same time, and Mr. Logan was chosen to fill the place of one of them. He has been serving in this capacity loyally and with a great vision of the future of the University, giving money and time to its service.

Science and Alcohol.

Medical students, business men and mechanics joined in a discussion of the subject "What Does Science Say of Alcohol With Relation to Health?" in a session of Bible Class D of the Third Presbyterian Church, Chicago, recently. American and European scientists were quoted as saying that the total abstainer was less liable to become diseased, was more efficient and, barring accidents, would live longer than a person using alcoholic liquor.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

GO-TO-CHURCH DAY.

WE are devoting some space in this issue of The Christian Century to the Go-to-Church movement. We believe in it as a good thing for church and community. It is a good thing now and then to enlist a large number of people into doing things that they constantly do but have not been accustomed to do for a good cause. It is a good thing to waken governors of states and mayors of cities and presidents of gas companies to co-operate in movements that even for a single day recognize the value of church attendance. We make a few suggestions to churches and pastors in communities where the first or eighth of February is to be observed as Go-To-Church Day.

First, the value of the movement will depend in a large degree upon the extent to which the whole community is led to participate in its preparation. If every business man in town will buy a rubber stamp, costing fifteen cents and bearing the line "Go-To-Church February 1st" and stamp it on all bills and circulars which he is sending out before that date; if every owner of a milk cart or a grocery wagon will carry a red banner "Go-To-Church," the number of those who become official reminders of the value of church-going will be greatly increased and the reaction upon these new evangelists will be wholesome and effective.

In the second place, we suggest that everybody co-operate even if some of the methods of advertising are a bit unconventional. It is better to participate and have a share in a good work than to stand back and criticize because its methods do not altogether conform to our preconceived notions of propriety.

Most of all, we suggest that wherever these campaigns are undertaken there be careful preparations to follow them up. Let the services be so attractive, the sermons so wholesome that everybody shall be glad he is there and thus the service of the day be a joyful beginning of better things in many lives.

It is time we were calling the attention of the whole community to the value of church-going. The merry dissipation, disguised under the name of "week-end," cannot too soon give place to the solemn dignity and joy of the service of the sanctuary. Sunday golf and Sunday motoring are no spiritual substitute for the service of the house of God. Let the church assert anew the value and spiritual necessity for united worship on the Lord's Day.

Go-To-Church!

THE HELP OF THE LORD.

THE help of the Lord is two-fold. It is God helping us: and it is ourselves helping God. Not only does God help us, but he needs our help. The words of the Old Testament ring down the ages, cursing those who "come not up to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty." God is not only He that was and is; God is He who ever is becoming. God is living, not merely the infinite life of heaven, but is living with men the finite life of earth, a life that requires the experience of limitation and struggle and pain, and all within the compass of a complete and radiant and eternally confident joy.

This experience of God requires as its expression the experience of men and women. The completeness of the love of the Divine Father needed the mother love that life might be given to Jesus of Nazareth, and needs mother love now, and father love now, and child love now, and every other sweet and holy love.

George Bernard Shaw has lately been asking, "Is God in trouble?" and has been replying in the affirmative, and saying a great many things which we do not at all accept. But some things this brilliant and erratic author says are true; and we feel a certain thrill of approval when he represents God as saying, "Stop flattering me; help me."

Yes; God needs help. He needs us, our hands, our feet, our ability to talk to people who do not know any of the languages of heaven, but are able to understand English. He needs our help.

We should be glad if we knew that God stood ready to help us. But when we understand not only this, but that we can do a few small things for a few short years that help Him to make his goodness and love more real to men, and to bring the kingdom of heaven closer to earth, then we feel the glory of living, and hope of living forever. We shall not live a life of eternal uselessness; we expect that in some very little but some very real way we shall be helping God.

WHAT THE AGE NEEDS.

THERE are answers not a few to the question of the chief need of the time.

The politician is certain that what we need is the acceptance of certain political principles or the control of power by a given party. The economist sees the necessity of increasing the purchasing power of the average wage. The sociologist seeks a more equitable distribution of wealth. The educator is sure that popular education is a panacea for the world's ills.

But there is something deeper and more fundamental. If we were not sure of this, life would be chaos. How could man become even civilized if he were forever on the isthmus described by Pope—

> "In doubt his mind or body to prefer,
> Born but to die, and reasoning but to err?"

Righteousness is fundamental. He who believes in God has uttered the whole creed. He who follows righteousness sees God. In this day of new and shallow theories, when anything that has the grace of novelty may become a nine days' wonder, it is well to remember that some things are not in question.

That right is better than wrong; that truth is better than a lie; that it is better to be kind than to be fierce, pure than foul, hopeful than despondent, Christ-like than demoniacal.

To be Christ-like is fundamental to stable government, good social order and to the glory of the good time coming, which the sociologist calls by another name, but means what the Christian means when he speaks of the kingdom of heaven.

THE PRICE OF A FOOL-PROOF CIVILIZATION.

MAN has become a thinking and inventive animal because he had to think or perish. Naked and weaponless, thrown into a world where the race was to the swift and the battle to the strong, he had to match his greater wit against the greater might or subtler attack of his enemies. This sharpened his intelligence, and his thinking constituted one element in his fitness to survive. But civilization has been full of devices for the survival of the unfit. It is now a question of some importance whether our civilization has become a substitute for thought.

Are civilized people, especially residents of cities, losing the power to think?

Prof. Arland D. Weeks of the North Dakota Agricultural college, who writes in the current issue of the American Journal of Sociology, issued by the University of Chicago Press, says they are, and predicts that unless something is done to stimulate the reasoning faculties "there will ensue a dearth of inventiveness and a decline of civilization."

Prof. Weeks ascribes the decreasing power to think to the invention of mechanisms of all sorts that require a minimum of intelligence for management, such as watches, engines, typewriters, adding machines; and to the "centralizing of intelligence in managerial offices and a corresponding removal of problems from employes and agents."

"It was never more easy for a simpleton to live," he writes. "Let us not forget that an easy environment, with few conditions of surprise, throws the individual down to the lower reactions and swings the beam toward devolution and degeneracy. It is common to refer to modern life as highly complex; but this should not be taken to mean that the complexity is necessarily thought compelling. One's relations to this complex life may be so simple as to preclude those conditions of surprise required for intellectual advancement.

"It is no longer necessary to understand principles and constructions to be able to use machinery. Many machines are put on the 'foolproof.' Even the carton of breakfast food tells us where to open the box—'Cut along this line.' A dead level of almost automatic performance is forced upon factory employes, department workers, and quite generally upon salaried classes, not excluding a large percentage of those employed in educational work.

"Contrast the regimented lives of city workers and persons whose activities are directed from central offices with the frontiersman's life or with a single day camping out. The improvising of utensils, meeting of emergencies, and reactions to the unexpected give an exhilarating taste of a life which seems of a different world.

"That the new situations of the day in civic affairs have found the public unprepared for their rational solution and that even leaders who might otherwise be statesmen are found lacking in administrative ability of the highest grade is evidenced by failures of government."

CONCERNING THE DISCIPLES' VIEWS.

ATTENDANTS at the Toronto convention last October and readers of the Toronto Globe who were not present at the great gathering will recall a communication to that paper which warned unsuspecting Canadians not to become too much impressed with the specious words of these Disciples of Christ because behind their fair words, they hold to the doctrine of "water salvation" and consign unimmersed Methodists, Presbyterians and the rest to hell! No crasser statements had ever come under the observation of even the patriarchal men at the convention, and it seemed to be the general desire that some counteracting word be spoken in the Globe. This was done by the editor of The Christian Century who devoted only enough space to the matter to make a flat denial of the absurd charges.

Now comes a letter from the author of the original contribution, who turns out to be a Methodist preacher, enclosing a clipping from the Globe containing a rejoinder to Mr. Morrison's reply, and challenging the latter to a newspaper debate either in the Globe or The Christian Century! The temptation is very strong. A debate! Who could challenge our orthodoxy ever again if we had but once faced the Campbellite-killer in the arena of forensic combat? Our veins swell up at the prospect!

But on looking over our brother's rejoinder we can think of nothing we could say except to just keep on repeating, 'Tisn't so! His argument is as follows: Alexander Campbell taught water-salvation; therefore the Disciples gathered in Toronto and their churches throughout the world in this twentieth century teach water salvation. He quotes Mr. Campbell as saying in his book, "The Christian System:"

"Being born again and being immersed are the same thing." (page 200.)

"The Holy Spirit calls nothing personal regeneration except the act of immersion." (page 202.)

"The remission of sins cannot be enjoyed by any person before immersion." (page 208.)

"Immersion alone is the act of turning to God." (page 209.)

"No one is converted to God until he is buried in water." (page 209.)

"God has transferred the pardoning power of blood to water." (page 215.)

To all of which the only thing we could possibly reply would be that not one among the three thousand delegates at Toronto, nor one person of any recognized intelligence or leadership among the million and a quarter of Disciples in the wide world can be found to affirm a single one of the above alleged quotations from Alexander Campbell.

The Disciples of Christ do not today believe what Alexander Campbell believed upon baptism.

They do not believe that immersion is the historic and scriptural and appropriate MODE OF ADMINISTERING BAPTISM and that this mode alone should be practiced by those who aim at Christian unity.

This form of statement is in direct contradiction of Mr. Campbell's view. It was the farthest from the great leader's desire that his views on any subject should be taken as authoritative for all time.

One cannot find out what Disciples believe by reading ancient history. They are a growing people—growing in doctrine, in practice and in vision. To find out their views one must ask not their "fathers" but themselves.

DEMOCRATIC CONVENTIONS.

A SPECIFIC INSTANCE.

OUR purpose in these articles has been to show that if the General Convention of Churches of Christ is simply an advisory body, existing side by side with the missionary societies, coördinate with them, and unable to control our missionary and benevolent activities save by giving "advice" to the societies, it is a perfectly useless and absurd piece of machinery, with no real function whatever.

To ask the churches to send delegates to such a convention is an affront to the churches.

To elect men like Judge Henry and President Bell to the presidency of a convention which is unable to take a single effective action with respect to the essential matters with which such a convention of sovereign churches may appropriately deal, is to ask them to play at a boys' game.

That these are not too strong statements is already being proved by the attitude of the societies toward the single action taken by the General Convention after its organization last October. At this, its first annual meeting, the Convention wisely refrained from taking up many matters of business. But it did consider the report of a committee previously appointed to devise a budget system of taking missionary offerings, in place of the haphazard and competitive method which has always prevailed. The Convention unanimously accepted the system recommended by the committee and appointed Rev. Graham Frank, its chairman, to go among the churches explaining the new and better way and urging the churches to unite in its observance.

With this action of the Convention the societies have not been coöperative. Accepting at its face value the "explanatory resolution" previously passed by the Convention, in which it GAVE AWAY TO THE SOCIETIES the authority which the sovereign churches alone possess, the societies, either by default or by express action, have refused to support Mr. Frank in doing the task which the Convention appointed him to do. In a word, the societies have simply declined to accept the "advice" which THE CHURCHES, through their representatives, humbly proffered!

Those who are sensitive over the question of "authority" should be able to see plainly enough in this single specific case that it is not a question whether we shall have authority or no authority, but simply, Where shall the authority be lodged? Shall it be lodged in the churches or in the societies? It is now lodged in the societies. The churches as churches have never had a medium through which their inherent sovereignty could express itself. But the clear and explicit intention of the movement to create a "General Convention" was to provide a medium by which the churches could coördinate and unify their missionary and benevolent activities.

Through the strategy of those opposed to such a convention, the Convention, in the very hour of its birth, was made to declare that its only function would be to give some "advice" on missionary and benevolent matters to the already existing independent societies!

That free churches cherishing the principles of congregational polity will be content for long with such a position of subordination to the societies is unimaginable.

One of two results is inevitable. Either the churches will insist upon making their Convention their authoritative spokesman in missionary and benevolent and similar matters, or they will regard it as not worth while to send delegates to it.

FEDERATION IN CLEVELAND.

Two hundred Cleveland congregations, representing more than 100,000 persons, through their pastors, agreed to sink denominational differences and join the plan of the Federated Churches to hold a three days' missionary conference February 8, 9 and 10 with an interdenominational exchange of pulpits. This is the first time that any community has planned a movement of this kind. The subject to be discussed in each pulpit will be "The Challenge to the Church to Fulfil Its Missionary Responsibilities."

This will lay the foundation of a simultaneous every-member canvass for contributions for church extension at home and in the mission field which will be representative of every congregation affiliated with the Federated Churches. Churches engaged in this religious unity include the Methodists, Presbyterians, Baptists, Congregationalists and Disciples of Cleveland.

The plan, which was formed by the Federated Churches, was presented to the ministerial association at its meetings and was unanimously adopted. Meetings were held by the Methodist Union in the First M. E. Church; Baptist ministers, in Euclid Ave. Baptist Church; Presbyterians, at the Colonial Hotel; Disciples, McMillan building auditorium; Congregationalists, Schofield building auditorium.

Rev. E. R. Wright, secretary of the Federated Churches, announces that some leading laymen and ministers will be brought to Cleveland during the conference to speak in church pulpits. The year 1914, he said, would mark a new epoch in church activities in Cleveland. The conference, he declared, would bring each congregation into a hearty sympathy with the others, their home and foreign activities would become more closely allied and another stone in the foundation of church union in America would be laid.—Cleveland Leader.

CHURCH UNION IN NORTH DAKOTA.

Federated churches of Casselton, N. D., are celebrating the second anniversary of their organization, which has been characterized as the pioneer movement toward organic church union in North Dakota. Since the beginning of 1912 several other North Dakota cities have followed the example set and with almost uniform success.

The affiliation in Casselton is that of the Methodist and Presbyterian churches and the result is the establishment of a church home for all members of Protestant evangelical societies who may be in the city. During the last two years of operation under the federation plan, the work of the united church has been effective and undisturbed by dissatisfaction or sectarian strife of any nature. Dr. H. P. Cooper is now entering on his seventh year as a pastor in Casselton, having served the Methodist church of the city four years prior to the affiliation of the two churches under his leadership.

The idea of federating was first discussed by the pastors of the two churches, Rev. E. F. Lawrence and Doctor Cooper. Mr. Lawrence had already decided to locate in Idaho, but before going he did much to give the movement impetus. The idea met with a ready response among the thinking people of both churches. They saw in it the solution of a vexing problem, a solution that was both practical and warranted by fundamental tenets of the Christian religion. And so early in 1912 the plan of federation was worked out.

The method was simple. Indeed so simple that it leads to the observation that if people really desire to federate, almost any plan will do. The council of the federated churches is made up of three members from each church and this board of six is presided over by a chairman who is elected by the members of the committee. The churches maintain their separate individuality and contribute as in the past to their own denominational benevolences. The young people's meetings are federated, as is also the Sunday-school. Both the ladies' auxiliaries and the Women's Missionary societies are also united.

The Presbyterian church structure, being the better building of the two, is used for all services and the pastor's family have continued to reside in the Methodist parsonage. New members join whichever church they select, the utmost freedom being given in this respect. The board of six members constitute a sort of holding company and has charge of all questions that concern the co-operative congregations.

It will be seen that this federation plan steers clear of nearly all the difficulties that would ordinarily arise, the union being only functional. In this respect at least it has a distinct advantage over the comity plan which provides for the withdrawal of one church from the field.

As a result of the federation, the single burden of running expenses is borne by the federated body. The pastor's salary has been increased, the attendance at all church gatherings is larger and there is a general satisfaction that was never possible when there were two struggling congregations.—Fargo Forum.

PLEA FOR UNION IN CARRINGTON, N. D.

Declaring that it would be ten times easier to support a United Protestant church in Carrington, together with a parish house containing a gymnasium, auditorium, etc., with a physical director in charge, than it is now to finance the separate Protestant churches in Carrington, Rev. J. W. Anderson, of the Congregational church, made a splendid plea for amalgamation in a recent sermon. It was heard by probably the largest audience that has yet gathered to hear Mr. Anderson during his pastorate in Carrington. Hearty approval of the ideas advanced in the sermon was heard from the people.

Mr. Anderson contended for complete amalgamation rather than a federation. He believes that if such a union can be had in Carrington the present denominations should cease to exist as separate bodies. A new united church would supplant the present bodies completely.—Carrington Independent.

UNION CHINESE CHURCH IN CHICAGO.

There is being fulfilled in Chicago what many have thought to be only a dream of the future—the opening of a church with a simple and understandable creed, supported and conducted jointly by five different denominations and co-operating towards a common end. It is believed to be the first church of its kind in America. The name of the church is the First Evangelical Chinese Church of Chicago, and is located at 223-225 West Twenty-second street, in the heart of the new Chinese district.

The denominations co-operating and the ministers representing the co-operating council, who are to appoint the board of management of the church, are: Baptist, Rev. Shailer Mathews; Congregationalist, Rev. J. C. Armstrong; Disciples, Rev. O. F. Jordan; Methodist Episcopal, Rev. James Rowe, and Presbyterian, Rev. Edgar P. Hill.

There are said to be nearly 5,000 Chinese in Chicago and the new venture to give religious privileges to them is the result of the union of several individual movements hitherto undertaken by certain of the co-operating denominations.—Chicago Tribune.

PHILADELPHIA IN UNION PRAYER MEETING.

Recently in Philadelphia a union church prayer meeting was held. The people did not come to hear a concert or some celebrated orator. There were no exhortations, no soloists, no social hour. The invitation was given merely for Christians to come together and pray. The response was remarkable. Twelve hundred people assembled, completely filling the auditorium of one of the large churches.—The Continent.

PRESBYTERIAN RESCUE MISSION.

Preliminary plans are being made by the Presbyterians for the establishment in Baltimore of a mission similar to the Galilee mission in Philadelphia and the Jerry McAuley mission of New York. A study of conditions has convinced several observers that such a mission is one of the most urgent needs of the city.

MODERN WOMANHOOD

Conducted by
Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison

Suffrage Victory in Toronto

The first victory for equal rights in 1914 was the extension of municipal suffrage to the married women of Toronto. Our recent International Convention there makes this a matter of special interest to members of our church. Our ministers came home from that great gathering, full of enthusiasm over the conditions obtaining in the Canadian metropolis—especially the general observance of the Lord's Day, and the control of the vice elements, so rampant and powerful in our American cities. It is to be hoped that they will point another moral with this latest step in justice and reform.

Single women and widows have exercised the right of municipal suffrage in Toronto for many years, and this grant to married women is proof that they have made no bad use of their votes. Miss Alice Blackwell, editor of the Woman's Journal, says in a recent editorial:

"The tendency of equal suffrage is to spread. Toronto is only the latest in a long series of examples. Norway granted municipal suffrage to a limited number of women, and then extended it to all women. She followed this by giving Parliamentary suffrage to a limited number of women, and a few years later made that also universal. In Sweden limited municipal suffrage for women had prevailed for a great number of years; lately it was much broadened. Kentucky began by giving school suffrage to widows with children of school age, and has now extended it to all women who can read and write. In England municipal suffrage was given in 1869 to single women and widows only, but the later franchise acts (for Scotland in 1881 and Ireland in 1898), gave it to married women on the same terms as to the unmarried.

Throughout most of Canada the old exclusion of wives still prevails, but it is gradually giving way in the face of modern progress. In Vancouver, in Calgary and now in Toronto the men have decided that there is no sense in debarring qualified women from a vote in municipal elections merely because they are married. This view is bound to become universal.

"In many countries widows and single women got the ballot earlier than married women partly from a generous feeling that they had no one to represent them, and therefore ought to be allowed to represent themselves, and partly from an ungenerous feeling that a wife was a chattel, and that it would be highly improper to give her a vote which she might possibly cast for some other candidate than the one her husband supported. John Quincy Adams was inclined to favor suffrage for widows and spinsters, but he declared that 'wife suffrage' would be monstrous. In the United States this view is now practically obsolete. It is to the honor of American men that the ten states which have granted the ballot to women have drawn no line of discrimination against wives and mothers."

The result of the ballot on New Year's Day is given in a telegram to one of our exchanges:

"By a majority of more than two to one, the men of Toronto voted favorably in the referendum on the question of giving married women the municipal franchise on the same terms as widows and unmarried women. The result of the ballot on New Year's Day was 26,288 for, and 12,575 against. This action, similar to that taken a year ago in Vancouver, on the other side of the continent, is an indication of what is going on even in conservative Canada.

"'Of all the questions submitted to the electors,' says the Toronto Globe, 'probably not one won such a number of supporters at every meeting as did woman suffrage.'

"The suffragists had asked for the referendum, and had made a vigorous campaign. Mrs. Flora McD. Denison, president of the Canadian Woman Suffrage Association, says: 'Of course we are very much rejoiced, not only for Toronto, but because this is a national and international victory.'

"At one of the big meetings of the campaign, Dr. Margaret Gordon said, amid applause: 'We will show Sir James Whitney that woman suffrage is not the deadest thing on earth, as he had the nerve to tell us!' The result of the election certainly bears out her words."

Go to Church Sunday

BY FRANCIS E. CLARK.

In these three words, "Go to church," is crystalized one of the fundamental principles of Christian Endeavor. This is an abrupt, commanding, imperative sentence when used alone. When made into a compound adjective qualifying "Sunday," it designates a new movement which bids fair to become not only nation-wide but world-wide.

It is such a suggestion, which has originated with the Chicago Christian Endeavor union as part of the "Help-Our-Church Campaign," which The Christian Endeavor World has already taken up with enthusiasm, and which the United Society of Christian Endeavor has adopted and printed in leaflet form for wide distribution.

Now the Chicago union has added to its general suggestion of a Go-to-Church Sunday, the date, February 1, as a day for beginning the effort.

The plan has been enthusiastically indorsed by Catholics, Jews, and every Protestant denomination.

Leading commercial bodies and public-service corporations are co-operating so that every man, woman, and child, so far as possible may have an opportunity to go to church on that Sunday.

Extensive publicity plans include newspaper advertising, electric signs, billboards, streamers and posters on automobiles and wagons, house-to-house visitation, stickers on letters, telephone calls, and every other legitimate form of advertising.

I need only add my enthusiastic approval of the idea, and my profound conviction that great good may come of it.

Some cities had already planned for another date for Go-to-Church Sunday; Boston, for instance, has designated February 8. Another year I hope that some uniform date may be adopted throughout the country, and what better date than February 1 sould be suggested?

This will do much to show the solidarity of Christianity, to unite the Christian world in still another common observance.

It will concentrate the attention of the worldly and indifferent upon the church for one day at least. It will remind those who never think seriously of the church from one year's end to the other that there is such an institution. Even those who do not accept the invitation will be influenced by it, and it will afford an unusual opportunity to remind them of the church and its worth to humanity.

Of course Go-to-Church Sunday does not mean for Endeavorers simply that they will go to church on the first day of February. It is taken for granted that they will go anyway, not only on February 1, but every Sunday of the year, "unless prevented by some reason which they can conscientiously give to the Master." Go-to-Church Sunday means that Endeavorers will make every legitimate effort to persuade others to go.

Thirty-three years ago on the second of February, a Go-to-Church society was started in Williston Church in Portland, Maine. It was called a Christian Endeavor society, because it had other duties and functions, but it was none the less a Go-to-Church society. In its fundamental constitution and pledge was incorporated the thought, "I will support my own church." In at least ten million copies of the pledge in nearly one hundred different languages have these words been repeated.

What, then, could be more appropriate than that a Christian Endeavor union should start a specific movement in our anniversary week so congenial, so akin to the very heart of Christian Endeavor?

Already I have asked my friends in all societies to make the midweek prayer meeting in that first week of February particularly strong and helpful by attending, and sitting together in a body if convenient, and taking any part if the pastor desires. This is part of the celebration of Christian Endeavor Week. It is only an extension of the Go-to-Church Sunday.

These words are written on the eve of my departure for Europe to help our cause as best I may in other lands. They will not be read until I am on the high seas, but I would have the message go with the same force and direct personal appeal as if I could sit down with each of my fellow Endeavorers, takes each one by the hand, and say earnestly:

"Remember Christian Endeavor Week.

"Observe Go-to-Church Sunday by inducing at least one other person to go with you.

"Pray for the divine favor upon these plans every day from now on.

"Make 1914 a 'Go-to-Church Year,' as well as a 'Year of Prayer,' as I have already suggested in another article."

I shall await eagerly in a distant land the news concerning Go-to-Church Sunday and Christian Endeavor Week. I am confident the news will be good.

Disciples Table Talk

Progress at Ann Arbor, Mich.

The church at Ann Arbor, Mich., under the efficient leadership of the pastor, Rev. E. W. Knepper, is doing the best work in its history. The audiences are crowding the house. The Sunday-school is effectively at work. The Superintendent, Mr. A. E. Jennings, is an enthusiastic leader. Mrs. Jennings teaches the larger class of young ladies. She and her son, who is a student volunteer, and expects to take up missionary work in China as soon as he graduates, attended the great Student Convention in Kansas City last month. Prof. T. M. Iden the new incumbent of the Bible chair, is already making his influence felt in the church and the community. He has a class of young men in the church's familiar "Upper Room" class, whose total membership over the country runs into the thousands. The local group numbers about seventy. The Bible chair classes are opening with promise. The Ann Arbor church is to be congratulated upon its efficient and aggressive pastoral leadership, and the success which it is achieving.

An Opportunity for Middle West Preachers.

That " the State University is the greatest mission field for the church in America today" is a true statement. Pastors and others interested in religious work, living within reasonable distance of Bloomington, Ind., would be wise to their opportunity should they attend the Conference of Church Workers in State Universities, to be held in Bloomington, Feb. 3-5, 1914. All are welcome and are invited as fraternal delegates or visitors. All those registering will be furnished entertainment and breakfast as guests of Bloomington homes. A registration fee of $2 is charged. Joseph C. Todd is Secretary-Treasurer of the Bible Chair at Bloomington.

Among the speakers at the Conference are the following: Bishop J. M. Francis, Indianapolis; Prof. Frank G. Ward, Chicago; Prof. E. H. Lindley, Bloomington; Prof. Chas. T. Paul, Indianapolis; Dean Shailer Mathews, Chicago; President W. L. Bryan, of Indiana University.

To Clean Up Franklin, Ind.

The spirit of cleaning up is in the air. One of the latest champions of this cause is Wm. J. Wright, pastor at Franklin, Ind. In a sermon which he preached to his congregation there he pointed out four ways to clean up the town: First, to make homes better; second, to emphasize the moral element in the schools, both common and high school; third, to make honor, truthfulness, full weight and measure in the business world, the rule of faith and practice; fourth, the enforcement of the laws. Relative to the latter method he made the declaration: "The officers of a state and a city are in a work as divine as preaching the gospel, for there are no powers, but that are the powers from God and ordained of God."

M. L. Pontius on Church's Obligation.

M. L. Pontius, pastor at Central, Peoria, Ill., in a recent sermon made a very definite statement of the civic obligation of the churchman of today. "To be true to the ideals of its Founder" the speaker declared, "the church must lead in all social and civic reforms. The minister who refuses to preach on the subject is untrue to his calling and the church that refuses to co-operate in a campaign for law enforcement should be numbered with the unburied dead."

The sermon brought forth an editorial from the Peoria Journal, from which we quote:

"While there may be a tendency on the part of certain persons with their faces toward the past, instead of the future, to lament the idea of church cognizance of problems relating to social justice and law enforcement, the man or woman of clear vision and progressive thought recognizes that the solution of these problems calls primarily for applied Christianity. If religion means anything, it means the devotion of its professors to all causes which make for the advancement of the human brotherhood and the triumph of the common good. And it may be laid down as a principle of modern religious thought that wherever right and justice are involved, whether in politics or sociology or economics, there religion is concerned. The churchman who prays one way and votes another is no longer taken seriously. And vitalized religion calls first of all for Christian citizenship."

An interesting fact relative to Peoria is that a recent religious census of the city records the fact that there are over five thousand people in the city who prefer the Christian church. That the Central Church, under Mr. Pontius' leadership, is alert to its opportunity is evidenced by the fact that 29 persons have been added to the membership of the church since January 1, eight of them on one Sunday. The new building will be begun in the spring. Miss Hattie Genders, of Toronto, has been engaged as pastor's secretary. All lines of work are remarkably successful.

Robt. M. Hopkins, National Sunday-school Secretary, who will hold Schools of Methods in the West.

"The Sunday School Started It."

Broadway Church, Princeton, Ind., is making rapid strides. "It was the work in the Sunday-school that started the ball rolling," writes one of the leaders in accounting for the fact that church and school are outgrowing the building.

Three months ago the school had an attendance of 125, today it has over 300. A small men's class, taught by W. S. Hastings, began a campaign of membership increase. Rome G. Jones, minister, and Robt. C. Bartzell, superintendent, helped. On January 18 117 men were present. A contest is on with the Vincennes school, and with the men's class there in particular. The women's class has increased its membership from 10 to 50. A series of evangelistic services is planned to begin Feb. 22, with home forces.

Orange, California, Reports.

The annual meeting of the church at Orange, Cal., was held January 8. The church has suffered a change of pastors during the year and an interval of no pastor between the going of one and the coming of another. C. C. Bentley, for five years minister, was compelled on account of health to relinquish the work in August and the work passed into the hands of the new minister the middle of October. Notwithstanding these disadvantages the clerk reported a net gain of 13 during the year and a present membership of 327. During the year about $5,165 was raised in the church for all purposes. The church will continue in the living link class, supporting Harry Smith and wife, under the Woman's Board, in Liberia, Africa. A home missionary under the state board will also be supported and two native workers in the Congo mission of the Foreign Society are supported by a member of this congregation. A meeting to be held by H. O. Breeden, of Fresno, is planned for late February and early March. J. E. Picket ministers to this church.

Dr. H. L. Willett spoke at Kendallville, Ind., Jan. 22, in the interest of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, and at Joliet, Ill., Jan. 26, in behalf of the same cause. He will address the Canadian Club, at St. Thomas, Ont., Jan. 29; will speak at Tonawanda, N. Y., Jan. 30; and will give his lecture on "The Changing Orient" at First Church, Bloomington, Ill., Feb. 1. He will be chief speaker at a banquet of the new Men's Club of the Christian church, East Orange, N. J., Feb. 18. Dr. Willett addressed a union service of the Protestant churches of Ann Arbor, Mich., Jan. 18.

First Church, Los Angeles, Cal., R. F. Thrapp, pastor, at its annual meeting and turkey dinner, held Jan. 9, celebrated the clearing of all mortgages. Over $14,000 was raised during the year. The membership was increased 214. This live church has donated to J. C. Ogden, its missionary in Tibet, an Edison Phonograph to be used in his mission work. Mr. Ogden, with his family, spent two weeks with the church before sailing for Tibet Jan. 22. R. M. Hopkins will conduct a school of methods at Los Angeles, Feb. 22-27.

Norwood, O., church, C. R. Stauffer, minister, raised over $1,200 for missions last year, $5,400 for building fund. A total of $11,000 is reported raised. As a token of appreciation of the pastor's efficient service, the congregation increased his salary $200 per year. This church has a present membership of 510, with a Sunday-school attendance of 417, a gain of 32 per cent over the preceding year. Over 600 were present at the Sunday-school Jan. 11. Special evangelistic services are now in progress with home forces.

February 22, Washington's birthday, comes on Sunday this year. The National Men's Movement is suggesting that the day be observed as "Men's Day" and is sending to ministers a beautiful souvenir program containing a unique form of service to be observed in our churches. May every pastor rally his men about him and make the day one long to be remembered.

First Church, Tonawanda, N. Y., raised last year, $4371.36. About one-tenth of this amount was used for missions. This church has recently secured an option on 60 feet of land adjoining the church property. This gives 100 feet for the proposed community house and parsonage. The latter will be erected soon. Frank A. Higgins ministers to the church at Tonawanda.

R. S. Robertson, pastor at Aurora, Mo., is enthusiastic over the situation of his church and writes, "We have just recently paid off all the indebtedness of our church building and are planning for large things." A Brotherhood is being organized in this congregation. A banquet for one hundred men is to be addressed by John L. Brandt, of St. Louis.

Jackson Avenue Church, Kansas City, has just closed a brief meeting led by F. L. Bowen, the City Evangelist, resulting in a number of additions, and the raising of the church Extension debt of $15,060, and an additional $1000 for other expenses. Considering that this church is without a pastor, this is no mean achievement.

Mound City, Mo., church, adopting the one "Teaching and Worship Service" for Sunday-morning, has increased its attendance 100 per cent, and its mid-week prayer meeting attendance from 15 to 100. "No debts, a small balance in the treasury" is the good word from A. O. Kuhn, minister.

Tolbert F. Weaver, pastor at Pendleton, Ore., has good reason to be happy. An indebtedness of $8,350 which has hung over the church for five years went up in smoke January 11. Other small notes also were paid off. A. M. Meldrum, of Athens, formerly pastor at Pendleton, assisted in raising the funds, and for this service was given a gold medal by the congregation. Several prominent visitors helped to make the occasion a gala day.

Features of the report of Crawford Road Church, Cleveland, Ohio, Charles Darsie, pastor, are: Present membership, 356; added last year, sixty-six; total financial receipts, $5,700; for missions and benevolence, $800; paid on church debt, $7,000. Of $954 received in Sunday-school, fifty-three per cent went for missions and benevolence.

A city without saloons, a state without dramshops, and a nation with stainless flag were forecast in a recent sermon by Charles S. Medbury, pastor of University Place Church, Des Moines. "The promises of God are the pledge of victory," he said, in his sermon on "The Pledge of Victory."

E. L. Powell addressed a union meeting of 22 Cincinnati churches Jan. 16. His theme was "Church Unity." The purpose of the meeting, which was held in Central church, with 1500 attendance, was to cultivate a closer relationship between the churches of Cincinnati.

E. LeRoy Dakin, who has served for a year and a half as pastor at Memorial church, Chicago, is leaving this field, to begin work as pastor of the Baptist church, Logansport, Ind. Dr. Dakin has made a marked success in the difficult field ministered to by the Memorial church.

J. J. Tisdall, of Wilson avenue, Columbus, Ohio, reports: Membership increase from 355 to 658 during past year; pastoral visits, 1,053; total raised, $10,002.06; of this $758.49 for missions. In a present meeting, R. H. Fife evangelist, fifty-two additions in first ten days are reported.

The congregation of the Minnehaha Church of Christ, Minneapolis, Minn., a branch of Portland Avenue Church, erected their new building with their own hands. This property is valued at $5,500. A. W. VanDervort is pastor.

Mr. Hugh Kilgour, graduated from McMaster University, Toronto, last June, was recently ordained to the ministry at the Cecil Street Church. He has accepted a call to the Wychwood Church, Toronto, succeeding D. Munro.

Charles Reign Scoville is having notable success in his union meeting at Arkansas City, Kans. Ffteen churches are co-operating. During the first six days of invitation, 427 persons were received into the churches.

The Wabash Avenue Church, Kansas City, Missouri, will be dedicated the First Sunday in February by Geo. L. Snively. A week of fellowship services will follow the dedication. L. J. Marshall is the pastor.

W. J. Clark, the new adult superintendent of the American Society, is piloting a team of Sunday-school experts through the west. They are holding schools of methods in the principal centers on the Pacific Coast.

The National Men's Movement is enlisting the co-operation of every men's Bible class, club, and brotherhood in the land, and reports chapters already issued to 933 local chapters, a gain of 738 during 1913.

The Jefferson City, Mo., church, where A. R. Liverett ministers, has set as its aim for 1914: Net gain of 100 in church membership, 400 in the Sunday-school, clearing of an indebtedness of $6,000.

Over in Elmira, New York, the men of the Christian church have a Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip which has just affiliated with the National Men's Movement. C. M. Kreidler is the minister here.

Robert M. Hopkins, Sunday-school Superintendent of the American Society, will visit San Jose and Los Angeles, El Paso, Hutchinson, Kansas, and other points in the west during February.

Tabernacle Church, Columbus, Ind., where W. H. Book ministers, raised $7,581.58 last year. For missions, $2,395 was received. Marshall T. Reeves has been chosen as elder of this church for life.

W. B. Clemmer has begun his fourth year at Central, Rockford, Ill. A great rally service was held in celebration of this event. The new $25,000 building at Rockford is nearly completed.

C. O. Reynard has resigned from the pastorate of the Cecil Street Church, Toronto, to accept the general-secretaryship of Hiram College, in connection with the Men and Millions campaign.

First Church, Berkeley, Cal., raised over $7000 last year. During the past four years 296 new members have been received. H. J. Loken is the pastor at Berkeley.

LIFE FOR TWENTY-SIX.

The National Benevolent Association is just in receipt of an annuity payment of $2,400 from a Tennessee friend of the widow and the orphan, and another of $200 from an Ohio friend. It would be difficult to make a more significant gift or more profitable investment than is made possible by the annuity plan of the Association. The donors of these gifts receive a liberal interest on the amount of their gifts, paid semi-annually, during their life time.

To the recipients these gifts grant life. These gifts, if used in the children's department of the Association's work, will provide food, raiment, shelter, education and Christian care for one whole year for twenty-six homeless, parentless children. Imagine twenty-six such gathered in from their condition of poverty, sorrow and peril through the instrumentality of this gift. They become wards of a strong Christian Association—children, indeed, of the church. Before a twelvemonth has passed several of them possibly all, are adopted as the sons and daughters of Christian parents, taken into Christian families and given an equal opportunity with other children. No more valuable service than this can be rendered to society.

Do you wish to make a similar investment? Let us give you the particulars of our annuity plan. Address

FROM SOUTHEAST MISSOURI, FOURTH DISTRICT.

J. B. Lockhart, formerly District Evangelist for Northwest Arkansas, with headquarters at Fayetteville, has been called by the State Board of Missouri to serve as Superintendent of Missions for Southeast Missouri, the Fourth District, with headquarters at Sikeston. Mr. Lockhart is a man of splendid ability, and has rendered faithful service as an evangelist, and we are expecting a successful work in the Fourth District. He has already located in Sikeston, and his most excellent wife with the three children will move from Fayetteville to Sikeston as soon as arrangements can be made. Any churches in Southeast Missouri in need of a minister, will find Mr. Lockhart willing and ready to assist in securing the right man; if any churches in this District desire a good man for a meeting, they are requested to write to J. B. Lockhart, Sikeston, Mo.

C. A. Burrus has been doing good work in this District, holding meetings and building up weak congregations. He has been giving one-half time to this work, the other half is given to the church at Marquand.

We are planning for larger things in this District, and we earnestly ask the hearty co-operation of all the congregations in Southeast Missouri.

NEW YORK CITY MISSION NOTES.

The total expense of the city mission work for 1913 was about $6,700. Work was done in the English, Russian and Polish languages. Seven missions in widely separated sections of the city were supported. The following figures from the reports for 1913 will be of interest. Days of service 2,045; sermons preached 584; baptisms 76; other additions 35; total added 111; membership of mission churches 339; enrolled in Sunday-schools 946; average attendance in Sunday-schools for the year 515; monies raised on the field, for current expenses $3,232.06; for building funds $7,347.50; for missions $256.51; grand total raised $10,597.56.

January 31, I close a service of over ten years in this city, eight years as minister of the Humboldt Street Church and two years as Superintendent of City Missions. This closes ten years of a most delightful service, in which there has been an interesting and encouraging progress made in the metropolis of our country. A growth in members, interest and influence, it has been our pleasure to note. Because of the splendid organization of our work and the earnest co-operation of all the churches, the office of Superintendent of City Missions will be dispensed with for the present. M. M. Amunson, as chairman of the Mission Committee, will look after the interests of the missions. Send any communication bearing on any phase of the mission work to Rev. M. M. Amunson, 388 St. Johns Place, Brooklyn.

February 1, I shall enter upon my duties as minister of the Christian Church, Jackson, Tenn.

Supt. of City Missions.

Pastor Praises J. W. Mounce

The biggest thing on the horizon in the way of records seems to be the story of the faithful attendance upon religious services of J. W. Mounce, of Hannibal, Mo. In a recent issue of this paper we reviewed the remarkable career of this worthy man.

Geo. A. Campbell contributes a character sketch of Mr. Mounce to the Hannibal Morning Journal, in which he comments upon his physical soundness, his quick mentality, his brevity of speech, his punctuality and rugged honesty. He also refers to his retentive memory.

We quote from this interesting sketch of Mr. Mounce written by his pastor:

The church dearly loves Brother Mounce. I take it that several of the younger men on the board have been greatly inspired by his faithfulness and have resolved in the deep places of their souls to follow his example. It is only the faithful that are granted the privilege of bearing the responsibilities of the kingdom.

Mr. Mounce, as others of the older men of the First Church, would never consent to serve as an elder. He has acted as a deacon for half a century, I presume. Perhaps the reason is that the business man in him suppresses the man of sentiment. He is not, however, lacking in sentiment. Perhaps he wishes to encourage the younger men. Again it may be the thought of dispensing the emblems and asking God's blessing upon them and upon the people seemed too awesome for him. I do not know his reason, and I care not to know. He serves well and that is enough. He loves his church, lives for it. Of one of the old ministers of Missouri who recently visited here, and who is a cousin of Mark Twain, Mr. Mounce said: "I would rather have done what Brother Lampton has done than written all that Mark Twain has written." That expresses his attitude towards the ministry and the church. No pastor ever had a truer friend than Mr. Mounce —or a more helpful one. He is liberal with his local church and a staunch supporter of all the missionary agencies of the church. His vision is humanity wide.

There have been shadows over his life. The companion of his heart left this earth some two years ago. What life can reach three-quarters of a century without its shadows? But beyond the shadows he sees the light. His faith is not boastful, but calm and strong. In his quiet hour his thoughts must dwell much with the beyond. I find him telling me frequently of articles on immortality. Divine curiosity as to what is just beyond death must have place in his active mind.

But he is not morose. He is not critical of our day and its deeper tendencies. He believes the kingdom is coming day by day, year by year. He is alert with regard to the progress of temperance, missions and the democratic readjustments that are so prominent in our time. His little grandson "Jack" greatly interests him—and I have no doubt he often thinks that Jack's day will be better than his. Mr. Mounce reads incessantly. He has just finished "The Inside of the Cup," and not many persons to whom I have talked have equaled him in grasping the message of Mr. Churchill or surpassed him in intellectual criticism of the book.

Mr. Mounce is growing old gracefully. The young like him as well as the old.

With Browning his faith would allow him to say:

"Grow old along with me,
The best is yet to be."

The Great Missionary Days

The missionary days agreed upon by our National Conventions have been of immense value to the work, and should on no account be discontinued. The few missionary churches that do not observe them, in most cases, have suffered loss of interest. This is the testimony of many.

When the missionary budget is adopted and the Duplex envelope is used, the days should still be observed for educational purposes. The first Sunday in March gives the minister or leader an opportunity for setting forth and emphasizing the work of the Foreign Society; the first Sunday in May affords an opportunity of magnifying the work of Home Missions; and so throughout the year.

THE REASONS WHY.

1. The missionary days have a place in the consciences of tens of thousands of our people. They expect to hear something about the interests the days represent.

2. When the Every-Member-Canvass is made in the church all will not agree to give every week in the year. They are not accustomed to that method and are not prepared to adopt it.

3. The weekly contribution is not now practicable in many of our country churches.

4. The Every-Member-Canvass will not reach all; some will be sick; some will be away from home when the canvass is made. All should hear about the work and should have a chance to give. If the days are not observed the chances are that all these will not give anything.

5. The days should be observed for the benefit of the new converts. They need to be trained and to form the habit of giving.

6. The days should be observed for the benefit of strangers who may be present and who may give when the work is presented.

7. The days should be observed for the education of the children who are growing up in the church.

8. The records of the Foreign Society show that in many cases the churches that have adopted the Duplex Envelope give less than before. This is not because the new method is defective, but because it has not been thoroughly worked. No method will work itself. The offerings were smaller because the Duplex Envelope was supposed to possess some magical power. There was less education and less concern, because there was less education, and naturally the offerings were smaller.

NOT A LABOR-SAVING DEVICE.

The churches that use the Duplex Envelope should know that it is not a labor-saving device. The fact is that if the Duplex Envelope is to yield satisfactory results, more work must be done by the minister and the missionary committee than was done under the system it displaced. There must be line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a great deal. The need of systematic and proportionate and sacrificial giving must be kept before the churches until they give as did those churches of whom the apostle spoke when he said: "To their power I bear witness, yea, and beyond their power they gave of their own accord."

By all means let the great missionary days continue to be worthily observed.

TOPIC FOR FEBRUARY 11.

Church Efficiency—The Official Board.

"I can hold a meeting there and have fifty converts," said a young minister to an older one. "I do not doubt that you can," was the reply, "but what of it? Where is your material for leadership? You cannot have a church unless there is somebody able and willing to guide it." The older man had seen more than one church come to nothing because there was no one to lead it.

The moral tone of the average church and community depends largely upon a few men and women. By what they say and do they make high demands upon all others. We are all quite willing to let the world travel on its way undisturbed even when it is going in the wrong direction. Certainly, we grumble at it, but we stop too often with that. We need some one to say, "This is what we ought to do and do now," and to make us feel that we must act.

WHY IS THERE A CHURCH BOARD?

Do we choose elders and deacons in order to be like the apostolic church? Very well, the apostolic church had use for its members who enjoyed the distinction of being designated by special titles. It never had any officers until it had something for them to do. Nowadays a church must have its officers whether it has work for them or not. The board represents the church. What it does, the church does. It has oversight of the business of the church and it looks after the spiritual life of the members. Its efficiency is to be judged by its success or failure in providing the funds necessary for the support of the church and to meet the just demands of the missionary societies and in organizing the church for educational and spiritual work.

THE MONEY QUESTION.

There is no virtue in loose financial methods. The coal dealer and the janitor will listen more attentively to the preaching of the gospel if the church pays them what it owes them and pays promptly. The minister will have greater confidence in the word of the church if his salary is ready for him when it is due. He can preach with added power if he knows his bills are paid and that he owes no man anything. The annual deficit which many churches face is a serious hindrance to spiritual growth.

FEED THE FLOCK.

The efficient member of a church board is studying the educational problem. Napoleon refused to see the schoolmaster Pestalozzi, saying that he had something else to discuss besides questions of a b c. But later, when France was humiliated by Germany, it was the schoolmaster who triumphed. Questions of a b c are more important than Napoleon thought they were. And questions of religious instruction are more important than many men who think they know the great issues of the present are able to see. The board that does its duty provides for the instruction of young and old in the things that pertain to life and godliness. A course of instruction in religious education would be a good preparation for membership on the board of a church.

THE HONOR THAT IS DUE.

The reason some church boards do little or nothing is that the churches withhold from them the honor of loyal support. They are criticised for what they fail to do or for what they do that is displeasing to the members; they are never praised for the honest efforts they have made to discharge their duties. They are left to do all the planning. They go without the stimulus that comes from suggestions of interested members of the church. The efficient board has back of it a church that knows what it is about and is willing to pay the cost of service.

(37) Now as he spake, a Pharisee asketh him to dine with him: and he went in, and sat down to meat. (38) And when the Pharisee saw it, he marvelled that he had not first bathed himself before dinner. (39) And the Lord said unto him, Now ye the Pharisees cleanse the outside of the cup and of the platter; but your inward part is full of extortion and wickedness. (40) Ye foolish ones, did not he that made the outside make the inside also? (41) But give for alms those things which are within; and behold, all things are clean unto you.

(42) But woe unto you Pharisees! for ye tithe mint and rue and every herb, and pass over justice and the love of God; but these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone. (43) Woe unto you Pharisees! for ye love the chief seats in the synagogues, and the salutations in the marketplaces. (44) Woe unto you! for ye are as the tombs which appear not, and the men that walk over them know it not.

(45) And one of the lawyers answering saith unto him, Teacher, in saying this thou reproachest us also. (46) And he said, Woe unto you lawyers also! for ye load men with burdens grievous to be borne, and ye yourselves touch not the burdens with one of your fingers. (47) Woe unto you! for ye build the tombs of the prophets, and your fathers killed them. (48) So ye are witnesses and consent unto the works of your fathers: for they killed them, and ye build their tombs. (49) Therefore also said the wisdom of God, I will send unto them prophets and apostles; and some of them they shall kill and persecute; (50) that the blood of all the prophets, which was shed from the foundation of the world, may be required of this generation; (51) from the blood of Abel unto the blood of Zachariah, who perished between the altar and the sanctuary: yea, I say unto you, it shall be required of this generation.

Verse by Verse.

By C. C. Buckner.

v. 37. A Pharisee asked him: He was probably curious to learn more of the strange teacher than could be learned by merely listening to his public remarks. He went in: Jesus availed himself of every opportunity to present his message.

v. 38. He marveled: The ceremonial washing before meals was strictly followed by the orientals.

v. 39. Cleansed the outside, etc.: The figure expresses their great care for appearances and their disregard for real character.

v. 41. Prof. Cheyne translates this division, "Cleanse what is within, and surely all is clean to you."

v. 42. Ye tithe: They gave their tenth with exasperating care. Jesus did not object to this system, but to their utter neglect of duties, a thousand-fold more vital.

v. 43. Chief seats: They were motived by love of praise, not by a sense of duty.

v. 44. Ye are as tombs, etc.: Each year tombs were covered with lime-wash that travelers, seeing them, might avoid them; if they touched them they were defiled.

v. 45-46. Lawyers: Expounders of the law. Ye load men with burdens: They enforced on the people so many minute laws that they lost the Spirit of the Law, Matt. 15:21.

v. 47-48. Ye build the tombs, etc.: One generation builds a fire under its great men; a later generation builds a monument over them. Usually the fire-builders and the monument builders are men of the same type.

v. 49-51. Said the wisdom of God. Said Jesus. From the foundations: Heb. 4:3; 9:26; Rev. 13:8; 17:8. Abel: Gen. 4:10. Zachariah: 2 Ch. 24:22.

At the Heart of the Lesson.

By A. Z. Conrad.

THE DANGERS OF DINING.

Luke 11:37. "A certain Pharisee besought him to dine with him: and he went in and sat down to meat." Invitations may be for bait or benefit. Before you accept, ask the question, "Who?" and "Why?" Mixing with men masterfully is a fine art. You must touch before you can transform. Too much aloofness and apartness awakens suspicion and weakens influence. Intimacy with evil imperils unless you are immune. Pious purpose protects. Righteous intention makes the acceptance of almost any invitation safe. Contact by no means involves contamination. Jesus dined with Pharisees on more than one occasion. He partook of their food, but rebuked their folly. He looked upon every invitation as an opportunity for promoting righteousness. You can safely mingle with malevolent men only when filled with a redemptive passion and purpose. Not satisfaction but salvation was the purpose of Christ when banqueting with blinded bigots. The uppermost thought with the majority of us when invited to dine is delight rather than deliverance. We compromise our convictions when we accept favors at the cost of principle. Jesus never did that. The regalia of a deaconess enables a woman to go to saloons and all sorts of disreputable places without peril either to her reputation or character. It is a very rare thing for a man who is a known messenger of the Prince of Peace to be damaged by desperadoes. In social relationships it is not only possible but oftentimes desirable to associate with people both uncongenial and unrighteous, with the conscious purpose of connecting them savingly with Christ.

COLLISION WITH CUSTOM.

v. 38. "And when the Pharisee saw it he marvelled that he had not first washed before dinner." Jesus deliberately broke with conventionalities when they had become substitutes for realities. Hygienic regulations had been turned into religious rites. Ceremonialism had been substituted for sincerity of service. Hands washed, hearts withered. That is what Jesus saw. A red light is the only thing that will stop many a motorist. Apathy sometimes has to be shocked into sensibility. Only a jar and a jolt arouses and awakens somnolent society. Collision with custom pulled up Phariseeism with a round turn. It was Christ's way of breaking into the mouldy mass. It was like turning your glass at the banquet board when everyone else is drinking. It invites criticism but calls back to life cauterized consciences. "The Pharisee marveled. That was a gain. Opposition is convertible. Inertia is irresponsive. We are too orderly. We are too cowardly to defy fashion. We are paralyzed by precedents. We are commanded by custom. We are afraid to venture against veneer. We are bullied by baubles and bubbles. Make Pharisees marvel and you have made instruction possible.

SYMPATHY AND SERVICE.

Sacrifices were not to be despised, but were not the highest evidence of sincerity. Personal sacrifice counted for much more than mere sacrificial performances which cost nothing. Alms were the surest evidence of a sympathetic purpose and a serviceable desire. They were an indication of a relationship to God far stronger than vociferous proclamation and pious profession. Service and sacrifice were always presented by Jesus as an indispensable sign and seal of spiritual consecration and aspiration.

COMMERCIALIZED RELIGION.

"Ye tithe mint and rue and all manner of herbs, and pass over judgment and the love of God." Here was the sentence of condemnation, unequivocal and final. Again, there was no objection to their tithing the mint and the rue. It was a duty to give generously in the interests of the kingdom, but however conscientious might be the setting apart of a certain amount of material treasure this could not be a substitute for the justice passion and love passion. When God has us he also has ours. There is no trouble about the collection-plate when the fires are burning on the altars of the heart. Churches preëminent in love for God and man do not suffer from an empty treasury. "These ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone." Here we have Christ's entire estimate of ceremonials, formalities and various religious activities. The church is not to be commercialized nor are its members to be classified by financial ability. The arraignment continues and sentence of condemnation is passed on pride and the passion for applause. The biting, blistering word which Jesus employed was the word, "Hypocrite." Heaven and earth alike abhor hypocrisy. However, let it be remembered that the hypocrisy of the day of Christ was not confined to the Pharisees. The Jews had no monopoly on cant and cunning. No more has the church today. There is some hypocrisy in the church without doubt, but there are ten hypocrites outside the church for every one in it. The man who pretends that his reason for not going to church is because there are hypocrites in it, is himself the worst kind of a hypocrite. The man who excuses himself from religious duty because he had "too much of it in childhood" is worse than the worst of the ancient Pharisees. It is a wholesome thing to meditate on Christ's arraignment of the Pharisees. We all need to recognize the unspeakable importance of genuineness and sincerity. But let this be said, Mr. Winston's Churchill's "The Inside of the Cup" is a caricature and not a characterization. It is not the picture of any of the churches I have known. Of more than two thousand people whom it has been my privilege to welcome into the church of God during my ministry, (with the rarest exceptions) sincerity and genuineness characterized their lives. Among the officials of three large churches I have never seen one "Elden Parr."

"Woe unto you Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye are as graves that appear not, and men that walk over them are not aware of them." Yet every man knows his own weakness and his own wickedness. The impossibility of an absolute knowledge of what lies in the depths of another man's soul ought to lead to charity of judgment, while at the same time it should lead us to the greatest caution as to where we place our confidence. The possibilities of duplicity and deception are almost measureless. In all the relations of life we need a higher than merely human wisdom to be able to interpret the conduct of those about us, and in all alliances established the guidance of the Divine Spirit is needed to prevent errors of judgment which would result in catastrophe.

UNSHARED BURDENS.

Jesus said, "Woe unto you also ye lawyers for ye lade men with burdens grievous to be borne and ye yourselves touch not the burdens with one of your fingers." They multiplied legal requirements. Meanwhile, they themselves who exacted these things did not pretend to obey the laws and precepts they presented. Christ's arraignment is world wide and time wide. The teacher of religion needs to take care that he does not condemn himself by urging strict obedience to traditional programs and forms of religion while he himself lives a life of self-indulgence and ignores the burdens he lays upon others. God never designed religion to be a burden to anybody, but rather to be a continuous blessing. The highest and holiest requirements of Christianity are not such as are burdensome to those who are filled with the Christ spirit.

POST MORTEM MEMORIALS.

"Ye build the sepulchers of the prophets and your fathers killed them." To condemn ten thousand men to commercial death and then build churches and universities with the money will put no man right with God. Jesus presents count after count against these men who were professional religionists. It was an incessent thunder of artillery against evil entrenched behind the forms of religion.

Jesus made it clear that every age is the legatee of all that has preceded. We who have the light of the Word and the light of history are without excuse if we fail in religious duty. None can doubt the kindliness and the gentleness of Jesus. Destruction was no part of his program. Yet this arraignment is real. Jesus meant what he said. No one can expect Divine favor until he knows in his inmost soul that he is striving to make every holy profession a reality in life. The appropriate prayer as we read the appeal of Jesus for spiritual honesty is "Create in me a clean heart O God and renew a right spirit within me."

National Brotherhood Secretary Lauds "The Conquest"

E. E. Elliott.

The following letter explains itself:

Kansas City, Mo., Jan. 17, 1914.

Editor "The Conquest," Chicago.

Dear Sir:—What is the reason that I do not get The Conquest? I subscribed some weeks before the first issue was to appear but missed entirely the first two issues and the third one has made me so hungry for the others that I am venturing to write you for them. I think you have one of the snappiest, most up-to-date little sheets that comes my way, and it is not so little either. It contains a wealth of good stuff, and while I am a busy man and necessarily a hasty reader, I have taken time to go over your most recent number with exceptional care and it most certainly strikes my fancy. The thing I like about it is that it shows discrimination in the selection of material, and while of course you want it to be a newspaper, you are particular as to the kind of news you publish. It shows neither haste nor waste in its preparation. I am not only hoping but thoroughly predicting that your paper will find its place in present unoccupied or inadequately tilled fields of Christian journalism.

Very truly yours, E. E. Elliott, Sec'y.

A Call to Prayer*

REMEMBERING the gracious promise of our Lord, "And all things, whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive," let us pray at evening and at noon and in the morning for the Conference to be held in St. Louis in the interest of the Men and Millions Movement, that in the work of preparation nothing may be overlooked or neglected, and that every address and every song and every prayer may be in harmony with the will of God, and that all who attend the Conference may be so illuminated and so helped by the Divine Spirit that they will be enabled to assist the Movement most effectively. Let us pray for those who are leading, that they have the strength and the wisdom and the patience and the persistence needed in the campaign, and that they may find favor with all the people; and that the challenge of Brother Long to the brotherhood may be promptly and fully met. Let us pray that the thousand workers needed may be forthcoming, and that the five millions required to complete the undertaking on its financial side may be secured without delay. Let us pray that in the accomplishment of this mighty task Christ may be greatly glorified.

The Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse is fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, the Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

The Man Who Went to Sleep

The Bible tells us of a man who went to sleep in church. His story might be a warning of several kinds. It might be interpreted as a rebuke to long sermons. Paul preached long that night—"even till break of day." We should like to see a congregation that would listen to such a sermon now. Thirty minutes is the ordinary limit, and in some places the people are insisting upon twenty.

Whatever sins the ministers of the present have, long sermons are not among them. The old-fashioned preacher never thought he had done his duty if he did not reverse the hour glass, and some times he turned it twice. Cases are on record in New England in which churches brought their ministers into court because they preached only thirty minutes instead of an hour and more. We have passed all that. This is an age of short sermons. If the ministers needed the lesson, they have learned it.

We have a measure of sympathy with the demand for short sermons. Other things have had to be boiled down. The old three-volume novel has had its day. It is the age of the short story as well as of the short sermon. The first rule of every newspaper is "Boil it down," and the next is "Light it up." People want, and deserve shorter sermons, shorter stories, shorter lawsuits and shorter scoldings than they once did.

But we should be unwilling to lay the whole of the blame upon Paul. He had much to say. The people to whom he wanted to say it were there and he did not always have them before him. He knew what they did not know, that it was probably his last appearance among them. He had precious truths that needed to be uttered.

There are times when a sermon does not easily compress itself within thirty minutes. We have little patience with the preacher who continues to talk for an hour after he has said all he has to say, or for the preacher who does not know a good stopping place. Every sermon ought to have good terminal facilities. But it is impossible that every lawsuit should finish its testimony and pleas in exactly the same time, or that every speech in the United States Senate should be of exactly the same length. So it is not reasonable to demand that no sermon should ever be five minutes longer or shorter than any other. Sermons are not made by a brick machine, that squeezes just so much soft clay into a mold, and chops it off with a wire. A sermon is a living thing, a part of the blood and brain and heart of him who preaches it, and sometimes refuses to be just so long and no longer.

"There sat in the window a certain young man named Eutychus, borne down with great sleep; and as Paul discoursed yet longer, being borne down by his great sleep he fell down from the third story, and was taken up dead. And Paul went down and fell on him, and embracing him said, Make ye no ado; for his life is in him." Acts 20:9-10.

Eutychus went to sleep. We will not blame him. He doubtless had done a hard day's work, and he needed rest. Still, it was unfortunate. He missed part of a good sermon. He disturbed others, if not with his snoring, at least with his tumble. He was in danger, sitting in the window where he shut out fresh air from others, and making poor use of it as he sat there. The man who sits in the window is doubly under obligation to keep awake.

Men have been shot for going to sleep on duty. Soldiers in the Civil War sent home asking for red pepper to put in their eyes on nights when they had to stand on picket duty and were afraid of going to sleep. Some conscientious and sleepy-headed soldiers, filled with fear lest they might go to sleep, took that smarting method of assuring themselves that they would keep awake. A minister should sometimes put a little red pepper in his sermons for similar reasons.

We have traveled abroad with people who slept while the ship passed in sight of Vesuvius and played bridge whist undisturbed while we passed Patmos, where John saw the vision of heaven.

Eutychus fell. So has many a man fallen from his religious security by reason of his sinful slumber. He woke with a jolt. Such a jolt ought all men to feel who sleep in the midst of duty. They thought he was dead; he had been as good as dead for a good while.

But as the loving power of God brought back life to Eutychus, so we hope will be done to other sleeping Christians.

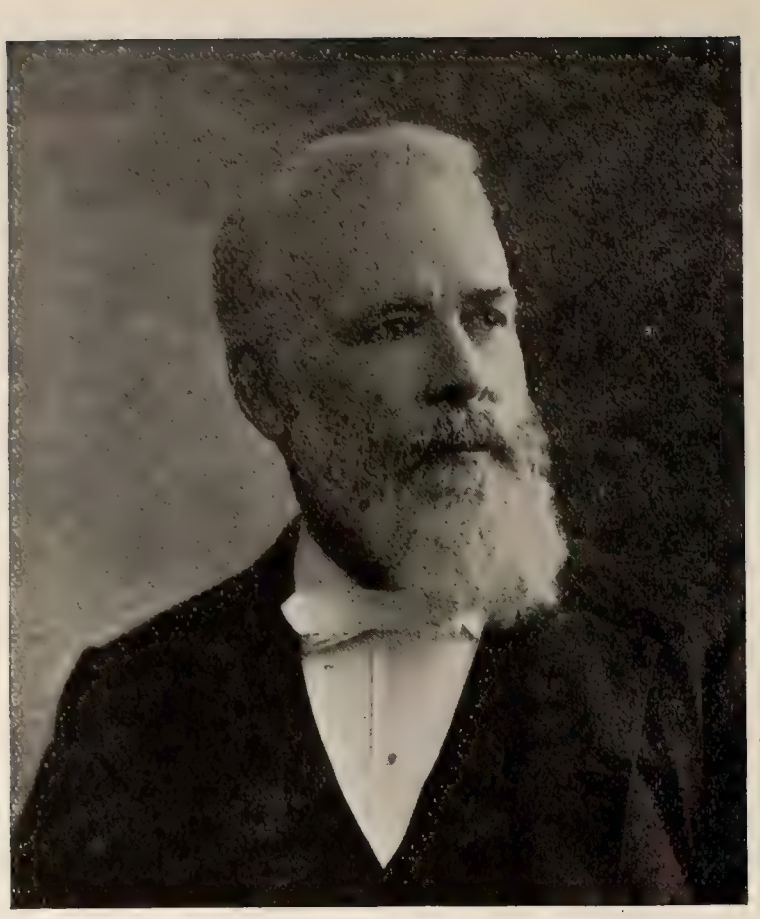
Brother and sister, are you awake to your opportunity? Are you listening to the messages of God? Are you dazzled by the world's many lights of alluring temptation and, watching them more than listening to God, have you fallen asleep? This little sermon is for your awakening. May you find new life in the service of God. The world needs men who are awake. The opportunities that are passing will not return. Wake up.



Rev. James M. Campbell.

The New Evangelism

Some Suggestions As to How It May Be Practically Applied In Home, School and Church.

BY JAMES M. CAMPBELL.

THERE has been too much playing to the galleries, in the matter of lampooning spurious evangelism and sensational evangelists. Nothing could be cheaper, and nothing could be more futile than that sort of thing. It may win a smile, but it does not improve conditions. What is needed is to show a more excellent way. When denunciation is called for let it be followed by displacement; let the good supplant the bad; let the improved method supplant the one that has become outworn; let the new-fashioned revival supplant the old-fashioned revival.

GENUINE REVIVAL NEEDED.

That certain types of revival have in a large measure run their course is obvious. But many are asking, what is to take their place? So long as we have a depressed Church, and an indifferent world, revivals we must have; but like everything else they must, in their outward form, "with endless change be fitted to the hour." Not until men cease to be gregarious can the mass meeting be dispensed with. It is needed in politics; it is needed in religion; it is needed wherever public sentiment has to be created and crystalized. To suppose that the day of revivals has passed and gone, is absurd. Some forms of them are vanishing —God be praised! but as long as time lasts, the genuine revival which seeks in legitimate ways to move men in the mass, will have a place.

In their perplexity many are seeking the solution of the evangelistic problem in what is called educational evangelism. They are impressed with the fact that the children of the church have been woefully neglected; that the Sunday-school has not been used as an evangelistic agency as it might have been; that the gulf has ever been widening between the young people and the Church; and for this deplorable state of things they are eagerly seeking a remedy. One of the most notable addresses at the recent Congregational National Council was upon this subject. The speaker, Rev. Ernest Bourner Allen of Toledo, put his finger upon the weakest spot in our church work, and in constructive spirit endeavored to point out one way, at least, in which the better day for which we are all longing and praying is to be brought in.

But it may well be questioned, whether in this discussion we have been going deep enough. Before considering methods the thing demanded is the awakening of the evangelistic spirit; before digging new channels we must see to the increase of the water supply; before praying in the abstract, "Lord revive thy work," we must pray in the concrete, "Lord wilt thou not revive us again?" The evangelistic spirit is the one thing needful; and it is the one thing lacking. Because our religion is passionless it is void of propagating power. Revivals are absent because we are not revived. Now, how are we to be revived? How is the evangelistic spirit to be awakened? How are the hearts of Christians to be made to burn with a passion for souls? There is only one way; and that is, by going back to the Cross. It is there, and there alone, that the fire of evangelistic zeal is kindled. And so long as the cross is left out of Christian thought and experience this holy fire will burn low, if it burn at all.

HOW THE EVANGELISTIC SPIRIT WORKS.

When once awakened the evangelistic spirit will find suitable outlets. It will work along educational lines, moving like leaven from particle to particle until the whole social lump is leavened. It will work also in other directions. It will quicken every existing agency; it will create new ones if necessary; it will permeate with its saving influence every part of the life which it touches.

There are three main directions in which the evangelistic spirit has always worked, and will always work.

1. It has worked and will always work in and through the family. This is its first and chief sphere of operation. Every other agency comes after this, and is subordinate to it. The home is the fountain-head of our religious life. As our homes are so is the Church, for the life of the church will rise or fall to the level of the life of its homes. It is from homes that have been born again by the practical power of Christianity, and have become transfigured into earthly types of heaven itself, that the most stable and useful Christians come forth. Almost all those who today are occupying the front ranks in the Lord's army of conquest received their first consecration at a mother's knee. Whenever there is a dearth of money or men to carry on the aggressive work of the Christian church, if the evil be only traced back far enough it will be found to have its source in the unconsecrated cradles.

THE REVIVAL NEEDED TODAY.

The revival most needed today is the revival of home religion, leading to the rekindling of extinguished home-altar fires. In this busy, bustling age the home is apt to be slighted as affording an insufficient outlet for the overflow of our abounding zeal. There is a constant demand for more room wherein to bestow our goods, more scope for the display of our powers. But the home life if sometimes narrow and monotonous, is always deep, and always far-reaching in its results. To over-estimate its importance is impossible. One of the crying evils of our modern social life is that by the multiplication of all sorts of societies we are imperiling the welfare of the home. The curse of club life is that it robs the home of its social interest. This too, is the danger to which we are exposed in the present-day development of our church work. In too many instances the home is neglected that our multitudinous societies may be kept up. Against these various forms of associated effort no railing accusation is here brought; they are for the most part providential movements which have been abundantly justified by their usefulness; but is it not high time to call a halt to this society making business? Only by cultivating the religious life of the home can the spiritual power of the church be conserved, and the kingdom of God be made to grow in harmony with the natural and normal law of human development. When rival claims make demands upon us everything else ought to yield to those of the home. If the interests of the home are sought first, all other things will be added. What doth it profit for a parent to gain success in the wider fields of toil, if he is forced to say with bitter regret, "They made me a keeper of vineyards and mine own vineyard have I not kept."

We hear a great deal in the present day about the boy problem. At the bottom it is the father problem. For the part which belongs to the father is the molding of the life of his boy; no substitute can ever be found. As a rule the boy will walk in his father's steps. There are exceptions to this; for cross currents of influence may afterwards come in deflecting the young life from the direction in which it was turned, but even in these cases it may fetch round again before the end. From the influence of a godly home no one can ever altogether get away.

In seeking to realize a revived and enlarging Church the emphasis must be put upon the home. There all reform must begin. Not only must there be religion in the home; but there must be home-religion. The father must perform his priestly duties; the home spirit and atmosphere must be Christianized; religion must be made attractive; the highest ideals of conduct must be held up; the parents must watch for the psychological moment in the lives of their children when in the midst of their varying moods of unrest and yearning, their hearts become tender and their will pliant, and the seed which has long lain dormant begins to germinate, and lead them to declare definitely for Christ. When these things are done the Church will be as in a continuous state of revival.

THE HOME A SPIRITUAL SOURCE.

In a recent book entitled, "The Psychology of the Christian Soul" it has been pointed out that "revivals are not the main source of the supply of the Church; and that there have been long periods in the church's history when there were no revivals, and no church work but the educative influence of the Christian home, and the ordinary means of grace, and these have often been the most productive periods of all." To this it is added that, "if the records of the Christian homes were kept, and the story of their work were told, it would transcend all other Christian work together." No doubt of it. And this being so we must go back of all other agencies whatsoever, back of the Church even, and seek to open up this fountain of life which the worldliness of the times has been permitted to choke up, so that its refreshing and fertilizing waters may again flow forth, through the Church, into the waste places of life.

2. It has worked and will always work through the ordinary services of the Church, through the Sunday-school, Bible Classes, and kindred agencies. The failure of the former of these has led many to turn with hope to the latter. Although a somewhat modern institution the Sunday-school has proved itself to be a needed auxiliary to the Church. It was born in due season. It is sometimes supposed to have succeeded better in its primary purpose of religious instruction than in its ultimate purpose of the development of Christian character. But this is a questionable conclusion. Next to the home it has been the most influential agency in shaping the lives of the young. And its influence is often greater where it works in natural ways, not attempting to disrupt the natural order of life, but putting into every part of it a saving and elevating influence.

PREVENTING THE LEAKAGE.

From the Sunday-school the children ought to pass easily and naturally into the church. But it is here that the greatest leakage has taken place. How are we to prevent it? Partly, by making the service of the Church more attractive for the children; partly by seeking to reestablish the family pew, and getting parents to say to their children "Come," instead of "Go;" and chiefly by recognizing that the work of the church is a unit; and that it matters little at what point young life is held to the things of Christ, so that it is held. Nothing could be more serviceable at present than the kind of work that is being done by the "Leagues of Worshiping Children" and similar organizations; but we must not forget that the getting of children to attend the church services, or even the getting of them to enroll themselves as members of the church is not the end. The end of all is the development of Christian character. To many of the children under its care, the Church must do all of its ministering through the Sunday-school; but let it not think that its labor is lost if it ends there; for that which goes into the human lives is imperishable.

We have come to measure success by statistics. The Year Book is the judgment-seat before which pastors are hailed, and at which Churches are judged. We are feverishly anxious about outward results, often forgetting that the kingdom of God does not come by observation. Forcing methods are frequently resorted to; decision days are appointed to supply the lack of constant watch care throughout the year. The result is that our baskets are filled with unripe fruit; and while the Church roll is swelled, the strength of the Church is not sensibly increased.

We must learn to work by faith and not by sight, watching for the unfolding of the young life committed to our care, as the horticulturist watches for the opening moment of some carefully tended flower, when there comes to him a joyous recompense for all the toil and care that have gone before. Of this we must be fully assured, that a warm, natural and healthy educational evangelism, in which parents, pastor, Sunday-school teachers, and a mothering Church steadily unite, will not fail of rewarding fruitage.

3. It has worked, and will always work in special and united evangelistic effort. After the home, the Church, and the Sunday-school have done their utmost it will always be found that many have slipped outside the circle of their influence. These have to be brought back. Besides these there is a vast host brought up in non-Christian and in un-Christian homes whose early lives have been untouched by any of these agencies. These have to be gathered in. To win the wanderers back, and to gather the strangers in, the Church must move out upon the world as an army of conquest. While employing educational methods for those within, it must apply more aggressive methods for those without; making use of personal, or conversational evangelism—the form chiefly adopted by the Master himself; of social evangelism, a form peculiarly adapted to the present day—its function being to make religion a socializing force, by which one human unit will touch another, helpfully and savingly in all the common relationships of life; and above all employing the method of preaching the everlasting gospel, with the new accent fitted to this new age, that souls estranged from God may be brought to make definite surrender of themselves to His sovereign sway.

WHERE EMPHASIS IS TO BE PUT.

Just where the emphasis is to be put, in the work of evangelism, at any particular time, will depend upon circumstances. Wisdom is needed to discern the times and the seasons. And if the present day evidently appears to be a time when the stress of our effort ought to be placed upon educational evangelism, then let us give ourselves enthusiastically to that; at the same time praying earnestly, and looking wistfully and hopefully for the rising tide of the spirit which is surely coming; and which when it comes will fill every bay and creek, lifting the ship of Zion from the mud of worldliness in which it has stuck, and bearing it onward upon its world-wide, saving mission.

The Tragedy

By Thomas Curtis Clark.

HE gave the world, in darkness pent,
The boon of His surpassing light;
The world found healing in its beams,
But turned Him out into the night.

He gave the world the hope of heav'n,
And to its gate earth's wand'rers led;
The thankless world could not find room
Where He might lay His weary head.

He gave the world His heart of hearts,
And bore the burden of its woe;
The world gave Him the knotted scourge,
The cruel rod's remorseless blow.

He gave the world the crown of life,
His life accounting as but dross;
The world received the matchless gift,
And gave to Him—the martyr's cross.

A Doctrinal Autobiography

THE SEVENTH AND CONCLUDING CHAPTER IN THE SERIES.

Some observations on the changed temper that has come to possess the Disciples of Christ, and an expression of strong hope as to the future of the movement for Christian Unity.

A SOMEWHAT extended course in the study of church history has convinced me that doctrines have their cradle and their grave. They are but temporary expressions of truth, they register the best thinking of a given period; as soon as they become popular their usefulness is at an end.

Old expressions pass away; new expressions come to birth. Truth, like time, may be eternal, but doctrines are the clocks of truth. Doctrines are the human element in the divine revelation, and if I may refer to the figure just used. are indexes of truth as a clock is the index of the hour. So we learn a great lesson when we distinguish between truth and our understanding of the truth.

LIVING IN PEACE AND HARMONY.

A denomination contends for the truth, according to its pronouncements. Another denomination sees the same truth in another light. What shall be done about that? Shall we go to war and cut each other's heads off in the interest of peace and good will? Would it not be far better to allow each to live his life and work out his destiny according to the light that is in him? Isn't this exactly what the Disciples have done with reference to the baptismal controversy. And is not every community better off now that the public cares nothing for pulpit or public discussions of this once distracting issue?

Have not we Disciples really learned, no matter what the papers say, to live in peace and harmony with our religious neighbors? Of course we have. And therein we have demonstrated that differences of belief are no barrier to the freest Christian fellowship.

If, then, we are actually practising Christian union in spirit, at least, with those who differ so widely from us as Methodists and Presbyterians, why may we not live at peace among ourselves? If there is a place in almost every community for the various churches, and if the principles of the gospel may be spread by them all, why may not the differing views among the Disciples find a welcome, and measures of peace be promoted as in the churches on the four corners of the town?

TOLERATION "AT HOME."

Am I to treat my neighbor as a brother though our differences are many, and my brother as an enemy because he does not agree with me? Must my toleration be more Christian abroad than at home? Must I rejoice in the recognition I give my friends of different faiths, and reproach myself because of the recognition I give to my brother whose differences with me are less important than theirs? Must I overlook their heresies, and condemn his? The conclusion is inevitable: if we have learned to act like brethren towards those who are without we are compelled to act likewise toward those who are within.

The day has come for the Disciples to give up the dogmatic point of view for the inquiring spirit, to exchange the theological temper for the spirit of helpfulness, and to encourage different types of thinkers who shall join in the common task of helping to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace.

I regret that any man ever felt the spirit of the bigot in our company, or that we lacked breadth and that it must be found elsewhere and in other pulpits. There is room enough among a people like ours for all men who are in sympathy with our purposes and aims, no matter how much they may differ from each other in their phraseology. If we can't hold in our own ranks the men who were rocked in the cradles of our movement, how can we hope to win and hold those who were cradled in systems unlike to our own? We must solve the problem of cohesion within before we attempt to solve it without.

SOME PAST FOLLIES.

Let us not commit the follies of the past by making it impossible for the scholar and the man of genius to feel at ease among us. Of course, we wouldn't burn them at the stake, but we have methods of attack which are equally effective in disposing of them. Read Macaulay's essay on "The History of the Popes" and see what he says of Rome's error in building her martyr fires, and the mistake of the Established church in allowing Wesley to found a sect. Rome has learned wisdom with the years. May we be able to do likewise. We may err if we lean too heavily to the side of orthodoxy; we are not likely to err if we lean to the side of charity. A few heretics will never do as much harm as one just man arraigned and condemned for heresy who may prove to be a Thomas Campbell.

Moreover, we have had newspaper controversies for twenty years and I think all will agree that they have done more harm than good. The suspected have gone right along, doing their own work in their own way. They have saved the unsaved and confirmed the faith of those to whom they ministered. The conservative, "the safe and the sane," have done their work as well. Both have shown that differences of theology may forward rather than retard the work of the kingdom.

THE "OLD JERUSALEM GOSPEL."

Some man occasionally attributes the success of a pastor to his fidelity to the "Old Book" the "Old Jerusalem Gospel," or something else to which the appellative "old" may be attached. Others whose interpretations of the old Book differ from such an one, but who are as truly loyal to it, can show just as good a record. Personality must be taken into account when we talk of success, as well as one's theology. Some men fail with the best message, others succeed with an unworthy plea. But all our pastors can agree and do agree on the practical side of Christianity, and all share the same enthusiasm in the progress of the truth.

Why not let us all decide to commend each other in those things wherein there can be no difference of opinion—the exercise of justice and mercy, and the activity in all good works—and withhold our criticisms on points wherein we differ? Let us even discuss our differences on equal terms as brethren who are anxious to know the truth. And let there be no assumptions of ecclesiastical authority or penalties for those who do not side with the majority. Let us conduct ourselves with the same fraternal bearing and consideration for each other's differences in public as we exercise when we meet face to face.

These are a few of the observations which have grown out of my doctrinal evolution, and I rejoice to say that thousands of our brethren are in full accord with me.

HOPES FOR THE FUTURE.

It is this growing body of men who fill me with hope for our future. They know that the world is changing, and are adjusting themselves to the demands that the changes are creating. They realize that the fathers made an error in leaving no room in the plea for adjustment to changes that must inevitably arise with the years, because the fathers believed that the final word on Christian union had been spoken, and that the divisions which they sought to heal could not long withstand their benevolent attentions. The sons, without any censure for this oversight, are facing the problem which it creates with consecration and vigor. That we are forgetting some of the earlier shibboleths is not the least ground of my hope. We have not had a heresy victim in years, and the war on heresy is about abandoned.

In one of our journals that makes caution the sum of all virtues, a progressive thinker is interpreting the mission of the Campbells. In another, the department devoted to the task of suppressing "false teachers," is now in the hands of a broad-minded man whose ambition seems to be to make that department as colorless as possible. From articles on hair-splitting problems in the theology to the discussion of the split-skirt is quite a long stride. The battle for freedom of thought among our people has been won, though the rumbles of theological thunderers will be heard in the distance for some time to come. The few who live by preying on the fears of the fearful will not die without a struggle.

GREAT PROGRESS EVIDENT.

We are working out our own theology with as great a freedom as we could ask. We are preaching Christian union to a larger audience than ever, and many voices among the different religious bodies are as insistent in their demands for union as are we. Many of our young men are being educated for the ministry in some of the greatest institutions in the land, and such education means the passing of the sectary and greater tolerance and breadth. All our colleges are soon to be put on a self-sustaining basis. The missionary campaigns show that our boards have the support of our people, except in a few out of the way places, the influence of which must grow less with every passing year. The Sunday-school work is progressing so rapidly that the most zealous are taxed to keep

Nicholas Vachel Lindsay, of Springfield, Illinois, who has leapt into fame as prophet, poet and artist. The critics are questioning whether the great American poet may not now be "arriving." However that may be, Mr. Lindsay is undoubtedly grappling with some real world problems, and not without honor to his prophetic strength.

PROCLAMATION OF THE GOSPEL OF BEAUTY.

I

PROLOGUE. I come to you penniless and afoot, to bring a message. I am starting a new religious idea. The idea does not say "No" to any creed that you have heard. * * * After this, let the denomination to which you belong be called in your heart "The Church of Beauty" or "The Church of the Open Sky." * * * The Church of Beauty has two sides: The love of beauty and the love of God.

II

THE NEW LOCALISM. The things most worth while are one's own hearth and neighborhood. We should make our own homes and neighborhood the most democratic, the most beautiful and the holiest in the world. The children now growing up should become devout gardeners or architects or park architects or teachers of dancing in the Greek spirit or musicians or novelists or poets or story-writers or craftsmen or wood-carvers or dramatists or actors or singers. They should find their talent and nurse it industriously. They should believe in every possible application to art-theory of the thoughts of the Declaration of Independence and Lincoln's Gettysburg Address. They should, if led by the spirit, wander over the whole nation in search of the secret of democratic beauty with their hearts at the same time filled to overflowing with the righteousness of God. Then they should come back to their own hearth and neighborhood and gather a little circle of their own sort of workers about them and strive to make the neighborhood and home more beautiful and democratic and holy with their special art. * * * They should labor in their little circle expecting neither reward nor honors.* * * In their darkest hours they should be made strong by the vision of a completely beautiful neighborhood and the passion for a completely democratic art. Their reason for living should be that joy in beauty which no wounds can take away, and that joy in the love of God which no crucifixion can end.

Nicholas Vachel Lindsay, Prophet and Poet

TRULY, a prophet is not without honor, save among his own people, but now that Nicholas Vachel Lindsay has won the recognition of the literary critics, the Disciples would do well to turn their attention to the prophet and poet who has risen among them. The New York Independent, reviewing Mr. Lindsay's latest volume, remarks that one is given pause when he reads the General Booth poem, wondering whether perhaps here is the great American poet, long awaited. William Stanley Braithwaite, America's leading critic, regards Mr. Lindsay's last volume as "the most important book of poems by an American poet the year 1913 produced."

Speaking in terms of the flesh, Nicholas Vachel Lindsay is a son of Dr. and Mrs. V. T. Lindsay, of Springfield, Ill., well known Disciples. Artistically and prophetically considered, he is a younger brother of Homer, Goldsmith, Walt Whitman and Edwin Markham.

The "Proclamation of the Gospel of Beauty," which we print above, is Mr. Lindsay's Emancipation Proclamation for enslaved humanity. This document, with his little pamphlet of verse, "Rhymes to be Sold for Bread," was distributed by the poet while tramping through the West last year.

"General William Booth Enters Into Heaven" is the poem which won for Mr. Lindsay his fame. When you read it, you will say you have never before read such verse. And you haven't. That's the reason you should read it again—and again.

"The Proud Farmer," with two other poems, "The Illinois Village" and "On the Building of Springfield," Mr. Lindsay states, "holds in solution my theory of American civilization." "The Proud Farmer" was written in memory of E. S. Frazee, the poet's grandfather, a preacher-farmer of Rush County, Indiana. Of Mr. Frazee, Mr. Lindsay writes:

"E. S. Frazee, of whom this poem is a memorial, was my grandfather, and Indiana is full of his sons, grandsons and old friends, most of them still Disciples. One of his intimate friends was A. R. Benton, one of the first presidents of Butler College, if not the first president, and owed his position pretty largely to his influence. My grandfather was a Butler trustee for many years, and had much to do with founding it when it was called the Northwestern Christian University. U. D. Frazee, author of 'Reminiscences and Sermons,' was much better known, generally, having traveled about more. He was a brother of E. S. Frazee. But the Indiana constituency of E. S. Frazee still remains. He graduated from Bethany when Campbell was in his prime."

The two poems quoted are taken from Mr. Lindsay's recently published book, "General William Booth Enters Into Heaven and Other Poems." It is from the press of Mitchell Kennerley, New York. The General Booth poem was published in The Christian Century last April, but we print again.

GENERAL WILLIAM BOOTH ENTERS INTO HEAVEN.

(To be sung to "The Blood of the Lamb" with indicated instruments.)

Booth led boldly with his big brass drum.
Are you washed in the blood of the Lamb?
The saints smiled gravely, and they said, "He's come."
Are you washed in the blood of the Lamb?

(Bass drums.)
Walking lepers followed rank on rank,
Lurching bravos from the ditches dank,
Drabs from the alleyways and drug-fiends pale—
Minds still passion-ridden, soul-powers frail!
Vermin-eaten saints with mouldy breath,
Unwashed legions with the ways of death—
Are you washed in the blood of the Lamb?

Every slum had sent its half-a-score
The round world over—Booth had groaned for more
Every banner that the wide world flies
Bloomed with glory and transcendent dyes.
Big-voiced lasses made their banjos bang!
Tranced, fanatical, they shrieked and sang.
Are you washed in the blood of the Lamb?

The Book World

A Page of Reviews and Literary Notes.

BY ARTHUR GORDON.

The Assurance of Immortality. By Henry Emerson Fosdick. The present age is not greatly interested in the future life; not that it is precisely skeptical, though there are many who disclaim all belief in survival of death. But for the most part the men of today discuss the themes as beyond knowledge, and of less interest to them than the pressing matters of daily experience.

Mr. Fosdick protests against this attitude of mind as irrational, and in the first of the three sections of the book discusses the significance of immortality. He reviews the current assumptions that are invoked to defend the disbelief in the future life, and points out their failure to account for the facts or to satisfy the reflective mind. Particularly suggestive is his treatment of the view that after all man, quite apart from any idea of personal survival contributes his part to the advancing evolutionary process. But what can be the value of this solution in the face of the certain and demonstrable destruction of this planet at some future period with all it holds of perfected human life. To what purpose has the accumulation of ages been made? Or if it be asserted that the acquired values of human experience are gathered in the life of God, he answers, "To imagine God, in some sublime and timeless solitude after the race is gone, hoarding within himself the values of the justice, truth and goodness which have been wrought out in the experience of the race, is to conceive an absurdity." The creed of annihilation, while it would offer no premium to the sensualist, or deprive life of certain rich possessions, would at last drive all humanity into a blind alley, and cannot be called a worthful solution of the problem.

In the second section, Mr. Fosdick discusses the possibility of immortality, from the point of view of men like Lodge, James, Fiske, Lotze and Osler, who as experts in their fields, found no reason to doubt human survival of death. And here a very suggestive page deals with the objection that the belief in immortality has come from the crude dreams and fancies of primitive peoples.

But granting that the formal doctrine of the future life goes back to lowly origins, these, it may well be contended, are not the causes, but the first efforts to express the truth. The oak is not explained by the acorn, nor astronomy by the primitive belief in a daily new-created sun, nor the cathedral by the straw hut of our far-off ancestors. "When Bach and Mozart are laughed at because early music was coaxed from conch-shell or beaten sticks, when poetry and love, science and education are railed at because of their crude origins—then man's faith in immortality may tremble before the undeveloped ways in which the earliest men we know conceived it." These are but hints at the rich mine of arguments unearthed by this eager and accomplished writer.

But in the third part of the book he deals with the assurance of immortality, and brings his thesis to its climax. Here the movement of the discussion is both fresh and stimulating. A word toward the close will suggest, though not measure, the vigor and soundness of the treatment. "The reasonableness of the universe is pledged to the immortality of man: the beneficence of God is unthinkable without it; the verdict of the spiritual seers confirms it; and when it is put to the verifying test of life, it builds the loftiest characters." And as a foreword to the volume the author quotes the familiar words of Henry James, "If this life be not a real fight, in which something is eternally gained for the universe by success, it is no better than a game of private theatricals, from which one may withdraw at will. But it feels like a real fight." (Macmillan, $1 net.)

The Gift of Tongues. By D. A. Hayes. The phenomena of the "glossa" or "tongue" in the New Testament, once regarded as a direct and miraculous gift in the early church, is considered by Professor Hayes in this small volume, in a careful notation of all the recorded facts. He reviews the theories which have been formulated, such as that the tongue was a real gift of languages, or a use of poetic or archaic speech, or new interpretations of Scripture, or a miracle of hearing rather than of speaking, or the power of using foreign tongues in apostolic missionary work, or a temporary supernatural endowment enjoyed by the disciples on the one occasion, or a record of an imaginary event.

These views are all rejected as unsatisfactory. In their place the author proposes the view that "the foreign languages spoken at Pentecost are explicable to us as due to abnormally quickened memories, reproducing to these Jews and proselytes phrases and sentences heard from them, and all unconsciously stored in minds that had no use of them in normal conditions. The gift of tongues is explicable here as everywhere else, as one form of ecstatic expression, possible at any time of great spiritual uplift, and repeated again and again in the history of the church."

With the last sentence the present reviewer fully agrees, but he sees no occasion to invoke the theory of remembered phrases from foreign tongues. The volume is a brief and timely summary of the views variously held on the subject, and of certain modern phenomena which have claimed relationship with the apostolic gift of tongues. Fellowship With Christ. Perhaps the most outstanding single feature of the Toronto Convention was a series of five addresses, delivered during the sessions of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society on the above theme. Their individual topics under this broad hearing were "In Service," by Pres. Fred D. Kershner, "In Life," by Rev. Geo. A. Campbell, "In His Sufferings," by W. C. Bower, "In Prayer for World-wide Evangelism," by J. H. Goldner, and "In Victory," by Carey E. Morgan.

Though prepared and delivered by men of widely differing gifts and types, they reached a remarkable unity on that high level to which they rose. They were instinct with religious feeling. They rendered a very notable service to the convention. Those who heard them at once felt that they should be put in permanent form, and those who were not able to attend the convention will be glad to possess them in this convenient book. A poem by J. F. Smith on the theme of the addresses, makes a fitting conclusion. (Christian Board of Publication, 50 cents.)

After School. By Elizabeth Hoyt. A little volume of the Happy Hour Series, containing stories and bits of poetry suitable for children of ten and thereabout. The stories deal with child life, sports and adventures, and are illustrated in colors.

Voices of Victory. By Peter Philip Bilhorn. A collection of popular hymns. (Bilhorn Bros., Chicago.)

LITERARY NOTES.

An especially appropriate book for spring reading will be "The Commuter's Garden," which the Thomas Y. Crowell Company announces for publication in March. The book is full of practical and valuable suggestions for the city man or woman worker desirous of cultivating the grounds about a suburban home.

That Napoleon was as quick witted as any of those he commanded is evident from the well-known story of his cleverness in escaping from the Red Sea when crossing with his staff. The ford was lost, and, as it was dusk, there was no landmark by which to guide the party. Gathering his officers in a circle, Napoleon made them all ride outward from himself as a center, as if they were following the spokes of a great wheel. So all the paths were tried and the right one was found.—From "Two Men with Brains," by Tudor Jenks in the January St. Nicholas.

The English critic, Thomas Seccombe, writing in the New Witness, pays the following happy tribute to the "Letters of Charles Eliot Norton," published recently by Houghton Mifflin Company:

"If your wish is to hark back sixty years or so for your Christmas outing and resume acquaintance (intimate too) upon the easiest terms with Carlyle, Ruskin, Lowell, Emerson, Mrs. Gaskell, Stephen and the Mephistophelian Froude (as here represented) let me recommend you to read the "Letters of Charles Eliot Norton"—a more delightful berceau for the memory cannot be imagined. Here are two volumes of friendship worthy of Montaigne himself—the familiar picturing of men cast in the giant mould by the master hand of the last survivor of that serene group who practised the eighteenth century virtues of optimism, omniscence, self-possession, order and pellucid English, worthy of the author of "Retaliation," in the full blast of nineteenth century America. Happy America, happy Boston, blessed Atlantic which bred such men; fortunate Harvard to have nursed the latest, fullest, fairest and justest chronicler of such a society of Sagamores. I have not derived so much pleasure from a book of literary-reminiscence-cum-criticism since I read the letters of old Fitz."

Some Current Views on the Drama of Today

Two notable articles in the Century Mazagine for February strike a fine note of optimism in regard to contemporary drama. One is by Forbes-Robertson, the greatest Hamlet of our generation, who has recently announced his retirement from the stage, while he is still indisputably its master. He says:

"I think the stage today, regarded as a whole, is vastly better than it was half a century ago. Everything has improved in the theater. Plays are more ambitious, better staged, better mounted, and better written than they used to be in my earlier days. . . . To my mind, the desire and appreciation of the public for the best the author, the actor, and the manager can give were never so great as now."

He commends the excellent support given to Shakespearian drama today, and insists there is more interest in it than formerly. And he also notes:

"That the theater is making such wonderful strides in the direction of spiritual expression, that there seems to be going on a complete change in the old rules of the stage. We still have melodramas and conventional plays that hold their own in popular interest, but the advanced theater is developing unusual dramatic qualities, which are evident all over the world. The change is in the substitution of character, and the spiritual nature of life, in place of the merely human actions of dramatic incident. In my opinion, we are all growing to think more about the ethical values of daily life, and take more stock of our inner selves."

Mr. Forbes Robertson has been called the "great spiritual actor" of our times, and we are glad that he can strike this noble and hopeful note, from the full experience of a successful career of nearly half a century in his profession.

The companion article in The Century is by Richard Le Gallienne, and he gives a like optimistic view of contemporary drama. He says:

"In all the welter of the dramatic conditions of the moment there emerges one fact—that of the growing importance of the stage as a vehicle for what one may term general culture. The stage is strangely returning to its starting point as the handmaid of the church. As with the old Moralities and Miracle plays, it is becoming once more our teacher. The lessons of truth and beauty, as of those of plain gayety and delight, are relying more and more upon the actor for their expression, and less on the accredited doctors of literature. * * * The great new plays may not be here, but the public once more is going to the theater, as it went long ago in Athens, to be delighted and amused, but also to be instructed in national and civic affairs, and most important of all, to be purified by pity and terror."

Prof. Brander Matthews, in another magazine, gives us the same hopeful outlook on the drama of our day. He writes:

"The stage as a whole in the United States is far better, far truer to life and artistic ideals. than it has been in any previous period in American dramatic history."

He is quite clear that contemporary drama is far ahead of drama fifty or even twenty-five years ago. He remarks on the comparatively recent period since our stage was mainly filled with adaptations of French plays, and these had no social value, because they did not picture ideals of English or American life—the novel was the accepted interpreter of life then. The interest in the plays of a few decades ago was not so much in their content, as in the presentation of a few star roles by dominating personalities—Forrest, Booth, Cushman, Irving, or Jefferson.

Now, with the more intelligent part of the audience, the interest is drifting from acting to the play itself—to the social ideas and ideals it presents, and the picture it gives of this or that phase of life; an ever-increasing number go to hear what Ibsen, or Shaw, or Barrie, or Thomas has to say. And Professor Matthews adds:

"Personally, I think the drama will be more important than prose fiction during the next twenty-five years."

Whether the sceptre is passing from the novel or not (and other critics besides Professor Matthews are predicting it), the increasing interest in the modern drama is plain to anyone who has eyes to see. I have noticed it especially in a club of two hundred members of which I have been president for the past two years. We have had a Drama Class in the club for more than ten years, and have studied the Greek dramatists, Shakespeare, French and German drama, with an attendance ranging from fifteen to twenty. We are now in our second year's study of contemporary drama, and at our last meeting there were fifty persons present. The reason of this is, that the plays of today are dealing with the great social problems of our times, and they command the interest, not only of the student of literature, but of all who are seeking for a clue through the maze of this period of adjustment in which we live.

KENTUCKY WOMAN DOES WONDERS.

Mention has been made before in this department of Mrs. Cora Wilson Stewart's Moonlight schools, for the elimination of illiteracy in Kowan County, Kentucky. She started the work three years ago, with no equipment at her command except the use of the county school houses. She had no money, so she had to depend on the voluntary and unpaid services of the rural school teachers—which was freely and gladly given. Her only text book was a little weekly newspaper, which she edited and published.

These schools began in September, 1911, and continued throughout the moonlight nights of the fall months, until the close of November, 1914. Their ideal has been from the beginning:

"A county freed from illiteracy in three years by means of moonlight schools."

Mrs. Stewart has recently announced the successful accomplishment of this ideal. She says, "In three years, the number of illiterates in Kowan County has been reduced from 1,152 to 23. Of these, four are too stubborn to learn, six are confirmed invalids, or have been seriously ill while the campaign was in progress, six have defective eyesight, five are idiots, and two have very recently moved into the county."

The Berea Citizen, in commenting on this triumph, says: "It is the first practical demonstration of the ability of the people of a political unit to educate all their people that has been furnished by any portion of the United States. No other county in America has such a record. It is a demonstration of the efficiency of the rural schools when they are enlisted in a common cause. It is also a demonstration of the ability of the mountain people to handle their own problems."

It is also a demonstration of the ability of the modern woman to conceive and carry to successful completion an original and unselfish plan for the elimination of illiteracy among her own people.

The Poor Untutored Chinaman.

The following story illustrates the danger in assuming that Americans are superior to all others in culture. A tourist visited China, says an exchange, and when his steamer touched at Hongkong, the tourist was delighted to see a Chinese woman in the costume of her country, come on board the ship. She was the first Chinese woman that he had seen in the native dress. Advancing to within a few feet of the little woman, he leveled the camera at her, and began to exclaim loudly in amateur pidgin English:

"Me takee picture! Can catchee? Can catchee?"

The Chinese woman looked at him in deep disgust, and replied in perfect English:

"You can catchee, but you may not."

Turning she walked away. She had been graduated from an American college the year previous.

John Burroughs Visits Washington, D. C.

John Burroughs, famous naturalist, author and poet, is visiting old friends in Washington and renewing acquaintances of the last fifty years. "Fifty years ago," says Mr. Burroughs, "I was a clerk in the treasury and things have changed since then. In those days I had a one-acre farm where the senate office building stands and kept a cow which grazed on the common ground around the capitol. I lived there when President Lincoln was assassinated. I had what is now Rock Creek park almost to myself and many a day I spent there gathering wild flowers and studying the habits of the birds." Mr. Burroughs is hale and hearty, although he is nearly seventy-seven. One of the most famous lines of his creation he wrote while out in the woods: "I come here to find myself. It's so easy to get lost in the world."

Chicago Y. M. C. A. Prospers.

The recent annual meeting of the board of managers of the Chicago Y. M. C. A. was marked by the announcement of a gift of another $50,000 toward the $800,000 hotel for men which the association is planning to erect on Wabash Avenue. This building in its nineteen stories will have 1,870 bedrooms.

IF.

WHAT if the Panama Canal become a menace instead of a defense? What if it divert trade instead of augmenting it? How shall we have weighed out our money for that which is not bread, and our labor for that which satisfieth not!

Some years ago we were urged to annex Hawaii, and we did it. We are not sorry. But several of the arguments on the basis of which we did it proved unsound. There were those convincing articles entitled "The Crossroads of the Pacific" showing us that Hawaii was precisely equidistant from every two points of the earth's surface. There were maps to prove that no ship could steer a straight course across the Pacific in any direction without hitting those islands amidships. And now!

Well, those maps were drawn on Mercator's projection. The men who made them forgot that the earth was round. But ships, smelling out the shortest way across the ocean, swung north into the great circle, where the parallels are shorter, preferring to creep under the bulge of the earth instead of climbing over it. And they did not sail within a thousand miles of Hawaii.

Now what if the Panama Canal, which is expected to make commerce boom along the Pacific Coast, shall dry up commerce instead? What if it merely offer to European ships the shortest path between Asiatic ports and European markets, and they sail straight through America, instead of shipping their cargoes across it? What if our induction has omitted the one most profoundly significant fact in all the array of facts? And what if in time of war it prove valuable to the ships of our enemies, but a nice little narrow path along which the air-ships of those who do not like us may drop dynamite on our vessels as they climb the stairs of the locks?

We are not experts in the matter of canal building, but we merely suggest that sometimes nations have committed monumental errors through failure to include in their induction some one really first consideration.

And, being preachers, the editors venture to point the moral that men sometimes do the same in their spiritual life.

"PROPHETIC CONFERENCE."

THOSE students of the Scriptures who are interested in the premillennial theory of the second coming of Jesus will be interested in the announcement of the "International Prophetic Conference" to be held in Chicago under the auspices of the Moody Bible Institute Feb. 24-27. Among the speakers will be Rev. Robert McWatty Russell, D. D., L.L.D., President of Westminster College; Rev. C. I. Scofield, D. D., Editor of the Scofield Reference Bible; Canon F. E. Howitt, M. A., of Hamilton, Ontario; Dr. R. A. Torrey, of Los Angeles; Evangelists William A. Sunday and L. W. Munhall D. D.; Rev. W. B. Riley, D. D., Minneapolis; Rev. Ford C. Ottman, D. D., Stamford, Conn.; A. C. Gaebelein, Editor of "Our Hope;" Prof. Joseph Kyle, Xenia Theological Seminary; and others to be announced. Rev. Frank W. Sneed, D. D., of Pittsburg, will conduct a Pastors' symposium on "The Doctrine of the Premillennial Coming of Christ as a Working Power in the Church and Community," and Mr. Charles G. Trumbull, Editor of the Sunday School Times, will have charge of an "Experience Meeting," on "Why I am a Premillennialist." The themes of the stated papers include: "The Kingdom View of the Gospel as Related to the Missionary Program of Christ;" "The Doctrine of the Last Things;" "The Jews;" "The Present-day Apostasy;" "The Signs of the Times;" "The Second Coming of Our Lord as a Motive for Personal Holiness;" and studies in the Old Testament as a Motive for Personal Holiness;" and studies in the Old Testament Prophets. There will also be an opportunity for discussion and a "Question Hour."

In the official call for this gathering it is stated that the conference will not offer an opportunity for modern prophets to ventilate their speculations, to fix dates, or to mark out a detailed program of the future; but that the occasion will be used for students of "prophecy" to give prominence "to neglected truths; to employ the true principles of Scripture interpretations; to warn against present-day apostacy; to awaken slumbering Christians; to present the most majestic of all motives for world-wide evangelism; to call attention to the doctrine of 'last things' as a bulwark against the skepticism of modern theology; and to bring into closer fellowship all those who 'love his appearing.'"

THE PARABLES OF GOD.

OF all teachers, Jesus made largest use of parables. Therein was shown the perfection of instruction. The more we understand the things of the spiritual life, the more it becomes plain that they must all be interpreted in terms of something that can be known by the senses. We have little knowledge, and can have little knowledge, of abstract truth. We need constantly to be told, not what the kingdom of heaven is, but what the kingdom of heaven is like. It must be spelled out to us in short and familiar terms of things we know.

Human life is a parable. Life means little to us if we interpret it in terms of mere bread and butter. Men cannot live by these things alone. These are the mere symbols of deeper things. The very bread we toil for is the parable of our love for those for whom we live. The hat lifted to a lady, the crepe on the door, the wedding ring—all these things are parables.

The Bible contains the parables of Jesus. It is said that "without a parable spake he not unto them." It was his characteristic method of teaching. Those parables have lasted, because they interpret the deep things of God in terms of familiar life and experience. But the Bible contains other parables. It is itself a parable. Why should we have any Bible except the ten commandments? Because all the history of God's growing revelation is a parable of the divine truth making its way in human life.

The incarnation was more than a fact in history; it was a parable. The Cross of Calvary is a parable. The Easter story is a parable. It is not enough that they are facts; facts can be the coldest, deadest, yes, the most untruthful things imaginable. The real meanings of life are discovered when we find the deeper teachings which God makes real in parables of the soul.

THE PLURAL PRONOUN.

THE pronoun is the most exclusive of all the parts of speech. We desperately need more pronouns—need them so much that we would have invented them long ago had they been mere nouns or verbs or adjectives, but we still say "he or she" where we ought to have a word of common gender, or engage in circumlocution to avoid saying "they" when we do not mean "they" but only one person, who may be either male or female. Changes in the person or number of pronouns are among the most significant of grammatical variations. When the Acts of the Apostles says, "When he had seen the vision, immediately we essayed to go into Macedonia," a new chapter is begun in the history of revelation. "The travel document" of Acts, commonly called "the We section," is immensely important because of its use of the plural. Paul saw the vision, but others, including the writer of that portion of Acts, responded to it. Wherever in the narrative of Acts you find the pronoun "we" you are face to face with a first-hand narrative of experiences. Much that is in the Bible was handed down by tradition, and that tradition may be fully authenticated, but the "we" portions have an interest all their own.

Nowhere in the Bible is the use of the plural pronoun more striking than in the first chapter of Genesis. "Let us make man," says God. Who are to be included in the plurality? God, of course, and who else? The Trinity, said some of the fathers. The angelic hosts, said others. Still others say it is the royal use of the plural, such as kings employ, and also editors. Take your choice among these theories, or invent others to your liking. The important fact is that there is an undeniable plural. Some one besides God must work with God for the making of men. Character cannot be created by the nailing together of sticks, or the molding of earth into strange shapes, or the assembling of chemical compounds.

Here is the text of all your theologies, all your rituals and creeds, all your politics and traffic and education. Does it make men?

> "Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey,
> Where wealth accumulates and men decay."

Build your building never so high, they are towers of Babel, doomed to destruction and confusion of tongues if they make not men. Invent new machinery for the manufacture of boots and bridges and buttons and bonnets, but do they make men? Add new stories to your schools, and new courses to your curriculum, and teach innumerable studies, useful enough in their way, but do they make men? This is the test, every time.

And your theories of heaven, and of the church and the soul are all weighed in the balance and found wanting, however so many your proof texts, however so formidable your logic, if they do not make men.

God needs men; and the world needs men. The world needs the same kind of men that God needs. God and man must work together for the making of manhood.

HEAVEN AND EARTH.

HEAVEN will be a place of diversified activity. If God teaches us here to love art, it is because we shall have beauty in heaven. If God teaches us here the appreciation of music, it is because heaven is full of harmony. If God tests our strength of character here, it is because we shall be in places that require strength of character. Nothing learned is to be wasted; nothing gained is to be lost. All will be of service in that world of diversified yet unified interests.

This is why God desires well rounded and symmetrical character. The Lombardy poplar has its beauty, but it cannot be God's favorite tree,—a tree that in its ambition to rise straight heavenward displays a waste of dead branches below, sacrificed to the one determination to grow upward. Rather, we should think, God loves the strong oak, deep rooted and wide-spreading, with shade beneath its ample branches, or the maple or the elm, symmetrical and well proportioned, growing outward as they grow upward. Or perhaps we ought rather to say the apple tree, growing wider as well as higher, and with fruit on every branch. Certainly it is character of which this is the symbol that is most fit to grow in the garden of God.

FEWER CHILDREN AND WORSE.

THIS is one slogan of modern eugenics. It is one of the difficulties with that bran new science that it is thus far wholly restrictive. It tells us what children ought not to be allowed to be born, and it tells it to the people who, if they are to bear children at all, presumably would not bear that kind. Meantime the idea of "fewer children and better" is a satisfaction to families that wish justification of small families.

But the families where there are fewer children have on them the burden of proof. Are there better children in those homes where there are fewer?

The contrary is the experience of many homes. The one child is a petted and spoiled child. The men and women who make their mark in the world have largely come out of large families.

The reasons are partly apparent. The child who has grown up in a large family has already met a considerable number of life's social problems and adjusted himself to them. In the large family there must be give and take. There must be adjustment and division and compromise. There must be the constant measuring of one's own desire against another's right. A child so reared has met the world and settled some of its essential problems before he leaves the home. He has been cared for by an older brother, and has protected a younger one.

Eugenics has important lessons to teach us. But let us go a bit slow about accepting all its negations, and then applying them where they have least need of application. There are homes, Sunday-schools and churches that need more children and better ones.

DEMOCRATIC CONVENTIONS.

Some Recent Developments.

IN previous articles we have endeavored to interpret the long movement which culminated at Toronto last October in the formation of a democratic "Convention of Churches of Christ."

This movement and its consummation, we have maintained, could have no significance at all save as a step by the churches toward assuming responsibility for and direct control of their missionary and benevolent activities. These activities are now controlled by independent societies, the sole function of the churches being to provide the funds for the societies to administer.

It has been pointed out that the new plan is the New Testament plan, and the democratic plan, and that it has in it the promise of greatly increased efficiency over the procedure to which we have become accustomed.

In addition to these more or less theoretical considerations there are certain recent developments which strongly suggest the need of a better order of missionary administration. We do not now refer to the increasing competition among the various societies nor the overburdening of the churches with the many appeals from the many uncoördinated sources. The pastor who responds to these appeals has long since found that, taken with the many equally urgent causes appealing to him from other sources, his continuous constructive ministry is seriously interrupted. The budget system is a step toward unifying the various interests from the point of view of the local church, but it, of course, does not solve the whole problem.

The recent development to which we particularly refer is in the attitude of the churches toward the societies, an attitude which has in it the seeds of division, if not disintegration. With the organization of the societies a half century ago the principles of loyalty and coöperation were so strong that those who refused to coöperate with the societies regarded themselves and were regarded as outside the brotherhood, forming a sort of communion of their own. In very recent times, however, the attitude of loyalty to the "recognized" societies has been appreciably weakened. The churches and the church leaders tolerate the setting up of mission stations, and countenance the taking up of mission tasks by various "unauthorized" agencies, which, in their operation, actually compete with the societies and deflect money from the "recognized" treasuries.

This is the case in both foreign and home missions. The work of Mr. Cunningham in Japan and other missionaries in the Orient, the Christian Standard's independent mission in Paris, and New York City's committee to solicit funds for maintaining a propaganda in Russia are cases in point. On the home field the Christian Standard also supports a work among foreigners over which the American society has no control nor is it connected in any way with it.

These instances are cited not because of their intrinsic importance, but because they call attention to the tolerating attitude with which such irregular and, in most cases, competing and hostile missionary efforts have come to be regarded. The change in attitude is so marked that the Men and Millions Movement, originating among the "recognized" societies has recently issued a statement which allows every nondescript and private missionary agency, even those hostile to the societies, to share in the gifts of the brotherhood.

A still more significant irregularity—significant not alone because of the principle involved but also because of the intrinsic importance to which the competing institution has at-

DEMAND MORE CHAPLAINS FOR NAVY.

Protestant and Roman Catholic forces are united in the effort to obtain additional chaplains for the United States Navy, and at the recent hearing before the House Committee on Naval Affairs at Washington a delegation of religious leaders was led by Rev. Charles S. Macfarland, Secretary of the Federal Council, and Rev. L. J. O'Hern, representing Cardinal Gibbons and the Roman Catholic arch-bishops, in support of a measure adopted by the Federal Council which provides for a chaplain on each battleship, the provision for acting chaplains to be trained for full service, and the removal of present discrimination against the chaplains in the matters of rank and salary as compared with the other officers.

At the present time there are only twenty-four chaplains, while the navy consists of sixty-five battleships besides the various subsidiary vessels.

The House Committee frankly expressed its approval of the proposition and a delegation which waited upon Secretary of the Navy Josephus Daniels, found him cordial and earnest in his belief that the appointment of the necessary chaplains is the first and most important consideration of his recent report. He assured the delegation that no other workers should be considered as substitutes for the appointment of chaplains.

The delegation included Bishop William Lawrence, Bishop Alfred Harding, Rev. H. K. Carroll, Associate Secretary of the Federal Council, and Rev. Wallace Radcliffe.

PRESBYTERIANS DISCUSS CHURCH UNITY.

The Presbyterian Advance is printing a series of articles on "Should Protestantism Unite?" The author is P. Marion Sims, Ph. D., whose book on "What Must the Church Do to Be Saved?" has attracted much attention. In the first article of the series, Dr. Sims discusses the church's "splintered condition," and starts off with these hopeful words:

"The recent Bulletin of Religious Bodies issued by the Government does not give one who longs to see all denominations united as much encouragement as he would like. Yet the report is not so discouraging as might appear on the surface. According to this report, forty-one new denominations were added to the already long list between 1890 and 1906. But many of those reported as churches have no claim to be regarded as Christian and others cannot be called churches. Practically all the new denominations, eleven of which were added through immigration, are very small and of no real significance. They are only eddies in the great stream.

"The thing of greatest significance in this connection is not included in this report; indeed it could not be; and that is the marvelous growth within recent years of a sentiment in favor of denominational union among all denominations. Several very important and significant unions have occurred within recent years, and others are under consideration. The old-time bitterness and wrangling between denominations is gone; yet we are a long ways from the millennium. The subject is prominently before the people, however, and very many of the best men and religious publications have committed themselves to the idea."

The writer reaches a very practical conclusion when he makes this entirely true statement:

"How the church has reached its present splintered condition is to us a matter of minor importance. We are not concerned with whether or not, under all the circumstances, our ancestors were justified in dividing the church. These things belong to ancient history. The question of importance to us is whether or not we shall perpetuate the divisions which they have made. We have not the semblance of an excuse which they had who divided the church."

The editor of the "Advance," commenting on the article, puts himself heartily in favor of union, and closes his editorial with the following enlightening declarations:

"The first is this: It is a mistaken, even an un-Christian, policy to insist that union should wait upon unanimity. The second, that the question of whether or not Protestantism should unite does not and should not depend upon uniformity in doctrinal belief."

EPISCOPAL CHURCH LOSES GREAT LAYMAN.

In the death of Dr. S. Weir Mitchell, physician and author, the Episcopal Church loses one of its foremost men of note. The Living Church, speaking of Dr. Mitchell's fine character, pays the following tribute:

"The depth of Mr. Mitchell's spiritual life was remarkable. He lived his religion in his personal life and in his contact with his fellow-man. He was a true philanthropist. He gave freely of his means and time. His life in the church was one of child-like faith and trust. He could see no reason for skepticism. Only a few days before his death he said that he intended to write a book of 'Sermons from the Pew.' He wanted to bear testimony to what the church and religion had done for him. He wanted to tell how true he had found that Christ had been a personal help to him all through his life."

Here and There in the Religious World

Gypsy Smith to Evangelize Philadelphia.

A conference of prominent ministers and laymen was recently held in the Wanamaker store, Philadelphia, Mr. Wanamaker presiding, at which it was decided to ask Gypsy Smith to conduct an evangelistic campaign in Philadelphia next fall. Mr. Wanamaker, George W. Bailey, Dr. Conwell and Dr. Tomkins were appointed a committee to nominate a general committee to arrange all details.

Fred B. Smith Enters Business.

The announcement is made from the New York headquarters of the international committee of the Y. M. C. A. that Fred B. Smith, head of the committee's religious work department, is resigning to enter business. Mr. Smith has been the principal evangelistic speaker of the committee for nearly fifteen years. In the winter of 1911-12, he became the executive leader of the Men and Religion Forward Movement. Later his name came to a world-wide fame when he and Raymond Robins made the circuit of Christendom with the Men and Religion message. Mr. Smith will continue to speak on Sundays in evangelistic meetings of Y. M. C. A.'s in the cities which he visits on his business trips.

W. J. Bryan to Address Bible Conference.

Secretary Bryan has promised to open with an address an extensive Bible conference to be held in Washington City, Feb. 8-15. Other distinguished speakers will be Dr. G. Campbell Morgan, of London, England, Dr. John Henry Jowett, of New York and Dr. William Souper, of London.

Dayton, Ohio, in Religious Campaign.

About sixty of the Dayton, O., city churches have federated and will begin a campaign in all parts of the city Feb. 15. Eleven groups have been organized, each having charge of its own territory. A thorough census will be taken of the residents of each section and definite knowledge of the status, moral and social, will be valuable to the central committee and to the churches.

St. Louis Plans Religious Awakening.

The plan of the St. Louis, Mo., Federation of Churches to lay special emphasis upon the Lenten season, as a period for special religious quickening, has been adopted by the leading churches of the city. Each church will carry out its own plan and program, but the note of evangelism will be sounded by all.

Religious Work on Steamships.

The Young Men's Christian Association has opened negotations with the management of trans-Atlantic steamship lines with a view to placing secretaries on their great ships.

Chicago Has Another "Special Sunday."

The Chicago churches are asked by W. B. Millard, Secretary of the Chicago Church Federation, to observe Lincoln's birthday (Sunday, February 8) as a special Sunday for a plea for "The Sacredness of Human Life." There were 9,000 murders and 13,000 suicides in this country last year, it is reported.

Yale in Social Service.

The gift of $350,000 of the Yale divinity school just announced by the university corporation will be used, in part at least, to provide a department of social service for men who wish to become probation officers, juvenile court officers and secretaries or workers in social settlements and organized charities. Men who enter this department will receive instruction in problems dealing with pauperism, charity and labor disputes.

The divinity school has a membership of 105. It is non-sectarian.

Of Human Interest

Ida M. Tarbell Discusses Drink.

In the January American Magazine, Ida M. Tarbell writes a fascinating account of the work of the Court of Domestic Relations in Chicago—a court devoted to the work of settling cases that arise out of marital troubles. On the subject of drink as a cause of such troubles Miss Tarbell says:

"The havoc that drink plays in domestic troubles has never been exaggerated. It is by far the most fertile cause of separation. Last year Judge Gemmill put a system into operation by which he hoped to determine approximately the cause of family separation. The conclusion was that in forty-six out of every 100 cases it is due to excessive drinking.

"The discouragement lies in the fact that in the case of excessive drinking it leaves nothing in the man which can be deeply touched. The stomach may hold out indefinitely, the character never does. The man gradually loses all signs of respect for himself and for others. He becomes a shameless hanger-on. He lies fluently and habitually to his best friends. He tricks and cheats them with unconcern. There is little or no help for such cases while they are at large."

Blease's Little Wheeze is True.

Gov. Cole Blease, in a brief address to a number of convicts whom he had pardoned, said in Columbia:

"I advise you to live quiet, temperate, industrious lives. It is dissipation, it is sprees, that fill our prisons."

Governor Blease paused, then ended impressively:

"A high old time lays many a man low."

S. Weir Mitchell, Physician, Author, Poet.

The late Dr. S. Weir Mitchell was indeed a remarkable man. Attaining fame in medicine first, he began, when at the half-century line developing his literary genius. With "Hugh Wynne" he won his spurs. Doctor Mitchell died a famous author. That he was a true poet may be seen from the following beautiful poem of faith. It is entitled "Evening:"

"I know the night is now at hand,
The mists lie low on hill and bay,
The autumn sheaves are dewless, dry,
But I have had my day;
Yes I have had the day, dear Lord, the day:
When at Thy call I have the night,
Brief be the twilight as I pass
From light to dark, from dark to light."

How J. Q. Adams Prayed.

Senator Lodge's great interest in history led him to accumulate many first-hand stories of historical characters such as this of John Quincy Adams, which add to the interest of his "Early Memories" (Scribners).

"In May, 1882, I met Dr. (George) Ellis at the house of his brother, Dr. Rufus Ellis, and he gave me an account of a visit he made to New York with John Quincy Adams. His story interested me so much that I wrote it down when I went home. Doctor Ellis said: 'It was in 1884. The occasion was the fiftieth anniversary of the New York Historical Society. The Massachusetts Historical Society sent a committee, Mr. Adams being the oldest and Doctor Ellis the youngest member. At the cars Mr. Charles Francis Adams appeared and told Doctor Ellis that he had tried to persuade his father to take a servant but the old gentleman, then nearly eighty, replied, 'I can take care of myself as well as you can of yourself. I won't have a servant.' Mr. Charles Francis Adams therefore asked Doctor Ellis to look after his father. They went to Bunker's on the Battery and had a large airy room together. Mr. Adams would have no fire (it was November) but insisted on having the window wide open. After they were both in bed Mr. Adams would begin stories and narrate all sorts of experiences full of fire and vigor, and Doctor Ellis said, most amusing; that he had to stuff the sheet in his mouth to prevent himself from roaring with laughter. After talking some time Mr. Adams would say: 'Now it is time to go to sleep and I am going to say my prayers. I shall say also the verse my mother taught me when a child. I have never failed to repeat it every night of my life. I have said it in Holland, Prussia, Russia, England, Washington and Quincy. I say it out loud always and I don't mumble it either' Then he would repeat in a loud, clear voice:

"'Now I lay me down to sleep.'

"At about five a. m. Mr. Adams would arise, and, a wood fire being laid, would get from his trunk an old-fashioned tinder-box—he despised the recent-invented lucifer matches—and would strike a light, kindle the fire and light his candle. Then he would strip, place a basin of water on the floor and sponge himself vigorously from head to foot; then partially dressed, sit down by the fire, place the Bible on his knees, and holding the candle in one hand, expound a Psalm in the most vigorous manner to Doctor Ellis."

The New Laureate Tells Story.

Dr. Robert Bridges tells, as a true story, the following: A young, high-bred novice of the Cowley Fathers, having fled from the luxuries of the world, was spending his first night on the straw mattress in his allotted cell. Being awakened at cockcrow by a knock at the door and a mild voice crying. "Dominus tecum," he replied, "Thank you, thank you! will you kindly set it down outside?"

The World Is Growing Better

National Conference on Race Betterment, Battle Creek, Mich., Jan. 8-12.

Four hundred men and women of prominence, comprising the first representative group of scientific experts ever gathered in America for that purpose, met in Battle Creek, January 8-12 to assemble evidence of race deterioration and to consider methods of checking the downward trend of mankind. The meeting was known as the First National Conference on Race Betterment.

Through the co-operation of the press, the objects and aims of the conference have been very widely disseminated and a resultant influence for better race ideals is anticipated.

Already, the effect of the conference is apparent in Battle Creek where popular interest in mental and physical efficiency was awakened by a series of public school tests which showed an alarming percentage of defective children in all grades.

The conference had its inception in the efforts of four men, particularly interested in race betterment—Rev. Newell Dwight Hillis, pastor of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Dr. J. H. Kellogg, of the Battle Creek Sanitarium; Sir Horace Plunkett, former minister of agriculture for Ireland, and Prof. Irving Fisher of Yale University. At the invitation of a central committee chosen largely by these men, fifty men and women of national prominence in the fields of science and education consented to share in the program. Their addresses, together with open discussion of many of the points considered, constituted a very widespread study of all phases of evident race degeneracy and the advocacy of many ideas of reform. Some of the suggested methods of improvement are frequent medical examination of the well, outdoor life, temperance in diet, biologic habits of living, open air schools and playgrounds, the encouragement of rural life, the segregation or sterilization of defectives, the encouragement of eugenic marriages by requiring medical certificates before granting license and the establishing of a eugenics registry for the development of a race of human thoroughbreds.

Among those having a share in the program were: Rev. Newell Dwight Hillis, Jacob Riis, Judge Ben B. Lindsey, Booker T. Washington, Dr. Victor C. Vaughan, Dr. S. Adolphus Knopf, Dr. C. B. Davenport, Dr. J. N. Hurty, Dean Walter Taylor Sumner and many other men of equal prominence in uplift work.

Some of the interesting statements of the conference are summarized as follows:

"It will be no easy task to improve the race to the point where there will be no dependent children, but the elimination of the dependent child will be one of the best indications of the superiority of our national stock."—Dr. Gertrude E. Hall, New York State Board of Charities.

"I believe that a great deal can be done by publication of facts as to the physiological effects of alcohol, in the way of inducing educated and intelligent people to conserve their health by limiting the use of alcohol or giving it up altogether."—Henry Smith Williams, Author.

"Eugenics does not eliminate romance. We eugenists believe romance should be retained. Through the past it has proved a good thing."—Prof. Roswell H. Johnson, University of Pittsburgh.

"In order that the race may survive it will apparently be necessary to make a eugenic selection of healthy mothers and to provide that the cost of bearing and rearing children shall be equally shared by all."—Prof. J. McKeen Cattell, editor Popular Science Monthly.

"The boys are learning that they have a calling just as sacred as the call to motherhood and that is the call to fatherhood."—Dean Walter Taylor Sumner of Chicago.

"The negro in the South, with all his weaknesses and handicaps, is not yet in any large measure, in the ditch."—Booker T. Washington, principal of Tuskegee Institute.

Disciples Table Talk

Downtown Church Has Remarkable Report.

The downtown city church, no longer a community church located in the midst of its membership, but reaching out its influences to its scattered membership, is a problem of great difficulty. Although under such conditions, the Sterling Place Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., offers its annual report with just a little pardonable pride, calling attention to its work. Through the united effort of an active membership of less than 200 and a contributing membership of 110, it has completed the payment of a $10,000 mortgage, and this year for the first time in thirty-two years has closed the year with all expenses paid and a surplus to its credit. This result is entirely due to a united, willing, and sacrificing membership, which is shown by the fact that the average contribution for the year has been $77.62. The contribution for missions and benevolences is $1,024.20, with an average contribution of $9.50. The church reports total receipts of $7,945.55.

Pittsburgh, East End, Prosperous.

More than 300 of the 485 members of East End Church, Pittsburgh, Pa., sat down to a royal turkey banquet at the annual business meeting January 21. The minister, John Ray Ewers, reported 104 additions in 1913, forty-eight by baptism. Four deaths and nineteen letters granted. The church in a whirlwind campaign raised $14,700 and purchased an adjoining property for a parish house. A gymnasium will probably be built the coming summer. The church treasurer reported $14,414.50 raised for all purposes. The missionary offerings were generous. There are 371 enrolled in the Sunday-school, ninety-nine in the C. W. B. M., thirty-five active Endeavorers, eighty-four in men's class and seventy in women's class. Handsome balances are in all treasuries. Mr. Ewers has been with this church four and one-half years. The congregations have gradually grown until the church is full and the membership has been more than doubled.

Herbert Yeuell Pleases Large Audiences.

Herbert Yeuell is again in the field, and from the reports that come to us from Chicago and Topeka, he is doing excellent service. Austin Hunter, of Jackson Boulevard, Chicago, reports that he closed a ten days' efficiency campaign with this church January 25. Special addresses and lectures of high order, "the ablest series of sermons heard from any evangelist," are mentioned in Mr. Hunter's report. Mr. Yeuell makes a specialty of travelogs, and is said to have slides that are unsurpassed. These were made from original photographs made by Mr. Yeuell.

Charles A. Finch, of Topeka, Kans., reports that Topeka has been hearing Mr. Yeuell with great enthusiasm. His illustrated lectures were given in the city auditorium. Mr. Finch says of the evangelist: "He is first a man, then a faithful preacher of the gospel and after that one of the most eloquent of the princes of the American platform, but ever and always in every pictorical expression of his genius there is found the Christo-ethical uplift."

Spokane Church Has Mission for Foreigners.

The annual report of Central Church, Spokane, Washington, gives a membership, total resident and non-resident of 1,300. New additions for the year 129. Pastoral calls 1,521. Sermons and addresses 118. Total funds raised, about $8,000. All interest on debt was paid and the principal on the church debt reduced over $1,000 and the balance of the church debt covered by pledges. During the past year a mission for foreigners was opened up. From this mission two Russian boys have united with the church. They are of Polish descent. Four Bulgarians have come into the church. Two or three of these will take the Bible work among their countrymen. About twelve or fifteen Bulgarians are attending the mission regularly. One Greek and Austrian is also attending. Fifteen Chinese boys have been baptized and two or three of these are preparing themselves for Bible work in China.

The following editorial appeared in the Spokesman Review of Spokane the next day after the annual meeting, commending the pastor's work during the last year: "Some people fancy that the sky-pilots have a soft snap. How many of them would like to work as hard as Parson Davis of Central Christian Church? In 113 he made 1,521 calls, an average of four a day, many involving long travel, and 118 addresses and sermons, to say nothing of forty-eight weddings and twenty-seven funerals. His experience is that of almost every pastor of a great city church."

Seattle Church Progressing.

The Ballard church is one of the old churches of Seattle. It was one of the landmarks in Ballard long before Ballard became a part of Greater Seattle. The church had its difficulties and its problems, but the organization weathered the storm, and as the city grew the church grew. The Church Extension Board assisted in erecting a splendid building here in 1897. The building grew old, however, as the congregation increased and the city grew. About six years ago, during the ministry of A. L. Crim, one side of the building was torn out and a tabernacle erected which about doubled the capacity of the building. Two years ago the church succeeded in acquiring a new property. It is in the very heart of Seattle's great industrial center. Within one mile of the church the national government is spending its $2,750,000 appropriation on the Lake Washington Canal locks and the city, county, and state are spending tremendous sums on other canal work. Within a radius of the same distance there are nineteen shingle and lumber mills, some of them among the largest in the world. An army of men are employed in these mills, many of them skilled workmen.

P. H. Welshimer, Canton, Ohio, whose school has challenged Greater Chicago's schools to a contest.

"Our part of this great city," L. E. Lakin, pastor of the church, writes, "is at least 30,000 or 40,000. We have not been able to cultivate this great territory. No equipment would make this great task possible, but with our new facilities we will be able to accomplish far more than formerly, and when the plans now well begun are completed we will approach the task with hope of gaining large success."

"The new work is undertaken on the unit plan. The first unit is a completed basement 64 by 92 feet. This was planned with the idea of permanence. The work can be completed without disturbing this part of the building. The basement auditorium will seat 500 people and the accommodations for Sunday-school purposes are ideal. The property as it now stands represents an investment of $10,000; when completed, it will represent at least $25,000 on investment; am in the latter part of my fifth year with these good people."

Grand Junction School of Methods.

W. J. Clarke, new adult superintendent of the American Society, reports that the second school of Methods in the tour of the specialists of the American Society, held at Grand Junction, Colorado, January 12-16, was a pronounced success. Jasper T. Moses, the minister of the local church and Charles Wm. Dean, state Sunday-school superintendent, made splendid preparation. The sessions were held in the assembly rooms of the Y. M. C. A. building and a total of sixty-two students registered. Of this number twenty-one completed the work and received International certificate. Representatives from five Christian churches were in the school and in addition the Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian, Brethren and Church of God congregations had in all twenty-six representatives present. The Bible study work was done by local ministers assisted by W. J. Clarke, and the Organization and Management Course was given by Charles Wm. Dean. Resolutions embodying a request for another school next year in Colorado were enthusiastically passed.

Wichita, Central, Reports.

The Central Church, Wichita, Kans., reports that for the year 1913, 182 persons have been added to the membership, making the total 1,500. $8,078 were raised for all departments of the church, more than $3,000 were raised and given to the Fairview Avenue and West Side churches to help in their building enterprises, while one family gave $600 to an African Mission, while three other families gave $1,600 to Phillips University, at Enid, Okla., making a grand total of $13,765. Walter Scott Priest began his fifth year as pastor Nov. 1.

A Record Missionary Church.

Last year the church at Pomona, Cal., gave $830 for Foreign Missions through the Foreign Society. This church now supports two missionaries on the foreign field through this Society—Miss Edith L. Apperson, on the Congo, Africa, and Dr. C. L. Pickett, Laoag, P. I. Besides G. H. Waters of that church supports Mrs. E. R. Moon in Africa. This is one of the best missionary churches we have. It gave $3,626 for all missions last year and expended $4,626 on itself.

Dr. Ainslie Makes Important Speech.

Peter Ainslie, who is visiting England as one of a deputation from the United States to meet the councils and committees of the Free Church bodies there in the interest of world wide unity, is reported by "The Christian World" as having made a very effective speech at a dinner given to the Delegation, in London. This affair was described by Sir Joseph Compton-Rickett as "an historic occasion, opening perhaps a new era in Christian history." Sir Joseph was host and chairman, and over a hundred Free Churchmen from all quarters of England were present. Doctor Ainslie, in his speech, made it clear that not only the Protestant, but the Eastern and ultimately the Roman churches come within the horizon of the delegates' hopes. They would, said Dr. Ainslie, go into the World Conference as Baptists, Episcopalians, Presbyterians, and Methodists, but God knows how they would come out of it. Doctor Ainslie gave point to his powerful appeal by a story. A little while ago he admitted a young girl to church membership. Making a pastoral call upon her soon afterwards, he asked as to her father and mother. The girl burst into tears and sobbed disconsolately. Feeling that he had been guilty of an intrusion, Doctor Ainslie apologized for his question; but the girl, wiping her eyes, explained that her father and mother were divorced and did not live together. When Christians, said Doctor Ainslie, are as sensitive to the divisions in the household of faith as was that girl, then the age of unity will have come.

R. A. Long Commends J. W. Mounce.

R. A. Long, of Kansas City, has written John W. Mounce, of Hannibal, whose record has been noted in these columns, the following letter:

"My Dear Mr. Mounce: I am in receipt of a marked copy of the Hannibal Morning Journal of January 11, from which I notice the wonderful record belonging to you as a Sunday-school attendant. I very much doubt if there is another individual in all the world that can show such a record. I have been quite a regular Sunday-school attendant since I was, say, fifteen years old, but with nothing like such regularity as has been yours to enjoy. I say yours to enjoy, because I believe I enjoy my attendance at Sunday-school possibly more than any other church service, at least fully as much, and so I am sure that your enjoyment during this long period of Sunday-school attendance has been almost unbounded.

"I am glad indeed of the opportunity to have noted this record. I observe that you are well along in life. Sincerely trust, however, that many more years may be spared you, not only for your own enjoyment, but for the blessings that doubtless your life has brought and is bringing to mankind.

"Trusting I may have an opportunity some day to meet you, I am,

Yours fraternally,

R. A. LONG."

Church has Greatest Missionary Year.

Jacksonville, Ill., Central church has just concluded the greatest missionary year in its history. There has been given through the treasury of the church, $1,547.52, through other departments of the church, $1,129.67, and by individuals more than $2,000, making a grand total of about $5,000 for missions and benevolences, last year. At the annual meeting, held recently it was reported that $5,246.67 was raised for current expenses in the church, and $1,717.09 in other departments, making the grand total $6,963.76. This church has adopted a comprehensive missionary policy, including the support of the Christian Hospital at Lu Chu Fu, China, of President C. T. Paul of the College of Missions as the Living-link of the C. W. B. M., and of W. B. Slater at Moline, Ill., as State Living-link. Thus the church is represented in medical, educational and evangelistic missions. During the past year there have been a total of seventy-seven additions to the local congregation with a net gain of twenty-one. Clyde Darsie is the efficient minister at Jacksonville.

Annual Report, First Church, Paris, Ill.

The annual report of First Church, Paris, Ill., shows a year of great activity. The budget for the year was $10,150. Of this amount $2,250 wen for missions and $7,900 for local work. There were 188 additions to the church during the year. The Sunday-school made a splendid record. There are 430 in the Home Department and 173 in the Cradle Roll. The average attendance for the last three months of the year was 664. The average attendance for the year was 417. The C. W. B. M. has a membership of 100, but has set the mark for 150 before the year passes. The Auxiliary has been paying about $400 on a Living-link for several years, but expects to be a complete Living-link this year.

Euclid Avenue, Cleveland, Reports.

The annual meeting of Euclid Avenue church, Cleveland, Ohio, was held January 8. Reports from all departments of the church were read together with a reminiscent paper by Asa Hudson of Chardon, who was a member of this church from 1853 to 1883. The reports indicated that the year 1913 was the best in the history of the church. During

Sacrifice of Missionary Families

BY F. M. RAINS.

Some will never know the real sacrifice many missionary families are making for the evangelization of the world. The word is used in its true New Testament significance. The task of the world's evangelization requires our best, and many are equal to the demand.

Sometimes the father must go to the mission field and leave the family in America for the education of the children. And it seems best for the mother to remain with them. For the father to go away from his children at the growing and formative period of their lives is a severe trial indeed. Few are prepared for the test. The romp and laughter, and the affection and problems of the child life are as dear to the missionary's heart as to any who abide at home. The compelling love of Christ forces these brave men to the ends of the earth. These heralds of the gospel are the chief glory of the churches.

We are reminded of this afresh by one of our missionaries who has just bid farewell to his loved ones for a term of years. A consecrated wife follows him with prayer and every proper benediction, but with streaming eyes and breaking heart. When he sees his children again he will scarcely recognize them. They will have grown into young manhood. And the face of the wife will be changed, but sanctified by loyal Christian service.

For a man to go away from his devoted wife for so long a term involves a sacrifice beyond all description. She is the mother of his children, she is his wise counselor in the varied and intricate problems of life, his ideal in all that is best, his true and helpful companion in things intellectual and spiritual, his inspiration when the task is hard and the clouds do not lift. The call of duty to such a man is loud and strong, and impelling. All good men honor him. He is an apostle of the churches and of Jesus Christ. The marks of his Lord are not in his body, but in his heart and in his life. There are tests of faith stronger than even death itself.

Sometimes the children must be sent home for education and health. In most cases there are no suitable schools for the children. In that case the parents remain on the fields. This is a severe trial to the whole family. Then again the climate in the chief mission fields is most trying. G. L. Wharton spoke of laboring on when the temperature was 120 degrees. And sometimes the heat is almost unbearable for months at a time. The same is true in Africa. The conditions of life are appallingly unsanitary in all Asia and Africa, and sanitation means much to the Anglo-Saxon. What would be the condition of an American city if there were no sewers, if garbage were left to rot in the sun, and all offal were thrown in the streets? One man said he identifid seventy-two distinct smells in Peking, China! Another said he could smell China six months after leaving the country! Native heathen cities appal the visitors by their nastiness

Of the older families on the mission fields but few are found not divided by many thousands of miles. God only knows the measure of the weeping hearts of fathers and mothers who toil on in those far away places with their children parted during the dearest years. Time eliminates a score of heart-rending difficulties. But this abides.

If the big-souled Christians of our churches could see the full significance of this brave battle our representatives are putting up against nerve-testing difficulties, then there would be an outpouring of resources for every call for life and money till the Foreign Society would say, enough.

The few dollars given in the March Offering by the most liberal is not worthy to be mentioned in the presence of what is being done by our missionaries. They are a brave and true group of men and women, who have gone forth with the gospel message. They have faced wars and revolutions, they have uncomplainingly toiled when their bodies were burning with fever, their heads have ached with disease, and their hearts with problems, and they are resisting uncongenial climates sometimes even unto death itself. Neither the burning heat of summer, nor the storms of winter have been able to drive them from their post of duty. God has honored us with the privilege of their sppport. Are we worthy of the duty? March 1 will tell.

Eureka College and Missions

Eureka College has always been characterized by the misisonary spirit. For years this institution has been a power house of missionary enthusiasm and a training school in which those going to the field were equipped for their work. Many have gone forth from the halls of Eureka College into the uttermost parts of the earth.

President H. O. Pritchard, of Eureka College.

On January 22, Miss Irene Banta sailed from San Francisco to China, to take up work in the school for girls conducted by Miss Emma Lyon. Miss Banta is a product of Eureka College, Eureka having been her home since childhood. She is the fifth missionary to be sent to the foreign field within the last year. A little more than a year ago Emory Ross was sent by the C. W. B. M. to Liberia. Last June Lewis Hurt was also sent by the C. W. B. M. to Liberia. In September last, Dr. Ernest Pearson went out under the Woman's Board to Liberia and Dr. Will Frymire went to Bolenge under the auspices of the Foreign Society. All these are the products of Eureka College. It would be difficult to find a finer group of young people anywhere. Some of them will become famous missionaries. Eureka rejoices to have had a part in equipping them for their life's work. Other Eureka graduates are now taking training in the Missionary Training School and will also sail for the foreign field before many months have passed. Every continent of the earth and many islands of the sea have former Eureka students witnessing for Christ. The influence of Eureka College is literally belting the earth.

H. O. PRITCHARD,
President.

The Joint Board Banquet is an annual affair at Kansas City. It occurred at the Linwood Boulevard Church on Thursday evening, January 29, and R. A. Long delivered the principal address.

the year over $38,000 was raised in cash by the church and its auxiliary organizations. Of this amount $22,500 was used in paying off the last item of indebtedness. During the year 111 members were received into the church. This is the largest number of additions the church has received in any one year during the seventy years of its history. All of these persons came at regular services. The report of the pastor, J. H. Goldner, was the fourteenth annual report given to this congregation. Each year sees the work of Mr. Goldner and the Euclid Avenue church making a steady advance. The pastor and the congregation thoroughly know and understand each other. The committee on ways and means reported an Every-member Canvass successfully conducted in November, 1913, for the current expenses and missionary contributions of the year 1914. The combined budget calls for an expenditure of $14,750. Of this amount $4,000 is for missions. Thirteen missionary and benevolent enterprises are mentioned in the missionary portion of the budget. Each of these has been apportioned a sum in accord with the recommendations of the National Budget Committee, and a missionary treasurer has been elected to whom the missionary appropriation is paid by the Church treasurer each week. Monthly remittances will be made to the various societies. The Christian Woman's Board of Missions participates in the division of the missionary fund. With the Church financed for 1914 the members will direct their activities toward the spiritual side of church work. Personal work, evangelism, Bible-school and Christian Endeavor will be emphasized.

Sala Doing Constructive Work.

C. M. Burkhart, pastor at Coshocton, Ohio, writes in terms of hearty commendation of the work of the Sala Evangelistic Company, of Canton, Ohio. They are doing solid construction work, he reports. A feature of their program in each meeting is to build up school and church during the first two weeks so as to conserve the later results of the evangelistic efforts. H. E. Sala declares he would rather add 300 to the school and 100 to the church than vice versa. Some of the topics discussed during the first of the meetings at Coshocton are: "The How of a Successful Bible-school;" "Men for the Church;" "The Boy;" "Why Some Churches Fail;" "Christ's Unanswered Prayer." The Coshocton church school and Woman's society has doubled. Over $2,100 has been paid on the church debt.

Reception to Bruce Brown.

F. M. Dowling writes concerning a reception given by the Fullerton people to Bruce Brown, their resigning pastor:

'For three years Bruce Brown has been our pastor at Fullerton, Cal. He has endeared himself to the entire community by his strong and helpful sermons and his readiness to respond to any call for service. He made a large contribution to the educational and civic as well as the religious life of the community. The reception given him on his departure was a demonstration by all the churches and other organizations and by the general citizenship of the town. Mr. Brown has answered the insistent call of our Missionary Board to do evangelistic work in southern California. He has demonstrated his exceptional fitness for this high calling. The best wishes and prayers of a loyal and loving people go with him as he goes out into this great, white harvest-field."

C. S. BELL COMPANY, OF HILLSBORO, O., REPORTS SUCCESSFUL BUSINESS.

Since 1858, when the old established bell company, The C. S. Bell Company, Hillsboro, Ohio, began the making of the celebrated Steel Alloy Bells they have supplied thousands of churches and schools with them and they are giving complete satisfaction. They have a unique plan of aiding a church or school to secure a bell; they also have a bell catalogue which is full of interesting reading matter. Both are free for asking.

Some Des Moines Items

I have thought ever since the Toronto Convention that I would send word to our different papers in relation to some items of general interest perhaps, growing out of our life and work in Des Moines.

In the first place I have been anxious that we should be understood in relation to the withholding of the invitation for the general convention of 1914. Those of us who went to Toronto had the authority of the Des Moines churches, backed by the cordial interest of the entire state, to urge Des Moines as the place for this fall's gathering. When local action was taken in regard to the matter we had in mind Mr. Sunday's coming to our city in November but the very day we reached Toronto a letter was received from Mr. Sunday making it clear that his work here would begin the middle of September. We realized at once that we could not invite the convention and bring its interests into conflict with the great evangelistic campaign which would consume the city. On this account we were more gracious and polite to the worthy city of Atlanta than we might otherwise have been.

But frankly, brethren we feel that our turn has about come. In 1909 our dear Brother Briney so forcefully backed up our neighbor Topeka's appeal that we were speedily pushed clear off the map so far as the convention of 1910 was concerned. We realized there was no use of asking for the convention of 1911 because of Topeka and Des Moines being so near together in the same section of the country. We were not in position locally to urge Des Moines for 1912 and were just getting a good ready for the presentation of our claims for 1913 when the Canadian folks, in personal letters, asked us if we would not give them the right of way. This appeal we were glad to heed in spite of some local disappointments, but we quite set our hearts then upon the convention of 1914 which we were finally unable even to ask for because of conditions stated above. Such is the worthy, generous record of this beautiful city of the Central West! But we have been "good" about as long as we can stand it and we would like to get it understood now that while we will not compete with Los Angeles for 1915, we are the first on the roll of fields to be considered for the assembly of the hosts of God in 1916. Let everybody take notice. We suppose there will be no opposition! We just take it for granted that the folks are going to say "Sure! Let us go to Des Moines." For the matter to be in abeyance from 1909 to 1916 we feel gives us a basis of appeal that will command consideration everywhere. And so we will just call it settled! We appreciate, too, this attitude on your part.

Recent days have brought us a break in the long established relationships of our churches here. H. E. Van Horn, for more than seven years pastor at Capitol Hill, resigned about the first of the year, taking up the great work at Oklahoma City. The word from the new field indicates a splendid adjustment of pastor and people and the evangelistic power of Mr. Van Horn's ministry which was so marked while here, has come into evidence at once in the very first days in Oklahoma City. May the promises of the present be more than fulfilled in the glad record of the future.

The Capitol Hill Church has called as Mr. Van Horn's successor, G. H. Bassett of Independence, Kansas. I understand Brother Bassett opens his work here at a very early date. There will be a warmth of fellowship open to him both in his own faithful congregation and among all our people in the city.

I wish space permitted my referring at some length to a number of other interesting phases of our city's life. F. W. Mutchler at Grant Park is just now in a meeting assisted by Lawrence Wright. Sixty-two additions at last report. The Mondamin Avenue people are pressing forward their new building enterprise and are having excellent results in their Sunday services. J. M. Hoffman is preaching for them. W. H. Knotts continues in tireless faithfulness at Highland Park winning substantial victories there and A. N. Simpson is assisting greatly by his ministry at the new Grand View Church. It is reported that Oliver Hower has resigned at Park Avenue. There will be genuine sorrow to many if the break really comes. B. E. Kinsell of Drake is loyally looking after Valley Junction, Mr Joneson of Drake is faithfully nurturing Chesterfield, and Rex Cole of Drake and assistant pastor to Brother Idleman, has special oversight of South Side mission points.

Men's Day, February 22, 1914

Our National Men's Movement has hit upon Washington's birthday, which comes on Sunday this year, as a time for recognition of Men's work in our local churches. A most attractive souvenir program and exercises has been issued and may be had for 2 cents per copy upon application to the National Secretary, E. E. Elliott, R. A. Long Building, Kansas City, Mo. The exercise will be published in abbreviated form in this paper, but those Men's organizations and churches desiring to observe the program will do well to send for sufficient supply of the souvenir programs to supply their people on that day. The program is printed attractively, with a half tone engraving of Washington on the front cover, and will make a commendable contribution to the service itself. The letter sent to our Men's organizations by the National Secretary with the program, is as follows:

Kansas City, Mo., January 25, 1914.

To Men's Bible Classes and Brotherhoods,
Chapters of the National Men's Movement.

Dear Brethren:—

Washington's birthday this year comes on Sunday. The enclosed program of the day has been arranged, so that the men of our great Brotherhood will have an opportunity of getting the claims and opportunities of the Men's Movement before the local congregations. This exercise can be carried out in any church where there are as many as three men with patience and persistence and consecration, and who have faith in the Men's Movement. May we not hope that your church will have a part in making the observance of the day unanimous?

Here are some facts that will help you to understand the plea for an offering:

1. The Men's Movement has grown rapidly during the past year. We now have 950 local Chapters.
2. Since the movement began five years ago, most of the expense has been paid by a few men, among them R. A. Long of Kansas City, has been our financial ally.
3. Brother Long has pledged one million dollars to the Men and Millions Movement and should be relieved of further generosity in the Men's Movement.
4. Every man among us will agree that this organization should be supported entirely by the men of our chapters and churches.
5. The Brotherhood of St. Andrew in the Protestant Episcopal Church has been so supported for thirty years.
6. There are no membership fees or dues, but the constitution provides for an annual free will offering.
7. It has been suggested by our National Directors that the offering should average 50 cents per man this year.

Please bring the matter of Washington's birthday to the attention of the pastor of your church?

Please bring the matter of annual offering to the attention of the other officers and arrange between yourselves as to the best time and method of presenting the offering matter to your men.

Offerings should be sent promptly to the undersigned.

E. E. ELLIOTT,
National Secretary.

Women Lead in Anderson, Indiana.

Central Church, Anderson, Ind., J. Boyd Jones, pastor, makes its "best yet" report. A mortgage of $9,000 was paid off last March. The Ladies' Aid did a remarkable work during the year, handling $7,566.22. The women also made over 6,700 calls during the year. The Sunday-school had an average attendance of 791, an increase of 100 per week over last year's record. Over $1,200 more was raised by the school than in 1912. This great church supports three missionaries in India, and will do more for home work in the near future.

R. P. Shepherd in Chicago Work.

R. P. Shepherd, who has become educational secretary of the Cook County Sunday-school Association, probably the most important county work in the country, made a deep impression in his address on religious education delivered at the Quarterly Rally of Chicago Disciples, held January 25, at First Methodist Church. An overflow audience attended. Doctor Shepherd impressed upon his hearers the advantages of "forming an unformed character over reforming a deformed one."

Doctor Shepherd has consented to conduct a "How Column" in "The Conquest" for the benefit of schools and classes which may desire information on organization, literature, etc. The Conquest takes great pleasure in this recent acquisition.

W. B. Brown, a Kansas City business man, and lawyer, recently addressed the Brotherhood at Bonner Springs, Kansas, where a Brotherhood has been organized. C. W. Cooper is pastor. The co-operation of churches in Greater Kansas City, has extended into the suburbs, the latest acquisition being the church at Merriam, Kansas.

Frank L. Bowen, city evangelist of Kansas City, has been extended a call by the Jackson Avenue church, where he was pastor for thirteen years prior to 1910. Mr. Bowen has the matter under consideration, but with the work of city missions heavy on his hands and heart, immediate decision is impossible.

Among our business men attending the Men and millions meeting at St. Louis were F. A. Henry of Cleveland, M. M. Cochran, Uniontown, Pa., I. W. Gill and J. N. Haymaker, Wichita, J. W. Perry, T. S. Ridge, Fletcher Cowherd, and R. A. Long of Kansas City.

The new church edifice at Lafayette, Ind., was thrown open to the public on Sunday last, but the formal dedication will not take place until April. The building is thoroughly modern in its equipment with a total seating capacity of 1,200. George W. Watson is the pastor.

Dr. J. H. Garrison, editor emeritus of the Christian Evangelist, was a hasty visitor in Kansas City, January 28, enroute to Claremont, Cal., where he and Mrs. Garrison will spend the next two months visiting their son, President W. E. Garrison.

Frank Waller Allen, pastor at Paris, Mo., who made a success of his last book, "The Lovers of Skye," which was published by Bobbs-Merrill, has another book which will see the light next fall, and still another for the spring of 1915.

The School of Methods held at Muncie, Ind., under the auspices of the Ind. Miss. Society, closed after five days' sessions. Joseph C. Todd delivered his lecture "Money Conscience" at the closing service of this conference.

The Executive Committee of the General Convention Churches of Christ met at Kansas City on January 21, attended by Pres. Hill M. Bell, C. M. Chilton, George H. Combs, Mrs. W. B. Brown, and Graham Frank.

There will soon be a Mormon Church in Denver, according to J. L. Herrick, missionary for the western states of the giant religious octopus. In two years the membership of the local mission increased over fifty per cent.

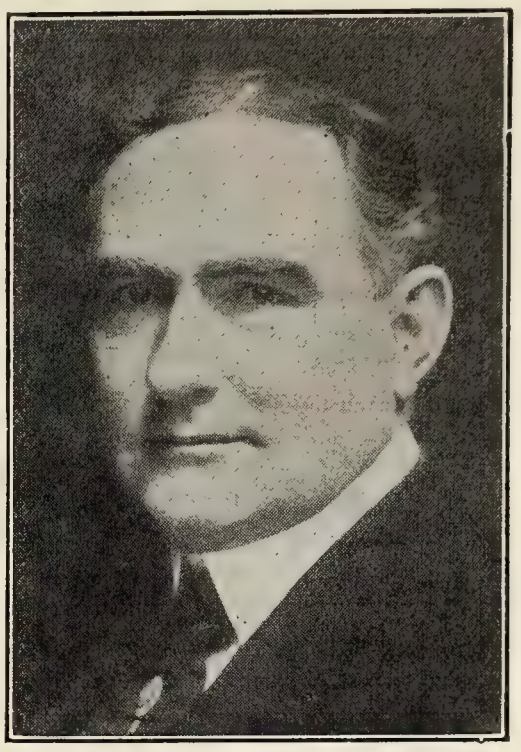
Frank Garrett, of China, spoke at Lathrop, Missouri, Sunday, January 25 and at the Kansas City Ministers' alliance the following day. The Kansas City preachers heartily endorsed the Union College at Nanking, China.

The Bible College at Nanking University, China, has seventy acres of land, twenty-five buildings, and 530 students. The government has set aside 11,000 acres for experimental purposes of the Union University.

Our colleges are being asked to arrange some lectures on men's work for the ministerial students. This is a neglected theme, but one which is entitled to large consideration on part of our educators.

The Central Church, Anderson, Ind., in its recent annual meeting showed total money raised for all causes $15,270, and church in good condition. S. S. Lappin was the principal speaker of the evening.

W. F. Reagor, of the First church, Portland, Ore., is resigning from his work on account of ill health. He, with his family, will reside in Lexington, Ky., until his health is fully restored.



Dr. R. P. Shepherd, Educational Secretary of Cook County S. S. Association, who will give expert advice to Conquest schools.

The Capitol Hill church, Des Moines, Ia., is securing the services of G. H. Bassett, of Independence, Kan. This pulpit has been vacant since the resignation of H. E. Van Horn.

The state secretary of Missouri, R. B. Briney, says we have only 1,000 churches in the "Show me" state, instead of 1,800 the number advertised in our year book for some years.

Mrs. Bertha Lohr, of Indiana, spoke recently for the church at Monroe City, Mo. This church will support a native worker this year. W. Garnet Ahorn is the pastor.

The church at Texarkana, U. S. A., Clifford S. Weaver, pastor, raised in all departments last year, $4,238.23. All branches of the work are reported in excellent condition.

There were sixty additions, all but ten by confession, at the Jackson Avenue Church, Kansas City, during a two weeks' meeting held by F. L. Bowen, the city evangelist.

The Brotherhood Movement has prepared a fine program for our men on February 22. It is a splendid service and one that ought to be observed in every church.

W. O. Thomas has taken the work at Old Dover, Missouri, where Alexander Campbell once held a debate, and where T. P. Haley preached in his early ministry.

J. N. Jessup, recently resigned from Little Rock, First to take up the work at Johnson City, Tenn., is in Mercy Hospital, for an operation on his shoulder.

Some churches without pastors: First, Springfield, Ill., First, Omaha, Neb.; Jackson avenue, Kansas City; First, Joplin, Mo.; Howett street, Peoria, Ill.

C. C. Morrison preached at the Wabash Avenue Church, Kansas City, Sunday January 25.

Mexico, Missouri, church recently held a boy's banquet attended by fifty boys of the Sunday-school.

Budd Park Church, Kansas City, will be dedicated about May 1.

DR. CHAS. E. JEFFERSON VISITS DRAKE.

The College of the Bible of Drake University in its annual lecture course presents this year Dr. Charles E. Jefferson, pastor of Broadway Tabernacle, New York City, in the following series of lectures:

Tuesday, February 17, four p. m., "The Opportunity of the Modern Pulpit;" Tuesday, February 17, eight p. m., "Christianity and Socialism;" Wednesday, February 18, four p. m., "The Church and International Peace;" Thursday, February 19, four p. m., "The Mission of the Church Today;" Thursday, February 19, eight p. m., "Christian Unity;" Friday, February 20, four p. m., "A Great Preacher;" Friday February 20, eight p. m., "My Sabbatical Year."

This lecture course, one of the events of the college year, is looked forward to not only by the university and city but by an increasingly large number of ministers and friends throughout the state. This week is fast becoming a "Home-Coming" for our alumni and for many others who realize the impulse, the refreshing insight and inspiration that come from such occasions. Doctor Jefferson as writer, preacher, and thoughtful student of present problems, is too well known to need any introduction.

FLATBUSH MISSION, NEW YORK, DEDICATED.

One of the greatest days for the Disciples of Christ in New York City was observed at the dedication of the new Flatbush Christian Church by Dr. Z. T. Sweeney on Sunday, Jan. 25, 1914.

This is the Flatbush Mission of the Disciples Missionary Union that called Frederick Marsh Gordon to be its pastor about three years ago. At that time the equipment consisted of a small frame chapel that cost less than $5,000. We were providentially guided in calling Dr. Gordon to this field of work as he is a man of great faith, unbounded enthusiasm and an indefatigable worker.

It was not long before the Sunday-school outgrew their small quarters and it was apparent to all that a much larger equipment was necessary. It seemed an impossible task to raise from the small membership of this mission the $30,000 necessary to erect a more adequate edifice, but Dr. Gordon had won the confidence of his people and with a great faith started to accomplish the impossible. A whirlwind campaign was organized and conducted in June 1913 and $10,000 was raised in ten days. Ground was broken during the summer and on Sunday last, the new Flatbush Christian Church with its beautiful auditorium, reading rooms, gymnasium, shower baths and bowling alleys was dedicated by Z. T. Sweeney.

At the morning service the auditorium and galleries were filled and after an inspiring address by Dr. Sweeney over $9,000 was raised to reduce the debt on the building. The afternoon service held at 3 o'clock filled the auditorium and gallery and overflowed into the chapel. Many friends from other Disciples churches in New York City attended and listened attentively to the eloquence of that man of God, Dr. Z. T. Sweeney and in response to his appeal over $2,000 was raised. Surely the raising of over $11,000 in one day was a most generous response to the opportunity presented for the extending of primitive Christianity in Flatbush and commends the liberality of our New York brethren. The evening service was conducted by Dr. Gordon and two new members were received. The dedication day came to a very fitting close by the observance of Communion. Evangelistic services will be conducted shortly and the membership of this church will be doubled in less than two years. Its Sunday-school has just started a Century Campaign to add one hundred new members in one hundred days. About three hundred and fifty attended the Sunday-school last Sunday.

This is an excellent example of the successful culmination of mission work as fostered and directed by the Disciples Missionary Union of greater New York in co-operation with the American Christian Missionary Society.

CHARLES B. DRAKE,
Vice-president Disciples Missionary Union.

NEWS FROM THE FOREIGN SOCIETY.

A. G. Saunders, who has recently reached Laoag, P. I., says: "I am working hard on the language. Already have had the privilige of baptizing two."

The Southern Missionary News Bureau furnishes missionary items to 450 papers, with an aggregate circulation of 1,750,000. These papers circulate in the southern portion of our country. This is an effective way of giving the public missionary information.

The church at Los Angeles, Cal., Russell F. Thrapp, pastor, gave J. C. Ogden and family a great farewell reception before their departure for Tibet. They showed them much kindness in many ways. It will be remembered that this church is helping to support the great work conducted by Brother Ogden. The church gave them clothes, rugs, raincoats, and other useful articles, and besides they gave money also. The church remembered that Mr. Ogden's home in Tibet was recently looted and they desire fellowship with him in his problem.

Last week the Foreign Society received $200 from the estate of Miss Caroline M. Atkinson, Painesville, Ohio.

We are glad to report that a friend in Missouri sends a gift on the Annuity Plan. We are hoping that Missouri will come forward with a number of such gifts.

Last year the Tabernacle Church, Columbus, Ind., W. H. Book, pastor, raised $2,300 for missions. They do not expect to fall behind this year; the prospects are bright. The church will grow in all usefulness and liberality.

The churches in Australia are anxious to have Dr. W. E. Macklin of Nanking, China, pay them a visit. He may do so some time during the year.

Last week the Foreign Society received $1,309.50 from a sister in Lancaster, England, on the Annuity Plan. This reminds us that quite a number of annuity gifts have been received since the beginning of the current missionary year. We hope the number will increase.

W. B. Alexander, Damoh, C. P., India, writes as follows: "We are having a very fine time this Christmas season. Four baptisms and two marriages on Christmas. A series of meetings between Christmas and New Year's. Am expecting more baptisms on New Year's Day. Christians all attending meetings and a very fine spirit of fellowship. The best I have seen in Damoh."

Last week Secretary Bert Wilson secured a pledge from a friend of the gospel for $10,000, also two other pledges for $750 each. We hope many other friends will remember the work with large and small pledges and cash contributions. It is a time for great things on the mission fields of the world. Mr. Wilson is making a fine record wherever he goes. He has recently enlisted two new Living-link churches.

Miss Josepha Franklin, Damoh, India, says: "We have had a glorious Christmas week. When I came here in 1895 we had one American missionary and wife, two single American missionaries, one Indian family, and about twelve orphan boys. Last week we had our church crowded with Christians coming and going everywhere, and a Christian community is an accepted fact in the town."

H. A. Baker, Chuchow, China, writes as follows: "The fields here are ripe. Yesterday we had the greater part of the children of the city schools in the church. Some of the city schools came in a body and the teachers came along." F. M. RAINS, Sec'y.

A GREAT AND POPULAR CHURCH MUSIC BOOK

The New Praise Hymnal

EDITED BY GILBERT J. ELLIS AND J. H. FILLMORE

There is no equipment of the church more vitally related to its spiritual development and growth than the kind of hymnal it uses. In other words, a church makes no better investment than the purchase of a good hymnal. It is a serious mistake to buy an ordinary gospel song book for use on the Lord's Day and the Wednesday evening prayer services. Such books cheapen the worship.

The New Praise Hymnal comes as near being the ideal church hymnal for the present day as could well be conceived. It is a handsome book, dignified in appearance and make-up. It embraces in its contents as nearly everything demanded to-day as could be gotten into a book of 600 pages.

The New Praise Hymnal is practical in every way; everything in it is available for use in the average congregation. It contains also what is used by the most advanced churches.

The setting of the hymns and music is engaging to the eye and pleasant to read and sing.

It is a book that grows in favor as it is used. New beauties are discovered from time to time as its pages are tested by use. The hymns and tunes of the church universal are found in The New Praise Hymnal, also the best available Gospel Songs that the modern church has found to be necessary to its various activities.

The New Praise Hymnal is widely used in our churches. We believe it to be the favorite book of the church.

Luke 12:1-12. Memory Verses, 8, 9

Golden Text.—Every one who shall confess me before men, him shall the Son of man also confess before the angels of God.—Luke 12:8.

American Standard Bible.
Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons.
(Used by permission.)

(1) In the meantime, when the many thousands of the multitude were gathered together, insomuch that they trod one upon another, he began to say unto his disciples first of all, Beware ye of the leaven of the Pharisees, which is hypocrisy. (2) But there is nothing covered up, that shall not be revealed; and hid, that shall not be known. (3) Wherefore whatsoever ye have said in the darkness shall be heard in the light; and what ye have spoken in the ear in the inner chambers shall be proclaimed upon the housetops. (4) And I say unto you my friends, Be not afraid of them that kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do. (5) But I will warn you whom ye shall fear: Fear him, who after he hath killed hath power to cast into hell; yea, I say unto you, Fear him. (6) Are not five sparrows sold for two pence? and not one of them is forgotten in the sight of God. (7) But the very hairs of your head are all numbered. Fear not: ye are of more value than many sparrows. (8) And I say unto you, Every one who shall confess me before men, him shall the Son of man also confess before the angels of God: (9) but he that denieth me in the presence of men shall be denied in the presence of the angels of God. (10) And every one who shall speak a word against the Son of man, it shall be forgiven him: but unto him that blasphemeth against the Holy Spirit it shall not be forgiven. (11) And when they bring you before the synagogues, and the rulers, and the authorities, be not anxious how or what ye shall answer, or what ye shall say: (12) for the Holy Spirit shall teach you in that very hour what ye ought to say.

Verse By Verse.

By C. C. Buckner.

v. 1. In the meantime: While he was being pressed by the Pharisees. First of all: He was speaking directly to his disciples and indirectly to the multitudes. Leaven of the Pharisees: He warned his disciples against the Pharisaical hypocrisy which gave their religion a show of bulk beyond its substance.

v. 2. But there is nothing covered up, etc.: "Be sure your sins will find you out."

v. 3. Spoken in the ear in the inner chambers: President Wilson says that, when he became governor of New Jersey, he discovered that many men, who came to his office for conference, were inclined to speak in whispers, with their hands before their mouths. He established the policy of speaking aloud.

v. 4. Be not afraid, etc.: The most atrocious murders are not of physical lives but of souls.

v. 5. But I will warn you, etc.: We are responsible to God for our deeds.

v. 6. Not one of them is forgotten: What careful cognizance God takes of all the infinite intricacies of his creative handiwork!

v. 7. Ye are of more value than many sparrows: The omniscient God holds man in the highest regard.

v. 8. Confess me before men: The cost of confession of Christ is often great today, though rarely so great as in the days of persecution, but it is now and was then a dividend declaring investment. Son of man: This, Jesus' phrase for himself, is used eighty-one times in the Gospels.

v. 10. It shall not be forgiven him: Many entertain erroneous notions regarding the "sin against the Holy Spirit." It is the destruction of the very faculty of repentance; and without repentance there can be no forgiveness. It is spiritual suicide.

v. 11-12. Before the synagogues: A secular and religious court of justice. The authorities: The Sanhedrin.

At the Heart of the Lesson.

By A. Z. Conrad.

While the stormy interview was progressing in the Pharisees' house a multitude was gathering at the door. Coming forth from a seething volcano of protest and accusation Jesus looked into a sea of human faces and instantly his sympathy was awakened. Addressing his disciples directly and the entire multitude indirectly he uttered the word of caution, "Beware." His interview had emphasized the danger. "Beware of the leaven of the Pharisees, which is hypocrisy." Leaven is an active permeating principle representing in this connection the unholy influence of Phariseeism. He sounded a note of warning for all time against the sophistry of Pharisaic teaching, but particularly against hypocrisy in any of its forms. He had seen the effect of the leaven of deceit. Not all Pharisees were hypocrites, but as a cult they had substituted appearance for reality. Their hypocrisies were hateful to holiness. Almost unconsciously those indoctrinated by the Rabbis were inoculated at the same time with the virus of insincerity which poisoned all the inner springs of the soul. In reality, what was this dangerous influence? It was the desire to seem rather than to be. It acted with reference to human verdicts. Appearances were everything, reality nothing. Veneer was of more value than real virtue.

CHARACTER SELF-REVEALING.

"There is nothing covered that shall not be revealed." This was a stinging rebuke to those who took refuge in secrecy. Some time, in some way, every veil is to be torn away. Concealments corrode conscience. The fear of discovery develops every kind of deception. The closeted skeleton stalks out sooner or later with chattering teeth and tells the secret. Bad blood comes to the surface in tell-tale eruption. Smouldering fires first smoke then flame forth the truth. Iron rust gnaws at the support of steel until it falls. The worm eaten sill that looks perfectly sound, at last shows its real condition by breaks in the masonry. Secret sin is always watching for the police. The letter written with invisible fluid will sooner or later come to the flame that will make clear its contents.

WHERE HUMAN HATE HALTS.

"Be not afraid of them which kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do." The broken body marks the limit of human hate. You can burn down the temple but the spirit of the temple is beyond the touch of flame. Man's brutality can cause physical and mental pain. Cruelty can crush the temple of clay, but it cannot touch the life within. The tenement may be torn, the tenant is beyond reach. No man's character can be destroyed by any but himself. Soul freedom cannot be hindered. The sword that seeks to cut the sunbeams leaves no mark. Flame and flood are alike futile to destroy an immortal soul. Jesus foresaw the persecutions yet to be. He knew the natural weakness of the flesh. He sought to fortify his disciples against the day of trial by blade and bludgeon and bar. His words, "No more that they can do," declares for a fixed boundary to evil. "Stop there!" God says to the powers of darkness. He calls a halt upon greed and godlessness, and upon vice and viciousness. It is possible to become immune to every iniquitous and destructive thing. Life, eternal life in the soul may be so intense, so abounding, so overflowing that it repels the soil before it touches the soul. Why are we craven cowards when we may be so armored and weaponed as to defy all the deadly dangers of earth and hell?

PARALYSING PERIL.

"Fear him which after he hath killed hath power to cast into hell." God's word is full of, "Fear not." Here we have the converse of that exhortation. "Fear him." "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom." To interpret this in our ordinary sense of fear is to utterly misconceive the whole gospel message. "Fear," as here employed is reverential awe. He who said, "God is love," emphasized that great truth with his own sacrifice. "Fear" in the sense of "to be afraid of" is foreign to the whole thought of Jesus as it relates to God. Divine approbation is all important. The peril from persecution is real, but is secondary. The paralysing peril is permanent estrangement from God. The one thing we are to fear with a holy and wholesome dread is, sin. The man drifting over the cataract may well be frightened as he contemplates the consequences of being cast into the seething flood below. The only fear appropriate as we contemplate God is an overwhelming awe as we contrast his holiness with our own imperfection. No man need be either intimidated or terrified as he stands face to face with God if Jesus Christ has become his advocate and friend.

THE FALLING SPARROW.

"Five sparrows sold for a farthing." How insignificant one little bird! "Yet not one falleth to the ground without the notice of your heavenly Father." God's interest in the infinitesimal is what is here portrayed. Nothing escapes the divine thought. Man megaphones his wisdom; God whispers his! The dew drop possesses all the wonders of the ocean. A sunbeam is as marvelous as the king of day." An emotion, an impulse shows the possibilities of an immortal soul. Nothing is unimportant that relates to human character. Personality is the total aggregation of all of its related parts. God is great enough to be cognizant of and interested in every feature and phase of every human life in the universe simultaneously. But this would not be enough to assure the soul. It is the "falling sparrow" which reveals the affectional concern of God. Every aspect and attitude of every individual is instantly present to the mind of God who at the same instant is affectionately and sympathetically moved. God's all-seeingness is equalled by his all-lovingness.

CONFESSION AND CONSUMMATION.

"Whosoever shall confess me." Here is the astounding word, "Me." In a striking sentence Jesus unveils his deity. He presents himself as the source and ground of all blessing. It is the most colossal claim which he could possibly have made. In any other than God it must be blasphemy. There is no alternative. He was either the greatest imposter the world has ever known or "————," the name so holy that every Jew feared to pronounce it. Language could not more definitely assist Jesus' estimate of himself and his mission. The confession enjoined is a declaration of faith in him as the Son of God, the Saviour of the World, together with personal acceptance. "Him will I confess?" What does this mean? Heavenly citizenship with knighthood conferred by Jesus. He pledges heaven itself to the soul that willingly and unwaveringly accepts and proclaims Jesus Christ as Lord of the heart. "He that denieth me before men shall be denied before the angel of God." There is no middle ground. The scene is a court scene. Jesus Christ can only be the advocate of those who "retain" him. What we are to understand is not a denial by Jesus, through enmity, but a necessary denial, just as light denies darkness, as love denies hate, as holiness denies iniquity, as virtue denies vice. It is the outward and public manifestation of a fact already existing. The scene presented is the stupendous scene of the great judgment beyond.

IRRETRIEVABLE LOSSES.

"Unto him that blasphemeth against the Holy Ghost." The most awe-filling of Christ's utterances is this. Is there then a line which once crossed becomes an impassable barrier? Is there a point from which there is no retreat? So it is plainly declared. Then what is it? It is the deliberate and final rejection of perfectly well known truth, God's love in Christ. It is a want on contempt for light of conscience and Revelation. It is unyielding and unchanging opposition to the known will of God, pressed upon the mind and conscience by the Holy Spirit. The loss is irretrievable and irreparable. The woe resultant is remediless. With what overwhelming solemnity Jesus gives that word to a lost world. It is a note of warning to apathy and indifferentism which is likely to drift beyond the point of possible return.

TOO BIG.

By Charles M. Sheldon.

During a recent revival in a western city one of the prominent business men was converted and in the first rush of his new enthusiasm he went to his minister and offered his services to do church work.

"Put me to work at something big" he said, "Here I have been all my life engaged in big enterprises in the money world. I want to do some big things in the religious world. So far I have used my time and energy in looking after my own affairs. Now I would like to do something big for the Lord."

"How big?" his minister asked.

"I do not care, the bigger the better."

The minister thoughtfully looked at the new convert.

"How would taking a class of ten year old boys in Sunday-school strike you?"

"What! ten year old boys in Sunday-school! but that is not a man's job."

"Perhaps you will find it is if you try. You said you wanted to do something big."

"I do; but teach a class of ten-year-olds! Do you think that's a big job?"

"Yes, I do. I do not know of anything bigger right now anywhere in the church, and you said you wanted a big thing to do."

The new convert felt discouraged. He answered:

"I cannot do that. It is out of the question. I want something bigger than that."

The minister laid a hand on his arm.

"My brother, are you sure you are big enough to do this? Do you think you know enough to teach a class of ten year old boys?"

"Know enough!" The business man's old-time habits asserted themselves. "I will take the class and I will show you!"

He began the next Sunday. The minister and the Sunday-school superintendent quietly watched him.

His class was in a constant uproar. The boys paid no attention to him. He had no control over them. The sweat stood out on his forehead and he passed three wretched Sundays. On the fourth he came into the minister's study just before the Sunday-school hour and broke down.

"I cannot do it, I do not know enough. It is too big a job for me. Give me something smaller until I have learned humility and the Christ spirit. I did not realize how big a thing it is to teach. I thought it was child's work. It is a man's work. Pray with me pastor, to make me humble enough to learn, for I am only a child in discipleship."

Some day that man will learn how to serve the Master he loves by teaching that class of boys, but he has learned his lesson and knows now that one of the biggest things in all the world is to teach boys the way of life.

STORY OF CHARLES LAMB.

Charles Lamb had a horror of being lectured. An overbearing head of a department in the East India house approached him one day, when Lamb was busily engaged with the Paul Pry question, "Pray, Mr. Lamb, what are you about?" "Forty next birthday," he replied. "I don't like your answer," said the man. "Nor I your question," was Lamb's rejoinder.

When the other fellow gets rich it's luck,
Just blundering luck that brings him gains;
But when we win it's a case of pluck
With intelligent effort and lots of brains.

"GENERAL WILLIAM BOOTH ENTERS HEAVEN."

(Banjo.)
Hallelujah! It was queer to see
Bull-necked convicts with that land make free!
Loons with bazoos blowing blare, blare, blare—
On, on, upward through the golden air.
Are you washed in the blood of the Lamb?

(Bass drums slower and softer.)
Booth died blind, and still by faith he trod,
Eyes still dazzled by the ways of God.
Booth led boldly and he looked the chief;
Eagle countenance in sharp relief,
Beard a-flying, air of high command
Unabated in that holy land.

(Flutes.)
Jesus came from out the Court-House door,
Stretched his hands above the passing poor.
Booth saw not, but led his queer ones there
Round and round the mighty Court-House square.
Yet in an instant all that blear review
Marched on spotless, clad in raiment new.
The lame was straightened, withered limbs uncurled,
And blind eyes opened on a new sweet world.

(Bass drums louder and faster.)
Drabs and vixens in a flash made whole!
Gone was the weasel-head, the snout, the jowl;
Sages and sibyls now, and athletes clean,
Rulers of empires and of forests green!

(Grand chorus—tambourines—all instruments in full blast.)
The hosts were sandalled and their wings were fire—
Are you washed in the blood of the Lamb?
But their noise played havoc with the angel-choir.
Are you washed in the blood of the Lamb?
Oh, shout Salvation! It was good to see
Kings and princes by the Lamb set free.
The banjos rattled, and the tambourines
Jing-jing-jingled in the hands of queens!

(Reverently sung—no instruments.)
And when Booth halted by the curb for prayer,
He saw his Master through the flag-filled air.
Christ came gently with a robe and crown
For Booth the soldier while the throng knelt down.
He saw King Jesus—they were face to face,
And he knelt a-weeping in that holy place.
Are you washed in the blood of the Lamb?

THE PROUD FARMER.

Into the acres of the newborn state
He poured his strength, and plowed his ancient name;
And, when the traders followed him, he stood
Towering above their furtive souls and tame.

That brow without a stain, that fearless eye
Oft left the passing stranger wondering
To find such knighthood in the sprawling land,
To see a democrat well-nigh a king.

He lived with liberal hand, with guests from far,
With talk and joke and fellowship to spare,—
Watching the wide world's life from sun to sun,
Lining his walls with books from everywhere.

He read by night, he built his world by day.
The farm and house of God to him were one.
For forty years he preached and plowed and wrought—
A statesman in the fields, who bent to none.

His plowmen-neighbors were as lords to him.
His was an ironside, democratic pride.
He served a rigid Christ, but served him well—
And, for a lifetime, saved the country side.

Here lie the dead, who gave the church their best
Under his fiery preaching of the word.
They sleep with him beneath the ragged grass.
The village withers, by his voice unstirred.
And though his tribe be scattered to the wind
From the Atlantic to the China sea,
Yet do they think of that bright lamp he burned
Of family worth and proud integrity.

And many a sturdy grandchild hears his name
In reverence spoken, till he feels akin
To all the lion-eyed who built the world—
And lion-dreams begin to burn within.

tained—is found in the case of the serious defection from the National Benevolent Association. Mrs. T. R. Ayars, of St. Louis, has succeeded in establishing a society bearing a name much like the original society, and making a rival and successful appeal to the churches and Sunday-schools for support. There is much confusion among the churches over the condition thus created. The philanthropy and devotion of Mrs. Ayars to the service of the orphan and the aged is a touching story. Of the effectiveness and beauty of her work no one has any doubt. Of the right and wrong involved in her defection from the original society we venture not the slightest judgment. But we do firmly declare that it is a scandal that two societies organized for the same service (apparently each having equal right to call itself a "recognized" society, save for the fact that one was in the field earlier than the other) should be appealing to the same churches for support.

Our present purpose in referring to these instances is not to discuss them but to call attention to the breakdown of the earlier attitude of individual loyalty to the societies. The seeds of division and perhaps of further disintegration, have found tolerant soil in our churches because this earlier exclusive loyalty has been rooted up.

It is probable that as independent self-controlling organizations the missionary and benevolent societies of the Disciples of Christ have reached their maximum growth.

If the sovereign churches would prevent their organized missionary enterprises falling into an anarchic condition by reason of multiple societies or agencies rivaling one another in performing the same function, they must take over the responsibility of guiding these enterprises themselves instead of farming them out to independent societies.

To say this is to say that there must be a General Convention of Churches of Christ, representative of the churches, through which the churches may act, a convention whose essential function is incomparably more important than to give "advice" to the societies.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO SATAN.

Can Satan have a Gospel? If Gospel is good news, undeniably there are men, and many of them, who would count it good news that sin brings with it no penalty, and that unrighteousness is safe. "Ye shall not surely die," was a pleasantly reassuring word to our first mother, and has soothed the conscience of many a man since. The illusion that somehow we can take fire into our bosom and not be burned, can handle pitch and keep clean, is very strong.

There was a large element of truth in what Satan promised Eve; that was what made the lie dangerous. And we have heard men say that Satan proved a true prophet; that Adam ate and did not die in that day, but lived to old age. But there was one man who never argued in that way, and that was Adam. He knew, and needed no apologist to show the error of his conviction, that in the very day of his sin, dying he died.

Men and women need just now to weigh in an even balance the Gospel of Satan and that of God. There is something to be said in favor of each of them. But the experience of the ages has tended strongly to show that Satan was wrong. Satan's creed is, first, that any restriction of desire is unreasonable; secondly that the knowledge and joy of sin are desirable; and thirdly that sin is sometimes safe. Say if you like, "Satan was right at every point: Adam ate, and found the fruit good; it made him wise; and he did not surely die." But the heart of the man who has adopted this creed as his own tells him that it is an infernal lie. The pity of it is that the whole world has not yet lived up to the truth of this discovery; for history teaches that the Gospel of Satan is a false and fatal doctrine. God deliver humanity from its threefold error.

The following letter explains itself:

Kansas City, Mo., Jan. 17, 1914.

Editor "The Conquest," Chicago.

Dear Sir:—What is the reason that I do not get The Conquest? I subscribed some weeks before the first issue was to appear but missed entirely the first two issues and the third one has made me so hungry for the others that I am venturing to write you for them. I think you have one of the snappiest, most up-to-date little sheets that comes my way, and it is not so little either. It contains a wealth of good stuff, and while I am a busy man and necessarily a hasty reader, I have taken time to go over your most recent number with exceptional care and it most certainly strikes my fancy. The thing I like about it is that it shows discrimination in the selection of material, and while of course you want it to be a newspaper, you are particular as to the kind of news you publish. It shows neither haste nor waste in its preparation. I am not only hoping but thoroughly predicting that your paper will find its place in present unoccupied or inadequately tilled fields of Christian journalism.

Very truly yours, E. E. Elliott, Sec'y.

The Supreme Need

By John R. Mott.

WHEN I made my first journey around the world I went home and wrote a book in which I laid great stress upon the need of an increase in the number of foreign missionaries. When I returned from my second tour I laid stress upon the need of a great army of native workers, sons and daughters of the soil. When I came back from my third extended journey to the East I was led to see that I had taken a very superficial view. What we need is not so much an increase in the number of missionaries, not so much a vast army of native workers; what we need is the discovery of the hiding of God's power and the secret of the releasing of that power. We need more workers through whom God shall have His opportunity. Here and there He is accomplishing through one worker what many workers could not accomplish where the hiding of His power is not discovered.

Since then I have found the same thing exemplified all over the home field. God has His ways, and they are not always our ways. One of the most striking passages in the Old Testament is the one representing God's eye searching up and down the world trying to find a man whose heart is right toward Him, that He might show His power through that man. The discovery of that secret is a great thing needed all over the world today in our Christian enterprises, the discovery of the secret which enables God to find the object of His quest, that He may realize His consuming desire and show Himself strong.

The Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse is fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System, published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, the Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Wings and Hands

The hand and the wing are anatomically the same organ. Bone for bone, muscle for muscle, either developed or in rudiment, they stand related in comparative anatomy. Nature has few types, and these few she varies according to her needs. The paw of a lion, the flipper of a whale, the wing of a bird and the hand of a man are all comparable in bone, muscle, artery and nerve. The wing and the hand are the special developments of a single creative type common to the life of all mammals.

The Book of Psalms contains two interesting prayers, "Oh that I had wings like a dove!" and "Yea, the work of our hands, establish thou it." Take your choice between the two.

These two prayers are antithetic. The first belongs to a stormy period in the life of David; the second reflects the experience of a solemn hour at the end of the life of Moses. The first cries out in the agony of earth's daily sorrow and care; the second has passed those sorrows and contemplates a completed life, whose net results seem small and transitory. The thought of the first is the awful reality and intensity of life's problem from which the burdened soul would fain escape; the second contemplates the escape from life as a thing so certain, so relentless, that life itself cut short by death, seems almost an illusion and a fleeting disappointment.

Each of these prayers expresses its thought concretely in the figurative use of physical organs. One is a prayer for wings; the other has to do with hands and that which hands accomplished.

Hands and wings are mutually exclusive. The anatomy of angels as given in the Bible plainly shows that some of them had both hands and wings—as, for instance, in the visions of Ezekiel and in the Apocalypse of John. But we are not yet angels, and we have had our choice, physiologically speaking, between hands and wings, and the choice which created our natural order of beings reached its development by the preference of hands.

The hand is a hammer, a vise, a wrench, a lever; it is itself the most wonderful of tools. And it can hold the sword or plow or pen; it can hurl the javelin or the bomb. It is far more wonderful than a wing.

Upon the whole it is much the better for us to have hands than wings. The wing is good to fly away with, but flying away is not good for people. We have quite sufficient means of escape from duty as it is. Wings first appeared long before hands, and in an age when there was more occasion for flight than for labor. But the world has need for hands now; for its wings it can wait.

There has been no age in which men have not dreamed of the use of wings in transportation. The development of hands gives man only half the transporting power which belongs to the quadruped or the bird. Hence man has invested his imagination with the feet of a horse and made of himself in thought a Centaur; or he has taken to himself wings in his imagination with the misguided notion that these were his chief lack in the making of an angel.

But Daedalus, Icarus and Darius Green all proved the dangers which come to men from the attempt to construct wings. The older inventors, you remember, flew so near to the sun that their wax wings melted and Darius Green found his clumsy leather affair of service only in the temptation which it brought to him to make a perilous leap resulting in an ignominious tumble into the barnyard. Andree, who made wings of silk to fly over the North Pole, found the deadly cold as fatal as of yore his predecessors found the melting heat. But, of this we are certain, if mankind ever secures wings on earth, he must make them with his hands.

We are entitled to pray to God to establish the work of our hands, because God also works. God has hands as well as wings. The language of the Bible concerning the bodily parts of God are all figurative, but God's attributes include those associated in our minds with the labor of hands. Indeed, we are God's hands; for we are the Body of Christ.

With a pair of wings we might fly over the pyramids, but it required hands to build them. Our flight would soon be over, and perhaps we should tumble in the sand on the other side, or fall into the mud of the Nile. But the pyramids, the work of human hands, abide through the long ages, and many a wing will break against them and leave them there. Despise not the hand nor long for the wing. Hands are the more wonderful.

It is not unnatural for the Christian to sigh for rest and long for surcease from labor, but it is not well that he should be too easily gratified. God has placed us here to work and commanded us to "do with our might whatever our hands find to do." The prayer for wings is the prayer of fatigue and despondency, but the prayer of courage and confident faith is "establish the work of our hands!"

The Episcopalian Church and Unity

Its Contribution to the Cause of Christian Union Considered. A Sermon Preached at First Church, Louisville, Ky., January 25, 1914.

BY E. L. POWELL.

I READ the twenty-first verse of the seventeenth chapter of John's Gospel: "That they all may be one as Thou, Father, art in me, and I in Thee; that they also may be one in us, that the world may believe that Thou hast sent me."

For 600 years the church established on the day of Pentecost under the auspices of heaven, in the midst of accessories altogether radiant and divine, exemplified before the world the meaning and power of an apostolic and united society of souls having no authority other than that of the risen Lord, knowing no ordinances other than those of his appointment, rejoicing in a fellowship of free souls, entering largely with advancing Christian experience into the wider reaches and spaces which belong to unseen realities.

THE GREAT SCHISM.

Then comes the great schism, the united church is broken. It is divided into the East and the West, the Roman Catholic Church and the Greek Catholic Church. You know the story. It was in the sixteenth century following the great schism that Luther nailed his thesis to the church door at Wittenberg that Protestantism was born, and with Protestantism came liberty, democracy, the renaissance, the opening up of a new world of thought and endeavor.

Unfortunately, out of Protestantism have come almost innumerable divisions. Denominations, sects, cults have grown fast and faster until today in these opening years of the twentieth century it seems as though the churches are going to destroy the church. So unfortunate and distressing is our predicament that we are unable to point anywhere to a visible society subject to the will of Christ concerning which it may be said that it has the elements of apostolicity, catholicity and unity. We try to justify our divided state, our unhappy divisions, by referring to the invisible church, a church not organized in our visible organizations, but dwelling among the clouds, and realizing for practical ends and purposes in the clouds the meaning and ministry and mission of a visible, united society of Jesus Christ.

PLEA FOR CHRISTIAN UNION.

It is certainly not as a matter of boast, but simply the recognition of the demands of historic justice, that the statement is here made that the body of people known as the Disciples of Christ, popularly called the Christian church, was the first organization after long and weary centuries of a divided Christendom to lift its voice and prayer in favor of a return to the primitive simplicity of faith and ordinances and life associated with the apostolic church. This people came into existence with the distinct and avowed aim to put forth every effort to effect a Christian union through a restoration of primitive faith, of primitive ordinances, of primitive life.

Within the last fifty years from every denomination has come a passionate plea for Christian unity, and among them all there has been no clearer, sincerer or sweeter voice than that which has come from the historic and splendid communion known here in America as the Protestant Episcopal Church.

Particularly within the last decade has the Episcopal Church come into the very forefront of those who are pleading for a genuine, organic, visible, created union with the people of God. You are familiar with its Lambeth utterances and the platform of Christian union laid down by this memorable assembly. Outside the Disciples of Christ no other communion than the Episcopal communion has come before the Christian world with a concrete and definite basis of Christian union. One of the articles of that Lambeth basis of Christian union offered to the Christian world, was in its historic episcopate. And yet there has come in these very recent years no dogmatic insistence upon so dear an article as is the historic episcopate with its implied dogma of Episcopal succession. From the High Church of Oxford there comes, through one of the most eminent scholars of the Anglican communion, this statement: "In the strictest and most traditional form the theory of an original Episcopal succession has perhaps broken down; or, again, we are debarred from considering the form of a ministry as constituted and determined for all time by an actual legislation proceeding from our Lord's own lips."

Here is the spirit not of compromise but of loving sacrifice of anything and everything which is not a part of essential Christianity. A long step toward Christian union has been made when such a religious body manifests such a Christian spirit, showing itself to be seeking honestly and sincerely only that which is essential to the Christianity of church.

UNITY FOUNDATION ESTABLISHED.

I said just now that the Disciples of Christ 100 years and more ago were the first people to come before the divided Christian world with a definite platform for Christian union, and I think one of the most graceful and beautiful things which has been done in recent years is that which has been done by the Christian Unity Foundation, established unofficially by the Episcopal Church in America. The very first literature issued by that distinguished body is the little monograph entitled, "Study No. 1, Disciples of Christ." No fairer, no more admirable presentation of history and faith of this religious body has ever been given to the world, and in this little book is quoted the utterance of Thomas Campbell, setting forth the reason of our existence as a religious body, and the whole aim and meaning and justification of our existence as a religious body. In the document herein quoted, Mr. Campbell declares that division among Christians is "anti-Christian," as it destroys the visible unity of the body of Christ, as if he were divided against himself, excluding and excommunicating a part of himself. It is anti-scriptural, as being strictly prohibited by his sovereign authority, a direct violation of his express command. It is anti-natural, as it excites Christians to condemn, to hate, and oppose one another, who are bound by the highest and most endeavoring obligations to love each other as brethren, even as Christ loved them. In a word, it is productive of confusion and of every evil work.

SAYS UNION IS NOT A DREAM.

Now, my friends, in the brief time we are to consider this tremendously important subject I wish you to keep your mind upon one thing. In order to obtain Christian union, which is not a dream, but toward the realization of which we are coming fast and faster, there are certain great electric words ever to be kept in mind. These words are "authority, liberty, democracy."

The whole problem might be stated as involving the question of authority.

What shall be the basis of Christian union? If that basis shall be doctrinal who shall write the creed? If that basis shall be ritual who shall determine the ordinances? If that basis shall be institutional who shall appoint priest and presbyter and who shall proscribe and prescribe the limitations of the powers of these officials? What is the source of authority in determining God's will through Jesus Christ concerning that which is essential Christianity or concerning that which is structural Christianity?

The whole battle between Romanism and Protestantism involves the consideration of the question of authority. Christian union cannot be effected by any compromise, cannot be effected by any surrender of liberty of conscience, cannot be effected by other than the recognition, which is democratic, of the right of every free soul to immediate access to God and to the will of God.

THREE POSSIBLE COURSES.

There are only three possible courses open to us in our pursuit of Christian union. Either an infallible church is the source of authority, or an infallible book is the source of authority, or an infallible Christ is the source of authority. Shall we find an infallible church that can speak the infallible word, and that shall guarantee its infallible deliverance, to be accepted through imperfect souls infallibly? You know that the position of the Roman Catholic Church, unquestionably the mother church, is that through an infallibly constituted external authority the church must be preserved in unity and power. The Roman Catholic Church has declared the head of that church to be infallible, recognizing the logical necessity of an infallible head, that proceeding from that infallible head may be infallible laws, or to be accepted as such by its constituency. What is the result? We have union; we have the spirit of union, which is based upon the strong hand of external authority. We have union without liberty; that is to say, the right of private interpretation is denied. We have union without democracy for the constituency; the consent of the governed is not given. It is not a question in which the individual or the collective body is concerned. No more splendid example of federated unity is in the world today than the Roman Catholic Church. The will of one man is law, and reverence to that constituted authority is willingly given and there is a willing subjection to that law.

Shall we have an infallible book as the source of authority?

RIGHT OF PRIVATE INTERPRETATION.

Protestantism's motto is: The Bible, the religion of Protestants. Chillingworth, long before Alexander Campbell gave forth the dictum, declared, where the Bible speaks we speak, where the Bible is silent we are silent. Protestantism accepts the Bible as an inspired and an infallible book.

Furthermore, the fundamental principle of Protestantism is the right of private interpretation, the right of individual conscience, and the democratic privilege of equality before God and his will, with no priest or presbyter or convocation to intervene between those inherent and inalienable rights of every soul to immediate access to the presence of God. Well, can you get Christian union out of that proposition? Not unless you can have infallible interpretations of an infallible book. Not unless you can have infallible interpretations of those interpretations of an infallible book.

The whole history of a divided Protestant Christianity is the history of interpretation of an infallible book. All theologists claim to find their source and inspiration in the Bible. All creeds, whether Calvinistic or Armenian, claim to have been derived directly from the Bible. That which has divided us has not been questions that are essential to Christian faith, but they have been questions of interpretation leading us into the realm of metaphysics and subtle theology, bringing us into infinities where the mental atmosphere is so rare that breathing becomes an impossibility for the ordinary man.

"INFALLIBLE CHURCH IMPOSSIBLE."

Shall we sacrifice the right of private interpretation, which is almost the fundamental right of Protestantism, for the sake of securing through supposedly infallible interpreters a basis of Christian union? Very well. We shall never find Christian union in the realm of an infallible church, for it has never existed. It can never exist. The primitive church was not an infallible church; it was made up of fallible men and women, and out of fallible men and women you cannot bring infallibility. We cannot find a basis of union in the realm of constituted legal authority claiming for itself the exclusive privilege of laying down infallible propositions upon which the church shall stand.

A certain kind of union, forced union, mechanical union, is the necessary result. Nor can we find the basis of union through the interpretations of an infallible book, for the whole history of persecution, the whole history of creed denomination, the whole history of divisions associated with theologies and creeds, is the record of history. Protestantism has been dividing and redividing as a result of claiming an impossibility, that a council or a company of men can write for us a creed from the infallible book which shall be binding upon the reason and conscience and faith of free souls.

What then? The solution of this problem is in an infallible person, and don't you know that Romanism has recognized that truth in crediting to the Pope, by action of Council, infallibility? The Roman Catholic Church has, as its claim, at least, because it is a logical necessity, an infallible Pope, an infallible head.

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM.

I say that an infallible Christ is the logical necessity in the solution of this problem of Christian union. In him we have authority, liberty, democracy. In him we have an authority not embraced from without, but self-imposed, and, therefore, consistent with liberty of conscience, since that authority is freely chosen on the part of each individual who swears allegiance to the lordship and divinity of our Lord. In him we have an authority that is to be reconciled and harmonized, and is reconciled and harmonized with democracy, for there is neither male nor female, neither Jew nor Gentile, neither Greek nor barbarian nor Scythian, but we are all one in our privileges and in our rights in Jesus Christ. Concerning this authority, there is no question anywhere in any part of a divided Christian world. Concerning the interpretation of this authority there is no question. The Roman Catholic and Protestant and all of the divisions of Protestantism say with full accord and with one voice of adoration and praise:

"No other lord but Thee we will know, no other tongue but Thine confess."

Even the Papacy is but representative of that clearly acknowledged and owned invisible and spiritual authority vested in Jesus Christ by virtue of his character, by virtue of his life and ministry and teachings and death and burial and resurrection and enthronement.

CREED OF CHRIST.

What ordinances shall we have? His ordinances and none other. What ministry shall we have? Those of his appointment, and none other. What creed shall we have? His creed, and none other, and that creed as it was approved by him when it was announced in Caesarea of Philippi by his impulsive Disciple, is the creed of Christendom out of which has come the Apostle's Creed and the Nicene Creed and all the other creeds.

Simon Peter said, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." That is enough. We have no right to ask that men shall do the impossible thing, namely, give the consent of their intelligence to propositions in the same way as to bring about a uniform acceptance of those propositions on the part of all. It has never been done. Faith in a person, faith in that person as absolute lord over will and heart and conscience and life and faith and all. On the Mount of Transfiguration there appeared Moses and Elijah, and a bright cloud overshadowed these two representatives of the old dispensation together with the Christ whose body gave forth the sheen of the spiritual body which he now wears, and there came a voice from his most excellent glory saying, "This is my beloved Son, in him I am well pleased, hear ye him." You are not to hear Moses save as Moses represents Christ, you are not to hear Elijah save as Elijah represents Christ, you are not to hear the modern voices of authority save as those modern voices of authority represent Christ.

TO UNION THROUGH CHRIST.

Only one can speak with authority over my conscience, because when he speaks conscience immediately, instinctively, intuitively answers, "Thou hast spoken the truth," and the marvelous thing about our Christian religion is the intuitive and immediate acceptance, without any constraint or restraint, of any word that has ever fallen from the lips of the Son of God. We cannot deny that authority. When one stands before a masterpiece, if there be any artistic sense in him whatever, he is dominated by it, and says: "In the world of art evermore you shall be supreme," and when one stands in the presence of Christ, with a sensitiveness of soul seeking to know his will concerning him, there is immediate recognition and there comes from him the cry which issued from Thomas, the old doubting Thomas, when doubt passes into adoration, "My Lord and my God!"

One word more and I have done. We shall come to Christian union by way of Christ, and that way is the way of devotion and adoration and love. It can never be obtained through controversial methods. We are all one in our hymnol-

ogy. We sing from Faber, the Catholic, and from Wesley, the Methodist, and from Cardinal Newman, the Catholic. Our classics are not denominationalized, and we care not. Through the sweet ministry of worship and of prayer and of praise we get above all the noises and the tumults and the voices and the distractions, and we are listening to the song of the angels.

Denominationalism is provincialism. Denominationalism means the surrender of a given denomination's right to claim all of truth which any given religious body logically may possess. I sometimes think that under such influences and under such spirit as that brought to us in the memorable extract of the speech of Abraham Lincoln, the old and staggering and blundering divided church shall come back into her splendid inheritance of the centuries agone. You remember that Abraham Lincoln said in that marvelous and inspired oration of three minutes, 'The mystic chords of memory stretching from every battlefield and patriot's grave to every living heart and hearthstone throughout this broad land of ours shall yet swell the chorus of a union when those chords are touched, as surely they will be, by the better angels of our nature.'

And I believe that when the great revival comes, and the memory of the church goes back to her martyrs and to those who have laid down their lives for their faith in him, that the better nature of the church under these sweet memories and inspirations will be touched by the Holy Spirit, and that through some little thing hardly considered now in our logical programme, the broken church shall pull herself together, and show her giant strength, and once again go forth as a strong man to run a race, bright as the sun, glorious as the moon and terrible as an army with banners.

On Looking the Orator

Some Observations and Meditations on the Subtle Art of Oratory.

BY EDGAR DeWITT JONES.

TO "look the part" is more than half the battle, in certain callings, notably that of oratory. Literary folks are not necessarily orators but all orators are, or are supposed to be, literary. I recall a phrase from the text book of English I studied as a lad. The phrase was, "An oration is the very flower of literature." It occurs to me now that it would be more accurate to say that "Some orations are the very flowers of literature," and perhaps add that "these are flowers all right, but not literature."

But to the matter at hand. What is the popular conception of looking the orator's part? The answer is easy. Here is a composite picture of the popular orator made up of detached phrases, describing him: "Tall and broad-shouldered," of "commanding presence," "piercing dark eyes," "long wavy hair," (preferably dark)' a "large mouth with mobile lips," an "aquiline nose," a "strong chin," and "a musical, resonant voice." Of course it is a trifle difficult to visualize a voice and yet in the orator's case the voice seems an actual part of his platform appearance. Therefore we will let the voice remain as part of this composite picture of the typical orator who "looks the part." So much for his native characteristics, now for his attire.

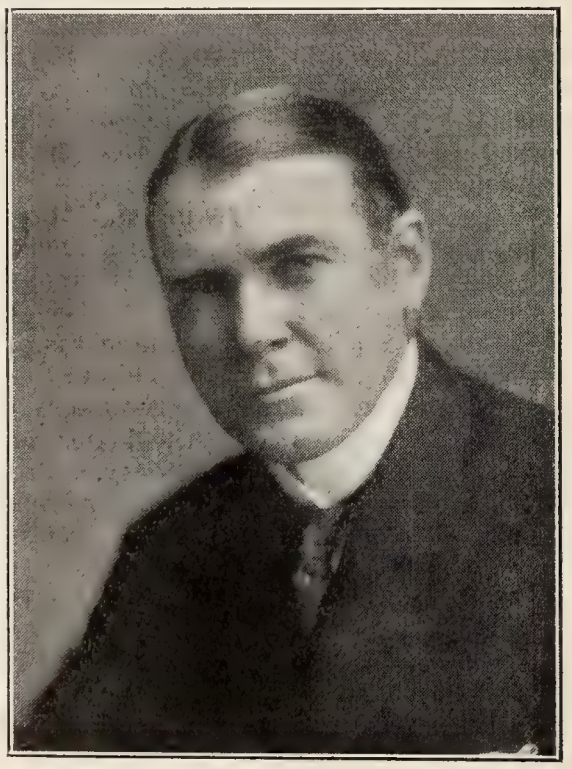
"THE ORATOR OF THE DAY."

He must wear "conventional black" coat with skirts or tails, double-breasted frock or "Prince Albert," "low cut vest or waistcoat showing a wide expanse of linen," a black or white, preferably "black string tie," dark or finely striped trousers, patent leather or well polished shoes, a "wide-brimmed" soft "slouch hat." And there he is—"The Orator of the Day."

Now there is a certain famous contemporaneous American statesman, an outstanding figure, and the most conspicuous orator of our times, who fulfills so well the requirements of this composite picture as to have actually sat for it. I refer, of course, to Mr. Secretary Bryan. Read the above description again and see how well he fulfills it. His one departure from the popular ideal is a sartorial lapse, if lapse it may be called, and is the not serious one of preferring a sack coat on the Chautauqua circuit to the conventional sort with tails.

Mr. Bryan's strong hold on popular favor is undoubtedly due in a large part to his fitting so perfectly into the popular ideal of the great orator that he is,

There have been effective public speakers both in English and American public life who did not look the part but they are not many, nor were they of the first order or rank in oratory. In every instance their physical presence which was "against them" was offset, if not compensated for, by intellectual gifts of the highest order or wonderfully melodious voices, or both.



Rev. Edgar DeWitt Jones.

For a public speaker to be written up or down as "a little man" is to doom him to an oratorical hell in the minds of the populace.

A REFERENCE TO WENDELL PHILLIPS.

In his lecture on Daniel O'Connell, Wendell Phillips refers to the great orator's magnificent presence and remarking upon the physical advantage of a public speaker cites an interesting incident in Mr. Webster's life told him by James Russell Lowell. A year or two before his death Mr. Webster returned home from Washington and went down to Faneuil Hall to protest against the dissolution of the Whig party. Drawing himself up to his loftiest proportions, his brow clothed with thunder, before the listening thousands he said, "Well, gentlemen, I am a Whig, a Massachusetts Whig, a Faneuil Hall Whig, a Revolutionary Whig, a constitutional Whig. If you break the Whig party, sir, where am I to go to?"

"And," said Lowell in telling Mr. Phillips of the incident, "we held our breath, thinking where he could go. If he had been five feet three, we should have said, 'Who cares where you go?'"

Yet there have been and are eloquent men of small stature. Some of our noted orators have been short and "thick set" like Stephen A. Douglas, or even Henry Ward Beecher. Some have been tall and thin like Lincoln or John James Ingalls. A few lame like Thaddeus Stevens, or Senator Daniel of Virginia; at least one puny and a dwarf like the brilliant Alexander Stephens. But to call the roll of the great orators is to summons a company of men who looked every inch the part. In America, Webster, Everett, Clay and Ingersoll for example. In Ireland, O'Connell; in England, Gladstone, to mention but a few of the illustrious company. When these men arose to speak their very appearances were vocal, electric and eloquent.

While the public speaker of all men is greatly blessed and benefited if he looks the part, of all men he is most miserable if he only looks the part and cannot speak up to the part he looks.

AN ILLUSTRATION FROM REAL LIFE.

I know of two preachers who in personal appearance are as unlike as a towering oak is unlike a crabapple tree. One of these preachers is a noble specimen of physical manhood. He has a large, well-developed frame, is over six feet tall, has a great open face, an orator's mouth, a good voice and an abundance of dark hair which he wears long. When this man stands up to preach he raises your expectations to the stars and after he has spoken for fifteen minutes he has (if you are thoughtful) dropped your expectations as low as the grave.

The other preacher is slight and insignificant of build. He has a "sandy" mustache, and a freckled yellowish complexion. His eyes are a faded blue and his hair, what there is of it, is a sunburnt sorrel variety. Moreover, he is careless of his attire and his shoes are often unblacked and never highly polished. When this man gets up to preach to a strange audience his first appearance sends a chill of disappointment and sometimes even revulsion over the faces of the people. In ten minutes that man has his audience old and young, learned and unlearned, white and black (if there chance to be any of the latter present) for him, with him, and if he remains after the service for congratulations, literally on him.

When I first saw and heard these two men it occurred to me that they could form a partnership that might prove mutually helpful and profitable. I said to myself, and possibly to a few intimate friends, that these two ministers ought to take the pastorate of a church jointly and on Sundays go into the pulpit together. The congregation then could look at the one man and listen to the other. But when I came to know these men better I saw the futility of such an arrangement, for when the big man got up to speak he dwindled physically until along about his "fifthly" he was actually dwarfish; while the other man seemed to grow taller as he spoke and ere he finished, his stature actually grew impressive in the flood of his eloquent speech and the great fervor of his passionate delivery.

In oratory as in everything else it is better not to seem and to be than to seem and not to be.

And yet after all allowances have been made and exceptions accounted for it still remains an indisputable fact that nowhere else does an impressive and commanding presence or the lack of it mean so much as in the realm of public speaking.

Concerning Conditions in China

A Letter Written From Luchowfu, November 28, 1913.

BY JUSTIN E. BROWN.

NINE weeks today since we came to anchor in Chinese waters and eight weeks since we landed in our station here. I did not intend to let all these weeks go by without writing at least briefly of conditions as they impress us on our first return. It seems to be one of those cases of willing spirit and weak flesh. I can only plead in defense time crowded full with getting our home affairs settled and our work started anew. These weeks have been the more strenuous because of unsettled conditions and delays in getting things done. This is a time of reconstruction in our work generally. There was first the redivision, in view of our return, of the evangelistic and school work. Then the old medical man, Doctor Buchart, is turning his work here over to Doctor Wakefield and going to Nanking to take up work in the Union Medical College, and the change involves somewhat of a shaking up not only in the medical work but in other lines as well. Finally we are now preparing to start work on our new church. We have all these years gotten along as best we could with no church home, using for that purpose the hospital clinic room and the street chapel at the far end of town. It certainly is a joy to realize we are really to have this building after all these years. But the task of construction is a big one seeing we have to be our own superintendent and perhaps our own contractor. Fortunately one of our number, Mr. Baird, is somewhat experienced in building matters which makes both for an earlier task and better results. Then the completion of the church will mean practically the opening of many lines of new work and readjustment of the old. So we are now in a stage of transition.

CONDITION OF STATE AFFAIRS.

Unfortunately this same condition holds true in affairs of state. This was to be expected, indeed was inevitable in a measure. We left China two years ago in the midst of a revolution that promised to sweep out not only the Manchu dynasty but with it the imperial form of government and most of those things that characterized the old China. Lofty sentiments and brave words abounded till one was almost led to hope that old things were really passing away and that we might return from furlough to find a new China whose foundations were laid in righteousness. What we did find was the country in the throes of another revolution far more costly in blood and treasure than the first and it would seem, almost for no cause but selfish ambition and the hope of plunder. Shameless graft and a conscienceless disregard for the wishes or welfare of the people have as a rule characterized the leaders on both sides. The government party has a record perhaps a little less lurid but certainly not one to boast of. Sun Yat Sen, the people's idol and hope, has shown himself at best to be only a superficial and impractical agitator, while at the worst he may be proved to be in a class with the most selfish and corrupt of grafters. And Yuan Shih Kai, whatever his ability and virtues is evidently not a believer in a republican form of government. He has not hesitated to have men executed without any form of trial, and frequently it seems with no other case against them than that they stood in the way of his plans. He supplied his enemies with abundant ammunition with which to work up a revolt against "the tyrant Yuan" and they had the sympathy probably of a majority of the whole population and almost unanimously of the southern provinces. Had these leaders been honest and capable, the result might have issued very differently. Being, as they were, interested only in securing for themselves the largest possible amount of loot, they of course very quickly made shipwreck of their cause.

"WILDERNESS WANDERINGS AHEAD."

China is evidently not to escape her wilderness wanderings. This is the more tragic because, as of old, the only obstacle to immediate entrance into the promised land is the faithlessness of her people. There is no lack of able leaders nor of enlightenment as to the course that ought to be followed. The fatal lack is simply that of a willingness on the part of the leaders to seek first the welfare of the whole people rather than the gratification of their own selfish ends. It is pathetic to talk with men in whose hearts burn the fires of a true patriotism but whose attitude toward the future is one of utter hopelessness. Their idols have fallen; and they believe those in power to be no less selfish but only more successful in their dishonesty. They expect Yuan Shih Kai to complete the subversion of the republic by making himself dictator if not emperor. Then they foresee a period of civil strife to be ended by the parceling out of the country among the foreign powers.

THE FUTURE HOPE.

But we believe the future is not utterly dark and that its hope is in these very heartbroken patriots, men be it said who have for the most part openly espoused the cause of Christianity. They are still too few to save the present, but their very defeats are multiplying their numbers and training them for final victory. We do not anticipate the division of the country among the powers partly because of their jealousy of each other, but more especially because of our faith in Him who still reigns over the nations. We believe He has preserved this nation thus far for a purpose and we are assured that purpose is not now to be defeated.

Yuan Shih Kai is the man of the hour. It is given him to be the instrument for putting China on the road to becoming the great nation of the future. If he proves true to his trust, history will forgive his iron hand and autocratic methods. We have not wholly lost faith in him. Why, to quote his own words, should he choose to be a Napoleon when he can be a Washington? We trust he understands what he says. If he does not then he must utterly perish but God will raise up another worthier leader to deliver His people of the Middle Kingdom. Meanwhile thoughtful men are coming more and more to realize that China's only hope is in Christianity. May His people be willing in this the day of His power. And we rejoice more gratefully day by day that we are privileged to be fellow-workers with our God in this great land at this crucial time.

Joy Cometh in the Morning

BY IDA WITHERS HARRISON.

The sun rose up at break of day,
  And called to the sad mists lurking low,
"Come up from the marsh lands chill and gray,
  And bathe in the morning's warmth and glow."
And the wan mists rose in a dark array,
But at touch of the sun beams, they melted away.

Despair and pain through the long, drear night
  Lay heavy on her aching heart,
Till her faith in God rose clear and bright,
  And bade the evil ones depart.
Then the prisoned sorrows took their flight,
And passed like mists in the morning's light.

Henry Ford, of Detroit, Interviewed

He Shows Himself to Be the Ideal Philanthropist, In That He Provides for the Welfare and Comfort of His Employes.

HENRY Ford, of Detroit, who early in January announced he would set aside $10,000,000 of the company's anticipated earnings of the current year for the benefit of the 15,000 employes of his big factory, is to perpetuate the gift after death.

The $10,000,000 profit-sharing project, which many observers believed was but an experiment and as such would be ephemeral, is merely the basis of a broad and idealistic scheme by which Mr. Ford's working men and working women may in the far as well as near future reap the blessings of this man's good will.

USE OF MR. FORD'S MONEY AFTER DEATH.

"And what are you to do with your money—I mean after you die?" Mr. Ford was asked a few days ago in his Detroit office, by a Chicago Record Herald Correspondent.

"Why, I shall devote it, most of it, to perpetuating this plan," he replied simply and without any suggestion of dramatics.

"Do you mean, then, that this profit-sharing idea is to develop and that your millions will virtually go to factory employes?"

"Why not?" he asked in his quiet, gentle way. "Why not? Could one do better with his money"

"How much will you give them?"

"All that is needed."

"How much did you net last year from your business?"

"I think my dividends were somewhere between $5,000,000 and $6,000,000."

"But the company earned about $20,000,000."

"Yes, I believe so."

"You will have many millions then to turn back into the hands of those who today, and who will tomorrow, fashion the machines which are the product of your factory?"

"I hope so; that's all money is worth, the good it can do for others."

"I have no religion in the accepted sense," Mr. Ford replied, in answer to an inquiry concerning his church affiliations. "That is, I subscribe to no special creed. I believe in the religion of kindness and I think if our wealthy men would not cling to their money so tightly there would be more happiness in the world. And, say, do you know that a lot of fellows who are doing very little now as manufacturers could achieve something by specializing in their business?"

Apparently specialization in business was a hobby and was taking momentary precedence of religion.

"Why, suppose one manufacturer would specialize in these window tacks," he picked up a handful of small brass tacks which happened to lie on the sill, "he could sell tacks by carloads and make a fortune. Now he makes a few tacks, a little of something else, and so on. I think specialization is the answer to a lot of commercial queries."

THE QUESTION OF RELIGION.

"And religion?"

"Oh, I'm interested in humanity. That is where my thoughts are most."

"Did your interest in humanity in the broad aspect or your interest in Ford employes in the restricted sense influence you to share your profits with your working people?"

He considered this a moment.

"My interest in humanity at large, I should say," he replied in a low, measured voice. "One is related to the other. I want to see the man with wife and children in that stratum of society where there has been pinching and suffering, I want to see him employed at profitable wages, getting a good income, working, happy, contented. My thought of what is best in this world is good will toward one's fellowmen."

"You say you believe in a hereafter?"

"Yes, I do. It's an old saying one cannot take wealth or anything material away with him when he dies. Well, what may one expect after death and with one's passing? I feel that the spirit of good will is the one and only one thing that one can take away. I think that good will is the force or the feeling or the spirit that creates for each of us our heaven in the world beyond the grave. I can't see what else can or does."

"Do you believe in heredity?"

"No, not in the accepted sense," Mr. Ford came back with much seriousness. "I think one's past, one's life some time or other in centuries gone, have much to do with his present-day character and with his work and his success. But I do not think that heredity shapes our course as do many students."

He added that he believed each mortal is born perfectly normal and at the start each has the same chance. Later, the influences to which he referred assert themselves.

A THEORY OF INCARNATION.

"I suppose that is what one might call reincarnation or theosophy and I've been thinking along that line for a long time," he continued. "I picked up one of Maeterlinck's books the other night and it strengthened some of my budding convictions. Now, in my case, I have not inherited a liking for the problem of locomotion or mechanics from my parents, who were not interested in these matters, but in farming. Nor were my ancestors so inclined as far as I know. Possibly some one a long time ago transmitted to me this particular faculty. I cannot account for it in any other way, for this desire to invent a power propelled vehicle has been with me ever since I was a little fellow."

And he tacked this on for good measure: "Much of the success or the failure in anyone's life depends on hitting the right thing or the right calling. A man out of place cannot succeed."

Considering Some Problems Raised By a Recent Newspaper Editorial.

BY MARK WAYNE WILLIAMS.

JOHN Gallagher, a Milwaukee publican, is dead. He was a good husband and father, an upright citizen, a general friend, a sincere churchman (Catholic), a helper of the poor. In his business he was law-abiding, orderly, honorable, and an enforcer of respectability and sobriety. Therefore, says my newspaper editorial, he shows how the saloon business can be run. He is the redeemer of his trade, just now in sad need of redemption. For everybody, according to a cartoon in the Saturday Evening Post, is kicking the booze. This raises some interesting problems. Can any business be successful under modern competition and be altogether good—no chicane, no cheating, no illegality, no evasion? Social conscience on these matters varies in different countries and times. What is the difference between a good business and a bad business? Big business with interlocking directorates, has been under the ban for some time. Some decades ago the saloon was respectable and parsons used to be publicans. The lottery was once quite fashionable. Piracy and the White Slave traffic had courtly patrons. The theater was once disreputable, but has now acquired some prestige. Murder in Italy was formerly practiced by the best families.

Good men often are found in bad business; bad men in good business. Yet there is a general gravitation of bad men to illegal, base, and degrading occupation. "Where the carcass is, there will the vultures be gathered."

BIG MAN AT BASE TRADE.

Sometimes an atavistic conscience will allow a big-hearted, right-living man to work at a base trade. Far from ennobling the trade, he rather lures to depravity by giving the air of honesty to corruption. Rotten apples have no ill fragrance. Saloonkeepers are more open-handed to their customers than drapers, and why? Because of a serene assurance that their customers will come back.

Reform bad business? First read De Quincy's "Murder as a Fine Art." Art cannot cover debauchery, nor good personal character justify economic spoliation or social demoralization. I raise no monument, therefore, either to Jay Gould or Adolphus Busch.

Rockefeller Makes Gift.

Mr. John D. Rockefeller proposes to add twenty-five percent to any amount contributed by the Baptists of the state of New York for state missions, up to $60,000; that is, adding $15,000 to $60,000, making the entire amount put at the disposal of the New York Baptist Missionary Convention $75,000 per year.

What Christ and Manhood Want

An Appeal for the Gospel of Service.

WILFRED T. GRENFELL, IN THE CONTINENT.

THIS is an age of awakening intellect. Even down here in Labrador men are waking up and refusing to submit to propositions and conditions they once bowed beneath. It is an age of suspicion, with capital and labor governed and governing. It is an age of accumulated speed in evolution and the remedy that is to reach home and overwhelm opposition must be adapted accordingly. Men listen to what the parson or leader of any kind says; they criticise more and more what the parson does.

"HE DOES T'INGS."

A small sailboat has just gone by as I write. It has a ten-horsepower kerosene engine, and is constantly cruising from place to place along this rough and lonely coast. The grimy-looking individual in overalls driving her is the parson. He cannot afford a yacht's crew; and the comments on him are: "There be somet'ing to dat parson—he does t'ings." Of course he does not escape criticism; there are still a few unco' guid who prefer a white collar to a horny hand, and alas! their tongues are no kinder than the rest on that account. But the virile folk are always interested in doing things. That "deep calls to deep" is no new discovery and nothing so commends the service of Jesus Christ to young manhood as the fact that it does things, and calls on them also to do things and make sacrifices also. I have in my cabin specimens of various tracts, genuine efforts no doubt to attract men to Jesus Christ. They are sent out from time to time, often in large numbers. I received once a complement of 10,000 of one single variety, a heavy load to carry and quite impossible to distribute, the very gift signifying impracticability. The whole appeal of many of these is "Nothing to do; only believe." "No cross for you to bear, no struggle to carry, no defeats to suffer, no working out your salvation with fear and trembling. Only an intellectual process, momentary and easy."

WHAT CHRIST AND MANHOOD WANT.

As a remedy for indifference to church-going this mental submission, if once accepted, is obviously valuable. And I am witness to scores of lives saved by that combination. But I am certain that the permanence of the result depends not on the mental process but on the continuous association with the church and its strenuous tasks.

Jesus Not Understood.

Even those nearest to him did not understand him. He was alone, but never lonely, having access to a companionship which others knew dimly. Always the great tyrannical majority was against him, but he was unmoved. His enemies were a solid phalanx, but he was unawed. The rough, hard, cynical tide of world thought beat against him, but he was unshaken. Skeptics scorned, wits jeered, wise ones smiled, but he turned not aside. With all his strength there was an ineffable tenderness, a hallowing sympathy ocean-like in its depths and sweetness. Pity and power met in him as in no one else. What other mind does not seem petty beside the riches of his faith, the beauty of his simplicty, and the incredible power of his gentleness! What depth of love, what lofty lowliness, what exquisite forgiveness, what unwearying hope!

SEX AND DRESS

By Hugh Cabot, M. D.

Standards of morality are not matters of natural law, but of custom; and custom changes. In matters of sex we are especially struck by the duality of the standard required of men and of women. One thing generally agreed upon, however, is that sex instinct is fundamental to the human race. In the beginning man probably had a well-developed parental instinct, but sex specialization has run wild. Woman's position is not due to the force of centuries, but to her present environment, and any alteration we want to make in woman we can make in a single generation. The single standard for women was set by men, backed by a refusal to marry and the ability to legislate. While one may question the soundness of any standard set by one sex for the other, man's duality depends largely on woman's tolerance of it.

Woman's dress has one object chiefly in view. There is no reason why women should express themselves through gowns originally devised by three or four Frenchmen for the benefit, not of society, but of their pocketbooks. Women must co-operate if men are to reform. They must not tempt.

A fundamental alteration in the intent and purpose of woman's dress must precede any fundamental alteration in morality. French designers go as far as they dare in the face of public opinion. It is public opinion that will alter the styles.

Incidentally, the original use of the dance—beauty of pose and rhythm—has been forgotten, and its most recent manifestation, the tango, is an unblushing attempt at what few would put into words. This dance should be ostracized.—From a recent address before Women's Municipal League, Boston.

OUR RACE PROBLEM

By Edward Alsworth Ross.

In the six or seven hundred thousand strangers that yearly join themselves to us for good and all, there are to be found, of course, every talent and every beauty. Out of the steerage come persons as fine and noble as any who have trodden American soil. Any adverse characterization of an immigrant stream implies, then, only that the trait is relatively frequent, not that it is general.

Our captains of industry give a crowbar to the immigrant with a number nine face on a number six head, make a dividend out of him, and imagine that is the end of the matter. They overlook that this man will beget children in his image—two or three times as many as the American—and that these children will in turn beget children. They chuckle at having opened an inexhaustible store of cheap tools and, lo! the American people is being altered for all time by these tools. Once before captains of industry took a hand in making this people. Colonial planters imported Africans to hoe in the sun, to "develop" the tobacco, indigo, and rice plantations. Then, as now, business-minded men met with contempt the protests of a few idealists against their way of "building up the country."

Those promoters of prosperity are dust, but they bequeathed a situation which in four years wiped out more wealth than 200 years of slavery had built up, and which presents today the one unsolvable problem in this country. Without likening immigrants to Negroes, one may point out how the latter-day employer resembles the old-time planter in his blindness to the effects of his labor policy upon the blood of the nation.—The Century.

The Book World

A Department of Reviews and Literary Notes.

BY ARTHUR GORDON.

Chronicles of Avonlea. By L. M. Montgomery. Readers of "Anne of Green Gables," Anne of Avonlea," and other sketches by this author, are prepared for the delightful experience of dipping into these "Chronicles," which relate in some measure to the people who appear in the earlier narratives. Such chapters as "The Hurrying of Ludovic," "The Winning of Lucinda," "Aunt Olivia's Beau," and "The Courting of Prissy Strong," are charming bits of romance, told in the manner of a practiced narrator who has already won an assured place in the affections of a large circle of readers. No more winsome descriptions of quiet and yet engaging lives could be imagined than these chapters.

This bit from the first chapter is characteristic. Theodora is discussing with Anne the exasperating hesitance of Ludovic, who has been her devoted admirer for fifteen years, but seems no nearer the crisis of proposal than at the first. "Exactly," says the patient but maturing object of the young man's unhastening devotion, "he never hurried in his life. Why, he has been thinking for the last six years of getting his house painted. He talks it over with me every little while, and picks out the color, and there the matter stays. He's fond of me, and he means to ask me to have him sometime. The only question is—will the time ever come?" How do you imagine they jostled that deliberate man into alarm and action? (L. C. Page & Company, $1.25 net.)

His Great Adventure. By Robert Herrick. One who had read any of Mr. Herrick's earlier books would not recognize this work as coming from the same hand. There is no sex problem in it. It does not deal with the intricacies of developing character. It does not appear to be written with the painstaking concern for style that has marked the author. It is just what its name suggests, a story of adventure. A young journalist, at the end of his resources, by chance, makes the acquaintance of a man who has apparently been assaulted, and who is near death. The wounded man has just strength enough to implore Brainard to go to San Francisco, get certain papers, and find somebody, whom he barely mentions. This is the slender information on which the young man robs a safe, carries his plunder to Mexico and then to Europe, finds himself in possession of a copper mine and millions of money, goes into a theatrical adventure, and at last—by the merest, but of course inevitable—chance, finds the heiress and his own romance. Mr. Herrick has proved that he can succeed with a story of the stirring, western type, with broad spaces and rapid movement in it, as well as with the society novel. (Macmillan, $1.35 net.)

The Roosevelt Autobiography. A book which would seem to be destined to take its place among the really great autobiographies of literature is "Theodore Roosevelt: An Autobiography" which has just come from the press. It is a big work covering more than six hundred pages. Its author has had much to tell for his career has been full and varied. A great deal has been written and published about Mr. Roosevelt—his achievements, his philosophy, his viewpoint. Here, however, he himself writes of all of these, reviewing his life in its entirety from boyhood up.

For more than thirty-three years Mr. Roosevelt has made his vigorous personality felt in politics and society. Beginning in a small way as assemblyman, he came rapidly to the front. His services as Police Commissioner in New York City, as Colonel of the Rough Riders, as Governor of New York state and finally as Vice-President and President of the United States are described at length.

The world already knows Mr. Roosevelt as statesman and public servant, as orator, soldier and writer; it does not know him so well as a private citizen. Many of the experiences that have gone to the making of his career have been hitherto revealed only to close friends and coworkers. His autobiography presents a new Roosevelt, therefore, to the majority of readers. In it he talks intimately of his home, his family, and of all that which has gone to the making of a singularly rich existence wholly apart from his public life.

The volume has about one hundred illustrations, some of which show Mr. Roosevelt at different periods, others being pictures taken at Sagamore Hill and the White House, snap shots of his children and portraits of those who were at one time or another associated with him.

The pages of the Autobiography are brightened by many anecdotes and incidents of amusing character. For instance, there is the story of the prize-fighting friend who called on President Roosevelt at the White House on business. "He explained," Mr. Roosevelt says, "that he wished to see me alone, sat down opposite me, and put a very expensive cigar on the desk, saying, 'Have a cigar.' I thanked him and said I did not smoke, to which he responded, 'Put it in your pocket.' He then added, 'Take another; put both in your pocket.' This I accordingly did. Having thus shown at the outset the necessary formal courtesy, my visitor, an old and valued friend, proceeded to explain that a nephew of his had enlisted in the Marine Corps, but had been absent without leave, and was threatened with dishonorable discharge on the ground of desertion. My visitor, a good citizen and a patriotic American, was stung to the quick at the thought of such an incident occuring in his family, and he explained to me that it must not occur, and there must not be the disgrace to the family, although he would be delighted to have the offender 'handled rough' to teach him a needed lesson; he added that he wished I would take him and handle him myself, for he knew that I would see that he 'got all that was coming to him.' Then a look of pathos came into his eyes, and he explained: 'That boy I just cannot understand. He was my sister's favorite son, and I always took a special interest in him myself. I did my best to bring him up the way he ought to go. But there was just nothing to be done with him. His tastes were naturally low. He took to music!' What form this debasing taste for music assumed I did not inquire; and I was able to grant my friend's wish."

Of course the Autobiography would not be complete without some reference to the much disputed President's third term question. Mr. Roosevelt's explanation runs: "The Presidency is a great office and the power of the President can be effectively used to secure a renomination especially if the President has the support of certain great political and financial interests. It is for this reason, and this reason alone, that the wholesome principle of continuing in office as long as he is willing to serve an incumbent who has proved capable is not applicable to the Presidency. Therefore the American people have wisely established a custom against allowing any man to hold that office for more than two consecutive terms. But every shred of power which a President exercises while in office vanishes absolutely when he has once left office. An ex-President stands precisely in the position of any other private citizen and has not one particle more power to secure a nomination or election than if he had never held the office at all. Indeed he probably has less because of the very fact that he has held the office. Therefore the reasoning on which the anti-third term custom is based has no application whatever to an ex-President and no application whatever to anything except consecutive terms. As a barrier of precaution against more than two consecutive terms the custom embodies a valuable principle. Applied in any other way it becomes a mere formula and like all formulas, a potential source of mischievous confusion."

Syntax of the Participles In the Apostolic Fathers. By Henry B. Robison. This is one of a series of Historical and Linguistic Studies in Literature related to the New Testament, issued by the Department of Biblical and Patristic Greek of the University of Chicago. Its purpose, as set forth in the prefatory note, "is to exhibit with fulness and accuracy the usage of the participle in the writings of the so-called Apostolic Fathers, and to point out what usages are decreasing in frequency of occurrence, and what are increasing, whether any earlier usage is absent, and whether any new usage appears." The value of the study consists in the aid it offers to a determination of the place of these writings in the history of the Greek language, and the light which is thus thrown on the New Testament. These investigations of the books of Clement, Barnabas, Hermes, the Didache, etc. reveal a large amount of painstaking and valuable work on Prof. Robison's part. (University of Chicago Press.)

MODERN WOMANHOOD

Conducted by Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison

NEW YORK PAPER FINDS SUFFRAGE A SUCCESS.

The New York Sun, which has been strongly opposed to suffrage, sent out a set of questions as to the actual results of the enfranchised states, and the answers have been decidedly in favor. The Sun says editorially:

WOMAN SUFFRAGE IN PRACTICE.

The common opinion of unbiased observers in those states where equal suffrage prevails is strongly supported by the results of The Evening Sun's questionary concerning the effect of the women's vote. In a general way it is apparent that the consequences of extending the franchise have been neither so disastrous as the anti-suffragists predicted, nor so suddenly and remarkably beneficial as some enthusiastic reformers expected them to be. An important point is that in none of the states is there any show of dissatisfaction on the part of the voters generally.

The object of the inquiry was to secure an impartial review "by trained reporters" with no axes to grind. Suffragists and anti-suffragists alike are naturally inclined to select the strong points in their own favor and the weak points on the opposite side: on the present occasion, however, the object was not to prove anything, but merely to review the actual results, and the questions were drawn up as far as possible in such a way as to exclude the danger of mere speculative guessing. The following points have been pretty well established: "(1) Women who have the vote do vote. (2) Their ballot has already passed a considerable body of law. (3) The suffrage states seem to be satisfied to have women go on voting."

A MESSAGE FROM DR. SHAW.

The New Year's message of Dr. Anna Howard Shaw, president of the American Woman Suffrage Association, is full of good and encouraging things. Three points that she makes are given below, because they represent lines of advance in woman's suffrage, that are not generally emphasized.

WOMEN'S VALUE RECOGNIZED.

We rejoice not alone that two nations and one of the richest and largest Territories of the United States have given full suffrage to women during the past year, and that the great State of Illinois has granted nearly full suffrage, but that the increasing recognition of women's value as public servants is constantly manifesting itself. For the first time our country is recognizing the full value of the conservation of its childhood and womanhood as an asset to the nation, as well as its forests and rivers, and following the example of the Federal government in the appointing of Miss Julia Lathrop as the head of the Federal Children's Bureau and Mrs. J. B. Harriman as a member of the Federal Industrial Commission, the mayor of New York has selected Miss Katharine B. Davis for the position of Commissioner of Corrections of New York City, and California has appointed Mrs. Harriet W. R. Strong, of Whittier, a member of the Advisory Board of the Arizona and California River Regulations Commission. These are but a few of the many evidences of the recognition by the government of women's ability to fill public positions of trust and power.

MEN ORGANIZE FOR WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

But best of all is the growing consciousness of men in regard to the anomalous position American women occupy in this nation, the position of humiliation to which no other civilized country has reduced its womanhood. In Germany, German women are governed by German men; in France, French women are governed by French men; but in these United States, American women are governed by every kind, condition and race of men under the sun. There is not a color, from white to black, from red to yellow, that is not represented by this government as the sovereign rulers of American women. Such a humiliating condition is unknown to women in any other part of the civilized globe. Men who resent the very thought of social equality of so-called inferior races with themselves and their families, have not hesitated to make these so-called inferior races of men the sovereign rulers of and the masters of the destiny of the subject women of these United States. Men are themselves feeling the injustice and shame of this degrading political position occupied by women, and are not only protesting, but are organizing to demand that this injustice shall be done away with and this wrong abolished.

PARTIES MORE RESPECTFUL.

Another evidence of our success is the increasing attention given to our demands by political parties, as shown by the fact that all political parties in many states have put woman suffrage planks in their platforms, as well as in several National platforms. Our petitions to Congress and legislative bodies have been received with an altogether different attitude on the part of the State and National Committees, and everywhere there is a deference hitherto unknown shown to women by public officials.

CLEANS UP TOWN BETWEEN TRAINS.

Putting the mayor of Copperfield, Ore., and some of the council in jail, closing the saloons and placing a guard in front of each, Miss Fern Hobbs has kept Governor West's promise that she would "clean up the town between trains." The municipal authorities had refused to obey the governor's orders. He had received a petition signed by over half the inhabitants saying that the government was not only for but by the saloonkeepers. The governor said he had called on the sheriff and district attorney to close the places, but that "all they did was talk." Miss Hobbs, his private secretary, was accordingly given the mission.

She left Copperfield on the same train by which she entered, but in her brief stay things happened. She was accompanied by several guardsmen.

Miss Hobbs, escorted by Colonel Lawson, went directly to the town hall, where she read the governor's proclamation.

Mayor Stewart, leader of one faction of the town, and Martin Knezovitch, of the other, were on hand with their followers. "I have a proclamation here from the governor," said Miss Hobbs. "All right, go ahead," said Mayor Stewart.

Miss Hobbs then read the proclamation, saying that if necessary to keep the two saloons of Copperfield closed, Colonel Lawson had instruction to burn down the buildings.

The mayor and members of the city council refused to resign, and were put in jail. After Miss Hobbs left, martial law was declared.

The trouble in Copperfield followed investigations showing that the mayor was engaged in the saloon business; that his associate in such business was a member of the city council; that the proprietor of another saloon was likewise a member of said council, and that his bartender was also a councilman; that a fourth member was a hanger-on around one of these resorts, and in sympathy with their activities. This gave the saloon element absolute control of all city affairs.

Governor West has also asked for a judicial hearing looking to the removal of the sheriff, and Miss Hobbs will act as special counsel for the state at that time.

BIG UNIVERSITIES DEBATE SUFFRAGE.

Harvard, Yale and Princeton Universities will make equal suffrage the subject of their triangular debate on March 27. The question is: "Resolved, That the women of the United States should be given the suffrage on equal terms with the men," to be held simultaneously at the three universities.

Harvard will uphold the affirmative against Yale at New Haven, and the negative against Princeton at Cambridge. Yale will have the affirmative against Princeton at Princeton.

ONE HEART MADE GLAD.

It was an uncomfortable, windless day. The sun shone through a mist of haze and heat; the road and the roadside grass and bushes were gray with dust, and the car was nearly filled with weary-faced people. The previous car had jumped the track and some of us were anxious and cross, fearing the delay meant missing the train at the junction.

Another stop, this time to take up two passengers at a crossroad, one of whom was a stout old lady who said, "Thanky, dear!" to the conductor who helped her on. Her hair was silver-white and her face was wrinkled, but, oh, the sweet beauty of it! She beamed on us, one and all, as if we were welcoming friends, and then settled happily in her seat.

"La, now! ain't this 'ere car nice, Lizzie? The last time we went from your house to visit Carrie we rode in a wagon! It's truly wonderful how things is improvin'. I wisht we had cars up our way! But, land sakes! one can't hev ever'thing!"

Soon we halted at a switch and some one said:

"Oh, dear, another wait! And isn't it hot?"

"Prime weather for corn!" answered the dear old grandmother. "We've got a patch nigh unto an acre, with three plantin's in it, so we'll hev b'ilen' corn clear up to frost; this sun an' heat is wonderful sweetenin' to the ears! An' we've got melons, too."

Every one of us smiled, and wished that she was our grandma, and that we could visit her in her up-country home, have a feast of that sweet corn, and better still, forget our world-frets and hurts in the presence of simplicity and overflowing loving kindness!—The Delineator.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

THE CONTINUOUS CAMPAIGN.

THE campaign for the raising of a million dollars for ampler equipment of our foreign missionary work was undertaken two years ago by Mr. A. E. Cory and his associates. It was not intended that it should interfere in any way with the regular offerings of the churches to this cause. In fact so quietly was the campaign conducted that neither in newspapers or conventions was much said about the matter until it was practically completed. The news of that completion constituted the most significant bit of information issued at the Toronto Convention. Since that time the Men and Millions Movement has been launched for an ampler equipment of our missionary interests and some of our colleges. But in the nature of the case the size of the new campaign makes it necessary that its appeal should be made to Disciples of large means. There still remains, therefore, the simpler and equally important work of closing up the ranks on the One Million Dollar proposal, and of sustaining the regular work of foreign missions all the time. It would be a calamity if in the enthusiasm of a great enterprise, in which givers of large means are to be enlisted, those of moderate ability should think it no longer worth while to consecrate their gifts of more modest dimensions to the same sacred cause. In the long course of events it is the multitude of small givers that counts even more helpfully than the fewer gifts of the resourceful, important as these may be. For in the bank of Heaven the volume of prayer and self-denial is as valuable as deposits of money. In this important work all may have a share and we believe an equal share. The smallest gifts devoted with self-denial and heaven-going petitions are as worthy in the Father's sight as the largest offering. For the gift without the giver is of little worth. Our foreign mission day is a time of renewed self-dedication as well as of giving for the cause of world-around evangelism.

IS HOPE EVER GREATER THAN FAITH?

OF the three virtues, charity is greatest; and of the other two we might justly say that faith is greater than hope. But this may not always be strictly true.

There is a beautiful picture in the epistle to the Hebrews which begins by exhorting us to live the "principles of the gospel of Christ." By principles it means the elementary things. It exhorts us to cease laying the foundation of repentance, for that foundation is already laid if our Christian life is sincere and is none the less substantial because it is buried out of sight. And then it goes on to suggest that even faith in some of its aspects belongs to the elementary things of the Christian life, not that we have outgrown faith, but that we outgrow that aspect of faith which is directly joined to repentance. From this beginning the chapter goes on to relate of a great thing which God has given to the world and pledged himself to it with a double oath. There is no language in the Bible concerning any gift of God that is quite so significant as this: "Wherein God, being minded to show more abundantly unto the heirs of the promise the immutability of his counsel, interposed with an oath; that by two immutable things, in which it is impossible for God to lie, we may have a strong encouragement, who have fled for refuge to lay hold of the hope set before us; which we have as an anchor of the soul." This splendid, indefeasible gift of God, built high above its foundation of repentance, and more beautiful in some of its aspects even than faith, is Christian hope. It is an anchor to the soul and the value of the anchor is that it is not only strong in itself but it is attached to something that can never fail.

There is hope for our dead friends whom we have bade fare-well in words of human affection and of Christian faith. They are not lost to us because they are not lost in God. Their faith in life is our hope for them in death. There is hope for ourselves. Unworthy as we are, and wicked as we are, our hope is grounded in the love of God and in his gift to us in Jesus Christ.

The progress of the temperance movement, the conviction of criminals high in official position, the rising demand of the public for righteousness, all are indications of what the world has to hope for. The kingdom of God is surely coming.

There is hope for our dead friends whom we have bade fare-

THE DAY OF WORLD VISION.

THERE are certain outstanding interests to which every Christian regards himself as committed by the very character of his relationship to Christ. Among these one of the most important is the task of foreign missions. There was a time when the value and expediency of this work needed to be argued. Today it is no longer so. The man who doubts the timeliness and effectiveness of missionary activity in the Orient is simply unaware. He may frame for himself a variety of excuses for non-participation in foreign missions, but not one of these will stand the acid test of facts. More than this, the unenlisted Christian misses the big joy of joining in the world's greatest enterprise. There is something uplifting and inspiring about partnership in so noble a work. One grows larger in sympathy by the spaciousness of the causes he accepts. And the cause of missions is no longer an experiment.

It is not in question among the intelligent. The distant East is changing before our eyes. Christian activities in the fields of education, medical science, social uplift and evangelism have started very far-reaching movements in the lands of the sunrise. Not to guide these movements with an increasing force of missionaries and a constantly enlarging equipment is to leave them to the chances of materialism and self-interest. The task of the church is to meet with firmness and consecration the imperious demands for enlargement. All the churches are beginning to recognize this as their foremost obligation. The Disciples of Christ have a most important part in this big work. Their festival of foreign missions comes on the first Lord's Day in March. Many of the churches observe every Lord's Day as an appropriate time for missionary offering.

But the first Lord's Day in March has come to be the red-letter day for this cause in our calendar. Not to have a part in so important a work would imply a singular moral obtuseness. It would signify the lack of adequate information. But that information is freely and amply furnished by the Foreign Society. All things are preparing for a notable celebration, both informational and financial, of foreign missions. Observe the First Lord's Day in March.

IF YOU OWNED THE BILLBOARDS.

WHAT pictures would you paste on them? We wish there were no billboards. They are unsightly, expensive and highly objectionable as a form of advertising, but they are here, and we believe that among those who own them are men of conscience and Christian character. We credit fully their good faith in the present movement which has resulted in the placing of a beautiful religious picture in practically every town in the United States, and we should greatly deprecate any suspicion of their motives, for we believe that the men who did this did it for the sake of the spiritual uplift which they earnestly desired to promote.

The first poster has been followed by a secular picture based on the life story of General Grant and calling upon young people to improve their opportunities, and this in turn will be followed by another religious painting of Holman Hunt's Light of the World.

Now, if you owned the billboards, what painting would you display next? The owners of the billboards earnestly desire your advice. The secretary of the organization, Mr. Bernard Link, 517 Seventh Ave., New York City, wishes to hear from everyone who has an idea on this subject. Give him the benefit of your suggestions. What would you do if you owned the billboards?

A CONSTRUCTIVE WEEKLY

FAITH, THE MEANING-LENDER TO LIFE.

IN this phrase, Dr. Glen Atkins described the nature of faith in his Chicago Seminary lectures. It is a significant characterization. After all, we must have meaning given to life, for conduct is determined and happiness established according to that which life really means to us. If the world is only the theater of dull toil, then we react its despair with dismayed souls. If it is the great universe where the will of God is getting itself done, although at the cost of toil and suffering, then we go on and bear our burdens and sing our song in the face of pain. In any sense of the word, the final meaning of life is rendered by faith rather than by the report of the senses. Our visions are more valid than our clumsy hands that touch the stones and the wood. It is what we see with the inner eye that determines the true meaning of the world. Then we act in accord with our interpretation of the meaning of the world, an interpretation which is the gift of faith to our eager and needy souls.

DEMOCRATIC CONVENTIONS.

A PLAN.

NOTHING that has been said in this series of articles should be taken as advocating anything revolutionary. It would be wrong to suggest at this time the sudden overturning of the present system of conducting our missionary and benevolent work. Happily a way is open by which the churches may assume their responsibility for the direction of their general enterprises without modifying at all vitally the present organization of the societies.

Let it be remembered that the point of present criticism is directed not against the societies as such, nor against the men who manage the societies, but against the friction and incompetence arising out of their being independent of the churches and of one another. The solution of the problem can be accomplished if there can be found some way to knit up the societies with the churches, some plan that will make the churches responsible for the management of the societies without affecting the charters of the societies.

This can be done by each society adopting the simple expedient of making the delegates to the General Convention annual members of the society. As both the American and Foreign societies are now constituted, provision is made for annual members to be appointed by the churches. This provision has never been carried into effect in an annual convention, for reasons that have already been indicated. It would seem that the plan of sending delegates from the churches to the General Convention who should, by the constitutions of the societies, become automatically members of those societies would come as near satisfying the situation as could be desired.

The General Convention would thus be one convention, not a series of separate conventions.

It would sit on one day as the Foreign Missionary Society, on another day as the American Missionary Society, etc., but it would be always the General Convention of Churches of Christ.

Any action taken in matters relating to one department of the work would not contradict action taken in matters relating to another department of the work.

The societies would no longer be independent, self-controlling entities, but would be directly amenable to the churches.

The whole work could thus be coördinated and unified.

No legal question concerning funds entrusted to the societies would arise in making this readjustment.

The question of "authority" would settle itself by this arrangement. The Convention would be neither superior to nor inferior to the societies. It would be IDENTICAL WITH the societies. Its actions would therefore not need to be imposed upon the societies against their will or timidly offered as amiable but impotent "advice." The actions of the Society would be the actions of the Convention and vice versa.

It is a thoroughly democratic arrangement.

As a plan of unifying our missionary and benevolent work the General Convention has before it great possibilities which may be very simply realized.

Men and Millions at St. Louis

THREE hundred men and women representing the Committee of Direction of the Men and Millions Movement met at the Planter's Hotel, St. Louis, last week to pray and plan for the launching of the great enterprise. The annual meeting of the Association of National and State Secretaries was set for the same week. The secretaries came early, participating on Tuesday and Wednesday in the session of the Committee of Direction, and held their own sessions on Thursday. Every participating missionary society was represented. Most of the college presidents and a number of teachers were present. Prominent pastors and resourceful business men made up the main bulk of the company.

The sessions were held in an assembly room in the hotel. It was packed three times daily. There was much prayer. The company spent much time upon its knees.

A feature of the proceedings was the absence of applause. Abram E. Cory presided most of the time, and, together with Mr. R. A. Long, gave interpretation to the Movement. At the opening session on Tuesday morning Mr. Cory told the story of the Movement up to the point where two million and a half was set as the goal, and then presented Mr. Long, who had been presiding, and who told the story of the enlargment of the goal to six millions so as to include the colleges.

Mr. Long took the conference into his confidence as respects his personal financial condition, his home life and his theological views. His hearers were visibly moved in their emotions by Mr. Long's allusions to his intimate affairs. He called attention to his age—sixty-three years—and declared that the making of this gift marked the choice between hard work and a probable ending of his life at seventy, and a life of more leisurely comfort and the possible deferment of his death until he reached eighty years. But he does not hesitate to make the choice. "I used to think a man should bend all his energies to live out his complete life," he said, "but I have changed my views on that. I have concluded that if a man can serve his Master better in seventy years than he can in eighty he should pursue the course that will end his life at seventy."

Mr. Long traced to Mr. Cory the first suggestion for making a million dollar gift to this Movement. When he replied that he already owed a million, Mr. Cory rejoined, "Why not make it two millions!"

Weighing the suggestion for several weeks after the Toronto Convention and conferring several times with Mr. Cory, Mr. Long finally dictated a letter defining certain conditions upon which he would give a million dollars. This letter had contained a paragraph in which its author affirmed his belief that all the colleges participating in the prospective fund would continue to be true to the doctrine of Christ's divinity and to the fundamental principles of the Disciples of Christ. It had since been suggested to him, he went on to say, that there might come a time when there would be a difference of opinion as to what these fundamental principles are. He therefore had prepared a statement of these principles which would make definite what he meant.

Drawing from his pocket a carefully-written paper Mr. Long read perhaps seven or eight articles of faith in which he affirmed his belief.

Among the items were the divinity of Christ, the existence of God, the divine origin of the Bible, the weekly observance of the Lord's Supper and the practice of baptism by immersion.

This document became the subject matter of much discus-

A Department of Interdenominational Acquaintance.

Dr. Harry F. Ward Says, "Democratize the Church."

On January 9, Dr. Harry F. Ward was installed as Professor of Social Service in Boston University School of Theology. Doctor Ward is a product of the Middle West, a graduate of Northwestern University, has had experience in the pastorate in Chicago and for the last few years has been secretary of the Methodist Federation for Social Service. He will continue to give half his time to that movement, promoting it by addresses throughout the country. In his inaugural address, Doctor Ward said, among other things:

"To extend the spirit of democracy without, the church must develop it within. Ecclesiastical institutions, like those of government and society, must conform to the spirit of the times. We must worship neither customs nor traditions nor forms, but only spirit and life. The world will not stop 'because we fear a parchment more or less.' The church must be completely democratized. Indeed, the democratic spirit has modified Methodism. We have seen the extension of power to laymen and to women. We have seen the limitation of episcopal absolution and the faint beginnings of the recall, and we may yet find use for the initiative and the referendum. We move toward efficiency of administration by centralized power, but with detailed and continuous publicity, direct responsibility and easy control of the constituency, to secure us against oligarchy. In church and state the bosses are dead, and we are burying them with due ceremony. The spirit of the church must be democratic and fraternal. No beauty of building or service must make the humblest folk feel out of place in a Methodist meeting-house. The only religion for a democratic age is a religion of life and brotherhood, of warmth and fraternity."

Death of Samuel B. Capen.

Through the death of Samuel B. Capen last week the church has lost "the best known and most widely-honored Christian layman in the United States," according to Rev. J. L. Barton, of the Congregational American Board. Doctor Capen, a prominent merchant of Boston, was also president of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. His death occurred at Shanghai, China, while on a tour of missionary study and visitation around the world.

Methodists Lose Two Leaders.

The death of Bishop John M. Walden removes a highly honored personality from Methodist circles. Dr. Walden came into fame before the Civil War as the first secretary of the Freedmen's Aid Society while living in Kansas. Then the church took him for Publishing Agent, just ten years after he had entered the Cincinnati Conference, and he served sixteen years. Becoming a bishop, his active career covered twenty years. That is, according to the official record, which says he was retired in 1904.

Bishop Walden left $10,000, according to his will. A more significant part of the will is the following:

"I John Morgan Walden, believing in God, the Father Almighty, and in his Son, and in the Holy Spirit, one with the Father and the Son, the Triune God, my Redeemer and benefactor, deem it fitting to preface my last will with a grateful acknowledgment of my Heavenly Father's gracious providence which has kept, guided, and helped me from childhood to this day. For more than fifty years this adorable Father has accepted my service in His Church in which he mercifully led me, a wayward youth, some sixty years ago."

Dr. Jesse W. Jennings, who died in Kansas City, Mo., was a notable figure in Western Methodism. He had served in places of much responsibility and difficulty before coming to the position of Manager of the Book Concern's Kansas City House.

Doctor Gladden Heads Ohio Municipal League.

Dr. Washington Gladden, recently resigned from his charge of many years at Columbus, O., has been elected to the presidency of the Ohio Municipal League, which is composed of city officials and various organizations interested in municipal affairs. In a sermon preached on the Sunday evening preceding the meeting of the Municipal League of Columbus, Doctor Gladden said:

"It is not merely in our individual lives that we come in contact with God; the life of the community is full of His presence and His power. If His active presence is more clearly revealed in one place than in another, it is probably in the city hall over there; for that is the vital center of this city. The city, in its corporate life, through its officials, is dealing with Him all the while, getting what it orders of Him—security and thrift and justice and welfare for its citizens, or insecurity and disorder and injustice and ill fare. He is a business partner in all our municipal concerns, and He is the one who never cheats and is never cheated. Those who occupy our city offices not only get for themselves integrity or infamy, soundness or rottenness in their own lives very seriously by their transactions, and this is in strict accordance with His perfect justice."

Number of Theological Students Increasing.

Professor R. H. Nichols, of Auburn Theological Seminary, has just completed an extensive investigation of the number of men engaged in theological study in the seminaries of the Presbyterian Church. It appears that there are more students now than in any other year since 1900. The low-water mark was reached in 1902. Since then the movement, with some slight fluctuations, has been upward. In the years 1908 to 1913 the number grew sixteen per cent, a rate of increase more rapid than that of the population of the country.

From Far and Near in the Religious World

Baptist Foreign Mission Record.

The Baptist Foreign Missionary Society has filed the record of ninety-nine years of activity. During this period 298,030 converts have been baptized in non-Christian lands. Including Europe, the number of baptisms totals 571,794.

Congregational Center Moves Westward.

The center of Congregational membership, which a few decades ago was in western New England, is now at Cleveland, O., and is steadily moving westward. Congregationalism is growing three times as fast in the interior states west of the Mississippi as she is in New England, and in the three Pacific Coast States nine times as fast, and fourteen times as fast in the Mountain states.

Aiding Young People to Their Lifework.

The Presbyterian Churches have set apart one day in February to be known as "Vocation Day," the purpose of which is to assist the young people in an intelligent dedication of their lives to some sort of useful endeavor in the kingdom of Christ.

Gift to St. Louis Church.

Through the generosity of one of the members of the Kingshighway Presbyterian Church, St. Louis, Mo., whose name is withheld by request, that church is to have erected a building which will be used for institutional features in the service of the growing community.

A Wonderful Church Record.

The Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church of New York City, of which Dr. John Henry Jowett, formerly pastor in Birmingham, England, is minister, in the last fiscal year contributed $584,314 for religious work, exceeding its own record of the previous year by more than $100,000. Of the $584,314 raised in the twelve months, $52,720 was spent for the local expenses of the church which centers in the big Gothic building at Fifth Avenue and Fifty-fifth Street. The contributions for home missions was $69,914, and for foreign missions, $35,625.

Dr. Clark In Journey Abroad.

Dr. Francis E. Clark is making a trip through southern Europe and will return to attend the spring convention of British societies in London. The trip takes the place of the journey planned to the proposed world's convention in Australia, which was hindered by the smallpox outbreak in Sydney.

Michigan Y. M. C. A. Boys Meet.

A big convention of Christian boys from all over the state of Michigan was recently held at Saginaw. Eleven hundred were present. It was the eleventh annual state boys' conference under the supervision of the Young Men's Christian Association. One Michigan business man called the meeting the biggest powerhouse he had ever seen. Fifty-four delegates took a definite stand for Christ.

Some Interesting Figures.

The seventeen Baptist bodies in Continental United States have 49,339 churches, the Disciples 9,040, the Congregationalists 5,343, the twenty-five Lutheran bodies 11,114, the twelve Presbyterian bodies 15,311, the Roman Catholics, 11,881, the fifteen Methodist bodies, 59,990, or practically 60,000.

Of Human Interest

Not a Specialist.

"'It is cheaper, not dearer, to consult a specialist,' said Dr. Simon Flexner, head of the Rockefeller Institute, at a medical dinner.

"It is very stupid and erroneous to hold the opinions of Blank, to whom a friend said:

"'Was the doctor who examined your lungs a specialist?'

"'No. I don't think so,' Blank sneered. 'He couldn't find anything the matter with 'em.'"

The Sea-going Doughnut.

One of the juvenile guests at the recent White House wedding caused Josephus Daniels, the secretary of the navy, to forget the dignity of his high office, which he was doing his best to protect and maintain at all costs, especially at so solemn an occasion.

The little future debutante entered into conversation with the secretary. Believing it would be nice to entertain him with a topic in his own line of work, she said, with a great air of gravity:

"Well, Mr. Secretary, I see you are determined to make your department a success and have ordered a couple of doughnuts."

"Doughnuts?" repeated the secretary, wrinkling his brow. "Oh, yes. Oh, yes—doughnuts."

Then he was heard to smile many feet around. He didn't have the heart to tell her how easily "dreadnoughts" could be read "doughnuts," especially if you were only reading the headlines.

Why Mark Twain Went.

Upon a certain ocasion Charles Dudley Warner, who was friend and neighbor to Mark Twain, asked him to go walking, and Mark, as usual, refused.

Dudley summoned all his powers of persuasion to no purpose.

"You really ought to do it, you know," he said, finally. "It's according to scripture."

"No 'mark the perfect man' chestnuts on me, if you please," warned the humorist. "Give me your authority."

"Fifth chapter of Matthew, verse the 41st," said Mr. Warner, readily. "It reads like this: 'And whoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him Twain.'"

Needless to say, Mark Twain went with Charles Dudley Warner for that walk.

Gentle "Uncle Remus."

Joel Chandler Harris, the author of "Uncle Remus," was at his desk one night when an old-time reporter looked over and said: "Joe, how do you spell "graphic?" With one 'f' or two?" "Well," said the kindly Uncle Remus, who was too gentle to hurt even a common adjective, "if you are going to use any, Bill, I guess you might as well go the limit."

He Spoke Mighty Loud.

Bishop Kinsloving of Brazil, who is a Southerner by birth, captured the delegates at the recent Student Volunteer Convention at Kansas City, with the story of an inquisition he endured, when, as a young missionary about to sail, he went to the old home for his farewell visit. A colored boy, one of the family retainers, put him through an examination:

"I heahs you all's a-gwine to Brazil."

"Yes."

"Got any kin down dar?"

"No."

"Does yo' know any folks down dar?"

"No."

"Did anybody write an' ax yo' to come?"

"No."

"Den huccom you all's a gwine?"

"My Lord and Master told me to go."

"When?"

"Nineteen hundred years ago."

"Did yo' heah him?"

"I believe I did."

"Den he mus' a spoke mighty loud!"

And the bishop said to the convention, as he had said to his questioner years before, "Yes, he spoke mighty loud."

The "Real Henry Clay."

One winter morning Henry Clay, finding himself in need of money, went to the Riggs Bank and asked for the loan of $250 on his personal note. He was told that while his credit was perfectly good, it was the inflexible rule of the bank to require an indorser. The great statesman hunted up Daniel Webster and asked him to indorse the note.

"With pleasure," said Webster. "But I need some money myself. Why not make your note for five hundred, and you and I will split it?"

This they did. And today the note is in the Riggs Bank—unpaid.—Popular Magazine.

Told of Turner.

Turner, the English painter, was blunt-spoken and often gruff, but on occasion he unbent to jest—occasionally at his own expense. The Bristol Times and Mirror gives an amusing instance.

His famous picture, "The Slave Ship,"—that wonderful combination of flaming and gorgeous colors,—was once described by an exasperated critic as "a cat having a fit in a dish of tomato salad." Turner had never heard the phrase, but once when a salad was passed to him at a dinner, he put on a critical and considering air as he regarded it and remarked to his neighbor:

"Nice, cool green, that lettuce, isn't it? And the beetroot a pretty red—not quite strong enough, and the dressing, delicate tint of yellow, that! Add some mustard, and then you have one of my pictures!"

Had Plenty of Time.

They were telling of their railroad experiences. One man said that on one occasion his train was five hours late. Another declared he was ten hours late in reaching his destination, and a third confessed to thirteen. Senator McCumber, of North Dakota, smiled.

"Reminds me of a story I heard about a railroad in the West," he remarked. "One afternoon, just as a train pulled into a small station, a man was seen wildly galloping down the hill: but by the time he reached the depot the train had disappeared around the bend.

"'What is that train doing, leaving ahead of time?' angrily demanded the traveller. 'It is scheduled to leave here at 3:40, and it is now only 3:30! I have important business to attend to, and——'

"'Say, young feller,' asked the station-agent, critically sizing up the passenger, 'what train was you trying to catch?'

"'Why, the 3:40 train, of course, was the agitated reply of the passenger.

"'Today's train?' asked the station-agent with a questioning squint at the young man.

"'Why, certainly,' answered the passenger; 'what train did you think——'

"'Then I guess you kin ketch it all right,' was the calm rejoinder of the station-agent. 'The train that jes' left was yesterday's train twenty-four hours late.'"

Lamb and the Rude American.

Charles Lamb was once introduced to a rude American, who greeted him with the remark, "I should have known you were Charles Lamb by your stutter."

"N-n-n-no, s-s-sir," said Lamb; "y-y-y-you a-re m-m-mist-t-taken. I-it i-is m-m-my b-b-b-rother G-g-g-g-George wh-wh-wh-who s-s-s-siss-st-tut-tut-tutters, n-n-n-ot I."

William Sulzer, Optimist.

"I am an optimist again," said ex-Governor Sulzer at a banquet in New York. "I was an optimist before my impeachment. Then I lost my optimism temporarily.

"An optimist," the ex-governor added dreamily, "is a chap who doesn't know what's coming to him."

Optimistic Bill.

We award the championship diamond belt for optimism to a resident of one of the rural districts.

As the story goes, an old man was sitting on the roof of his house during a flood, watching the waters flow past, when a neighbor, who possessed a boat, rowed across to him.

"Hello, Bill," he said.

"Hello, Sam," replied the other, pleasantly.

"All your fowls washed away this mornin', Bill?"

"Yes, but the ducks can swim."

"Apple trees gone, too, eh?"

"Well, they said the crop would be a failure, anyhow."

"I see the river's reached above your windows."

"That's all right, Sam. Them winders needed washin'!"

FROM THE POETRY DRAWER.

The great world's heart is aching.
Aching fiercely in the night,
And God alone can heal it, and God alone give light;
And the men to bear that message, and to speak that living word,
Are you and I, my brothers, and the millions that have heard.

Shall we give our soul for clinking gold?
Shall we barter truth for fame?
Shall the right to think for a sum be sold?
Let us bow our heads in shame!

Of all things beautiful and good,
The kingliest is brotherhood;
For it will bring again to earth
Her long-lost poesy and mirth;
And till it comes, these men are slaves
And travel downward to the dust of graves.

Clear the way, then, clear the way;
Blind creeds and kings have had their day:
Break the dead branches from the path;
Our hope is in the aftermath.
To this event the ages ran,
Make way for brotherhood, make way for man.

Disciples Table Talk

Ballard Church, Seattle, In Fruitful Field.

The Ballard Christian Church, Seattle, Wash., formerly entered its new place of worship on Sunday, Dec. 14. Cleveland Kleihauer of the University Church, Seattle, spoke at the morning service on, "Working for God." J. W. Baker, secretary of Western Washington Missionary Society, was master of ceremonies at the dedicatory service in the afternoon. Over $1,300 was secured in cash and in pledges at this service. Considering the fact that the church had already contributed most liberally toward the building enterprise, and had been spurred on by the hope of meeting as far as possible its obligations without the use of credit, the results of the afternoon were most gratifying. This service also had another pleasant feature: The hour gave the other churches an opportunity to participate in the service, and this opportunity was accepted by each of the other eight churches in the city. A. L. Crim, former minister of the church, now of Puyallup, Wash., was the guest of honor at the evening service, and spoke on "The Christ."

Kansas City Church in New Building.

Another beautiful new church edifice in Kansas City was dedicated on Sunday, Feb 1. Wabash avenue Church has been worshiping for four years in a low basement. At an expense of $50,000 the auditorium has been erected. The congregation approached the day of dedication with about $30,000 of obligation unprovided for. Through the careful and thorough preparation made by the pastor, L. J. Marshall, the money raising, led by George L. Snively, resulted in the collection of over $21,000 in pledges. The remaining $9,000 which the congregation will carry as a debt seems light compared to the more than $25,000 debt with which the church was burdened three years ago when Mr. Marshall became pastor. The raising of this old debt and the securing of the funds and pledges for the new building mark Mr. Marshall's pastorate as one of exceptional ability. Instead of building the auditorium the full size of the basement portion which all agree was projected on a scale too large for practicable purposes, a space was left at the front for a terrace which will be used in the summer time for Sunday evening services and social affairs. Wabash Avenue Church is in a growing section of the city. It has no men of wealth, but numbers in its membership a large company of men and women of unusual consecration and intelligence. The Sunday-school is working out the highest ideals of religious education. Relationships of the most Christian kind are cultivated with neighboring churches of various names. The official board and members of Wabash Avenue Church recently instructed the pastor to receive letters from other churches of Christ without making a test of the mode of baptism of the applicants presenting them. The prospects are favorable for the building up of a great church under present leadership. There were 82 accessions to its membership on dedication Sunday, nearly all by confession of faith.

Seventh District, Mo., Has "Aims."

The aims for 1914 in Seventh District, Mo., are: 1. Preaching in every church of the 250 congregations. 2. An offering from each church for each enterprise. 3. An evangelistic meeting in each church. 4. A local "efficiency rally" in each church. 5. A District Mission Offering from each church. This is to be divided between the County and the District, one half being used in the County in which it is raised. Granville Snell, District Evangelist, reports meetings now being held: At Rushville, by M. M. Goode, building debt cleared and 92 added. At Savannah, by R. E. Snodgrass, 90 added. The greatest efficiency and fruitfulness is reported by Mr. Snell in all lines of the work of this important district.

Disciples' Union, New York, Celebrates.

The annual dinner meeting of the Disciples Missionary Union of New York City, will be held this year at Hotel Breslin, February 17, at 7 p. m. Splendid menu and accommodations, music, speeches and fellowship are promised by P. F. Jerome who has the affair in charge.

"Tomorrow."

At Memorial Church in this city on a recent Sunday evening Mrs. Katherine Oliver McCoy read Percy Mackaye's drama "Tomorrow" to a large and deeply interested audience. The play deals with the problem of heredity, as related to the widely discussed theme of sex education. It is a story of deeply moving character, yet free from the sensationalism which marks a large part of the recently issued sex drama. But the lesson is given in all its startling and poignant directness. Miss McCoy lives at Kenton, Ohio. She is a reader of distinction, in wide demand for her Scotch characterizations. It is significant of the needs of the times, and of her own sensitiveness to the duty of public entertainers to deal with important, though delicate themes, that she includes "Tomorrow" in her program.

Spokane Disciple Churches Unite for Work.

A central Disciples' organization in which all the churches of Spokane will be represented is to be organized. Among the important functions of the organization will be the administration of mission and charity work and the oversight of the location of churches to be built in the future. "The forming of a central organization does not necessarily mean that we will take up any additional work," said J. E. Davis of the Central Christian church. "The purpose is to administer more carefully all interests and activities of our denomination in Spokane. The union will be patterned after similar unions at Des Moines, Iowa, and at Kansas City.

Taylor, Tex., Church Plans Improvements.

The church at Taylor, Texas, where W. H. Bagby ministers, after having spent over $800 in repairs and improvements upon the church has decided to spend nearly as much more in equipping the Sunday-school rooms for effective work. The improvements proposed include a furnace, a piano, chairs, floor covering, song books, etc. When this work is completed the church will be one of the neatest and most attractive in the town. A meeting with Hugh McLellan as evangelist and S. W. Hutton, state Sunday-school secretary, as leader of song and Sunday-school worker, is planned for April 5-12.

The offering of this church on Educational day was $117.

Central, Indianapolis, Has a Good Year.

The annual congregational meeting of Central Church, Indianapolis, held January 29, showed one of the best year's work in the history of the church. There was raised for all purposes $14,814.51, of which $2,957.57 was for missions and benevolences. This does not include a personal gift of $1,500 for missions. The number of additions during 1913 was 153, with a loss by death and withdrawals of 62. The average attendance at Sunday-school for the entire year was 497 per Sunday. The attendance is now running from 550 to 600. The members of the official board expressed themselves as highly pleased with the condition of the church.

Central Church, New York, Has New Worker.

Mr. W. E. Givens has been engaged as assistant to J. M. Philputt, of Central Church, New York. Mr. Givens is a graduate of Butler College, Indianapolis, and Indiana University, at Bloomington, Indiana, graduating from the latter institution in 1913. He is now taking the full course in Union Theological Seminary, making a specialty of Psychology and Religious Education, the latter including Sunday-school methods. He is also working for his Master's degree in Columbia University. Mr. Givens is fitting himself to give special attention to Sunday-school work, and work among young people. His time will be given at Central Church, in welcoming the Wabash Avenue Church, Kansas City, Mo.—Dedicated February 1.

Disciples who move to New York City, in leadership of the Sunday-school and other work among young people.

Budget Plan Works in Missouri.

C. A. Lowe, Superintendent of Missions in the Seventh District, Missouri, writes of the success of the Budget system there: "For several years we have been pushing the Budget plan. We have advocated a mission fund, raised any way that seems best to the church, to be distributed among all of our enterprises. From year to year we have suggested budgets. We have had to do this independent of the societies. They have been in competition. Under the old competitive plan the half and fourth time churches could not observe all of the days and remember all of the enterprises. The early bird got the whole worm. Under the Budget plan in this district all of our enterprises now get more money than under the old plan and some of the enterprises get much more. We conceive, however, that the great blessing has accrued to the local churches."

A "Mission Poster," with blank spaces for filling in of contributions to the various causes, is also used in this district with success. The Postor is to be hung in a conspicuous place where it can aid in promoting missionary education.

Independent Benevolent Work Shows Good Report.

Although the Christian Woman's N. B. A. of St. Louis, is an independent enterprise, it submits a good report for 1913. The chief figures follow: Balance January 1, 1913, $383.78; receipts, 1913, $50,306.10; expenditures, 1913, $50,166.88; balance January 1, 1914, $522; expenses of office and administration, including stenographers, postage, printing, Christian Benevolent, etc., $1,822.67, children aided, 1913, 591; mothers aided, 1913, 270; old people aided, 1913, 36; hospital patients, 1913, 1113. Total aided, 2,010.

C. C. Morrison preached on Sunday, Jan. 4, in Union Church, Monroe, Wis. He reports this work as prospering, although there has been no little difficulty in securing a pastor who is willing to enter into the spirit of such non-sectarian work. As temporary supply during the past summer and fall Earle M. Todd, now of Canton, Mo., won the hearts of all, and appreciably strengthened the work. A call has been extended to A. S. Cross, a Baptist minister, who, it is believed, will enter heartily into the union purposes of the congregation. Mr. Cross has begun his work. On Jan. 18 Mr. Morrison preached at Hyde Park church, Chicago, in the absence of Dr. Ames, who was at Harvard. On Jan. 25 he filled Burris A. Jenkins' pulpit at Linwood Boulevard, Kansas City, in the morning and L. J. Marshall's, at Wabash avenue, in the evening, speaking to the crowded hearers that regularly attend these great churches. On Feb. 1 he preached for Graham Frank at Liberty, Mo., in the morning and for Carl Burkhardt at Lexington, Mo., in the evening. Last Sunday Mr. Morrison filled Dr. Powell's pulpit in First Church, Louisville, Ky., while Dr. Powell was discharging his duties as University Preacher at the University of Chicago.

The annual business meeting of the church at West Rupert, Vt., was held at the church on Jan. 6, 1914. A summing up of all funds raised for all purposes showed that over $1,900 has been contributed by the people for the cause of Christ. The church enters the new year entirely free from indebtedness. F. R. Eaton, who has been the minister for the past seven years has tendered his resignation to the official board, and although urgently requested to reconsider and remain with the church, has declined the request and will finish his work early in April. During his ministry a beautiful new house of worship has been erected, and was dedicated free from debt five years ago. Also 106 persons have been received into the membership of the church.

From Geo. W. Brown, Juppulpore, India, dated January 9: "There were 4 baptisms in Damoh on New Year's Day. The first Sunday of December was the annual Thanksgiving service in Bilaspur. On Dec. 4 there were 3 baptisms from caste in Bilaspur, and on Sunday, Dec. 28, there were 12 baptisms, including Herbert Saum, son of the missionary H. C. Saum. Mrs. Hannahbai, the wife of Dr. John Panna of Kota, C. P. died in Harda Dec. 30, 1913. She had been ill with tuberculosis for a long time. She and her husband have been connected with the mission for a number of years. She is survived by her husband and three children."

W. B. Clemmer, of Rockford, Ill., writes that the congregation there is rejoicing in the completion of the new basement addition. Mr. Clemmer is beginning his fifth year auspiciously. Capacity attendances are reported, with Sunday-school of over 300. Under Mr. Clemmer's leadership, Prof. W. S Athearn, of Des Moines, was speaker before the Rockford Sunday-school association in a mid-winter institute. He is a master in his work, Mr. Clemmer reports, and has a great program for constructive religious education. He was a rare treat to the city and all ministers and workers are high in their praise of his service.

Mr. W. F. Kienzle, secretary, reports that the church at Canton, Ohio, raised for all purposes in 1913, $24,648.28. The amount contributed for missions and benevolence was $2,161.93. Five hundred and two were added to the church. The resident membership is 3,274, non-resident, 455. The pastor conducted 60 funerals; the assistants conducted 12. The pastor married 109 couples; the assistants married 18. The average attendance of the Sunday-school was 2,084 per Sunday. P. H. Welshimer began his thirteenth year with the Canton church January 1.

G. I. Hoover has successfully begun his new work as state evangelist of Eastern District, Indiana. During January he held a meeting of three weeks and four days at Dublin, Ind., which resulted in 28 accessions to the church, a largely increased attendance upon the Sunday-school, a men's Bible class formed, and the church otherwise prepared for a larger and more efficient work. Chas. E. Shultz, of New Castle, will minister to this church this year. J. A. Oliver of Eaton, led the singing in this meeting.

Harley Swift has been called to First Church, Hopkins, Mo., where he began January 1. He formerly ministered to the church at Hamilton, Mo. His first Sunday resulted in 4 additions, 2 by letter and 2 by confession. The first Sunday in February, he had 6 more confessions, making 10 additions in all. February 13, a men's banquet will be given, preparatory to an evangelistic campaign which will follow Feb. 15. Secretary Bert Wilson will be the toastmaster and principal speaker.

H. Erwin Stafford, pastor at First Massillon, O., is making a reputation as a lecturer. His illustrated travel lectures on "The Yellowstone National Park," "From Niagara to the Sea," "The Wonders of the Canadian Rockies," "The Glory of Young Canada," are receiving high praise; also his lectures on social interests: "The Right of Every Child to be Well Born," "The World's First Cosmopolitan," and "The Reign of the People." Several humorous numbers are also to Mr. Stafford's credit.

H. E. Van Horn, new pastor at Oklahoma City, reports twenty-five persons added to the church's membership the first three Lord's days. Mr. Van Horn speaks very highly of the monumental work done in this church by J. H. O. Smith, and reports that he left the field "ready for our coming." A series of meetings will be undertaken soon.

Twin Falls, Idaho, church, W. E. Harman, pastor, increased its Sunday-school 20 per cent last year. For the first time in the church's history the year has been closed with all bills paid and a balance in the treasury. The pastor made 1,000 calls, 64 were added to the membership and $3,500 was raised.

L. C. Howe, who has just closed a meeting at Noblesville, Ind., writes enthusiastically of W. F. Lintt, who has been assisting with the music. Mr. Lintt is strong both as chorus leader and soloist. Special men's and women's services were features of the meeting. The Sunday attendance was marked. Added, 45.

Central Church, Richmond, Ind., will build a tabernacle to seat 1000. On a recent Sunday, under Evangelist Honeywell, the Sunday-school raised $1,050 to be applied on this work. Of this the men's class gave about $200. R. C. Leonard is the Richmond pastor.

Some of the topics being discussed by George W. Wise, pastor at Camp Point, Ill., in his own meeting, with J. G. Hostetler as song leader, are: "Giving God a Chance," "The Unavoidable Christ," "Excuses," "What is Christ to Me?" "The Price of Jesus."

M. M. Amunson, pastor at Brooklyn, N. Y., finds time to do social service work. He reports thirty-six noonday shop meetings held. He preached ninety-three sermons and delivered fifteen special addresses, but still found time to make 740 calls, during last year.

The church at Poplar Bluff, Mo., W. M. Baker, pastor, has a present resident and non-resident membership of 635. Last year fifty-eight were added. A total of $5,704.82 was raised for all purposes. The Sunday-school has 400 enrolled.

The work at Taylorville, Ill., is growing so rapidly under George H. Brown's ministry that plans are made to enlarge the building in the spring. Four additions, all adults, are reported for Feb. 1, Sunday-school attendance of 314.

C. G. Brelos, of First Church, Waukegan, Ill., reports that the school there has nearly doubled since Sept. 1, 1913. A basement is being excavated for more room. Six young people recently confessed Christ.

L. J. Marshall delivered a paper entitled "The Church of the Future—the Faith," before the Alliance of preachers of Kansas City and vicinity recently.

E. T. Edmunds, pastor at Jackson, Miss., preached Feb. 1, on a rather novel topic. "Saturday Night Religion."

Independence, Missouri, is the latest city to undertake the "Gospel Team" Movement.

ENCOURAGING FOREIGN MISSIONARY GAINS.

The receipts of the Foreign Society for the month of January amounted to $12,722, a gain on the corresponding month, 1913 of $2,781. There was a gain from every source of receipts except from the Endeavor Societies, which show a loss of only $37.57.

The record for the first four months of the current missionary year shows receipts amounting to $50,750, a gain over the corresponding four months of 1913 of $21,058. And in this showing also there is a gain all along the line except from the Endeavor Societies and from bequests. The former show a loss for four months of $248, the latter, $529. All the other sources of receipts—churches, Sunday-schools, personal gifts, and annuities,—show a gain.

The gain must be increased if we reach $500,000 by September 30.

A STORY FROM REAL LIFE.

The following note was pinned on a very beautiful doll that came to the Cleveland Christian Orphanage with the Christmas donations from the church at Lakewood, Ohio:

"This doll is the sacrifice of an eleven year old girl. With failing health she had to change climate. She has no mother. With her father she has gone among strangers. Her last words were: 'Send my doll to the little orphans and tell them how I loved her and I wonder if they would call her Josephine after me.' "I promised I would ask you." "Mrs. ....."

Little Josephine in giving a prized treasure and in following that treasure with an expression of loving interest sets before us a most beautiful and touching example of genuine giving. We doubt not that already she has been blessed in her search for health.

The work of the National Benevolent Association is a ministry that reaches the needy of all ages and in every part of our land. It is a ministry too that is enlisting the sympathy and support of the benevolently inclined of every section and of all ages from the tiny tot too young to write to the aged too infirm to wield a pen. The rich and the poor give out of their penury and their plenty and the dear Lord is building out of the mites and the thousands a truly great benevolent enterprise.

Donations of food stuff should be sent to the home nearest you. Kindly address all cash offerings to The National Benevolent Association, 2955 N. Euclid Avenue, St. Louis, Mo.

HAMILTON COLLEGE NOTES.

The examinations which terminate the first semester of Hamilton College ended two weeks ago and the new semester has begun. Two hundred and eighty-three students enrolled for the new semester, which is an increase over the matriculation at the beginning of the term, and a slight increase over the enrollment at this date a year ago.

The Domestic Science Department that has been established at Hamilton is attracting a good many students. The equipment is thorough and consists of individual laboratory tables, with hot and cold water and gas; individual ovens and a central gas range for larger experiments. Miss Nell Smith is in charge.

The staff editors for the college annual have the plans for their addition well under way. A schedule for the taking of photographs will be announced this week. Most of the other material for the issue is already in form for the press.

Miss Nell McCoy, who has been teaching in the preparatory department of Hamilton for the past two years, has asked to be relieved on account of ill health. Miss Amanda Alexander, a graduate of Hamilton College and of Transylvania University, will take up Miss McCoy's work for the remainder of the year.

On Sunday evening last in the college chapel the student body received interesting reports from their delegates to the great Student Volunteer Convention in St. Louis, where were gathered over five thousand of the young college men and women of America, who are interested in missions at home and abroad.

A recent guest of the college is Miss Frances Y. Smith, of Columbia University, New York City, who in her capacity as Y. W. C. A. Secretary, addressed the student-body on Wednesday morning, January 28.

Miss Edith Goodenough, head of the Department of Physical Training, is giving a series of entertaining and instructive lectures upon the human body, its functions, and its safeguarding. They are greatly appreciated by the students.

NOTES FROM THE FOREIGN SOCIETY.

Hon. W. J. Bryan, the Secretary of State, has only words of commendation of the Foreign Missionary work after a protracted visit to different mission fields. He was most favorably impressed with our school work in China, and contributes annually to the support of a scholarship in the University of Nanking, through the Foreign Society.

Last week a friend in Illinois made a gift to the Foreign Society on the Annuity Plan. Illinois may always be counted upon to do her part in the great world task. More than $500,000 has been received to the Annuity Funds of the Foreign Society since it was first started.

Secretary F. M. Rains dedicated the new church in Columbus, Ohio, January 18, and will assist T. W. Grafton on dedicating the New Third church, Indianapolis, Ind., January 25.

Mrs. E. A. Johnston, Lotumbe, Africa, says: "Our goods from America are in the Congo, and they came through all right. We have been fortunate, indeed, and so much to be thankful for—health, good fortune and good friends, and God in heaven. What more could two people ask for?"

Dr. E. I. Osgood, Chuchow, China, says: "We have taken pains to push the Sunday-school work this fall till the attendance in regular classes has been running from 350 to 400. We have 16 classes. It is by a long ways the largest in the mission, and I know of no other Sunday-school in this part of China which surpasses it in efficiency, as well as numbers."

During one month Dr. E. I. Osgood, Chuchow, China, treated 84 patients in the hospital, and 1,128 clinical patients, which was an average of 47 patients per day for outside patients and 40 patients all the time in the hospital demanding daily attention.

Dr. W. A. Frymire, writes as follows: "With a bath room as a dispensary, operating room, consulting room, and all out doors as a waiting room we have commenced to practice medicine here in Lotumbe. Yes, and I find plenty of material to practice on, as my patient list includes most every disease I know of and some I do not know. We have started the erection of and hope to have finished in another month a temporary hospital and dispensary that can and will be used as a store room. There is much operation work that needs almost immediate attention. But till the building is finished and we receive a few more instruments we are confining ourselves to minor and emergency surgery. We removed two tumors weighing from 35 to 45 pounds each."

Miss Stella Franklin, Mungeli, India, says: "There are 24 children of Christian families in the school here and about ten more scattered about in the other schools. I am keeping watch of them. The church is now in good condition and several workers are developing fine." STEPHEN J. COREY, Sec.

THE CHURCH COLLEGE AND THE TRAINING OF LAYMEN.

We hear much in these days about needing more ministers. There is no doubt but that there is a great need of more ministers, at least a need of more trained ministers, than we have at the present time. We also frequently hear the church college spoken of in such terms as to indicate that its chief and only business is the training of ministers and missionaries. This is certainly a worthy work and it is undoubtedly a part of the business of the church college to provide ministers for the church.

However, the training of ministers and missionaries is not the only way in which the college serves the church. Much as the church needs ministers, it is evident that she needs trained laymen also. Great as is the work of the college in training ministers, the work of training those who will be consecrated, efficient laymen is equally great. There is an insistant demand on every hand, today, for men who have been efficiently trained in the practical work of the church.

Our new educational vision and standard in the local church, which came about by the advent of the modern Bible-school, has brought great demands to our colleges. The churches everywhere are in need of trained teachers, not simply those who have learned a few facts about the Bible, but those who also know the best methods of teaching and have been trained how to make their knowledge of the Bible of the most service to others. There is an increasing demand for pastoral helpers in many churches. The time is not far distant when most of our churches, that can afford to do so, will have trained pastoral helpers in their employ. These must be trained by our colleges if they are to be efficient.

Then what shall we say of the elders and deacons? The church needs mightily trained elders and deacons. This is the weakest point in the majority of the churches. The officers of the church have not been trained, consequently they are frequently indifferent and ineffective. Wherever you find an elder or a deacon in one of our churches who has been trained in one of our colleges, you will usually find an efficient officer. If the churches had the kind of officers they ought to have they could the more easily get along without the services of the minister, if they are compelled to do so.

The need of officers, teachers, pastoral helpers, superintendents and other workers in every church puts a tremendous responsibility on the college. The missionary societies are asking for a thousand trained missionaries for the home and foreign fields. The local churches are asking everywhere for laymen. How shall our colleges be able to meet these large demands? They can not meet them with their present endowment and equipment. With increasing demands there must be increasing support. We must come to the rescue of our colleges.

THE WORLD CONFERENCE ON FAITH AND ORDER. SUMMARY OF PROGRESS.

1. All communions in the world "which confess our Lord Jesus Christ as God and Saviour" are being "asked to unite with the Episcopal Church in the United States of America in arranging for conducting" a world conference for the consideration of questions of faith and order, as well as those in which we differ as of those in which we are at one.

2. The Episcopal Commission considers its special function as limited to issuing invitations as above. It has invited:

1. The Anglican Communion throughout the world.

2. The important Protestant Communions in the United States, Canada and the West Indies.

3. The important Protestant Communions in Great Britain and Ireland.

4. The important Protestant Communions in Australia and New Zealand.

5. The Old Catholic Churches in Europe.

6. The Moravian Churches in the U. S., England and Europe.

3. The Episcopal Commission is still seeking for the information as to confessions, addresses of officials, etc., needed before other invitations can be sent, but there has been much encouraging correspondence with leading Protestants in Europe, South Africa and elsewhere.

4. Formal invitations have not yet been sent to the Roman or Eastern Churches, but cordial letters have been received from Roman Catholic cardinals, bishops and priests in different parts of the world. The cooperation of the Russian Church has been assured by the Russian Archbishop and Dean in New York, and of the Armenian by an archbishop in Boston.

5. Thirty-five commissions have been appointed in the United States, Canada, Great Britain, Ireland, Europe, Australia, South America, India, China and Japan, and notice of others is expected daily.

6. The Episcopal Commission will not undertake to determine the scope of the conference or the methods of preparation. That is for the joint action of commissions, when appointed, which shall be fairly representative of the whole Christendom, geographically and theologically. Until that is obtained, everything is advisory and tentative. Except the restriction of invitations to those communions which confess our Lord, nothing is yet determined, and no statement, past, present or future, by any commission or any officer thereof is, or will be, final, until approved by Christendom.

7. The conference is not expected to achieve unity directly. It is hoped that by promoting prayer for a common object, personal acquaintance, appreciative knowledge of the tenets of others, and a clearer sense of proportion, a spirit of comprehension will be substituted for that of controversy, and that so the conference will open the way for subsequent direct effort for reunion.

8. No communion is definitely committed, by the appointment of a commission, to anything except a friendly interest and a willingness to advise and to criticize as to the preparations and to seek for what is best in its brethren.

9. Obviously, the conference cannot be held for some, perhaps many years. Nor will preliminary meetings, unless local, be possible, except rarely. Most of the preparations must be made by correspondence, the difficulties and delays of which can only be met by infinite and utter submission to the guidance of God the Holy Ghost.

10. In May, 1913, the executive committee of the Episcopal Commission requested such of the other commissions as found it possible, to send members to discuss problems and methods. That meeting passed the following:

Resolved, That an advisory committee be constituted, composed of one representative of each of the commissions already appointed, to be chosen by each of said commissions, to co-operate with the executive committee of the commission of the Episcopal Church in promoting any preparation preliminary to the work of convening the world conference.

That the commissions which may be appointed by other commissions be invited to appoint representatives on the advisory committee.

11 A meeting on Nov. 19, 1913, of twenty-one members of that advisory committee passed the following resolutions:

A. That the time has come to begin the consideration of the steps to be taken before the topics for consideration by the conference can wisely be formulated.

B. That each member of the advisory committee should recommend to the commission of his communion the immediate consideration of how the following questions should be answered:

(a) What should be the nature of the bodies or groups which are finally to be charged with the duty of formulating topics for the conference?

(b) What can be done by each commission in the way of preparing a statement of the topics which that commission thinks appropriate for ultimate consideration at the conference?

3. That the statements prepared by each commission be sent in to the executive committee of the Episcopal Commission for tabulation for the information and consideration of the advisory committee.

12. It is the writer's understanding that similar partial meetings of the advisory committee will be held from time to time and that future, as well as past, suggestions made by such meetings will be submitted to absent members who will consult their own and other nearby commissions and suggest omissions, additions or other corrections which will again be submitted to all the advisory committees, in person or by letter.

13. Preliminary public discussion of points of difference should be avoided, and will be, if each commission seeks not to establish its own position, but to appreciate the positions of its brethren.

14. If those who will be charged with the formulation of questions for the conference are filled with the Christ love and submit their minds and wills to God the Holy Ghost, many differences will be found to have no real existence, the bitterness of others will disappear, a greater measure of agreement will be found than we now suppose, and we shall all find a deeper, richer life in the one Body of the one Lord.

CHURCH EXTENSION ITEMS.

During the month of December the receipts from the churches were $896.02. This is a gain of $348.87 over December 1912. The receipts from the individuals for December were $3,062. This is a gain of $1,244.29 over December 1913.

The churches are rapidly accepting their apportionments for 1914 so as to raise the $45,000 recommended to be raised by the National Convention at Toronto.

The Board had applications aggregating $113,250 at the December meeting. This will give our brotherhood some idea of the tremendous demands made upon our Church Extension Fund. All of these applications were approved by the State Boards of the States from which they came.

At our meeting January 6th, the following churches were promised loans: Wilkes Barre, Pa., 1st Ch., $5,000; Carrollton, O., $1,500; Indiana Harbor, Ind., 1st Ch., $3,000; Waukegan, Ill., Chapel St. Ch., $4,000; Los Angeles, Cal., Boyle Heights Ch., $7,000, 6%; Flint, Mich., Central Church, $7,500; Denison, Tex., 1st Ch., $5,000, 6%; North Platte, Nebr., 1st. A GREAT AND POPULAR CHURCH MUSIC BOOK

The New Praise Hymnal

EDITED BY GILBERT J. ELLIS AND J. H. FILLMORE

There is no equipment of the church more vitally related to its spiritual development and growth than the kind of hymnal it uses. In other words, a church makes no better investment than the purchase of a good hymnal. It is a serious mistake to buy an ordinary gospel song book for use on the Lord's Day and the Wednesday evening prayer services. Such books cheapen the worship.

The New Praise Hymnal comes as near being the ideal church hymnal for the present day as could well be conceived. It is a handsome book, dignified in appearance and make-up. It embraces in its contents as nearly everything demanded to-day as could be gotten into a book of 600 pages.

The New Praise Hymnal is practical in every way; everything in it is available for use in the average congregation. It contains also what is used by the most advanced churches.

The setting of the hymns and music is engaging to the eye and pleasant to read and sing.

It is a book that grows in favor as it is used. New beauties are discovered from time to time as its pages are tested by use. The hymns and tunes of the church universal are found in The New Praise Hymnal, also the best available Gospel Songs that the modern church has found to be necessary to its various activities.

The New Praise Hymnal is widely used in our churches. We believe it to be the favorite book of the church.

MOTIVES FOR THE MARCH OFFERING.

Gratitude. Recently a friend told a visiting one of the great prayer-meetings of the Christians in Korea. There were sixteen hundred and forty-seven in attendance, and prostrate on their faces, the people prayed for an hour. The visitor could not understand the Korean tongue and asked the missionary in charge what the people were praying for. He replied that there were two great themes running through all their prayers. In the first place they were thanking God with full hearts that he had saved them from heathenism, and in the second place they were interceding that he would use them in helping save the rest of the world. The last thought is corollary to and result of the first. Gratitude is one of the chief springs for stewardship of life and money. If our people were filled with deepest gratitude for God's wonderful gifts to us, our gifts to his work would flow like water. The whole planning for the offering for Foreign Missions should be set in a foundation of thanksgiving. If hearts are overflowing with gratitude there can be no begging—the gifts will come as an expression of joy. The Bolenge, Africa, Christians bring their missionary gifts as a thank offering. They do not need urging, they urge their gifts upon the church. The pastor can do no better in his preparation for the March offering than to remind the people that they are all the product of missions and that all good things in our lives and times came from Christ. Deep gratitude to God will open deep foundations of giving for God.

Need. Imagination is the handmaiden of giving. All cannot see heathenism face to face, but all can grasp its meaning when truly presented. Picture human need in pagan lands. Only a heart of stone would not be melted by the depths of woe in mission fields. The man who does not believe in foreign missions, does not believe in alleviating human suffering. His flinty heart has been untouched by the unmeasured physical and spiritual suffering of a thousand million people. Stir his dormant imagination and make the realization of human need a motive for his response. Pull back the curtain of ignorance which hides his world brethren from his eyes, and sting his conscience with flaming facts. Proclaim the needs of heathen women, the pitiful soul and body slavery of little girls, the degradation and heart hunger of men in non-Christian lands. The severest heart wrench that ever came to the writer, was when he stood with a missionary companion before a great crowd of naked heathen people in central Africa, and realized that for the first time in their lives they were hearing about God. There are a billion such people in the world. It would take 320 years to preach the Gospel to them just once, at the rate of 10,000 a day.

Success. The missionary enterprise is the most successful enterprise in the world today. To deny it is to deny the evident working of God's work. One hundred years ago Morrison baptized his first convert in China. Today there are 350,000 Chinese allied with the church, and tides of Christian influence are changing the whole destiny of that great plastic nation. Thirty years ago to be a Christian in Korea meant to lose one's head. Today a mighty Korean church of 150,000 challenges the world with its devotion and heroism. Carey toiled seven years for his first convert in India and today three million in that land call on the name of Christ. The name of Africa has been changed from the Dark Continent to the Continent of Opportunity. Appeal to the motive of success by telling the story of our Congo mission. The same ratio of growth in America last year would have given us 400,000 converts. A meager force in the Philippines baptized almost one thousand in our mission last year.

Response to the Heroic. How the self-forgetful sacrifice of Ray Eldred in Africa shames our penuriousness! The last word he said to that little Longa church before his long journey from which he did not return, was: "Count no cost too high for Africa." He sleeps beneath the jungle trees of the Equator, but his dauntless spirit challenges us to be men on March 1. He has done what he could for his forest children, have we? Is service to be cheaper than money? Are we to hold our coin more precious than he did his life? Who can think of this dear man's uncomplaining work of love and not put their gifts alongside his heroic personal service? It is a deaf ear indeed that cannot hear the call of distant Tibet as it is voiced in the sacrifice of Dr. Susie Rijnhardt and Zeras Loftus. The graves of G. L. Wharton in India and of Chas. E. Garst in Japan, send their white challenge to the souls of men in this soft age. All that is dear and sacrificial in our past missionary history demands that we shall be honest with God and with ourselves on the first Sunday in March.

The Love of Christ. How the restraint of this motive over-tops all others! Here is the test. If we do not respond to the love of our Lord, then are our souls dead indeed. Let us not hide from the truth, but face it. If congregations are not constrained by the love of Christ to carry out Christ's program, how low has sunk the tide of our Christianity! Would we know the secret of worthy missionary giving? Let us open our souls to the beatific love of the Nazarene. As we see his marred face, his wounded body and his broken heart all suffered in our behalf, will we dare place in his wounded hands an unworthy gift—an unworthy gift for the work which cost him his life?

We hope every church will order March Offering supplies at once and prepare for a great offering March 1.

MEN AND MILLIONS AT ST. LOUIS.

sion in the lobby between sessions. Friends were heard to greet one another with, "Good morning, have you signed the creed?" No reference was made to it in the public sessions. The policy of indulgence toward Mr. Long was apparently adopted by common consent, on account of his having not only conceived the movement in its larger aspect but having also practically determined the conditions under which it was to go forward. It was felt that we were there largely in response to Mr. Long's "challenge" and that the raising of any sort of issue, or even the asking of the question as to what might be the purpose of Mr. Long in elaborating such a creed, might jeopardize the generous gift with which he proposed to start the movement off.

But the colleges are not all satisfied with the vague way in which the matter lies. They are wondering if their participation in the fund about to be gathered puts them under moral obligations to Mr. Long's creed, which, while unobjectionable enough in its contents, is completely opposed in principle to the Disciples' position and temper. If Mr. Long did not intend to create a moral obligation on the part of the colleges for all time to come with respect to the articles of his creed what could have been his purpose in discussing the matter at all in the conference?—this question grew larger and larger in the minds of college men as the conference closed. "We have received many hundreds of thousands of dollars," said one college president, "and not one dollar with a string to it. We will not now take money to which there is attached any theological obligation whatever." He went on to declare that a clear statement of Mr. Long's intention with respect to this matter must be made.

While Mr. Long's gift and personality dominated the sessions of the conference there were many other participants. A session was given over to speeches by home and foreign missionaries. There were Place of Japan, Inman of Mexico, Derthick of the Kentucky mountain country, Garrett of Africa, Olson of Minneapolis, Dye of Africa, Kershner of the Phillipines and others. An evening was devoted to an interpretation of the call for one thousand workers to the colleges, by President Miner Lee Bates of Hiram College; to the churches, by Carey E. Morgan, of Nashville, Tenn.; and to the home, by Mrs. Anna R. Atwater, President of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions.

Wednesday morning was devoted to a consideration of the practicability of the plan to raise six million dollars. Mr. Frank Rowland of the Southern Presbyterian Church showed how it could be done. Mr. J. Campbell White, secretary of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, made the six millions appear very small, indeed, when he reduced it to less than 10 cents per week for the membership of our churches. He made a literally tremendous speech, driving into the consciences of those present the duty of complete consecration to the kingdom of God.

At later sessions the practical problems of the campaign were taken up. A "team" of twenty-five or thirty persons will take one state at a time and thoroughly canvass its churches for individual gifts of $500 and more. It will begin with the colleges in that state, asking for volunteers before asking for money. The volunteers desired are equipped volunteers. To a high school education or its equivalent are to be added a full college course and at least a year of special missionary training, preferably at the College of Missions at Indianapolis. The highest ideals actuate the committee in its choice of missionaries. At the final session addresses were made by Mr. Long and President A. McLean of the Foreign Society. The latter was a classic in its content and profoundly moving in its appeal to the church to undertake tasks that are humanly impossible.

A taxicab procession of twenty-five vehicles took over one hundred of the visitors to see the Christian Orphan's Home, one of the institutions of the Benevolent Society which is to benefit by the proposed six million dollar fund. An exhibition by the one hundred and sixty little ones touched the hearts of all. Mr. J. W. Perry, of Kansas City, made an effective impromptu speech to the visitors and Dr. Medbury of Des Moines told the boys and girls a story which pleased the grown-up people just as well as the little ones. Many comments were heard on the remarkable cleanliness and homelikeness of the place. Mrs. Bettie Brown was introduced by Mr. Perry as the "mother" of all these little ones. Mr. R. H. Stockton of St. Louis, a member of the board of directors of the society furnished the taxicabs for the occasion at his own expense.

The sessions of the committee were much helped by the singing of the famous Y. M. C. A. Quartet which recently returned from a trip around the world and more recently assisted at the Volunteer Convention in Kansas City.

TRUSTING IN RICHES AND TRUSTING IN GOD.

International Uniform Lesson for March 1.

Luke 12:13-34. Memory Verse, 15.

Golden Text.—Where your treasure is, there will your heart be also.—Luke 12:34.

American Standard Bible.
Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons.
(Used by permission.)

(13) And one out of the multitude said unto him, Teacher bid my brother divide the inheritance with me. (14) But he said unto him, Man, who made me a judge or a divider over you? (15) And he said unto them, Take heed, and keep yourselves from all covetousness: for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth. (16) And he spake a parable unto them, saying, The ground of a certain rich man brought forth plentifully: (17) and he reasoned within himself, saying, What shall I do, because I have not where to bestow my fruits? (18) And he said, This will I do: I will pull down my barns, and build greater; and there will I bestow all my grain and my goods. (19) And I will say to my soul, Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years; take thine ease, eat, drink, be merry. (20) But God said unto him, Thou foolish one, this night is thy soul required of thee; and the things which thou hast prepared, whose shall they be? (21) So is he that layeth up treasure for himself, and is not rich toward God.

Verse by Verse.

By C. C. Buckner.

v. 13. One out of the multitude said: This interruption of the deep discourse of Jesus was undoubtedly made by one who, though a listener, had failed to grasp the meaning of the teacher's remarks. Bid my brother divide the inheritance: He was such as those who follow Christ for the loaves and fishes. He sought, not justice, but favoritism.

v. 14. Man: This unusual form of address was used rebukingly by Jesus. Who made me a judge? In His busy life He had not the time, even if he had had the inclination, to concern Himself with such questions. This was a matter for the decision of the council of elders.

v. 15. And he said unto them: Jesus made capital of the discourteous interruption, teaching them the folly of making wealth an end. Keep yourselves from covetousness: Covetousness is an inordinate craving for what we do not possess. It is common to the poor as well as to the wealthy.

v. 16. Spake a parable: There are from thirty to fifty parables in the gospels, according to the range given to the application of the term.

v. 17. What shall I do: The rich do not walk the primrose path. Their souls are ever distraught by questionings. Andrew Carnegie says that, of fifteen multi-millionaires with whom he has intimate acquaintance, not one is made happier by the possession of his millions, while all but two are rendered less happy by the possession of their wealth.

v. 18. This will I do: Money-mad men school themselves to make but one decision with regard to the acquisition of wealth, and that is to acquire more. At the attainment of every financial goal he asks, "What shall I do?" and the subconscious reply is always, "This will I do," which is the only course he has ever pursued.

v. 19 Eat, drink, be merry: But these are not soul foods.

v. 20. But God said: This man lived these "many years" deaf to the voice of God. Now he is compelled to hear His voice.

v. 21. So is he that, etc: It is thus with those who would prefer, to use the expression of Sam Jones, "diamonds in their shirt fronts to stars in their crowns."

The Heart of the Lesson.

By A. Z. Conrad.

A DISCORDANT NOTE.

What a drop! Read the twelfth verse and you are in a high heaven of holy vision. Read the thirteenth verse and you are in the valley of humiliation. Two words furnish the key. In the first, "Holy Spirit." In the second, "Inheritance." Note the contrast. A silent, breathless multitude leaning to catch the soul thrilling words of Jesus! They are lifted to the third heaven. They are revelling in the sublimities of mystery. Spell-bound they heard the call to confession. Awe-struck they listen to the warning against the Holy Spirit's rejection. Hopefully and happily they heard of the Holy Spirit's inbreathing. The heavenly symphony swept them heavenward. Then, the heaven-born music was certainly hushed. A harsh, sharp note in another key was sounded. The discord was painful. "Master, bid my brother divide the inheritance with me." A fly in the ointment. A sharp, piercing thorn in the rose-bower. A dark cloud on the crimsoned East. A black blot on a carefully written page. Alas, it is ever so. This is the despair of the preacher. A sermon that deals with sublimities and then—a question about modes and millinery, dining or driving. From "Holy Spirit" to "inheritance." Your heart beats fast as you urge the claims of the Kingdom and feel you are gripping the soul, when right in the midst of your appeal a question is interjected or an observation is made which tells you that not a word you have spoken has been heard. It is like dropping a diamond into the mire.

THE CHRISTIAN'S BUSINESS.

"Man, who made me a judge or a divider over you?" This was Christ's answer. These words were addressed to the covetous, earthly minded materialist. If he had been wronged he could have appealed to the court. If not wronged, why expect Jesus to turn aside from his high and holy task to satisfy his avariciousness? And yet, it will not do to say if his claim was just, that Jesus had no interest in it. To right wrongs of every nature was a part of his great mission. His method of doing this was not to override or overreach the law. In this particular case we repeat, the evidence is all against the justice of the appeal. It is the business of Christianity itself to arbitrate wrongs. This may be accomplished in various ways without assuming the prerogative of the civil law. The church has a responsibility with relation to the industrial, political and individual evils of our time. The church ought to concern herself with the betterment of human relationships, with social justice, and indeed, with all the material interests of men, yet, the supreme business of the disciple of Jesus Christ is to teach the underlying truths which will lead to both justice and generosity and remove the causes of the iniquities which obtain in the industrial and social world. It is not the function of the church nor is it the teaching of Christianity that we should respond to covetous desire and rob one to enrich another. The great business of organized religion is religion. Social regeneration follows spiritual regeneration. We can correct the evils of our time only by correcting the spirit in the men who produce the evils.

BEWARE OF COVETOUSNESS.

Jesus turns from "him" to "them." "And he said unto them, Take heed and keep yourselves from covetousness." Covetousness is a burning desire to secure what another possesses without a fair equivalent. The whole world has nearly suffered wreck on this rock. Wars of conquest have all been instigated by it. It is the sword that has stricken off the crowns of great rulers. It carries in its train every crime on the calendar. It has despoiled men of property, position and reputation. It murdered Naboth to gain a vineyard. It slew Uriah and made David a murderer. It made Absalom a usurper and a would-be regicide. It led Judas to betray his Lord. It prompted Benedict Arnold to an act which makes his name execrated among men. It makes the place of every statesman insecure today. It lies at the bottom of class-hatred. It is the demon that is urging social revolution. In its spirit it is anarchistic. It develops enmities among neighbors, breaks friendships, wrecks happiness and withers hearts. It is a deadly poison destructive to spiritual health and is a great foe to the happiness of the human race.

THE LARGENESS OF LIFE.

"A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." One life is larger than the whole material universe. All material bounty is subordinate and incidental. Death alone can properly accentuate this thought and fact. The mystery of human life is unfathomable. Life is broad as truth, as long as eternity, as high as heaven, as real as God. We magnify the trivial and exaggerate the insignificant. Life is timeless and measureless. It is a spark of divine fire. It is a part of infinite energy. This is the mystery, We Are, and from which we never escape. How we belittle it when we make property preëminent. What a leap from exalted heights to a dismal depth, from "Holy Spirit" to "inheritance." Our relationship to God defines us. Matter is little, spirit is all.

A RICH MAN'S SOLILOQUY.

"The field of a certain rich man brought forth bountifully and he reasoned within himself saying, 'What shall I do?'" Here was wealth honestly acquired. The man who possesses it concerns himself not with its source or with its sequel, but with the substance itself. His goods become his god. The body is all, the soul is nothing. He lived as though time itself was eternity, and this life all. He reasoned within himself. He did not take counsel with God. He depended upon his own wisdom, and felt no need of a revelation. He did not take counsel with human need round about him. He conferred with his own selfish self and limited his considerations to personal pleasure.

THE LURE OF LEISURE.

"Take thine ease." It is remarkable how universal is the thought that to be perfectly happy one should have nothing to do. No class of people represent so much of peacelessness, restlessness, purposelessness, and fruitlessness as the leisure class. Nearly every man dreams of the time when he can have a little plot of ground, a pleasant little cottage and a sufficient amount accumulated so that he need do nothing but swing in a hammock in the summer and sit by the open hearth in the winter. Men who retire from an active business career find themselves miserable until they come to be actively employed in some kind of service. We are so constituted that the exercise of our forces and faculties is necessary to anything like growth or even contentment. An awakening public sentiment which will mark as a parisite any one who can, but will not work, will be the largest possible blessing to society. No one can excuse himself from indifference and indolence while human need is so great. If inheritance or acquired wealth shall relieve one from the necessity of toil for purposes of accumulation, that person is under immediate obligation to devote himself to social and individual betterment.

THE GOAL AND GLORY.

"Where your treasure is there will your heart be also." The appeal of Jesus Christ is to make the Kingdom first, with the certainty that God will take care of all lesser things. The supreme object of desire commands the entire life. We become thoroughly permeated with the goal which we seek. The objective aim is ever reflecting itself in our thoughts, our feelings and our actions. In very truth we ARE the thing we SEEK to secure. If our goal is an earthly goal our nature will be an earthly nature. If our aspirations are heavenly heavenly qualities will appear in all of our daily relationships. The great truth is this, all that is best in life is directly from the hand of God. A response to his love conforms us to his image. It is literally true that both for this world and the world to come discipleship is the most rewarding thing possible. To believe: "he will give his angels charge over us to keep us in all our ways," to believe that the everlasting arms are about us and beneath us, to know that when we pass through the waters He will be with us, this is life at its bravest and its best. The larger the faith the greater the force.

The Mid-Week Service

By Silas Jones.

TOPIC FOR FEBRUARY 25.

Missions and Union. Matt. 23:8-10.

The only persons whose views on the question of union are entitled to respect are the men and women, at home and abroad, who are trying to face all the problems involved in making Christianity the universal religion. Is Christianity destined to be the religion of all good men? If it is, then what are the marks of a Christian that are neither local nor temporary? The church that is preaching the gospel to the non-Christian people must answer this question for itself. Neither Athanasius nor Luther nor Calvin nor Campbell has spoken the word that binds it.

THE WORD OF THE MISSIONARY.

We send the missionary to tell the good news to the Chinaman, the Japanese, the Hindu, and the African. We examine him carefully as to his fitness for the task. He has to tell us what he believes and we raise an outcry that is heard from one end of the land to the other if the missionary society sends to the foreign field a man who is reported to have notions of his own about the proper pronunciation of our party shibboleths. Now how would it do for the missionary to call us up for examination? He is face to face with the world that does not believe in Christ. What sort of support does he have from us? Is he glad to tell men what we believe about Christ and redemption? Or does he have to apologize for our crude, absurd, and partisan beliefs?

THE WORD OF THE CONVERT.

Converts from Confucianism, Hinduism, Buddhism, and Mohammedanism are not supposed to know all there is to be known of Christianity. They make many mistakes and they need help from teachers who have inherited the best that Christian civilization can give. But they have an experience that must be understood by the teacher of religion. They will not long remain in subjection to the foreign teacher. The Christianity of every race must be studied by the advocate of union. Christ lived his life on earth among Orientals. May we not expect Orientals to contribute something to our knowledge of Christ? They have already done us a service by helping to correct our wooden-headed interpretation of the poetry of the Bible. We may reasonably expect them to give us light on the symbols and doctrines of the Bible. We need not accept uncritically what they have to say. We shall learn more from what they are than from their formal attempts at instruction.

UNITE FOR EQUIPMENT.

The educational institutions needed for the adequate presentation of Christianity to all the world cannot be provided by any one denomination nor by all the denominations working separately. This seems to be the message that comes from the mission field. It is true of the great cities of America. The splendid work that is being done by many of the leading denominations for the redemption of the cities is but a suggestion of what ought to be done. The neglected country communities cannot be reached and helped as their needs require by sectarian rivalry. Ministry to the sick is one of the important duties of the church. The opportunity for this ministry among the races that have no knowledge of science is too great to be appreciated by any but the missionary who sees the afflicted every day. This is a work for all Christendom. It should be done for the sake of the people and not for the exaltation of an ecclesiastical organization. Of course the church that helps in this service will be blessed but its first thought should be directed to the relieving of suffering, not to its own glory before men. What sort of men and women are needed on the mission field? The best that Christianity produces.

The Highway to Efficiency

in the Sunday School is

The Bethany System

What some of our Leaders say of it:

"Nothing Could Pry Us Loose"

We began using the Bethany Graded Lessons at their first issuance and have increased the supply from year to year as the literature for all grades was published. There is nothing in the series that is not now used by our school. Nothing could pry our superintendents and teachers loose from these lessons. They meet the needs of pupils of all years and make the teacher's work a joy. We have no word with which to express our satisfaction with the series.

H. H. HARMON,
First Church, Lincoln, Neb.

"As Nearly Perfect as Can Be"

We have used the Bethany Graded Lessons for three years, and the longer we use them the better we like them. They are the latest and best thing in Sunday-school material, and when all of the text books have been prepared it will offer a Sunday-school course as nearly perfect as can be. They certainly make teaching and learning easy, and cover in a most adequate way the whole ground of education in Christian service. The teachers' text books are especially valuable and constitute in themselves a course in Sunday-school pedagogy.

H. D. C. MACLACHLAN,
Seventh Street Church, Richmond, Va.

"Thoroughly Edited"

I have recently had the pleasure of examining closely a set of the Bethany Graded Lessons, together with a recent copy of "The Conquest." I want to congratulate you upon the high quality of this literature. It is certainly a great satisfaction to feel that we are now able to put into the hands of all our Sunday-school pupils, material so splendidly classified and so thoroughly edited as is the above mentioned.

L. J. MARSHALL,
Pastor Wabash Ave. Church, Kansas City, Mo.

"We Would Not Turn Back"

We are using the Bethany Graded Lessons. We would not turn back. The service our Sunday-school specialists are giving us as represented in this course is making a new day in religious education.

FINIS IDLEMAN,
Pastor Central Church, Des Moines, Ia.

"Unanimously the Bethany Series"

After a campaign led by Miss Eva Lemert of Kansas City, Mo., resulting in the thorough grading and departmentizing of the school, we had to decide the matter of graded helps. A committee of three was appointed, consisting of the pastor, superintendent and one member of the Executive Committee. This committee made an individual examination of lesson helps and decided unanimously in favor of the Bethany series, arriving at their decisions independently and solely upon the merits of the literature. So far as I know these lessons are giving entire satisfaction.

EDGAR DeWITT JONES,
Pastor First Church, Bloomington, Ill.

"Nothing to Compare With Them"

We have been using the Bethany Graded Lessons from the time you began to publish them and we are very highly pleased with them. We have often had occasion to compare them with the publications of other houses and thus far can say we have found nothing that compares with them. I am teaching a young men's class in the course, "The World a Field for Christian Service," and am glad to say that it seems to me the best adapted for young men of high school age of all courses I have ever seen. My class is becoming very enthusiastic over it.

P. J. RICE,
Pastor First Church, El Paso, Tex.

"Have Created Enthusiasm"

Over a year ago our school adopted the Bethany Graded Lessons, upon vote of our teachers, who had examined personally the texts for their respective grades. They are a delight to all. The missionary lessons appeal very strongly to pupils and teachers. The first year Senior lessons have created enthusiasm on the part of both pupils and teachers I most heartily commend the Bethany Graded Lessons to all who may think of grading their schools or have found other lessons unsatisfactory.

T. E. WINTER,
Pastor First Church, Fulton, Mo.

"Delighted"

Our Sunday-school, which has lately begun the use of the Bethany Graded Lessons, seems to be delighted with them. I have heard no word of unfavorable criticism and very many words of appreciation. Our teachers like the form and material of these lessons.

GRAHAM FRANK,
Pastor Liberty, Mo.

"Best on the Market"

We consider the Bethany Graded Lessons for the Beginners and Primary department the best on the market of our own brotherhood and second to none of other communions. Congratulations!

J. J. TISDALL,
Pastor Wilson Avenue Church, Columbus, O.

The Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse is fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System, published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, the Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

The Imperative of Success

"I am not bound to win, but I am bound to be true. I am not bound to succeed, but I am bound to live up to what light I have."

Who said that?

Abraham Lincoln said it.

Everybody knows that.

When, where, how and to whom did he say it?

Nobody knows.

In what speech, document, or proclamation did he say it? In what book of his writings is it recorded? Where is the original of it?

We will give you five years' subscription free if you can find it and prove that Lincoln really said it.

Yet the sentiment is such as Lincoln might have expressed. It does not sound unlike him. It is good enough and true enough for him to have said. He was placed in a position not wholly of his own choosing, and surrounded by conditions very largely beyond his control, and was set to do a task that might have been made impossible through combinations of circumstances quite beyond his own responsibility. He might have failed, and still have done his duty.

"Be sure you're right, and then go ahead," is good advice, so good that it cannot always be followed. There are assurances of right that carry no certain promise of success to the individual aspirant. All great enterprises call for faith, and faith has its inevitable hazards.

Yet there is a sphere in which success becomes obligatory. There are times when we have no right to say, "This course is right, whether it succeeds or not," because the question of ultimate success must enter into consideration in determining what is right. There are some things which it will be right to undertake if we are sure we can succeed, which will not be right if they involve great peril of failure.

For instance: An inexperienced engineer has no right to start down the track with a locomotive which he cannot control. He must possess the ability to succeed, or it is his duty not to start.

"Do right though the heavens fall!" Amen! But if the doing of the deed cause the heavens to fall, can we be sure that it is right? Shall we not consider as an element in the rightness of our course the question of the fall of the heavens?

A general has no right to lead his army against impregnable breastworks; if he does so, and loses, he is court-martialed and shot. It is his duty to win by other means, even by retreat if necessary; he is bound to succeed in something.

The nations of the world, before accepting a new flag upon the seas, ask of the probable success of the new cause. Can it win its way to independence? If it cannot, it is not entitled to recognition.

There are times when the government de facto must be accepted as representing government de control. God is under the mightiest of all obligaceed on the assumption that much that exists is right because it is tolerated, the obligation becomes the greater to make that which exists the thing that ought to be.

We are at liberty to say, and with all reverence, that just as no incompetent person has a right to build and start a locomotive which he cannot control, so God has no right to make worlds which jure; and because the world is compelled to pro- He cannot save. The salvation of the world bemade a world too great or too bad for himself to comes an infinite imperative, and a divine certainty, because the world was built by a great God and a good God, who would on no account have tions to succeed. God is bound to be true; but God is also bound to succeed. He shall not fail nor be discouraged. He shall bring forth victory unto truth.

The Apostle Paul ran in a race. Such was his figure. But he ran to win. He entered for the prize and was sure he was to win the prize. He entered into a contest, a fight. But he fought to succeed. He fought as one who expects to win, not as one that beateth the air. "So run that ye may obtain," was his exhortation. Success was imperative.

There are certain spheres in life in which success is problematical, but that fact must not be permitted to weaken in our minds the mighty truth of the imperative of success. We can succeed in self-mastery. Our bad habits are not to be accepted as inevitable and life-long companions. We can succeed in any good thing necessary to the welfare of the universe. No evil is to be accepted as an ultimate fact. The same mighty spirit of moral earnestness which refuses to accept either the North or South Pole as unconquered leaves nothing in the moral universe opposed to God and righteousness which we are to accept as eternal.

Both we and God are bound to win!

Receiving the Christ

A Sermon Preached in Columbus, Ohio, on the Text: "But as Many as Received Him, to Them He Gave the Right to Become Children of God." John 1:12.

BY WASHINGTON GLADDEN.

THE text means that Jesus restored those who accepted his teachings to their right relations to God. There is a pretty strong tendency among human beings to get into wrong relations with God; to be practically estranged from Him; and what Jesus did for those who received Him was to get them out of the estrangement and indifference into the attitude of affection and trust and receptive fellowship. That is the right relation of sons of a father.

I trust that many of those who hear me are in this right relation. They want to know God's will and to do it. They know, of course, that they never do it perfectly, but it is their honest purpose to do right and right is God's will. And those who are in this state of mind will acknowledge that it is through Jesus Christ that they have come into it. It is what Jesus Christ has told them of the Father and what he has shown them of the Father in his life and in his death, that has brought them into this filial attitude before the King of Heaven. Certainly this was what Jesus sought to do for all men. Those for whom he has done it are Christians in the deepest and truest sense of the word. It would seem, then, that they must have received Christ, for the text says that it is to them who receive him that he gives the right to call themselves the sons of God. This brings us to the question which I wish to consider with you: What is it to receive Jesus Christ?

NOT THEOLOGICAL SYSTEM.

The phrase does not include the acceptance of a system of theology. It does not require of us the formulation or the adoption of any metaphysical theory of his person or his nature. We need to know all we can about this great personality; but it is not needful that we should sound the depths of His being or explore the recesses of His consciousness. The men whom Jesus gathered about him and attached to himself were certainly not required to have a correct or adequate theory of his person before they named him. In fact, none of them had any such theory. When Simon and John and James and Matthew accepted Jesus, there was very little theology in the operation. As time went on their views about him changed; He grew upon them wonderfully. By constant companionship with Him for three years, by sharing in the ministry to which he called them, by getting the impress of his life upon their lives they came to entertain theories about him probably quite different from those which they held at the beginning; but when He first called them, their ideas about Him were not exalted. They came to believe, for one thing, in the course of those three years, that He was the Messiah; but that was a political rather than a theological conception. The Messiah, according to the expectation then prevailing, was to be a temporal ruler; that was their expectation. When he was put to death without restoring the kingdom to Israel, they were heart-broken.

They believed, as Nicodemus said, that He was a teacher sent from God; they believed that He had something to tell them about the deepest things in their own lives that they needed to know; but the real attraction that brought them to Him was not intellectual, it was spiritual. It was what they felt Him to be that appealed to them. There was something in Him that touched them and awakened them, and aroused their better nature, and brought them to themselves. What it was they did not try to tell; it was something that made them better men. They took Him for what He was, without analyzing or formulating Him; probably they could not have done that if they had tried. After they had been with Him awhile they came to think as He thought, to feel as He felt. "Christ," in Paul's strong words, "was formed in them!" They took on his character, just as any loving, admiring, receptive nature takes on the impress of a great soul with which it is brought into confidential and receptive relations.

JESUS GAVE UNDERSTANDING.

They heard Him tell a great deal about His Father, who, as He constantly told them, was their Father, too; nay, they came to see how absolutely was His trust in the Father; how perfect was His fellowship with the Father, and they came to feel as He felt and to trust as He trusted. Probably this change in their feeling toward God was little less than revolutionary. Probably they had thought of God as a distant monarch seated on a throne of awful grandeur, to whom there was access only through the blood of slain beasts and the smoke of burnt offerings; but Jesus made them understand the Fatherhood of God, and led them into that filial feeling in which they knew that they had a right to be called the sons of God. When this has been done for any man—when he has been brought to realize that he is a son of God, and to enter into the comfort and peace which belong to the sons of God, the good of life is his; it is well with him for this world and all worlds.

I am speaking to some who have not yet received Jesus Christ, but who ought to receive Him, and I am hoping that the simple story which I have tried to tell may show them their way to Him. Some of them have not received Him because they have understood that they must be prepared to accept some elaborate metaphysical theory of His person, but I hope that I have made it clear that this cannot be true. The idea that a man must get his theology all formulated before he begins to be a Christian is about as absurd as anything can be. It is not the way of Jesus, that is clear. He always insists that life must come first, then philosophy. First get your facts, then frame your theories to fit them. Experience is the foundation of doctrine, not doctrine of experience. "If any man will do the will of God he shall know of the doctrine."

You may receive Him, nay, I think that you ought to receive Him in very much the same way that these men did. You cannot, indeed, associate yourselves with Him in just the manner they did, but essentially the same experience may be yours. His character and His life are in full view, and about these you are in no more doubt than the fishermen of Galilee were. What kind of character this was, what was the manner of this life you know very well. About this there is no question anywhere. The picture of that life in its essential elements, is before the thought of the world. Men may dispute about the doctrine of the person of Christ, they do not dispute about His life. Doubters, agnostics, men of all creeds and men of no creed make haste to confess that this is the one figure of history which represents the highest ideals of humanity. John Stuart Mill was counted an unbeliever, but he said that it would be difficult to find any maxim of human conduct better than this —live so that Jesus Christ would approve your life. There is no question but what the subtle, pervasive, penetrating power of this life has done more to influence human character and human society than all other moral forces which have appeared on this planet. Christian ideas, Christian influences are leading the nations today, are shaping the history of the world.

CHRIST WOULD BE FIRST.

Not to dwell on these larger effects of the character and upon the life of the world, I am sure that everyone who reads this feels that this great love of man represents to him the noblest and dearest elements. Before that Life we all bow down, crying with the poet:

"Oh who like thee, so calm, so bright,
Thou son of man, thou light of light,
So meek, forgiving, godlike, high,
So glorious in humility!"

If He were here in your town today, in just the character in which you now conceive Him, and if you wanted to be a better man or a better woman, if you were fighting your own weaknesses and meannesses and wanted to get them under your feet; if you were bearing some heavy burden of disappointment and sorrow and needed comfort; if you wanted inspiration, encouragement, the clearing of your ideals, the bracing of your purposes—and you could get to Him, you would go to Him—to Him before any other being who has ever lived in this world. Don't you know that you would?

Of course, if you wanted to be foul—if you wanted to live the life of the greedy and heartless and frivolous and foul—if you wanted to live the life of the sybarite or the sponge or the sharks, you would not go near Him; but if you were sick of your selfishness and foolishness and wanted to be right through and through, to be your true self, and not that counterfeit self which you often impose on the world—He is the one to whom you would go, if you could get to Him. "Yes," you would say, "I can trust Him. He will not flatter me; He will not spare me; He will not despise me; He will tell me the truth; He will show me the way. If anybody can help me to be the man I ought to be, He is the one!"

COMMANDS CONFIDENCE.

In truth, my friends, this Jesus whom you know, this conception of Him which you are holding in your minds, does command your confidence, does appeal to all that is highest and best in your nature. You see in Him manifested the qualities and elements of character of which, in your highest and best moments, you wish that you were the possessors. Is not this true?

Well, then, will you not receive Him—this Jesus whom you know—just as those fishermen and publicans did, and let Him come into your life and live with you? You don't need to define Him—that is not what you do to a friend; the beginnings of friendship are not in psychological analysis; they go deeper; they are insights, appreciations, the deeper affinities of soul. Take the Jesus whom you know, the Jesus who stands before you on the pages of the Book; the Jesus whose character and life are pretty clearly outlined in your thought—take Him into your life and live with Him. Recall Him often to your mind, in the hours of toil and temptation, learn to see things with his eyes, to correct your judgments every day by letting the light of his character shine on them. It will be well for you to refresh your memory of what He was and said and did by the record in the Gospels; indeed, I think you will be sure to do that, but it is not the written word so much as the realized Presence that you will find to be a power in your life.

Is not this thing perfectly rational, perfectly practicable? Could you not accept this character, this life, in this way, as an abiding influence in your life? And do you not believe that it would help you, as nothing else could, to be good men and women, to be your real selves, to get away from your weaknesses and meannesses, to be strong and brave and clean and free?

Now if you would do this, just this simple thing, you would be Christians, real, genuine Christians. Your opinions and beliefs would take care of themselves; you do not need to be anxious about them; those who live with Him awhile are likely to have good grounds for right opinions about Him. You would know, too, as those disciples of the old time knew, that you had a right to call yourselves the sons of God. That great Son of God with whom you were living—your Elder Brother—would make that very clear to you.

And what a glory there is in that, if we can only believe it! We can be men and women. We can live our life right out, without weakness or fear. We need not be afraid of what men can do to us. We can speak the truth and shame the devil. We can fight the good fight knowing that we shall be conquerors and more than conquerors.

Well, is it worth while?

Is there anything else that is worth while?

Recruiting the Church

An Appeal for An Evangelism That Works All the Time and Through All Organizations.

BY O. F. JORDAN.

AFTER five years and more spent in the care of all the churches in our great metropolis, I find myself about to go back to my first love, the pastorate of a single church, with outside distractions eliminated. In the past five years I have seen between twenty and thirty ministers come to Chicago and go again. I go back to my pastorate with a serious purpose to profit by the strength and weakness of these men who have formed a part of the procession in our city pulpits.

It seems to me that nothing holds us back more in our churches than our lack of a clearly defined evangelistic program. The old revivalism has died the death in these five years. Our Laymen's Evangelistic organization that once brought great men like Chapman and Gypsy Smith to Chicago has ceased to be interested. In my own suburb, the Mecca of Methodism in the United States, there has been but one revivalistic effort in seven years, and that was fruitless, though receiving the full coöperation of all our Methodist churches.

THE OLD REVIVALISM PASSING.

The prejudice against the old revivalism has become so great that we can no longer hold the sane helpful meetings with brother pastors preaching, which used to be so serviceable in our churches. In twenty years the Evanston Church has had some of the brightest men in the brotherhood holding meetings. They have represented every theological point of view among us. None of these meetings have brought twenty people into the church since the initial effort by Brother Darst of sainted memory.

Meanwhile the practical interests of my church are clamoring for more church members. The financial secretary tells me that $4,200 was too much to raise from our 130 members last year. The burden must be divided among more people. The Sunday-school superintendent says we must improve our teaching force by having a larger group to select teachers from. The religious souls in the church are grieved that not so many come to Christ in loving consecration as we have a right to expect. How shall we find a new evangelism that is at once religious and effective?

We believe that we find our answer, in making the whole church with its organizations evangelistic.

First of all the church must possess that quality of piety which will be desired by all who behold. No one ever gets an invitation to join the Free Masons. The reputation of the order has been its own means of propaganda. The church was once the wonder of its heathen neighbors. Roman writers exclaimed, "How these Christians love one another!" This reputation drew men to seek a religion whose espousal meant persecution and death. When we have a better religion, we shall have an easier way to the heart of the community in evangelism.

SPIRITUAL HOSPITALITY NEEDED.

Then our congregations must be spiritually hospitable. One man recently criticised a pastor's work by saying that his hundred additions would not give two hundred dollars a year. Is there not a Pharisaism abroad in protestant churches which would welcome only the well-to-do and the socially desirable? A new church member is not to be judged in the same way as a new club member.

The Sunday-school in the long run must be our chief evangelistic dependence. But even large Sunday-schools are often barren from an evangelistic point of view because the teachers are interested in sacred history and geography more than in bringing souls to Christ. We are now organizing out of our school a pastor's class in which we shall follow the catechetical method in giving the children over twelve the essentials of the Christian gospel. Seven years ago we inducted into the church in a single class eighteen children. The opportunity is ripe again. Those who are thus indoctrinated have proven to be the truest of all converts and the future pillars for the church.

EVERY ORGANIZATION AN EVANGELISTIC AGENCY.

We are undertaking to tell every organization that it must conceive itself as being an evangelistic agency. The Men's club reaching new men through its monthly lecture must bring these men later under the influence of the gospel. The Ladies' Aid Society finds some women more interested in sewing and sociability than in sermons. The Aid Society has not done its chief work when it pays for the new pulpit carpet. If it is to justify itself permanently in the church program, it too must do religious work, and further the interests of the gospel. We have constantly taught the Christian Endeavor Society that part of its success is to be measured by the new people, people who are introduced into the general fellowship and thus brought under gospel influence.

The wise fisher of men comes to know the value of little traits of human nature. When a man is about to join the church, there is a splendid opportunity to bring his friend in with him. Sometimes this may extend in a few days to a circle of a dozen congenial souls who have found the motive of friendship reinforcing the other flagging motives. One pastor visits on Saturday always his prospective members, that the promise given may lose none of freshness before the Lord's day. It is useful at times to make lists of people. There will be a list of Disciples in the community not members of the local church. There will be a list of people of other denominations who for various reasons do not seem to be able to affiliate with their own people as easily as with ours. There will be a list of prospective confessions. It will startle almost any pastor to make a list of the "brothers-in-law" and see how numerous it is.

The converts are mostly won by personal work nowadays. Even the old revivalism has come to depend upon this. The new evangelism must reinforce the personal evangelism of the pastor, with that of other effective personal workers. There may not be over three men in his church that the pastor might depend upon for this kind of work. If that be all; let him gather them together and make them partners in the holy enterprise. It is such a company as this that John Timothy Stone of the Fourth Presbyterian Church, Chicago, meets once a week, and from their labors come new members every Lord's day.

The social work of the church can be conceived as a re-inforcement of evangelism in two ways. In the first place it is often the best way to bring the unchurched to the church building for the first time. In the second place the reputation of the church for service makes the community speak well of it, and as we have seen, a church's reputation has much to do with its evangelism.

There are many irreligious things in churches which must be driven out before there can be any successful evangelism. A church that puts its budget above its religious life, and begs incessantly is not attractive. The irreverent church cannot attract to itself truly religious souls.

We must evangelize, then, not only because we need the new people for our practical tasks in the kingdom but more especially because the spread of the rule of Christ to every heart is the chief business of the church. In these transitional days we have been made almost to despise our chief business by the bad ways we have gone about it. It is now incumbent on every devout spirit in the church to find a way to greatly hasten the day "when every knee shall bow and every tongue confess."

Gaining or Losing?

An Inquiry, Some Pessimistic Interpretations, and Some Optimistic Conclusions.

BY ELLIS B. BARNES.

IN a recent issue of one of our church papers appeared three related contributions which were exceptional because of their diversity. In one of them, written by a well known evangelist, is a depreciation of what we know as the social gospel, and a strong appeal for preaching what is known as the "simple gospel." On another page is an essay by a pastor on the subject, "Saving Souls and Society." While in the third is a quotation from Dean Shailer Mathews in an address to the Federal Council at Baltimore, which is wholly at variance with the main thesis of the essay by our evangelist, which deals with the present condition of the churches. I am impressed by the varieties of opinion, all in one issue of the paper. It may be that the editor is sanguine enough to believe that there is the deepest unity in the widest diversity.

A GLOOMY OUTLOOK.

Our evangelist dips his pen in gloom to describe the condition of the church of this present year of grace. Well may we ask, "Why have these woes come in upon us?" Read his article and learn!

> There is a lack of conscience in pulpit and pew. There is a sleeping paralysis among the people of God. Inactivity and indifference characterize the churches, all bodies, on three continents. There has not been such a depression in church work since the days of Luther, as we are now experiencing. Our secretary of home missions gravely informs us that sixty per cent of our churches are decreasing in numbers and activity. Of this number 40 per cent are dying. In twelve counties in southern Missouri there are seventy-five empty church buildings that twenty years ago were filled with live, energetic congregations. Current expenses are harder to raise than for years; debts accumulate for odds and ends, while the rank and file of the church give nothing. . . . . Under these conditions it is natural that the evangelistic services are not wanted. There is not any real concern about trying to bring people into the kingdom. There is but little attraction held out to the man of the world who beholds the army of God asleep upon its arms.

This is as dreary a picture of the church and of church conditions as I have ever seen. If it were a true one, well might we hang our harps on the willows and refuse to lift up our voices in song; well might we pray that the desolations of Zion should give way to the beauty of the garden of the Lord. We should adopt the spirit of heaviness for the garments of praise. But we read that description with interrogations. We should like to know on what data the home missionary secretary based his conclusions; whence his figures? "Sixty per cent of our churches decreasing in number and activity," is no small number. Set by the side of that "sixty" the "forty" that are dying or dead, and we have a formidable array of defeat. What if the enemy should learn of this condition!

Rev. E. B. Barnes.

He will slay us while we sleep. The pith goes out of my hopes. I will not believe that what is called a disappearing brotherhood is to be that kind of a tragedy. The figures are not correct; the secretary may be a mathematician, but figures, on occasion, are of all terrestrial things the most flexible. They can be made to tell any tale. Remember it was demonstrated by figures that no steamship could carry enough coal to ferry her across the Atlantic, but steamships with bursting bunkers threw calumny in the teeth of the mathematicians and ploughed their ways through tons of liquid emerald. So far as figures were concerned the mathematicians were right; so far as facts were concerned all of them might as well have been stark and stiff beneath the steamer's keel. The fatal fascination of figures, especially religious figures that hold the truth in contempt at times, is upon us all.

"THE PRESENT AGE THE WORST EVER."

There has never been an age in which this mournful and despairing comment about the decline of the church has not been heard. The present age is always the worst ever. That's because we know it better than any other. But we look back to the good old days and wish they might return, though if they did we would likely take ship the next morning for the seclusion of some deserted isle. When men demand a Wesleyan revival, I wonder if they think of the atrocities of the age that made John Wesley necessary. In his day the hangman with a crowbar broke every bone in the criminal's body, maybe before breakfast, for the purpose of upholding the majesty of the law. It is a mistake to suppose that the church is on its last legs in our time or that we are only a furlong or two from the pit. Both church and age are better today than they have ever been.

A GENUINE REVIVAL DESIRED.

"Under these circumstances it is not surprising that evangelistic services are not wanted. There is not any real concern about bringing people into the kingdom." I am sure all the churches want evangelistic services, though they may be weary of the old evangelistic methods. It is easy to confuse a dislike of methods with a dislike for an evangelistic message. I freely confess that the churches are not as deeply concerned about saving the world as they should be, but possibly our evangelistic campaigns may have done something to chill their enthusiasm. There is a concern in the churches for additions, as the ease with which pulpits are vacated when growth is not apparent, will show. The ministers are really anxious to see people added to the churches, and I believe they have no greater joy than to enter into a genuine season of revival. But there is a great distrust of modern evangelism for some reason or other, and that may cause congregations to postpone a revival from year to year in the hope of finding something better than they have yet known.

Contrast with this gloomy picture of the church, the utterance of Dean Shailer Mathews, as reported in the same issue of the paper, in his address to the Federal Council at Baltimore:

> "The church was never so much alive in its history as it is today. In the last ten years it has seen an awakening and an increase in enthusiasm which has not been seen since the time of Luther."

Both these pictures cannot be true. We must choose the one that appears to be true. Who of these two men is the more competent to judge? Who has had the wider experience and who must have the broader outlook? It is singular that

The Book World

A Department of Reviews and Literary Notes.

BY ARTHUR GORDON.

A West Pointer in the Land of the Mikado. By Laura DeLany Garst. It is one of the satisfactions of our missionary work among the Disciples, that in addition to the personal knowledge of the missionaries gained through such visits as they make to the churches when home on furlough there is coming into form an important missionary literature of a biographical character, which interprets the lives of some of those workers who have ceased from their labors here and whose works follow them. Charles E. Garst was happy in the circumstances of his life, in the privilege of devoting himself to missionary service, which from the very first was his ambition, and in crowning his career with years of untiring and significant service in Japan. But he is also happy in the fact that his companion through those splendid years is carrying on so nobly the work he began, and by her literary labors is interpreting to a far wider circle than in the days of her actual mission work the story of consecration and missionary enthusiasm of which the Garst family has been the living embodiment. It must be a satisfaction to those who have entered into life that their work falls into competent and loving hands to complete. "To live again in souls we leave behind is not to die." Mr. Garst was educated at West Point to enter the army, but in the course of his early service in the west he became acquainted with the purposes of the Disciples and later was baptized in the church at Dayton, O. While still in the army service he was married, but all the time his mind was set upon missionary work. He had hoped to go to Africa, but Japan presented an opportunity which finally enlisted his life-long activity. The book is a delightful, wholesome, intimate and inspiring picture of the life of this devoted family. Traversing the Pacific, stopping for a while in Yokohama, then penetrating into the almost unknown regions of northern Japan, spending four years in Akita at a time when foreigners were held in suspicion and a hundred inconveniences were faced that now are unknown, these missionaries with others of their company wrought nobly at the foundations of Christian work in the land of the Mikado.

But this is not the place to tell the story of a life that has entered deeply into the record of missions in Japan, and is one of the priceless possessions of the Disciples. The book must be read to secure that pleasure. It is now a significant fact that Mrs. Garst is engaged by pen and voice in this country in continuing the work of missionary education, and that her daughter, Gretchen, has become a member of the missionary force in that far off Akita where her parents laid the first foundations of a Christian order. A foreword is supplied by Dr. Medbury. The present reviewer hopes that the next edition of this admirable volume will contain a map of Japan. (Revell, $1.25 net).

History of Religions. By George Foot Moore. The author of this book, the latest volume in the International Theological Library, is professor of the History of Religion in Harvard University. It was originally the purpose of the publishers to devote a single volume to this subject, but the completion of the six hundred pages of this book still leaves untouched the three most important of the historical religions, namely, the Hebrew religion, Christianity and Mohammedanism. These will accordingly appear in a second volume. The present treatment includes the faiths of China, Japan, Egypt, Babylonia and Assyria, Zoroastrianism, the Greeks and the Romans. It is apparent that a field so vast as this, perhaps the most inclusive of any in the range of human scholarship, could not be covered at first hand by any one worker. Yet Prof. Moore, who is a specialist in the field of Semitic history and religion, has brought to a study of the other faiths an enthusiasm and industry that makes this volume as nearly an authoratative utterance as could be written. It is the most compact and useful volume of its character in existence. It betrays nothing of the spirit of partisanship or prejudice, but brings to the inquirer the endeavors of an open-minded and sympathetic investigator. Perhaps one who is solely concerned with the religion of some one land, like India or Egypt, might wish for a fuller treatment than is possible in these crowded pages. Particularly is this true in regard to the presentation of the materials of the various sacred books in which these religions have expressed themselves. But this would have been aside from the author's purpose, and to compensate for this there is a satisfactory bibliography. In reading this volume one is constantly impressed with the close relationships sustained by the different faiths. Their earliest manifestations have much in common. Animism, fetishism, polytheism are the almost universal preliminaries of the more rational and finished expressions of religion in most lands. Of course even the Hebrew faith which supplies the soil and back-ground of Christianity is no exception to this rule. But the student of religion perceives that the first features of religion are not necessarily its origin or cause. Music first expressed itself in very rude terms, but they were not the causes of music in human life. Art has very immature and unpromising beginnings, but these are merely the results of the effort of primitive man to express an emotion that is eternally operative in the soul. The same in an even richer sense is true of religion. It employs imperfect methods of expression at first, and seizes upon social customs and political institutions to give ampler voice to its heart in the process of its growth. But its causes are far deeper than these expressions, and through its ministries the nature of man under every condition and in every land cries out for God and not in vain. Of this the present volume is a scholarly and satisfying record. (Scribner's, $2.50 net).

The New Era in Asia. By Sherwood Eddy. The author of this little volume, the latest publication of the Missionary Education Movement in the United States and Canada, is the Y. M. C. A. secretary for Asia, and is at present on a visit through this country reporting the experiences of a remarkable missionary tour made by Dr. Mott and himself last year through the lands of the Orient. The immediate effects of that visit were almost beyond measure astonishing. In most of the larger cities of India, Burmah, China, Korea and Japan very large audiences, chiefly of the student class, eagerly listened to the addresses of the visitors, dealing in plain and unmistakable terms with the needs of those lands and the power of the gospel to solve the pressing questions of individual and social life. In fact last year was a wonderful year for the Orient. It was the occasion of Dr. Henderson's Haskell lectures through the same region, and several other notable representatives of western educational and religious activities covered the same ground at various times. These facts all point to Mr. Eddy's thesis that a veritable new era has come in the lands which a generation ago were almost impervious to missionary approach, and where a century ago the pioneers of evangelism were absolutely forbidden to set foot on the soil or to disturb the age-long conditions prevailing. Mr. Eddy's book deals with the new situations in Japan, Korea, China, India and the near east, and concludes with a chapter on the new era in world missions. It is supplied with an excellent map of the mission fields, with numerous illustrations, and a list of the mission boards and correspondents in the United States and Canada. The Church and the Young Man's Game. By F. J. Milnes. The purpose of this little volume, which is published for the National Indoor Game Association, is to emphasize the need of church activity in promoting good, wholesome amusement for young men. The author says, "Play is religion's basic ally, and it is high time that the church was marshalling all her forces. Religion can never wholly take the place of play, and should not wage her battles without its aid." A number of different forms of young men's helpful amusements are named, with illustrations of the use different churches have made of them with the best results. Ministers and religious workers would do well to read this book, and to correspond with the National Indoor Game Association, Evanston, Ill., of which the author of this book is president. A FAR REACHING MOVEMENT.

WE recorded last week the main features of the St. Louis conference of the Committee of Direction chosen to project and to promote the campaign for missionaries and for funds. The attendance indicated a deep interest in the plan. The earnestness and prayerfulness which pervaded the sessions denote the spirit of consecration with which many helpers of the movement are inspired. Upon Mr. A. E. Cory the burden of this campaign will most heavily rest. He has inspired us all with the conviction that he is competent to carry the campaign to complete success. He is in close touch with many business men who are already committed to a very generous share in the giving.

It is an enterprise in which the entire brotherhood is deeply concerned. The money itself is a great sum—six millions and more given in one effort to make a notable offering to such causes as are to be aided. To be sure, no one regards even this sum as the solution of the financial problems of any of the organizations named. It is but a small part of what will be needed in the very near future. But it is so compact and systematic a movement, and it implies such unity among all our interests that it is inspiring in contemplation, and will be highly beneficial in its results.

Such an enterprise might easily enough be a very grave peril to the liberty and character of a free and democratic people like the Disciples. If it is launched with partisan motives, or hampered by the personal theological opinions of one or two large contributors it will set the Disciples backward many years.

But we are unable to believe that a movement generated in such love of the gospel and of Christian education will be allowed by the Disciples' brotherhood to derive its character from the dictation of any individuals. Within the wide circle of absolute loyalty to Christ our people are on a level of entire equality and fraternal regard. They wish with one heart to unite in this good work.

They desire equal share in the giving, rich and poor alike.

We believe there will be such an expression of their resentment of the spirit of dictation that has already manifested itself that the Movement will shake itself free of all partisan and discriminatory restrictions and that Mr. Cory will be enabled to make his appeal to the WHOLE brotherhood for ALL the brotherhood's representative institutions.

It will be much better for this remodeling of the plans to be done without public discussion, but it will be better to achieve such an end by means of publicity than not to achieve it at all.

THE CHRISTIAN UNITY DEPUTATION.

AS we have already announced, a deputation in the interests of closer relationships between the religious bodies in America and the mother country is now on a visit from the United States to Great Britain. This deputation consists of Dr. Newman Smyth, for many years pastor of Center Congregational Church, New Haven, Conn., Dr. W. H. Roberts, an honored official of the Presbyterian General Assembly, and Rev. Peter Ainslie of Baltimore, chairman of the Christian Unity Commission of the Disciples of Christ. For some time plans have been maturing for a general conference on faith and order to be held in the not too far distant future, at which the entire problem of closer unity of the churches is to be discussed.

The Episcopal Church in America has been the leader of this plan, chiefly through the activity of Doctor Manning, the chairman of its Commission on Christian Unity. It is the purpose of the present deputation to interest Christian leaders in Britain in the proposed conference, and especially those of the Church of England. Reports indicate that the members of this deputation have been received cordially. While no statement is made regarding any proposed time at which the hoped-for conference is to be held, it is understood that as early a date will be selected as seems fitting when the sentiments of different churches are expressed. Manifestly the matter of date is unimportant, only that it should be far enough away to allow of careful preparation for so important an event. There are many signs of the times most favorable to the growth of the Christian Unity sentiment.

It is an open question as to whether conferences looking directly toward union are as likely to promote that result as are those gatherings which are devoted to the big interests of the kingdom of God on a union basis, but which do not emphasize the particular interest of church unity. To very many denominational partisans that is still a theme of alarm. An Edinburgh missionary conference is likely to have a profounder effect in unifying the thought of the churches than any number of convocations called for that specific purpose. Christian unity, when it comes, will come like the kingdom of God, without observation. Yet every gathering, enterprise and utterance which lays fresh stress upon the desirability and practical nature of Christian union is eminently worth while.

AN IMPRESSIVE ANNIVERSARY.

REPORTS are reaching us of the recently celebrated Judson Memorial in Burmah. As we have frequently remarked, this is a period of missionary centennials. The early years of the last century were marked by the beginnings of the great missionary adventure in China, India and Burmah, and in these days the Christian world is celebrating the centennial of those events. A notable delegation has been sent out by the Congregationalists to assist in the observance of the anniversary in the Bombay Presidency in India, and the Christian world was saddened by the news of Doctor Capen's death in Shanghai on his way home after completing the work of the commission in India.

The Baptists sent out a similar deputation to aid in the remarkable Judson centennial in Burmah. Among those included in the deputation were Dr. Henry A. Mabie, Dr. R. S. MacArthur, Dr. W. A. Hill and Dr. William Carey, a grandson of the great missionary. One of the disappointing incidents of the visit, and perhaps the only one, was the fact that Dr. Edward Judson, pastor of the Judson Memorial Church of New York City, and son of the pioneer missionary in Burmah, was prevented from going by ill health. Celebrations and anniversary services were held in Rangoon, where the Baptist College stands as a monument of the splendid work of Baptist missions in the entire land. From that center the message has spread throughout the entire country. During the century of Baptist missionary labor Burmah has passed from a land of political anarchy under the leadership of rival kings and chieftains to a pacified, quiet, well-administered principality of the great British province of India, and no small portion of this result has been due to the labors of the missionaries of the Baptist Board throughout the length of Burmah from Maulmain to Bahmo.

The Baptists are not the only missionary force at work in Burmah. Perhaps it would be better if they were. But missionary comity is a recent growth, and before that admirable principle was adopted eager and zealous representatives of other Christian bodies, notably the Church of England, had insisted upon setting up rival establishments. This is one of the unfortunate features of all missionary work. Today in some of the cities of Burmah, Rangoon particularly, the spectacle is seen of small establishments of the Church of England, of both the High and the Broad Church parties, eagerly invading the territories of the Baptist mission, save when they pause in this amiable task to fight each other. Of course there are other missionary forces also, not forgetting the Roman Catholics. But the Baptist influence is far and away the most impressive in Burmah. Maulmain, the city where Doctor Judson's first work was done, and Amherst, the place on the seashore where Ann Hasseltine Judson was buried, shared with Rangoon the honor of the chief anniversary services conducted by the deputation. Another grave in the Island of St. Helena marks the last resting place of Judson's second wife, while his own grave is the watery waste of the ocean.

A CONSTRUCTIVE WEEKLY

THE ARGUMENT FROM STATISTICS.

AT the St. Louis conference of the Committee of Direction of the Men and Millions Movement Mr. R. A. Long in one of his addresses referred to the comparative statistics of the growth of the Disciples and several other religious communions. This is but one of several occasions on which Mr. Long has used these same figures to give force to his opposition to the progressive movement among the Disciples of Christ. They manifestly hold a decisive place in the logic of this generous business man's mind. The statistics are as follows:

> Since 1878 the Presbyterians have gained 173 per cent in numbers, the Methodists have gained since 1866 300 per cent, the Baptists since 1864 have increased 450 per cent, and the Christian Church in the same period has gained 7,000 per cent. What will it mean to us if we engage in speculation and only gain 300 or 400 per cent?

It occurred to many of Mr. Long's hearers that he should have gone further. In the '60's the Mormons had about ten thousand members, and they number more than a million today—an increase of 10,000 per cent! The Christian Scientists were not in existence in the '60's, and they number fully a half million today.

The logic of Mr. Long's figures would seem to suggest that the Disciples should become either Mormons or Christian Scientists and grow faster!

PUBLIC "PERSONAL WORK."

A LETTER from a Kansas pastor inquires concerning the attitude of Disciples' churches toward the practices of so-called "personal workers" in the public services of evangelistic meetings. He confesses his own aversion to the well-known procedure, and reports that a request which he recently made of his people that they omit it from a meeting just launched met with some disappointment and criticism. What, he now asks, should be the attitude of a congregation of Disciples toward "the public button-holing of non-Christians?"

The practice of public solicitation in evangelistic meetings is an innovation quite recent among Disciples. The kind of preaching typical of the earlier days of this movement was calm and thoughtful, appealing to the rational and moral judgment and winning the full consent of the will.

Much modern evangelism among us is a reversion to the very type of procedure against which our Disciple fathers reacted. Their objection to the practices of the "mourners' bench" was not directed primarily against the Calvinistic theology which found expression there, but against the irrational excitement which that kind of a situation induced.

The mourners' bench was a single device in a system of hypnotic or semi-hypnotic manipulation of a crowd. Our fathers did not use the modern psychological terms to describe it, but their hard-headed judgment condemned it as superstitious and demoralizing in spite of much good with which it was connected.

The characteristic "trick" of that kind of revivalism was to get the congregation swaying, moving about, under the suggestion and control of the leader. This would afford many distractions to the stolid mind, break down inertia, open the channels of emotion and set going the kind of physical action—coming forward, kneeling, raising the right hand, or what not—desired by the leader. This kind of revivalism has always been impossible in the more intelligent communities where its non-rational character could be easily discerned.

The practice of "button holing" the unsaved in the congregation is of a piece with this primitive procedure. A defender of the practice would hardly affirm that a "worker's" influence upon a non-Christian under these circumstances is rational or intelligently moral in character. It is mainly emotional. The movement of the so-called "personal workers" through the congregation breaks down the normal formalities, enables the leader to get the "crowd" swaying under his suggestion and so overcomes the rational inhibitions which Truth itself alone has the right to overcome.

Besides, it is taking advantage of an embarrassing situation in which the non-churchmember has unsuspectingly allowed himself to be placed by coming into the service.

The lapsing of Disciples' evangelism into the practice of such public solicitation marks the abandonment of their earlier full confidence in the Truth as the one power alone which could make men free.

HOW A COURSE OF SERMONS GREW.

DR. W. C. Bitting, of the Second Presbyterian Church, St. Louis, sent to 300 well-known men and women of the city who are either not members of churches, or, if members, are not active in church work, twelve questions, as follows: (1) Your favorable or adverse criticism on the church as an institution. (2) Does church membership aid one's standing in a community? Your reason for your answer. (3) What difficulties do you find in or with the Bible? (4) Is the prevailing theological teaching satisfactory to your rational nature? Please indicate particulars. (5) Your opinion of ministers as a class; their sermons; their use of their time; their function in human affairs. (6) The moral and educational value of the Sunday-school; its teachers; its methods. (7) The church as a factor in civilization; its deficiencies; how can its efficiency be increased? (8) Is religion valuable to a community; to individual life? Why, or why not? (9) Your idea of the relation of the church to the wealthy; the middle class; the manual worker. What attitude should the church take toward the problems belonging to each class? (10) What is your opinion of Jesus Christ? (11) Your personal reason for not joining the church; or, if a member, for not being active in church work? (12) Any other comment or criticism on religion or church life you may feel like making.

With these questions there was a letter that pledged the writer not to make public any names, asked for the frankest possible answers, and stated that these answers would be used in a series of sermons, the purpose of which would be: (a) to let the public know what one class of intelligent people thinks about religion as institutionalized in our churches; and (b) to inform these intelligent people that there are churches honestly seeking to present the eternal truths of the Christian religion in ways that fit in with modern points of view.

The sermons which grew out of these answers and which Doctor Bitting began to preach Feb. 1, are dealing frankly with the situation. They state the opinions of the people who sent in nearly 200 answers to the inquiries made. It cannot possibly do religion or the church any harm to be told in plain terms what thoughtful persons believe. The sermons are attempting to state the modern position of intelligent Christians who are thoroughly sympathetic with the viewpoint of educated people. The answers, in most of the letters received, indicate that while the writers are intelligent upon many matters they have not kept in sufficiently close touch with vital movements which have been taking place in the religious realm.

The following are the themes of the series of sermons which Doctor Bitting is preaching as a result of this effort to learn just what people really believe, or think they believe, about religion and the church. The skill with which the subjects are adapted to the different character of a morning and an evening congregation is noticeable in the statement of the subjects for each Sunday: Feb. 1, "Do Intelligent Men Know the Modern Church?" "Is Religion Worth While?" Feb. 8, "The Church and Civilization." "Tasks for the Modern Church." Feb. 15, "The Church and Wealth." "The Money God." Feb. 22, "The Church and Labor." "The Democracy of Christianity." Mar. 1, "What Shall We Think of Jesus Christ?" "When is a Soul Saved?" Mar. 8, "What is the Bible?" "Difficulties With the Bible." Mar. 15, "Is the Prevailing Theology Satisfactory?" "Seeing God." Mar. 22, "What About the Ministers?" "The Essence of Christianity." Mar. 29, "Why Some Men Neglect Church," "Do Men Need Jesus Christ?"

The Showing for 1913.

The gains for 1913 are considerably larger than those for 1912 in number of communicants and in churches. The net gain in the latter is due chiefly to the surprising advance reported for the Lutheran bodies of 1,455. Except for the unaccountable falling off reported by the Southern Presbyterian Church, the increase would have been more than double that of last year. Of the total net gain, beside the 1,455 of the Lutherans, the Methodists report 496, the Baptists 388, and the Roman Catholics 375. The loss of 742 credited to the Disciples of Christ is probably due to incomplete returns. Six new churches, on the average, for every working day of the year cannot be interpreted as discouraging.

The net increase of communicants is widely distributed. The Methodist bodies get nearly 220,000 of it, the Methodist Episcopal Church having the largest gain for many years; the Roman Catholic Church comes next with 212,500, then the Baptists with 64,608, the Presbyterians fourth with 45,649, the Lutherans fifth with 36,120, and the Disciples of Christ sixth with 21,824.

The net gain is, on the average, one and eight-tenths per cent, which is a fair increase. If only those denominations which report increase be included in the reckoning, the only fair method, the percentage would be considerably larger—approaching two per cent. As a matter of fact, 618,000 is reported as the net increase of bodies aggregating about 33,000,000.

DR. HILLIS ADDRESSES SUNDAY EVENING CLUB, CHICAGO.

At the Sunday Evening Club, which is held in Orchestra Hall, Chicago, each Sunday evening for the benefit especially of transient visitors to Chicago, but which is attended by 2,000 or more each week, was addressed February 8 by Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, of Brooklyn, N. Y. His subject was "The Debt of the Patriot to Sunday and the Church."

The alarming increase of murders in the United States during recent years and the prevalence of various other forms of lawlessness Dr. Hillis ascribes to the breakdown of those high moral qualities which characterized the American people at an earlier period.

"Our reputation abroad as a country of murderers," he said, "is wide. The belief that we are a lot of hoodlums has traveled to the ends of the earth. Is it any wonder that our former president, Mr. Taft, in common with many other distinguished citizens, has recently sounded a note of alarm over the situation in which we find ourselves? Is it astonishing that publications of England and the continent have through illustrations and comment drawn attention to the gunmen of New York and Chicago, and outbreaks of crime in other sections of the country, and have warned their readers against visiting America?

"We have come to a deplorable point in this country with 11,000 murders in a year, with bomb outrages in Pacific coast cities and with our jails crowded with old and young offenders against our laws. Where shall we look to find the solution of these problems? Will it not be found in a return to former ideals, and in a rational observance of the one day of rest?

"Many say 'I am a free man in a free country and I will observe Sunday as I please.' The same man might as well say he will treat his parlor as he pleases and use it for an ash dump or a place in which to turn the sewer. After his six days of labor the workingman has only the seventh for physical rest and spiritual growth, for books and meditation and communion with the best things attainable. Sunday is the greatest day this republic has. It is our great national possession.

"Even Jesus found it necessary to attend the synagogue regularly. The law of rest is a great rhythmic law and the man who approaches 50 will discover that in the proper observance of Sunday there is much that is physiological and hygienic."

IT HAPPENED THIS WAY—

A Column of Original Clerical Anecdotes.

An enterprising contemporary suggests to its clerical readers that they send in stories of amusing pastoral experiences. Which suggests to us that this would not be a bad idea for The Christian Century to adopt. You have told to your preacher friends many stories of amusing experiences which have fallen to you. Now we want you to tell them to "Century" readers.

Please observe these rules: Write plainly. Be brief. Punctuate correctly. Sign name and address. We shall head this column "It Happened This Way"—and will present it to our readers as soon as a "stickful" of copy comes in.

Lincoln as a Lawyer.

"I did the running about and the other things necessary to be done until the trial," explained Senator Cullom, from early days a close friend of Lincoln, in an interview with a Chicago reporter. "From then on to his election as President I had constant means of observing Lincoln as a lawyer. I have no hesitation in saying that he was the greatest trial lawyer I ever knew. His power before court or jury was wonderful, and the same can be said of his resourcefulness. Judge David Davis has rightly said of him that the framework of Lincoln's mental and moral being was honesty, and that a wrong cause was poorly defended by him.

"A story of that time of his attitude toward his practice is illustrative. He was approached to take a case the merits of which did not satisfy Lincoln. He said to the prospective client: 'I can gain your case; I can set a whole neighborhood at loggerheads; I can distress a widowed mother and six fatherless children, and thereby get for you $600, which it appears to me as rightfully belongs to them as to you. I will not take your case, but I will give you a little advice for nothing. I advise you to try your hand at making $600 in some other way.'"

Senator Cullom as a "Machine" Builder.

During his long service Mr. Cullom built up a wonderful political machine in his state. It extended into nearly every precinct. His list of personal acquaintances was remarkable for its length. He kept in almost constant touch with all these pepole. At a word from him thousands of men were in the field working for him. The power this gave him is illustrated by a story which has been told before.

John R. Tanner, while governor, was out riding one day in Springfield with a friend. Senator Cullom's term was expiring, and during the conversation between the two men in the buggy, the friend said to the governor:

"John, why don't you go in and beat Cullom and go to the Senate yourself?"

Mr. Tanner did not reply at once, but shortly they came to Oak Ridge Cemetery, and, pointing to it, he said:

"Do you see that cemetery over there?"

"I do," replied the friend.

"Well," continued Mr. Tanner, "it's full of men who have tried to defeat Uncle Shelby Cullom."

A Subtle Distinction!

Whether you believe or don't believe in the tariff, you'll admit that we'd have fewer multimillionaires if we'd never had high protection. Even Carnegie admits he wouldn't have entered the steel trade if he hadn't first been able to get a prohibitive steel tariff put on the statute books."

The speaker, Representative Abercrombie, lighted a cigar and resumed:

"This sort of thing reminds me, just a little bit, of old Calhoun Clay.

"'Is this your first theft, Cal?' the old man's mistress asked, after she had caught him walking off with a bottle of beer.

"'Yas'm,' Cal replied. 'Yas'm, I reckon dish yere's mah fust theft, mum,'

"'Now, Cal, be careful,' said the mistress, smiling, for she liked the old man well. 'Didn't you sometimes use to take a chicken from the 'ole massa' when you were a young fellow down South?'

"'Why, yas'm, mebbe I did take jes' one chicken,' Cal agreed. 'But dat wa'nt no stealin', mum. Dat wuz jes' prop'ty taken' prop'ty to suppo't prop'ty.'"—Chicago Record Herald.

"A Bit Thick."

Attorney General McReynolds said of an unwise charity: "Such a charity, sustaining the shiftless at the expense of the thrifty, reminds me of Farmer Brown's hired man, John.

"'John's a good feller,' said Farmer Brown, 'but a bit thick, a bit thick.

"'I'll tell you what John's like. I sent him out one morning to thin out the onion patch—it was a fine patch, but overcrowded. He worked a day or two on the job, and then I went to see what he'd been doing.

"'Well, sir, I found that he'd pulled out all the biggest onions and heaved them away, leaving only the smallest, meanest plants in each row. I asked him what in tarnation he meant by such work, and he said he wanted to give the little fellers a chance—the big ones had crowded them out and they couldn't grow.

"'Yes, John's a bit thick—a bit thick.'"

In the Zone.

Apropos of President Wilson's linking of the Atlantic with the Pacific by the touch of an electric button, a diplomat said in Washington:

"President Wilson told a Panama Canal story the other day. He said that two men were watching one of the great Culebra dredges that lifted from the bottom of the water every five seconds or so an enormous iron bucket filled with mud.

"'I understand,' said the first man, 'that they pay good on this government work. How'd you like to be workin', cully, on that there dredge?'

"'Fine,' said the other man. 'Fine. But,' he added, 'I'd hate to be one of them fellers under the water that's fillin' them big iron buckets.'"

"This work of missions is the biggest, the most far-reaching, most divine task that confronts the twentieth century man."

The World Is Growing Better

Speaker Clark Says It Is.

Speaker Champ Clark told a Christian Endeavor mass meeting held in Washington last week that the world was growing better every day. He said the reason many people took a gloomy view of the times was because the telegraph enabled newspapers nowadays to chronicle the crimes and disasters of all the world within a few hours.

The speaker declared that nothing made him madder than to hear people say that public men of the present day were corrupt. The people's representatives in Washington, he said, were "honest, conscientious servants."

Ninety-nine per cent of the men sent to Congress, he added, leave poorer than they come, although they could acquire fortunes by stooping to dishonesty.

Oklahoma Temperance Sentiment Growing.

Temperance citizens of Oklahoma are congratulating themselves upon the growing sentiment in the state in favor of law enforcement. The last cause for rejoicing is found in the action of B. A. Enloe, U. S. Marshal for the Eastern Oklahoma District, who has issued an order to his nineteen field deputies and all of the office deputies to confiscate any and all conveyances which are found in use for conveying liquor into the Indian country across the line. The order even goes so far as to apply to railroad trains, if it is shown that the liquor is being transported with the connivance or consent of the train crews. Furthermore, Mr. Enloe has instructed the deputies, when they find cases that justify it, not to hesitate to chain the cars containing liquor to the tracks and hold them for further orders. Mrs. Abbie B. Hillerman, president of the state W. C. T. U., predicts that it will not be long before the liquor interests will seek easier fields.

Vocational Schools for Chicago.

The Central department Y. M. C. A. Institute, Chicago, will start a vocational school in the loop district in the near future. Preliminary steps in the organization of such a school were taken at a meeting held last week. Representatives of several downtown concerns were present.

The plan provides for a part time vocational school organized on lines somewhat similar to schools in Germany, in Boston and isolated places throughout the country. Most of these schools, however, are for apprentices in the trades, but the plan of the local Y. M. C. A. school is to provide commerical education for young men who wish to enter the employ of downtown concerns.

The plan evolved by the employers who are especially interested contemplates a two-year business course for young men who have graduated from grammar schools. It provides an opportunity for deserving boys to attend school either in the morning or afternoon and also be employed the other half of the day.

Michigan Pioneer Passes Away.

Leonidas Hubbard, son of Alexander Kidd and Elizabeth Hubbard was born in Deerfield, Portage Co., Ohio, Dec. 21, 1821, and died at the home of his sister, Mrs. Isaac Gibbs, Waldron, Mich., January 16, 1914, aged 92 years and 19 days. He was the father of Leonidas Hubbard, Jr., the Labrador explorer, who lost his life in the wilds of Labrador, as recounted in the book, entitled, "The Lure of the Labrador Wild," the author of which was Hubbard's traveling companion, Wallace.

The circumstances of Mr. Hubbard's life are well known to many in northern Ohio and southern Michigan, as he was one of the pioneers who blazed the way for present prosperity. He, with his two brothers and brother-in-law, and his wife, Louisa and baby son, came to Michigan in 1851, cutting their own road through the dense forest, till they arrived at a point near where the village of Waldron afterward sprang up. He became a Christian at the age of 16 under the preaching of Walter Scott, and spent the remainder of his life—76 years—in his Master's service. He organized the first Christian Church in Hillsdale county, Mich., the congregation now meeting at Waldron, giving his money for the support of this church, and serving many years as its overseer.

He had a part in the early state and county politics, serving one term in the state legislature. He was twice married. His first wife, Louisa Williams, dying in 1865, leaving him with three children, he, afterward, married Ellen Van Dervort, who was a co-worker with her husband in all his good works. She died July 3, 1913.

Dr. Willett Speaks at New "Sunday Night Club."

So marked has been the success of the Sunday Evening Club, held at Orchestra Hall, Chicago, each Sunday evening that a West Side Sunday Night Club has been established on Chicago's West Side. The first meeting was held at one of the West Side churches on Feb. 8, and Dr. H. L. Willett gave the address of the evening. He discussed the prophet Isaiah, and put to the 1,000 members of the new organization this pointed query:

"If Isaiah Came to Chicago?"

"Isaiahs are needed in Chicago," he said. "They are wanted in this city to wipe out the vice district, as Isaiah of old denounced the scarlet woman. Great prophets are needed in Chicago to protest against the trading in drink. Isaiah denounced the grinding down of the poor, the abuses of monopoly, the privileges of capitalism. Today if he came to Chicago he would find the same material for his denunciatory messages." "Even the significance of womanhood," said Professor Willett, "was recognized by Isaiah. If he lived in this city at the present time he would recognize the great force of the woman's suffrage movement."

Former Governor J. Frank Hanly of Indiana spoke last Sunday before the club members. Others who will address the club in future are William J. Bryan, Secretary of State; Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy; Winston Churchill, author of "The Inside of the Cup;" Senator Robert L. Owen of Oklahoma, Miss Jane Addams, Senator Moses Clapp of Minnesota, Senator William E. Borah of Idaho, Senator John W. Kern of Indiana and Senator W. S. Kenyon of Iowa.

Resignation of Pastor of Memorial Church.

On Sunday, Feb. 1, Rev. E. Le Roy Dakin, for the past two years pastor of Memorial Church of Christ in this city, closed his connection with the church to accept the pastorate of the First Baptist Church of Logansport, Ind. Three years since, he was called from the Baptist Church at Highland Park, Ill., to become the associate of Dr. Willett at Memorial. So acceptable was his ministry, that upon Dr. Willett's departure for the Orient, he was made sole pastor. In this position, as leader of a union church of Baptists and Disciples, he manifested his fitness for the work by rare tact and efficiency. He showed himself a firm believer in the united work of the church by his intimate association with the organized interests of the Disciples as well as the Baptists, both in conventions and in local efforts. Under his leadership the church took up the admirable task of social service and has rendered most efficient aid to the life of its immediate community. Educational classes, social guilds, a free kindergarten, a boys' club, and other interesting activities have been promoted. Mr. Dakin is a preacher of force and effectiveness, and as a friend, he has endeared himself to almost the entire circle at Memorial. Without denominational distinction, he goes to accept, at a much higher salary, the pulpit of a young, aggressive, modern church, with a new building, an up-to-date equipment, for the very types of community work for which he is so admirably fitted, and an opportunity for effective work in the interpetation of the gospel and the high levels of the best Christian ideals. We give Mr. Dakin our heartiest good wishes as he goes to his new field, but we refuse to dismiss him from the fellowship of the Disciples. Such men as he live above the line of denominational differences. They are members of the ever unbroken fellowship of believers. It is understood that an effort will be made to secure Prof. Allen Hoben, of the Divinity School, to take the pulpit for the present.

S. H. Church Fills St. Peter's Pulpit, Pittsburg.

Samuel Harden Church, of Pittsburg, grandson of Walter Scott, the Disciple pioneer, delivered the third of a series of sermons by laymen in the pulpit of St. Peter's Episcopal Church, February 8. His text was assigned to him by Rev. E. H. Ward: "What shall I do to be saved?"

Mr. Church expressed his appreciation for the invitation to speak in a church reaching back in the ancient splendor of her tradition to the time of Christ, and said that he had always believed that Jesus had come to save human life to the very best service that could be got out of each character here on earth. He did not mean that intellectual development could ever pass for religion, but that the deepest form of spiritual life was righteousness combined with loving service. He said that the world was most wicked during the thousand years constituting the Dark Ages, when it believed in a hell of fire and brimstone, and that such a conception of the nature of God made people selfish, bigoted and cruel; but that people were constantly growing better since they had given up fear as an element of faith, and learned to know that every evil deed we commit tends to destroy the symmetry of our characters and makes our families and friends wretched and unhappy.

Omar Khayyam was right when he said, "My own soul is heaven and hell." The man who was willing to be a thief, a gambler, a drunkard or a profligate in any degree made for himself and his family a much more terrible hell than any scorching flame or lake or fire; and the whole teaching of the Bible was intended to redeem men to lives of righteousness softened by loving service, and this was what Jesus meant by salvation. He did not believe that true religion was a system of belief, but that it was a system of life in relation to God and humanity, and he told the story of the Good Samaritan as embodying the teachings of Jesus on this subject. He thought it was the duty of the church to teach the accountability of each soul to God and that when men who are really good and realize their own responsibility as members of one great family, most of the evil in the world will vanish.

Mr. Church declared that every saloon in Pittsburgh would go out of business permanently in one week if all the good men in Pittsburgh would simply refuse to patronize them. This would show the power of the kingdom of heaven which Jesus talked about so much and which has its seat in the human heart and not up there in the blue sky. No man living such a life here on earth need feel any apprehension when he faces the supreme mystery of death. He said, in conclusion, that if the church would throw away the abstruse and contradictory system of belief which it had constructed from the apostles, who had seldom been able to agree with each other, and return to the simple life as taught by Jesus, the whole world would accept its gospel.

W. J. Bryan Commends Cotner University.

Chancellor William Oeschger, of Cotner University, reports Secretary Bryan as speaking in the following terms of Cotner University: "I take pleasure in commending Cotner University to the generosity of the Christian public. I believe that it deserves the support of those that are interested in throwing religious influences about the education of the young. I feel sure that any money given to it will be well used, and that donations will bring forth fruit in better manhood, better womanhood, and better citizenship."

J. W. Mounce's Story of Alexander Campbell.

One of the favorite stories of John W. Mounce, the now famous member of the Hannibal, Mo., church, is of one of the first sermons he heard Alexander Campbell preach. He tells how greatly surprised he was when he first heard Alexander Campbell. He expected a very combative and convincing sermon. He thought Mr. Campbell would so belittle "the sects" that there would be none of them left. But contrary to his expectation, he preached a very pacific sermon, pleading for kindly relations of fraternity and closer fellowship. Of all the early preachers Mr. Mounce had fellowship with, he most deeply loved and was most influenced by Alexander Proctor. He loves to talk about and quote Proctor. Like Proctor, Mr. Mounce is loyal and liberal.

Evanston Church Has Good Report.

The annual report of the church at Evanston, Ill., O. F. Jordan, minister, is the best so far. The morning church attendance increased 40 per cent; the Sunday-school enrolment increased 40 per cent and the attendance increased; budget fund receipts were $470 in advance of any previous year; $700 was paid on the mortgage; the Aid Society about doubled its receipts, raising $485; the Men's Club contributed $50 to the church. $465 has been spent decorating the church and improving the property; $65 worth of new equipment went into the printing plant without expense to the church.

Dr. Powell in Chicago

The many friends of the eminent Louisville preacher, of whom there is a large group in Chicago, have been made happy during the past week by his presence in the city, and the numerous opportunities of hearing him. He came as University preacher for two Sundays, and coupled with this was the important service of preaching at the meeting of the Sunday Evening Club in Orchestra Hall down town. In Mandel Hall at the University of Chicago on the two Sunday mornings Dr. Powell was greeted with large audiences and a deeply attentive hearing. The satisfaction felt over his ministry was remarked by those accustomed to hear the many noted speakers who preach at the University. On Monday morning Dr. Powell met the Disciples Ministerial Association at Central Y. M. C. A. Building, and after delivering a spirited address on "The Present Experiences and Outlook of the Disciples," was the center of an eager group of questioners for another hour. As a part of his university duties Doctor Powell has met the different departments at the regular chapel hours, save on Thursday, which unfortunately for the Divinity School was a holiday, and many regrets were felt that the men of that department were deprived of a special opportunity to hear him. On Friday evening at the annual banquet and Social Union gathering under the auspices of the Chicago Christian Woman's Board of Missions, Doctor Powell spoke eloquently on the "Protest, Plea and Program" of the Disciples. A very large company was present to hear him.

Dr. E. L. Powell.

But perhaps the greatest opportunity offered the distinguished Louisville minister was at the Sunday Evening Club on February 15. This is an institution which has grown up in response to what seems a general demand. It is a meeting held in Orchestra Hall which seats about 2,500 people and which is packed to the topmost sittings every Sunday night from October to June. As a general thing a combination is made with the University of Chicago so that the same men appear as preachers at both places. By half past six the lobby is full of waiting people, and fifteen minutes later the floor and first balcony are filled. Then after a musical service there is a Bible study, usually conducted by Mr. Clifford W. Barnes, president of the Sunday Evening Club Association. Then more music by a chorus choir of a hundred voices, and then the address of the evening. In the immense audience that gathered to hear Doctor Powell were many Disciples who took this general opportunity to hear him. He spoke on "The Message of the Cross," and held the closest attention of the people while he spoke of the most fundamental things in life, the wonder of love, the necessity of sacrifice, and the thrilling call of the cross of Christ to the heroic and achieving in man's nature. It was a great message, most effectively given.

Doctor Powell's visit to the city has been a great pleasure and inspiration to the Chicago Disciples. He has fully sustained his great reputation as an orator and a prophet of progress. He has seemed tireless in his output of energy, responding to many social invitations, and yet appearing unexhausted at each of his public addresses. More than this, he has met in counsel with several groups of Disciples interested in important measures for the city or the brotherhood, and has always contributed interesting and constructive suggestions to such meetings. We look forward to his return to Chicago at no distant day, and whenever he comes he will be welcomed at the university and among the Disciples, who have learned to expect from him words of light and leading.

CHICAGO DISCIPLES SOCIAL UNION.

On Friday evening, February 13 (lucky date) the Disciples of Chicago were gathered at the invitation of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions of this city for the annual banquet of the Social Union, which was held this year at the Memorial Church. After a period of social intercourse in the parlors, dinner was served and nearly two hundred sat down. The program which followed was full of interest to all present. C. G. Kindred, the beloved pastor of the Englewood church, was toastmaster. O. F. Jordan, of Evanston, the retiring superintendent of City Missions, gave a brief but telling address on that cause. Mrs. Anna R. Atwater, President of the National Christian Woman's Board of Missions was the official guest of the evening, and spoke as only she can speak of the world field and its insistent call for the gospel. Dr. Willett recalled some incidents of his recent journey through the Orient, and Doctor Powell closed the program with a striking and characteristic address on the ideals of the Disciples. The fellowship of the occasion was delightful. We are hopeful that if no other plans are made for the Social Union gatherings, the C. W. B. M. will feel not only a liberty but actually a commission to arrange such pleasant and profitable functions often.

In spite of distressing conditions which handicapped the work at First Church, Ontario, Calif., early in the year, the year has been one of the most aggressive and fruitful in the history of the church. The Sunday-school is now the second largest in the county. The present building has been enlarged twice since its purchase a year ago, and is now inadequate to accommodate the school. There have been 77 persons added to the membership during the year, the present membership totaling 375. Henry C. Kendrick ministers to this growing work.

Ninth Street Church, Washington, D. C., began its recent evangelistic series with a school of methods, and Decision Day in the Sunday-school. E. W. Thornton had charge of these features. An attendance of 872 in the school and 19 confessions were among the results of the day's work. On Monday E. B. Bagby, of Baltimore, who organized this church and was its pastor for fifteen years, came and remained with the church for nearly three weeks. There were 83 additions in all and the church was greatly helped and benefited, writes George A. Miller, pastor.

Henry Pearce Atkins, pastor of First Church, Birmingham, Ala., reports that at the close of 1913 is shown an enrollment of 436 active and 246 inactive members—a net gain of 51 active members in the last year. The work of the new year has been planned on the basis of an active membership. The financial report for the year shows approximately $3,800 raised for current expenses and $1,400 for all missions—a total of $5,200. Individual gifts to missions are not included in the figures given.

The reorganization of the Church at Roodhouse, Ill., a Sunday-school doubled, an Endeavor Society organized, plans for an addition to the church building and for missionary gifts for all fields, and 25 additions to the church membership, were some of the results of a meeting just closed at Roodhouse, by the pastor, Winston W. Wharton, assisted by his sister, Mrs. Claude Palmatier, of Minneapolis, as singer. That surely would be called "constructive evangelism."

Among those who have taken membership with the church at Hutchinson, Kan., during the evangelistic services being conducted there by C. R. Scoville and helpers, are seven traveling men, ten city grist mill employes, and six trained nurses, all of whom came at one service. Altogether, 2,159 have been added to the church. K. F. Nance ministers to this work.

L. E. Murray, who goes to First Church, Richmond, Ind., for the past three years has been superintendent of the Indiana Christian Missionary Association, with headquarters at Indianapolis, and before that was associate pastor of the Garfield Memorial church in Washington, D. C., having charge of the church during the illness of Dr. F. D. Power.

"Making Good in the Local Church," the book written by E. E. Elliott, our National Brotherhood secretary and published by Fleming H. Revell Co., of New York City, has entered the second edition.

Central Church, Lima, O., has been offered by a member the material for the addition of a special office room for pastor and board, on the condition that the men furnish the labor. The offer has been accepted.

The church at Lathrop, Mo., Baxter Waters, pastor, will probably become a Living Link Church, in foreign missions. A new building will be erected at Lathrop next summer.

A. J. Hollingsworth, the scholarly and consecrated pastor of the church at Peru, Neb., has been assigned by the state board to First Church, Lincoln, as living link pastor.

W. C. Rogers, of Kansas City, is writing a sketch of the Christian Churches of Northwest Missouri, for a History of Missouri, soon to be issued. Mr. Rogers is past 86.

The Fifth District of Missouri, C. A. Lowe, superintendent, will hold county meetings, with efficiency rallies in every church in the district during February.

George Darsie, pastor at Central, Terre Houte, recently completed a series of sermons on the "Six Greatest Men of the Bible."

The Men's Bible Class of Central School, Terre Haute, Ind., meets in the Orpheum Theater. It has an enrollment of 219.

The Hyde Park Church, Kansas City has an illuminated sign over the church door saying, "Come to Church."

At a meeting of the church at Lodoga, Ind., recently, George W. Sweeney was urged to remain as its pastor.

EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

Kansas City, Jackson Avenue, Frank L. Bowen, City Evangelist, preaching; 219; closed. Sunday-school on last day had 1,269 present.

Fortville, Ind., Lee Tinsley, pastor; Chas. E. McVay, singer and helper.

Waverly, Ill., E. C. Lucas, pastor, preaching; 2; continuing.

Redlands, Cal., W. B. Craig, pastor; Bruce Brown, evangelist; 55; continuing.

Panora, Ia., J. A. Saum, pastor; C. E. McVay, singer; 85; closed.

Lima, O., Central, A. B. Houze, pastor; J. J. Tisdall, evangelist.

Decatur, Ill., First, E. M. Smith, pastor; F. B. Thomas, evangelist; 78; continuing.

RESIGNATIONS.

L. F. De Poister, Keithburg, Ill. Will go to Lincoln, Neb.

University of Chicago has during the last year enabled students to earn $157,350, a net increase of $20,000 over the amount reported for the preceding year. Two hundred and ten students worked as waiters, the average wage being twenty-six cents an hour. Other students worked at the polls on election days and received five dollars a day as the compensation. Tutors and governesses receive the highest pay per hour for their services, the average rate being a dollar an hour. During the last year the Bureau has given special attention to the securing of positions for graduates and for students leaving the University permanently.

The University preachers for February at the University of Chicago include Dr. William P. Merrill, of the Brick Presbyterian Church, New York; Rev. E. L. Powell, of Louisville, Ky., and Rev. C. E. Jefferson, of New York City. On the first two Sundays in March Rev. J. E. White, from Atlanta, Ga., will be the speaker, and President Albert Parker Fitch, of Andover Theological Seminary, Cambridge, Mass., will be the Convocation Preacher on March 15.

H. E. Stafford Pleads for Church Union

Urging the union of Protestant churches as a means of more effectively evangelizing the world and holding that none of the points over which the adherents of the various denominations differ ever made a person a better individual, citizen or parent, Rev. H. E. Stafford, pastor of the Christian Church at Massillon, O., in a sermon on the subject, "Should the Churches of Massillon be One," presented arguments for church unity.

A series of addresses in the interests of Christian Union was delivered, during the following week—Feb. 9-14 in the First Church by representatives of different denominations on the subject "What I Believe and Why I Believe It." The denominations represented were the Lutherans, Episcopalians, Baptists, Methodists and Presbyterians. Each minister presented the fundamental and distinctive doctrines of his particular creed and told why he believes them.

During the current week a series of five addresses are being given by Mr. Stafford on "Applied Christianity and Social Service." At the regular Sunday evening services these addresses will be followed by a series on "The Contribution That The Great Religious Bodies Have Made To Religious Life and Thought." This series will begin with a study of the Catholic church. All addresses are constructive, pointing out the debt which the world owes to all these great bodies.

In the sermon preached February 8, in his appeal for a united church in Massillon, Mr. Stafford said:

"It is quite true that the churches of our city are nearer together at the present time than they have ever been before, but it would be too much to say that the unity is of such a binding quality that it could not be broken, and the different bodies severed apart.

"But why are the churches of our city not one? Why do we have twelve Protestant bodies at work in a city of about 14,000 to 15,000? The answer is a matter of history. We have held, and do hold, different doctrines on which we became divided 50, 100, 200, or 300 years ago, and while the yawning chasms of division have been narrowed, still they present a bold, deep, rugged, and sometimes, cruel break upon the surface of Christian thought and Christian activity.

"Whatever may have been then thought valuable regarding the fundamental doctrines upon which great and splendid religious peoples divided in the age in which theological battles were fought, it is certain that our age places little or no significance upon these as being valuable either to thought or life. That which separated Lutheran and Reformed never did and never will change the character one whit. Not one of these points of division had any bearing upon life here, or life hereafter. In short, there is nothing in the doctrines over which the theologians have quarreled that will make one a better Christian, citizen or parent.

"Does this division aid the cause of Christ and humanity?" Some will say yes, on the ground of competition. I once heard a minister thank God for divisions. One might just as consistently thank the devil for the Bible. It was once said that competition was the life of trade, but even in the realm of trade, men are seeing the fallacy of this. How much more so when the spirit by which the Gospel is to be propagated is the spirit of love. The spirit of self and selfishness must give way for the spirit of altruism. A house divided against itself cannot stand. Christ prayed that we so be one that the world might believe on him.

"We are sometimes told that different denominations are needed today to satisfy the different temperaments. But men do not think in terms of theology today, they think in terms of values. Of what value is your proposition—truth—to the everyday life? This is the question asked by men everywhere.

"Division exists because we have not caught up to the ideal of Christ. His church has One God and Father, whose name is love, one Lord and Shepherd, who will receive all into his fold without regard to race or color; one faith in the tremendous purpose of God for humanity; one name by which all shall be known, the name that is above every name; one purpose, to belt the earth with a glorious brotherhood blessed with the fullness of the earth and the riches of heaven brought down to earth.

"If all the churches of Massillon were one church such as I have described, then we could serve the community, not for selfish and denominational ends, but for society's good. We could concentrate on a given issue, or wrong, that was for the destruction of humanity in a way that would cause the offender to repent of his selfishness and sin. We could win men to themselves and to God, by our larger and united evangel of the love of God because we had demonstrated the power of that love by our union. Union has and ever will be, food for disbelief and it remains for the churches to answer the prayer of the Christ, 'That they all be one, that the world may believe that thou didst send me.'"

OUR MISSION WORK IN WORLD'S LARGEST CITY.

A recent issue of the London Times declares that New York City has passed London in the race for the title "The World's Largest City."

We are pleased to report the mission work of the Disciples of Christ in New York City for the month of January, under the direction of the Disciples' Missionary Union of New York City, acting as agents for the American Christian Missionary Society.

The summarized report is as follows:

Number of days of service on field	155
Sermons	32
Accessions	3
Average Bible School attendance for our five (5) missions	589

Total amt. raised by the missions, $17,266.09.

We call attention to the unusual fact of the amount of money raised by the missions. The Flatbush Christian Church, one of our missions, upon the day of the dedication of its new church building, raised $11,000. The Borough Park Christian Church in the midst of a debt raising campaign raised $6,000.

We call attention to the fact that the expenses for 1913 were $6,600, of which amount the Disciples of Christ in New York City, six churches and five missions, contributed $2,200. All the remaining churches and members of our great Brotherhood contributed $4,400. When will we awaken to the fact that more money and time must be spent in this the greatest city of the world?

We are looking forward in all our missions and churches to a very prosperous year, and ask the interest, aid, and prayers of our entire Brotherhood.

Regarding any information in connection with our work, address all communications to the writer, M. M. Amunson, Chairman Mission Committee, 388 St. John's Place, Brooklyn, N. Y.

BEGINNINGS IN TIBET.

James C. Ogden sailing for China, nearing Honolulu, under date of Jan. 28, 1914, says:

"In reply to your inquiry regarding the first Sunday-school in Tibet, I wish to say that I can speak definitely for Batang only.

"We burned the first gods in Batang Dec. 31, 1909. Our first Sunday-school began in Jan. 1910. Our first day-school opened with 10 pupils, Mar. 15, 1910. Our first baptism in Batang was Aug. 5, 1910. Five were baptized. I did the baptizing. Dr. Shelton could have done it as well.

"We were the first Protestant mission to do what is mentioned above in Batang, Eastern Tibet.

"In Tachienlu, 400 miles east of us, from 1904 to 1908 we had a Sunday-school, day-school, and several were baptized by Dr. Shelton. The China Inland Mission had been in Tachienlu ten years before we went there and their efforts were quite successful. Tachienlu is usually considered more Chinese, and Batang and surrounding country more Tibet. The territory between Tachienlu and Batang is known as Eastern Tibet, while that west of Batang is known as Tibet Proper.

"In 1911 we put a man in Chambdo, 17 days west of Batang. His name was Sao Lu, well trained and capable. He did efficient work while there and his was the first of the kind in that field.

"But really, after all, the work of God is linked together, and his purpose so sure, that I believe that many men and many missions will be used in the evangelization of Tibet. For a century God has been using linguists, explorers, missionaries, and statesmen in making ready for the final opening of Tibet, and I believe the general preparedness indicates that the opening is at hand. One man's work, or one station's work may be comparatively small as compared with the whole, but it is an important part.

"Thanks to those who have gone before us and in a large measure made possible what we are doing. We are after all only links in a chain. How happy we are to be able to go back.

"We are all well, and having a very good voyage for this time of the year."

"JAS. C. OGDEN."

SHALL WE SKIP A MONTH?

Last year, for the first time in its history, the Board of Ministerial Relief increased the payments of a large number of those on its roll from once a quarter to once a month, excepting that no payment was made in the month of March. As none had been made in November 1912, the highest number of payments sent to any pensioner was ten. The highest number previously, except in emergencies, had been five. This was a bold venture of faith and increased the average for the year to each person on the roll from $128 to $175.

In the new fiscal year that began October 1, we have put seventy of our one hundred veterans on the monthly roll. Payment has been sent regularly to each every month, and we are depending upon our brethren to continue this standard right through the year, although the next month will show a roll practically fifty per cent larger than a year ago, and the offerings of the churches up to date are only $282.44 larger than they were up to February 1, 1913; $5,173.58 this year against $4,891.14 last year. The number of contributing churches and Sunday-schools has grown from 184 last January to 217 in January 1914, and a total for the four months of 409 against 383 last year, a gain of 26. This means that every church that gave last year must be loyal this year and, if possible, send in a larger amount. And it is also absolutely necessary that there be a continuous increase of new contributing churches. To fail in this is to repudiate the obligations which we have felt compelled to acknowledge toward those who have given their all, both of life and means, for Christ and His church.

The total receipts from all sources for the four months ending February 1, were $13,253.25 against $12,468.43 last year, a gain of $784.82. The larger part of this gain is in annuity money which does not immediately increase our available resources.

One of the most encouraging features of the January record is the number of contributing Sunday-schools and Bible classes.

MEANING OF THE MARCH OFFERING.

1. It is an expression of the faith of the churches in Jesus Christ as the Divine Savior of the world.

2. It testifies to the faith of the churches in the gospel and its power to save all men.

3. It is an expression of the sympathy of the churches with the missionaries in their great sacrifices. Four went to their eternal reward during the past year. They have endured hardness, they have faced death. They have planted the banner of the Cross on the grave of hoary paganism.

4. The March offering is an expression of the desire of our churches in America to have fellowship with the infant congregations in the Far East, Japan, China, Philippines, India, etc. These new-born disciples cry for fellowship and fraternity. They long for the touch of a friendly hand. Our help in March is a recognition of their faith and Christian heroism. It is the strong rejoicing in helping the weak.

5. The offering testifies as to our confidence in the final triumph of the truth in all the earth. Our Lord is to reign supreme among all men in every clime. The glorious day is rapidly approaching.

6. The offering testifies as to the life and usefulness of the local churches at home. It speaks of a church's purity and intelligent appreciation of all the highest and best things in Christian living. The church that is interested in a man in Asia will be interested in the man on the other side of the street.

We hope every church will be in line with an offering the first Sunday in March. If you have not ordered March offering supplies, please order today.

TO INDIANA MINISTERS AND CHURCHES.

We are now rapidly approaching the historic occasion of our "Diamond Jubilee" at Terre Haute, the middle of next May. This coming convocation is the seventy-fifth annual gathering of the disciples of Christ in this state. Let us make it truly worthy of what it justly celebrates. A splendid program of high order is being prepared, and a record-breaking attendance is expected. Terre Haute is contiguous to large numbers of our people, both in Illinois and Indiana. We hope to use publicity measures in such a way as to put the convention thoroughly before the people in the next few weeks. Our Indiana State work is now in a most promising condition and promises large things for the immediate future. The state was recently divided into five missionary districts, with the following capable and active evangelists in charge, viz.: G. I. Hoover, Fred R. Davis, T. J. Legg, W. H. Martin and Melnotte Miller.

Our philanthropic and generous Marshall T. Reeves, of Columbus, Indiana, has made the following proposition to our Indiana churches:

To The Indiana Christian Missionary Association:

I hereby make you the following proposition for the year nineteen hundred and fourteen (1914):

I hereby subscribe, and will pay to your Association, one ($1.00) dollar, for each dollar that is subscribed by individuals or churches, upon a pledge card, a sample of which is attached hereto.

I agree to make said remittances quarterly, upon receiving an itemized statement from your Secretary, of the receipts from these cards, and said statement to be made not later than ten (10) days after the close of the quarter.

The total amount I agree to pay, under this proposition, is not to exceed five thousand ($5,000) dollars.

The payment of any pledge made in 1913 or 1914 under this offer may be extended into the year 1915, and it is understood to come under the provision of this offer.

Fraternally submitted this the thirteenth day of October, 1913.

(Signed) MARSHAL T. REEVES.

C. W. Cauble, who made good as president of Bethany Assembly, and as raiser of state funds in a whirlwind campaign, has been chosen as the new corresponding secretary of the state. The state organization is also fortunate in having at the head of the Sunday-school department, Garry L. Cook, who has been conducting most successful summer schools of methods at Bethany Park. The munificence of Marshal T. Reeves has come as a mighty uplift to all departments of our state work. W. D. Bartle is still at the head of the Christian Endeavor work. The following special interests should demand our earnest co-operation and support: Bethany Assembly in its larger undertakings; Butler College, as the main center of education among our people in the state; the Bloomington Bible chair in its incipient trials to solve a great and vital problem of Christian culture at the State University, and the social service commission, created at our last convention to deal with some social questions in the complex life of our growing state. These, with the effective work of our C. W. B. M., and all the regular lines of our state work should appeal to each member of our great brotherhood in this good commonwealth, with new vision, responsibility and service.

A new day has come to our state work of modern efficiency, a larger vision, and deeper consecration to the great tasks before us.

All eyes are now turned toward Terre Haute for a great "Diamond Jubilee" convention. Let us make it a gracious "Home Coming" affair, reaching even beyond the borders of the state.

We desire to welcome back to "dear old Indiana," in the genial month of May, the sons and daughters who have wandered from us. Come back home and enjoy the sessions of the "Diamond" convention. As president of the Indiana Missionary Association, I most heartily extend this greeting and cordial invitation on behalf of our churches in this great state.

L. C. HOWE,
Pres. of the Indiana Christian Missionary Association.

A GREAT AND POPULAR CHURCH MUSIC BOOK

The New Praise Hymnal

EDITED BY GILBERT J. ELLIS AND J. H. FILLMORE

There is no equipment of the church more vitally related to its spiritual development and growth than the kind of hymnal it uses. In other words, a church makes no better investment than the purchase of a good hymnal. It is a serious mistake to buy an ordinary gospel song book for use on the Lord's Day and the Wednesday evening prayer services. Such books cheapen the worship.

The New Praise Hymnal comes as near being the ideal church hymnal for the present day as could well be conceived. It is a handsome book, dignified in appearance and make-up. It embraces in its contents as nearly everything demanded to-day as could be gotten into a book of 600 pages.

The New Praise Hymnal is practical in every way; everything in it is available for use in the average congregation. It contains also what is used by the most advanced churches.

The setting of the hymns and music is engaging to the eye and pleasant to read and sing.

It is a book that grows in favor as it is used. New beauties are discovered from time to time as its pages are tested by use. The hymns and tunes of the church universal are found in The New Praise Hymnal, also the best available Gospel Songs that the modern church has found to be necessary to its various activities.

The New Praise Hymnal is widely used in our churches. We believe it to be the favorite book of the church.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

The National Brotherhood Board recently passed this resolution: That "So far as practical we use business men on our committees at the National Convention." The Board of Church Extension unanimously endorsed this resolution at a recent meeting, in which it was stated—"That the reason why business men have not been used formerly is because they were not there to be used. It is to the credit of the Brotherhood Movement that there are now more business men coming to our National Convention, and this resolution is therefore very timely."

A Men's Brotherhood has existed in the church at Southport, England, where G. W. Buckner ministers, and is identified with our Men's Brotherhood Movement in this country. Recently the Kansas City office received a financial contribution from this Brotherhood in England, accompanied by a letter of appreciation for the hepful printed matter and programs obtained on this side of the water.

A Christian man is running for the Supreme Court nomination in Missouri. His name is Perry S. Rader. He is a member of the Methodist Church and teacher of a large Bible Class. A. R. Liverett, Jefferson City pastor, says: "I can say without hesitation that Brother Rader is a clean Christian gentleman and worthy of the support of all Christian voters. I know him well."

The societies are reporting unofficially that some of the foremost orators on the American platform will be on hand at Atlanta. The Brotherhood Movement already announces Fred B. Smith, while the Temperance Board has secured Prof. Chas. S. Scanlon, Temperance Secretary of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ.

G. L. Snively dedicated the new Sunday School Building at Newton, Ia., Jan. 25. This is a live church because it recognizes that its life is the Sunday-school. A Sunday-school cabinet and a fine orchestra are among its "institutions." E. F. Leache is the pastor at Newton.

The Christian Standard announces the seventy-fifth birthday anniversary of J. B. Briney, one of its contributing editors and a preacher of note for many years. The Christian Century wishes to join the other friends of this aged prophet in congratulations.

The National Brotherhood Secretary and George W. Muckley, of the Church Extension Board, were seen in Dallas, Texas, recently. Mr. Muckley was getting some money for his work while Mr. Elliott reported some new Brotherhoods in the Lone Star State.

F. F. Walters will complete two years as minister at Wichita Falls, Texas, on May 1. The congregation now numbers 300 and is growing. The Bible-school has increased 130 in six weeks. The church will adopt the budget plan of missions on March 1.

A Men's Movement, under the leadership of J. Wesley, our minister at Exline, Iowa, has been inaugurated and 150 men turned out at the first meeting. This is only an indication of the interest being aroused in men's work throughout the nation.

E. W. Sumner, of Indianapolis, has issued a neat announcement of his lectures and addresses especially fitted to men's work. His endorsements are many and the forecast is such as to commend him to the interest of churches everywhere.

A. R. Spicer, chairman of the Oklahoma State Missionary Society, says, "Making Good in the Local Church" is "fire off the altar." He has reference to the book from the pen of our National Brotherhood secretary, E. E. Elliott.

D. P. Gribben, layman, will speak on the Ideals of the National Men's Movement before the audience of his home church, Ivanhoe Park, Kansas City, Feb. 22.

The Brotherhood office is receiving requests for literature from England, Australia, and the Islands of the sea. Recently a request for some of the new Covenants for Christian men was received from Bayamon, Porto Rico.

Harry A. Jones is chairman of the Banquet Committee of the Atlanta Convention. Those organizations expecting to hold banquets during the convention will do well to communicate with him at an early date.

W. G. Irwin, of Columbus, Indiana, was an "active spectator" at the Men and Millions meeting. He served on committees, read reports, and when occasion demanded, made speeches.

Men's Work Programs, issued by the Brotherhood of Disciples of Christ, are being published each month in the Conquest, our new paper for the church and its societies.

The "Christian Evangelist" is preparing to give its readers some interesting "human interest" stories of our leading cities, and the churches and pastors we have in the cities.

"The most beautiful church in the Brotherhood," is at Rome, Georgia, built of solid Georgia marble, and its appointments compare favorably with the best churches in the land.

C. C. Davis, pastor at Corydon, Iowa, reports increased activity among the men of his church. A Brotherhood Class has been organized.

Charles E. Smith, pastor of Tuxedo Church, St. Louis, Mo., has been retained as its pastor for another year.

A Brotherhood has been organized in the church at Decatur, Indiana, G. C. Steele is the secretary.

Preachers' Week at Bethany Park, July 21-31, will see 500 preachers in attendance.

Ten Big Reasons Why

BETHANY GRADED LESSONS are being adopted by so many of the best schools among Disciples.

1. There is more to them—at least a third more—than is contained in any other series.
2. They are rich, vital and full of suggestion to teacher and pupil.
3. They are free from the sectarian spirit.
4. They are soundly and fervently evangelical.
5. They are truly artistic in all their illustrations.
6. They are printed on better paper with better binding and in better taste than any other series.
7. Every lesson writer is an expert of interdenominational reputation.
8. They are a monument to the modern spirit of unity—several leading denominations have co-operated to produce them and are now using them.
9. The Disciples possess full editorial rights, through the editor, Charles Clayton Morrison.
10. Every Disciple school that uses them participates in and promotes a great Christian union enterprise.

WATCHFULNESS: A TEMPERANCE LESSON.

International Uniform Lesson for March 8.

Luke 12:35-48. Memory Verses, 47, 48.

Golden Text.—Blessed are those servants, whom the Lord when he cometh shall find watching.—Luke 12:37.

American Standard Bible.
Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons.
(Used by permission.)

(35) Let your loins be girded about, and your lamps burning; (36) and be ye yourselves like unto men looking for their lord, when he shall return from the marriage feast; that, when he cometh and knocketh, they may straightway open unto him. (37) Blessed are those servants, whom the lord when he cometh shall find watching: verily I say unto you, that he shall gird himself, and make them sit down to meat, and shall come and serve them. (38) And if he shall come in the second watch, and if in the third, and find them so, blessed are those servants. (39) But know this, that if the master of the house had known in what hour the thief was coming he would have watched, and not have left his house to be broken through. (40) Be ye also ready: for in an hour that ye think not the Son of man cometh. (41) And Peter said, Lord, speakest thou this parable unto us, or even unto all? (42) And the Lord said, Who then is the faithful and wise steward, whom his lord shall set over his household, to give them their portion of food in due season? (43) Blessed is that servant, whom his lord when he cometh shall find so doing. (44) Of a truth I say unto you, that he will set him over all that he hath. (45) But if that servant shall say in his heart, My lord delayeth his coming; and shall begin to beat the menservants and the maidservants, and to eat and drink, and to be drunken; (46) the lord of that servant shall come in a day when he expecteth not, and in an hour when he knoweth not, and shall cut him asunder, and appoint his portion with the unfaithful. (47) And that servant, who knew his lord's will, and made not ready nor did according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes; (48) but he that knew not, and did things worthy of stripes, shall be beaten with few stripes. And to whomsoever much is given, of him shall much be required; and to whom they commit much, of him will they ask the more.

Verse by Verse.

By C. C. Buckner.

v. 35. Let your loins be girded. The metaphorical injunction teaches us to be prepared at all times.

v. 36. Like unto men looking, etc.: They are eager to participate in the joys of their lord.

v. 37. Whom when the Lord cometh shall find watching: Someone has said that each day should be lived as though it were the last.

v. 38. The second watch: This period was the first half of the dead of night. The third period was the second half of the dead of night.

v. 39. If the master had known: Men represent the master; Christ represents the thief.

v. 40. Be ye also ready: There being no fixed date, we should so live that we would be prepared for the coming at any hour.

v. 41 This parable: The reference is to Jesus' promise in verse 37.

v. 42. The Lord said: Jesus is teaching, by his interrogation, that victory is promised to the true and the faithful. To give them their portion of food in due season: "Rations were given out on Roman estates daily, weekly or monthly."

v. 43. Compare this verse with verse 43.

v. 45. But if that servant shall say in his heart, etc.: Jesus is here warning against the subtle danger of pride.

v. 47. Who knew his Lord's will: Our responsibility is measured by our ability. See Romans 2:14.

At the Heart of the Lesson.

By A. Z. Conrad.

Every shield has two sides. In his teaching Jesus always presented both. He had just pointed to the "lily of the field" as an evidence of what God can do with anything or any one when his will and his way are unhindered. He had declared the importance of a restful trust in divine guiding. That was one side of the shield. Jesus never presented half truths. Follow his sermons to the finish and you will find that there is no segment of the circle wanting. Trust is no substitute for energy. God's work is supplemental and complemental. We are not carried heavenward on "flowery beds of ease." Character does not come from repose or inaction. The lily of the field emphasizes an important truth in implicit trust and surrender to the divine will. Jesus quickly turned the shield and on the other side we see athletic alertness, soldierly eagerness, sentinel solicitude. Luke 12:35. "Let your loins be girt about and your lights burning." Contrast could be scarcely more marked. The flower of the field, reposeful and responsive. The athlete in an attitude of intense attention and inspired purposefulness. There is no discharge in the Christian army of conquest. Enlisted disciples are never "off duty." Furloughs are not granted. The roll-call is a continuous act. Every soldier is "on guard." Sentinel service is universal. There is no subordinate or unimportant place in the King's service. Each holds a trumpet in one hand and a sword in the other.

ROYAL HOSPITALITY.

v. 37. "Blessed are those servants whom the lord when he cometh shall find watching." We have felicity contrasted with fear; peace instead of trepidation; composure instead of confusion; delight in the place of dread; rejoicing and not remorse; heartfulness instead of heaviness; ardor instead of alarm. Could contrast of condition be more violent than these? Yet how true to life. Everything is conditioned upon virtuous vigilance. The returning lord will elevate to royal position and cover with regal honors the faithful, watchful disciple. Such is the graphic story of love's reward. The world has yet to witness an act of condescension comparable with that of Jesus washing the disciples' feet in the upper room. Here was literally fulfilled the promise of this parable. This, however, is daily repeated in the loving condescension of the Lord of Glory in the interest of valorous and vigilant disciples. What a view is here presented of the high honors of heavenly coronation! The very highest honors of heaven consist in exaltation to fellowship with Christ. "Henceforth I call you no longer servants, but friends." Here is the lasting and all-sufficient reward for a discipleship that serves and suffers.

RESPONSIBLE IGNORANCE.

v. 39. "If the master of the house had known what hour the thief was coming he would have watched and not have left his house, to be broken through," literally, "to be digged under." The figure is now entirely changed. The unexpected coming of the lord has but one feature similar to that of the coming of the thief, namely, it is unannounced. The lesson designed to be taught is on the side of the householder; the importance of his vigilance, and the inexcusable nature of his ignorance. The householder had relaxed attention. He would eat, drink, and be merry now and not concern himself about remote dangers. He was like the student who waits until the night before the examination before taking up his studies. He was like the soldier-sentinel who thinks it foolish to pace wearily to and fro when there seems to be no possibility of the enemy making an attack. There was no need of excitement. "If he had known." How far is ignorance a reasonable excuse? Only so far as the opportunity to know was not given. The householder did know that his business was to prepare against any possible surprise. He did know that the intruder was likely to come at any time. He did not know the hour when the thief might attempt to enter. That very fact is one which instead of constituting an excuse for indifference increased his responsibility. No man knows the hour when he may be summoned to the bar of God. That very fact makes it most reprehensible to neglect preparation. Nothing can be presented as a sufficient apology for lack of alertness.

READINESS FOR THE EMERGENCIES OF LIFE.

Evil is persistent. Danger is not intermittent, but constant. Attempted invasion is a continuous occurence. The water presses against the dyke day and night. There is no time when the protected villages behind the dyke can be indifferent to the ocean's roar. If youth had known the nature of the slumbering tiger of appetite of sin he would not have unchained him by moderate drinking. But he did know that tens of thousands are continually going down through intemperance. Had a father and mother of my acquaintance with a family of five sons known that every one of those boys would go to a drunkard's grave before they had reached mid-life, those parents would not have ridiculed the temperance pledge nor would they have habitually kept liquor on the side-board. Had Mrs. L—with her growing family known that her sons and daughters would have become avowed unbelievers she would not for society reasons have forsaken the church of her father and placed those children in religious association where the Bible was regarded as a book of fiction, miracles amusing myths, and Jesus a good but self-deceived man. She should have known that infidelity in a professedly Christian church is even more destructive of belief than when unmasked and openly it displays its own nature. In every walk of life unceasing vigilance is necessary to prevent the demolition of character.

A LIVING GUARD.

"He would have watched and not have suffered his house to have been dug under." No castle is safe without a living guard. No creedal wall will prevent the entrance of destructive unbelief. Church membership insures no one's exemption from temptation. There is no such thing as an impregnable fortress which will render unnecessary a living watchman. It is the life in the body that resists disease. Vaults with chilled-steel walls and time-locked doors do not secure the gold within. The watchman is placed and is compelled to record his own faithfulness. There is no substitute for personal vigilance. We keep our spiritual health by guarding against all forms of unbelief. We have no right to toy with dangers physical or spiritual. There is not a holy cause in all the world that goes unchallenged. There is no law on the statute books of any state, which opposes appetite, that is not in danger of being repealed. Legislative hearings reveal the insistent and diabolical ingenuity of personified evil. Temperance legislation is always subject to attack. Bills are perpetually being introduced which seek to make vice and crime less difficult. Every nameable evil has advocacy. For gold, attorneys will prostitute their abilities and with soft phrases and sophistical argument endeavor to seduce citizens and legislators. Let good men be off their guard for a single year and iniquity would abound until the stench of it would reach the very heavens. Righteousness has to fight for its very existence. A position once taken is not a permanent victory. The fight is on to the finish and the finish is only at the grave. We face a foe that never surrenders and never knows when he is defeated.

THE UNEXPECTED SUMMONS.

v. 40. "Be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh." Jesus presses home the lesson in individual life. We are always meeting the unexpected. We must be ready to bear the losses of life. No material wealth is sure. There are few who do not meet with financial reverses. Business fails. Trusted friends prove treacherous. Investments prove worthless. Abundance today and poverty tomorrow. Sickness comes. Unexpected and unsuspected menaces to health lurk within the walls. Then too, there are bereavements, fearful, overwhelming. A voice that filled the home with music is hushed. The touch that thrilled is no more felt. "Be ye also ready." How can we prepare for all these things? Only in one way. It is by alliance with "one greater than the temple." "In such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh." This is as sure as existence. Jesus will come. He will come in glorious majesty to judge the world. But he is also ever coming to summon man from earth. This is so sure that none can even contemplate escape from it. "Set thine house in order for thou shalt die and not live."

TOPIC FOR MARCH 4.

The Secret of Power. Mark 9:14-29; Matt. 19-21.

"Human knowledge and human power meet in one; for where the cause is not known the effect cannot be produced." This is the way the scientist speaks of power. Ignorance may stumble upon success now and then but any satisfactory control of natural forces for the benefit of man must be gained through knowledge. It is not a series of happy accidents to which Mr. Edison owes his prominence as an inventor. He has worked patiently to find out the ways of nature.

Does power in the spiritual world come by chance? We do not believe that it does. There may be some question about the propriety of the expression "natural law in the spiritual world," but we are not doubting that the spiritual life has its laws. These laws may be difficult to state. They reveal themselves to the disciplined mind and heart. Stupid selfishness remains ignorant of them.

"IN TUNE WITH THE INFINITE."

A "new thought" writer has undertaken to show us that only those have power who are "in tune with the infinite." We do not have to go to the advocates of new thought for this information. Paul believed that in God we live and move and have our being and that apart from God we are nothing. St. Augustine wrote with passionate earnestness of man's dependence upon the divine for every good thing. Harmony with the divine will means power. To be wilful is to be weak.

STRENGTH FROM PRAYER.

After we have spent the day in trying to set the world right, there is renewal of strength in prayer. We ought to feel that much depends upon us, that important work will be left undone if we are careless and inefficient, but we may easily assume too much of the responsibility of running the universe. Prayer unites our wills to the will of God. In prayer we learn to trust, to wait, to work without fretting, to draw the line between what we ought to do and what we ought to leave undone. When we pray truly, we are brought to see what is great and what small, and we acquire the habit of putting the emphasis where it belongs.

CREATIVE FAITH.

One man says, "Impossible," and he is right. Another says, "It can be done," and he is also right. The one who says nothing can be done is without faith. He looks at the savage and announces that it is foolish to think of giving such a creature Christianity and civilization. The man of faith comes along, the savage listens to him, becomes gentle and kind. Lacking faith, we can make no appeal to the best in others. When once we believe, we have power to touch the better nature of the worst man. Miss Frances E. Willard visited in a Chicago prison a woman whom others had found defiant and pronounced hopelessly bad. The woman listened to Miss Willard, changed her manner of life, and lived to rescue others who, like herself, had fallen into sin and shame. Let us be careful about saying things can not be done, for somebody may come along and do them while we are demonstrating that they are impossible. The faith of one man taps sources of power whose existence we have been denying.

THE MANNER OF MEN.

Goodness is always incarnate. Right for right's sake is moonshine. Right is what helps on life in some way. Faith has its dwelling in persons. It does not float around in the atmosphere. Paul and his companions were able to preach the gospel because they first lived it. They could without boasting ask men to follow them as they followed Christ. They had very little machinery. They had life.

Indiana Pastor Says "A Character Builder."

The first copy of "The Conquest" gives promise of a great character builder for our young people. It has in it education, inspiration and culture. I want my young people to have its influence.

Rev. Elmer Ward Cole, Huntington, Ind.

Founder of Intermediate Endeavor Delighted.

I have received the copies of "The Conquest" and I want to say that it seems to me an admirable paper in every way. I believe it will have a wide circulation and will do a vast deal of good.

Rev. A. Z. Conrad, Boston, Mass.

Doctor Ainslie Says It Has Real Merit.

I am greatly pleased with your publications, and especially "The Conquest." It is a paper of real merit and ought to have a most cordial support.

Rev. Peter Ainslie, Baltimore, Md.

Ohio Pastor Makes "Conquest" Picture Gallery.

I am preserving all the "Faces You Ought to Know," which you print each week in "The Conquest." This will make a fine collection of our leading men, when completed. I am greatly impressed with "The Conquest," not only for this feature, but for the many short articles and items that are so valuable for future reference, which may be clipped and filed. Its C. E. lessons and prayer-meeting lessons are among the best that come to my study. It ought to be the most popular paper published by the disciples.

Rev. W. G. Loucks, South Akron Church of Christ.

Youngstown Pastor Complimentary.

I am delighted with "The Conquest." It gives promise of supplying a very vital need. Its editors seem to appreciate the type of religious literature demanded by the youth of today.

Rev. Wm. Dunn Ryan, Central, Youngstown, O.

"Men's Class MUST Have The Conquest."

I must have "The Conquest" for my men's class. It is an admirable paper. Send me your rates.

Rev. Roger T. Nooe, Frankfort, Ky.

What a "Clipper" Says of "The Conquest."

I have the "clipping habit." I went through the first issue of "The Conquest," and when I had finished a mere skeleton was all that remained. That speaks for itself. Every page contains something worth filing. It is the best paper of its kind published.

C. Manly Morton, Winston-Salem, N. C.

(Ed. Note: We have ordered two copies sent gratis to Mr. Morton, that he may clip both sides of the paper!)

The Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse is fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, the Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

A Vision of the Dead

Now and then one must think about death. Some parents and teachers now are endeavoring to cut out of their children's education and reading every possible reference to death. That might be well if by any possibility it could be kept up; but there is no possible plan of education that can be completed on that basis. The vision of death is a part of the discipline of life. Whoever lives to any number of active years must look now and then into the face of death; and sooner or later every man must face death for himself. Our fathers thought too much and we, very likely, think too little, about death. Now and then you must think about it, and you ought.

And when we think about it steadily, and without shrinking, something of the horror passes. Man has thought much about death, and somewhat to his profit. Our grief, our wonder, our longing, are the fruit of our thought of death.

What a tribute it is to the worth of living, this sacred grief of ours! What a prophecy of life beyond is in our love that denies the finality of death!

How vastly poorer life would be if we had no vision of our dead! Within what narrow confines we should be shut! How close about us on every side like the walls of a prison would be the four sides of life! Let us look for a moment at the vision of the dead.

"I saw the dead, small and great!" Let us call to our vision the great among the dead. Out of the millions and millions who have lived, a few have left their names to us with some tradition of the qualities and achievements that made them illustrious. They were the men who stood above the stature of their own generation, and still are visible above the level of the commonplace in intervening generations. The thinkers, the inventors, the philosophers, though dead still speak. Archimedes and Aristotle, Plato and Pythagoras, Solomon and Schliermacher—how their names haunt us with the vision of great majestic characters in the realm of human thought. They pass before us in swift procession, the builders of the Pyramids, and the builders of the philosophies, the men who built the temples, and the men who built institutions. We enter and pass, like Dante, through the abode of the mighty dead, and we behold the prophets and the poets, the singers whose songs still echo in the souls of men, the artists whose paintings still thrill us with the love of beauty, the sculptors who wrought their visions into enduring bronze and marble. We behold the mighty law-givers, Moses and Hammurabi and Justinian; we see the long procession of the men who fought the battles of human freedom, Joshua and Robert Bruce, and George Washington; we behold the world's liberators of mind and body, Cromwell and Lincoln and old John Brown; we hear the voices unsubdued by the din of the centuries of the great preachers, of Isaiah and Jeremiah, of Paul and Chrysostom, of Robinson and Wesley and Edwards and Beecher and Brooks—all these rise and pass before us in our vision of the dead. How much we owe to them; how vastly they enlarge the meaning of life for us. They surround us in a great cloud of witnesses. Being dead they speak.

Let us behold the undistinguished dead. The ages have given to the world innumerable brave souls who wrought well at life's tasks, but wrought humbly and inconspicuously. The names of the real founders of our civilization are all lost to us. Yet these men with titanic strength burst the bands of barbarism, and widened the confines of civilization, and laid foundations on which all later ages builded. Many of them toiled for good that never came to them. They sowed, and the ages reaped long afterward, when the names of the sowers had been lost.

Let us call to our mind the privates in life's battles. Let us pause and consecrate the grave of the unknown dead. Let us pay our passing tribute to the memory of those who died before the battle was won, those who fell before they knew whether their death had purchased the good for which they fought, those whose death-sob mingled with the cheer that hailed the distant victory.

There comes to us a vision of our own dead. We loved them, but we could not keep them. They were dear to us, but they left us. But they are not lost to us. Life would be immeasurably cheapened if our dead were not still our own.

* * *

We need not count it morbid in ourselves that now and then we think of ourselves as dead. If death is inevitable, then it cannot be wholly evil; if there be any way of averting it, or of making it less terrible, then surely it deserves an occasional thought. The last word of Science is that life and death are not opposites, for death is predicable only of things that have life, and death is therefore a phenomenon of life. Why may it not be the phenomenon of transition into larger life? Faith has a vision of the dead, and behold they are immortal.

Symptoms of a Deep-Rooted Disease

BY H. D. C. MACLACHLAN.

Editors Note: A congregation of over one thousand persons crowded the Seventh Street Christian Church, Richmond, Va., to hear Dr. Maclachlan's recent sermon, the text of which was gathered from Winston Churchill's novel, "The Inside of the Cup." The sermon was the second one which Dr. Maclachlan has preached on this book. In the former sermon he remarked on the relation of the church to men of wealth, and intimated that frequently too much consideration was paid the wishes of wealthy church members for the good of the church, and the insurance that the real message of God would be delivered.

I AM to speak to you tonight about a book which is upon everybody's lips. In the short limits of a single sermon I cannot hope, nor will you, my friends, expect me, to do more than indicate in a very general way what seems to me to be the problems raised and the solution offered by Mr. Churchill.

H. D. C. Maclachlan.

With the literary merits of the book I have nothing here to do, save to say, in passing, that if it is not a great, it is at least a good piece of work. Mr. Churchill is not a stylist, perhaps, but he writes with sympathy and understanding, and is not so lavishly reckless with words as some of his contemporary writers of fiction. The characters in the book, too are far from being the lay figures one sometimes finds in problem novels—Mrs. Humphrey Ward, Robert Elsemere, for example. I confess to a liking—literary, of course—even for Eldon Parr. His women especially are excellent—Mrs. Larabee, who with an elegance so unobtrusive as to border on mystery, never failed to agitate any atmosphere she entered, even that of prayer; Mrs. Constable, "with whom 'church-work' had become a second nature in a well-ordered life;" Mrs. Wallis Plimpton, who, "in an evening gown with a string of large pearls resting on her firm and glowing neck, appeared a concrete refutation of the notion of rebirth;" Mrs. Fergusson, "resplendent and always a little warm, with her daughter, Nan, dainty and appealing, her eyes uplifted and questioning;" and above all, Kate Marcy, the girl with the russet hair, who "could make the box talk when she set it a-goin'"—the nightwalker of Dalton street—the high priestess of the social system of the vestrymen of St. John's. We know them and we love them all—in books.

THE MORAL QUESTIONS.

But our business tonight is with the great moral questions raised by this book. Mr. Churchill did right when he chose part of a text from the Bible as the title of his book; for it is a sermon—a sermon so strong, direct and prophetic that if half the pulpits of the land had the courage and ability to preach as he does, we would very soon find ourselves living in a better world. The message of the book, as I understand it, is interpretative rather than creative. It is only one of the many signs of the new day of democracy and freedom whose dawn we are being privileged to witness in this glorious century—the literary expression of the new social conscience whose prickings have been making all of us at once glad and uncomfortable of late. In my imagination it is linked in its own field to President Wilson's "new idealism," to Mr. Ford's quixotic gift of $10,000,000 to his employes (an act not of charity, but of justice), to the "social service commissions" of the churches, to the Pujo committee, to Lloyd George's social legislation in England; in a word, to all the efforts that man is putting forth the world over to inaugurate a new day to human brotherhood and the spiritual evaluation of life.

This book, I say, is the mouthpiece of the age. It tells, us, far better than we could do, what many of us have been trying to think and say for at least a decade past. Mons. Jourdain in Motieri's play, was amazed to discover that, all unknown to himself, he had been speaking prose all his life; so in the pages of this book we are equally amazed to discover that, when the world was calling us socialists and free-thinkers, we were in reality only Christians all the while. I use the words "socialist and free-thinker," of course, in a Pickwickian sense. Personally I am neither the one nor the other; though I have had the honor at times of being called both by the unintelligent.

THE THEOLOGY CRUDE.

This is not to say that I endorse everything in the book. Its theology is somewhat crude and is evidently taken from a few critical books hastily read. Its scheme for the reconstruction of the church is, to say the least, a little hazy and indefinite. Its emphasis on particular dogmas is unnecessary and misleading. But in spite of these defects, the book does give us a new vision and inspiration. It is a splendid protest against the spirit of the Pharisee—a magnificent appeal—and this, I think, is its pre-eminent merit—for the spiritualizing of religion and the reinterpretation of the personality and teaching of the Man of Nazareth, the Lord whom we all, I trust, worship and adore as the complete and all-sufficient revelation of God in and to man—in terms of modern problems and twentieth century needs.

Just a day or two ago a good friend of mine said, speaking of this book: "But it isn't orthodox, is it?" I could not help smiling. "No," I said, "it isn't orthodox, and that is just its charm." The spiritual sense of the world has been kept asleep too long already by the narcotic of its traditional orthodoxies—its hedges of the law and traditions of the fathers —while it neglected "the weightier matters of the law, justice, mercy and truth." There are orthodoxies and orthodoxies. To most people orthodoxy means simply my doxy and heterodoxy your doxy. Often enough among the people who talk most about orthodoxy you will find this strange anomaly, that they are measuring even Christ and the Bible by some purely human standard of creed or dogma, instead of—which is the ultimate orthodoxy—measuring every formulation of the truth—yes, even in the Bible itself as Luther did—by the spirit of him who said: "I am the Truth." These people remind me of the old Scotswoman who was being rallied on her strict observance of the Sabbath which forbade her even to take a walk on that day. "But," said her questioner, "you surely admit that Christ set us a perfect example, and he walked his disciples through the cornfields on the Sabbath." "Deed," was the instant reply, "he did that; but I never thocht the mair o' him for it!"

THE WALLIS PLIMPTONS.

Such a creed Wallis Plimpton held, but he rented a house for prostitution in Dalton street. Such a creed Fergusson held, but he lied to God and his own conscience when he made his women clerks sign a paper that they lived at home and so could afford to live on a nonliving wage. Such a creed Eldon Parr held, but he was the chief villain of Consolidated Tractions—the type of all that is evil, selfish, materialistic and non-Christian in the ways of high finance. Verily the publicans like Tony Baldassaro and the harlots like Kate Marcy enter into the kingdom of heaven before such as these!

I am not undervaluing creedal statements. They are useful and even necessary as crutches for faith to walk by—as guideposts by the way. But, thank God, faith itself is independent of them; the eternal verities of religion, communion with God and his Christ, the sense of sin forgiven and new life received in a redemptive experience—those things do not depend on any theological or historical definition whatsoever. They are immediate convictions of the soul. The creeds grow out of them—and with every new spiritual conviction there comes a new creed—not they out of the creeds. "If I choose a God," says Alison Parr in the book, "I cannot take a consensus of opinion about him—he must be my God." Yes, verily, and when he has become my God, then I know him in the only true religious sense—a sense which no creed can either give or take away.

WHAT BELIEVING IN GOD MEANS.

To believe in God intellectually is one thing—the devils do that and tremble—to believe in him spiritually, personally, religiously, is quite another—it is to know him as a stay in trouble, as a light in darkness, as the prick of dissatisfaction with an imperfect world and a still more imperfect self, as the Great Companion by the way, as the clear shining after rain, as rivers of water in a dry place, as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land—and only those can do that who have met him face to face in the touch of a redemptive experience. I believe in God not because of the so-called proofs of the theologians, but because in proportion to my purity of heart I have seen him. I believe in Christ not because of any historical argument, but because I have seen him walk the streets of Richmond and heard his voice saying to the warring elements of my soul: "Peace be still." I believe in his divinity not because the belligerent theologians at Ephesus or Chalcedon decided it by a majority vote, but because he has done for me that which only God himself can do—save me from myself—save me from my sin!

CREEDS NOT INFALLIBLE.

And as for creeds: They are not infallible; they must change. John Hodder, you will remember, in the days before his intellectual rebirth, likened faith to an egg, insisting that if you broke the shell the egg would be destroyed. But what if the shell were never broken? Would not the egg equally perish? Is it not the very condition of the full birth of the life within the egg—of the very thing for which the egg exists—that the shell shall be broken? Must not the chicken peck that shell and so come forth to perpetuate its kind by an ever recurring process of making and breaking shells, if the egg is not to be cast into the scrap heap as a worse than useless thing?

But John Hodder's fight was not only for freedom of thought, but for freedom of action also; for deliverance from the incubus of social and economic conditions which were crippling the usefulness of the church of which he was a minister.

THE REVELATION.

At first, you remember, he had blindly accepted things as they were and, while sensible that St. John's was only scratching on the surface with its institutional machinery and welfare work, yet had been blind to the real causes of its failure. But when at that memorable dinner party in the Fergussons' house his eyes were opened to the fact that Eldon Parr—his richest member, to whom all the diocese looked up to as its leader—was a financial brigand, if not sneak thief, and that other prominent members of his vestry were aiders and abettors of his villainy; when he heard from poor Garvin the inside history of the Consolidated Tractions, with its tale of tears and blood; when he discovered that Nelson Langmaid, the corporation lawyer, who had been the emissary sent to his far-off parish to call him to St. John's as "a safe and sane" man, was the legal jackal of a twentieth century Ali Baba and his Forty Thieves; when he learned at first hand from poor Kate Marcy that his eminently respectable vestryman Fergusson was underpaying the women clerks in his department store, and so making them an easy prey to those harpies who make use of a poor girl's desire for fun and finery to lure her to a doom worse than death; when he discovered that leading members of all the churches actually owned and charged exorbitant rents for the houses in which women like Kate Marcy lived, "knowing them to be such"—then the scales dropped from his eyes and he understood why the work of St. John's was a failure and never could be anything but a failure so long as men like Eldon Parr and his associates were financing its ventures.

NO EXAGGERATION HERE.

But, you say, perhaps that is exaggerated—things in real life are not as bad as that. There may be here and there an Eldon Parr, a Constable and a Nelson Langmaid; but they are so exceptional as not to constitute a condition that calls for serious thought. Make no mistake. This book is not exaggerated. Eldon Parrs are the common property of every denomination. We have them in our own. Nelson Langmaids are in the employ of many large corporations—paid agents to tell their employers how far they can violate the laws, both of God and man, and keep out of jail. Every vice commission of recent years has the same story to tell of houses of ill-fame owned by members of the church and of department store girls driven to the streets because the pittance paid them was not enough to live on as a young, healthy girl has a right to expect to live. Consolidated Tractions is only another name for Amalgamated Copper and many other wrecking parties of high finance. The alliance between the vestrymen of St. John's and the forces of corrupt politics is no dream, but a drama of shame that is being enacted in nearly every large city in the United States today. "Tom Beatty's good enough for me"—is being said, or at least thought, by hundreds of good church members who make use of the Tom Beattys, or Coxes or Murphys of their city to further their own lawless schemes. And when a man like Bedloe Hubbell dares to defy the robbers in their den and to go out and clean up the city, there are plenty of good church members ready to call him a demagogue and reformer, to accuse him of wanting to drive prosperity away from the city and—so-called Christian men!—to laugh him to scorn for saying that prostitution is not a necessary evil.

But here, again, on thinking deeper, John Hodder made another discovery—the last and most fruitful of all; namely, that all these evils did not stand alone, but were symptoms of a deep-rooted social disease—the disease of a selfish, materialistc denaturalized civilization; that these vestrymen of his were, in part at least, the victims of a system which they had neither the moral insight to recognize as wrong, nor the moral courage to break away from even if they did; and that, therefore, it was the chief business of the church of Jesus Christ so to idealize and spiritualize life at its source in the individuals to whom it ministers that the social wrongs and injustices of the present industrial system, with its "jungle ethics" and "survival of the fittest," its tears, its blood, its hopeless poverty, its Dalton and Mayo streets, its prostitution, its suspicions, its class warfares, "its sick who never need have been sick, its derelicts who never need have been abandoned," shall cease to be known among men.

THE CHURCH'S DUTY.

Here was at once the secret of the church's failure and an index finger pointing the way towards its real and permanent success. Let the church free itself from the incubus of unrighteous wealth; let it demand of its members not merely doles for charity, but justice, mercy and truth in their dealings man to man; let it cease to water-down for polite and sensitive ears the plain words of its Master: "Lay not up," etc., let it teach the poor as well as the rich that the true good of life consists not in the abundance of the things it possesseth, but in the right inner attitude of the soul to God and every member of his divine family; let it preach the brotherhood of man, not as a pretty phrase for an idle hour, but as the one thing needful if its daily prayer, "Thy kingdom come as in heaven so in earth," is to rise above the breath that utters it; and then—but not till then—will the church of Jesus Christ cease to be a mere policeman of society with a somewhat soiled and dirty uniform, and become what it once was in the glad, strong, generous, dynamic days of its birth, the saviour of men and the redeemer of the world.

A dangerous program, say you? Yes. it is dangerous to every interest that battens on the souls and bodies of men. It is dangerous to the financial pirate, to the luxurious snob, to the idle rich, to Palm Beach and Newport, to private cars and pleasure yachts, to swollen fortunes and starveling souls, to Consolidated Tractions and New Haven steals. Of course it is revolutionary. Christianity is just that. It is dynamite; it is nitroglycerine. It turns the world upside down. It makes and remakes men and societies; and if it is not doing so today—if the world of practical men can see nothing in the church but a conservator of the peace and a booking-office to heaven—it is because it has been disobedient to its heavenly vision and allowed those that bought and sold to traffic in the temple concerning which the Master spoke in no easy terms.

NOT INDICTING RICH.

I am drawing no indictment against the rich. The church needs money and will need more money as the days go by. Thank God there is plenty of wealth cleanly got and generously spent. I know rich men whose treasure is in heaven: I know poor men—plenty of them—whose treasure is on earth—whose daily wage is their god. But, if we are to believe the Master's words, there is a peculiar danger both in the acquisition and possession of great wealth—it is the danger of becoming so absorbed in the material things of life that we shall forget our duty to God and our fellowman, and cease to yearn after those unseen, eternal possessions which alone shall bestead us when stripped of all earthly goods we stand before God and hear the heart searching question: "Where is Abel, thy brother?"

Jesus Christ was, of course, far more than a social reformer; but he was a social reformer. He laid down principles of human brotherhood which, if consistently applied, will, I believe, solve progressively all the social problems of this or any other age. No one has ever denounced wrong or injustice as he did. And if he were on earth today do not imagine that he would say, as the standpatters do: "All is for the best in the best of all possible worlds." He who said: "How much more is a man worth than a sheep?" would be found on the firing line of the battle for human rights. He who said: "Blessed are ye poor." would be the champion now, as he was then, of the poor, the unprotected and the oppressed.

And his church dare not do otherwise. It dares not acquiesce in the principle of unlimited competition—the so-called law of the survival of the fittest—which pushes the weakest to the wall and puts a premium on self-assertion and economic brutality.

It cannot regard as God-given the present distribution of the material goods of life which, in a world where there is more than enough for all, leaves some to starve while others roll in luxury, and which keeps 10,000,000 of the people of "The Last Judgment"

What an Old-style Colored Preacher Thinks of Michelangelo's Famous Painting in the Vatican.

REPORTED BY PROF. WILLIAM PICKENS.

AFTER seeing a number of "Last Judgments" in European art centers, I came upon the one in Munich on the wall of the Ludwigskirche, which it took four years to execute and which impressed me as being directly in harmony with the pictorial imagination of many an old-time preacher in the southern part of the United States. Only no painter who ever lived could equal the luxury and activity of that imagination. All that I saw in all of these "Last Judgments" I had in my boyhood heard over and over again from the "halleluiah" preachers. Indeed I had heard much more than I saw, for the word-artist has an advantage over the man with the brush.

Naturally I longed to know how a preacher of the old school would criticize such a painting. A few weeks later in the Sistine Chapel, that room of painted wonders in the Vatican, I saw a middle-aged American Negro with a pleased-looking Italian guide contemplating Michelangelo's world-famous fresco of "The Last Judgment." The visitor had no doubt heard the fame of this painting and there was some evident disappointment pictured in his countenance. Though not an old man he proved to be the pastor of one of the largest old-fashioned Negro churches in the United States—indeed they claim to be the largest church in the world, having between three and four thousand members. The interchange of a few ideas sufficed to show that he was one of those who know nothing of the "new" theology.

The Last Judgment.—By Michelangelo.

A UNIQUE INTERPRETATION.

Taking his name and address I was hoping that an opportunity would be found in the United States for me to learn his judgment of this "Last Judgment," but a good opportunity came earlier than I had expected. A week later in Naples I chanced to meet him just coming in from Pompeii. The sight of that unburied "City of the Dead" had evidently put him into a very prophetic and imaginative mood. He said with enthusiasm that he would describe it to his congregation under the subject of "The Feast of Belshazzar." It was plain that he was longing for some one to "practice on," and finding me a sympathetic listener he invited me to visit him at the Santa Lucia Hotel. I went gladly.

The movement of this man's imagination is indescribable. He first gave me imaginative pictures from the scenes of ancient Rome with which history or legend connects the life of Paul the Apostle—like the Mamertine Prison and the Tre Fontane. At an opportune moment I asked, "Well, what did you think of that 'Last Judgment' in the Vatican?" This seemed to touch the springs of his imagination, and as if discoursing to a congregation he proceeded in the following manner:

"Brother, that 'Last Judgment' was pretty fair, but it didn't quite come up to my idea of that Great Day when the hosts o' light and darkness shall be separated asunder from one another. Before he painted that picture, Mr. Nolang, or whatever his name is—"

"Michelangelo," I suggested.

"Well, if Mr. Angelo could have jest set down and let me describe the thing, let me paint him a word-picture first, he might have done better. I have a special sermon on the Judgment, and it's terrible to hear that great event described. Why, Professor, that Italian ain't never had the inspiration—ain't never seen the beginning of the commencement of the coming together of the mighty hosts from the four corners of the earth and from under the ground and the sky and the sea."

It will be remembered that this picture shows Christ as the Judge of the World. He is in a half-sitting posture on a cloud, on his right his mother Mary sharing the judgment seat. Above him are the emblems of his Passion; on his right-hand rise the redeemed, while devils strive in vain to pull them back; on his left the damned strive in vain to rise, while devils pull them back; below are seen Charon with his boat, and Minos the judge of the underworld, a mixture of heathen myth and Christian lore. It is a picture of simplicity, but of great dignity and majesty.

"In what particular did he fall short?" inquired I, with genuine interest. Then he, with a prophetic stare as if mentally transported to the presence of his American congregation, with rhetoric which increased in velocity until it became a torrent, continued.

SOME NOVEL CRITICISMS.

"In the first place the 'commodations wusn't sufficient, the transportation facilities wuz inadequate for bearing the redeemed Host on high above the moon and the sun and the million twinkling stars that'll be scintillating and scampering through the regions of eternal space like a countless swarm of lightning bugs in a Kentucky blue-grass field. Then I didn't see the angels blowing on the trumpets to suit me, nor the angel in the south pushing back the south wind, nor the angel in the north conquering the rebellious north winds, nor the angel in the east forcing back the east wind, nor the angel in the west holding down the west wind. There wusn't half enough angels to suit the occasion. You ought to hear me when I'm let loose in my natural element, painting that Judgment from my pulpit. Sometimes my congregation gits to working and shouting, and turning and twisting like a judgment in itself. Mr. Angelo ain't never had the tenth part of the necessary inspiration. Without the aid of the spirit he did very well, but when I stood there and contemplated the missing parts of his picture I had to say in my heart, 'Well, here's an amateur.' He wuz like the wise men of Babylon: they knew many things, being skilled in all the arts and crafts and sciences and mysteries, but they did not know what Daniel knew; they could not read the secret of the dark and hidden mysteries of the handwriting on the wall; and they knew not the interpretated meaning of 'Mene, mene, tekel, upharsin'.

"Then, the Mighty Judge of Creation wusn't represented right; he ought to have had on his face a frown of holy indignation that makes angels stand in awe, while devils shake and sinners flee. And the Judge ought to have been riding on a hoss—the great hoss of the 'poccalips with his neck bowed in thunder, flashing light from his eyes and fire from his nostrils—while the righteous Judge with furrowed brow wuz setting in his saddle of power with his stirrups of inspiration and spurs of promise, and holding the reins of faith; while coming after him and thick-pressing on his heels rides the celestial cavalry with flying banners and blasting trumpets, proclaiming glad tidings to the blessed redeemed and eternal judgment to the damned.

"And then, I missed Michael. He should have been there as the Captain of the mighty host. And Gabriel—where wuz he? He ought to have had his wings stretched toward the east and west, and his hallowed feet placed, one foot on the rolling deep sea and the other on the dry land; the foot on the sea to wake the host that has been wrapped in the damp swaddling shrouds of the blue water—and the foot on the land to rouse the children that have been folded in the embrace of their rock-ribbed mother. And the sun ought to have been going out and the moon dripping away in blood, an angel bleeding the moon. And the pillars and foundations of creations—I'd have had them tottering and snapping, and cracking and breaking—and the lightning playing, the zig-zag, forked-tongued lightning darting through space and coiling like serpents 'round the crumbling foundations of the firmament. Brother, that Italian painter didn't enter into the details!

"And where wuz the heavenly chariots? I'd have had all the chariots of heaven brought out; they ought to been flying and plying for the protection and 'commodation of the blessed host redeemed of the blood of the Lamb. I'd have put in the chariot of fire drawn by the countless steeds of Almighty Power, thundering judgment under their hoofs and snorting fire from their nostrils, while the blessed Son of God, with a look of righteous wrath on his brow, stood in that chariot with the thousands, millions, billions and trillions of reins between his fingers.

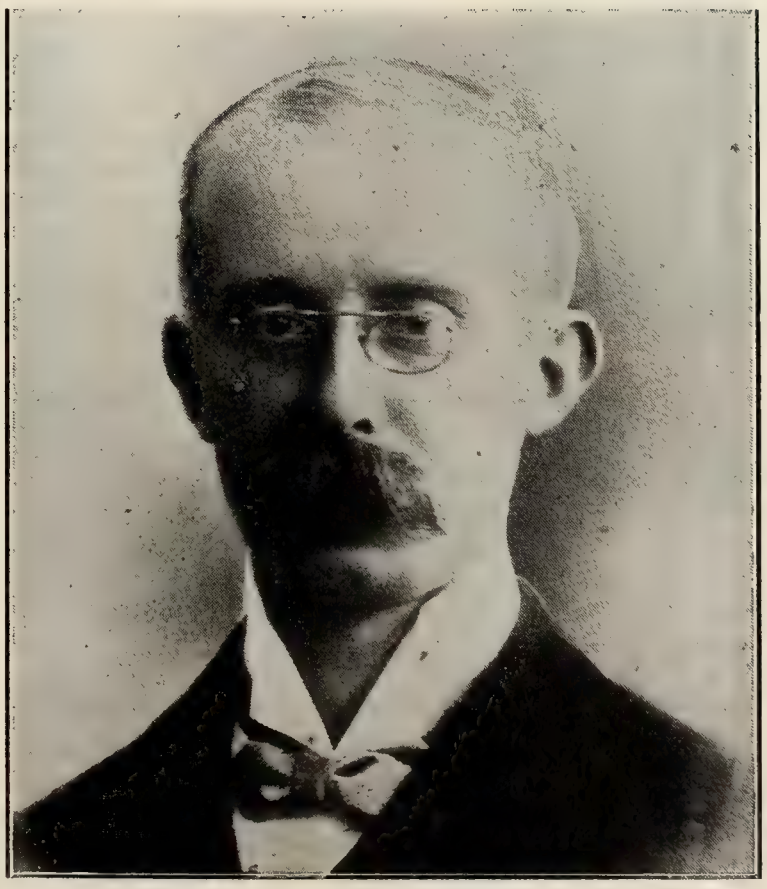
"And besides, his devils wusn't fixed right; they ought to have had hoofs and horns. It was hard to tell Mr. Angelo's devils from his angels. Brother, I have an awful feeling when I gits to riding through the Gospils. And I would advise these Italian painters, when they want to paint a great day like the Judgment, or the Flood, or the Crossing of the Red Sea, or the March Round Jericho, or the Scourges of Pharoah, they ought to go and have the thing described to 'em first."

An idea of the intonations and of the dramatic and emphatic movements of the countenance and the head and limbs, that accompany such a discourse, cannot be conveyed in print. And in justice to the rude criticism it might be said that anyone who sees any "Last Judgment," feels the inadequacy of paint and brush to represent anything like the "judgment" of the popular imagination.

Why Believing Prayer is Powerful

J. H. JOWETT, IN PITTSBURG CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

"FOR I know that this shall turn to my salvation." The great apostle is in captivity at Rome. His surroundings are hostile. His plans are all thrown into confusion, and his far-reaching missionary campaign has been ruthlessly checked.



Rev. J. H. Jowett.

But the apparent circumstances are not all the circumstances. Beneath the transient there is the eternal; within the frowning antagonism there works the hidden friendship of God. At present circumstances may seem to march against him with the bristling, threatening armaments of an overbearing foe. But there shall be a "turn;" things shall receive a mysterious twist; an unseen but friendly hand shall guide the hostile hosts, and instead of being the ministers of destruction, they shall become the agents of a larger good. "I know that this shall turn to my salvation."

And how is this gracious turning of circumstances to be brought about? What are the ministers which are to effect the transformation? The apostle mentions them.

"Through your supplications." The men and women in Philippi are to play an influential part in Rome. It is a marvelously daring association of ideas. Rome was the very heart of imperial power, and all the forces of empire seemed to be moving in opposition to the Apostle Paul. And yet this little company of obscure men and women in Philippi have a lever in their hands which can divert the battalions of unfriendly circumstances to a friendly and undreamed of end. And this lever is the great prerogative of prayer. Has the church of Christ adequately realized the vast wealth of her spacious inheritance? She has a power which can raze mountains to their base, and divert the channels of the floods.

"NO SINCERE PRAYER EVER FAILS."

"And the supply of the Spirit of Jesus Christ." This is the second of the great ministries made possible by the first. Our prayers cut channels for the river of God's gracious Spirit. No sincere prayer ever fails. It cuts a path for God; it "prepares the way for the Lord." And therefore the Christians at Philippi were sacredly qualified to minister to the great apostle at Rome, and to be the means of enriching him with amazing supplies of the divine grace. And so it came to pass that the circumstances at Rome could be reflected and "turned to salvation" by a company of humble saints who were praying in some obscure home in a distant city.

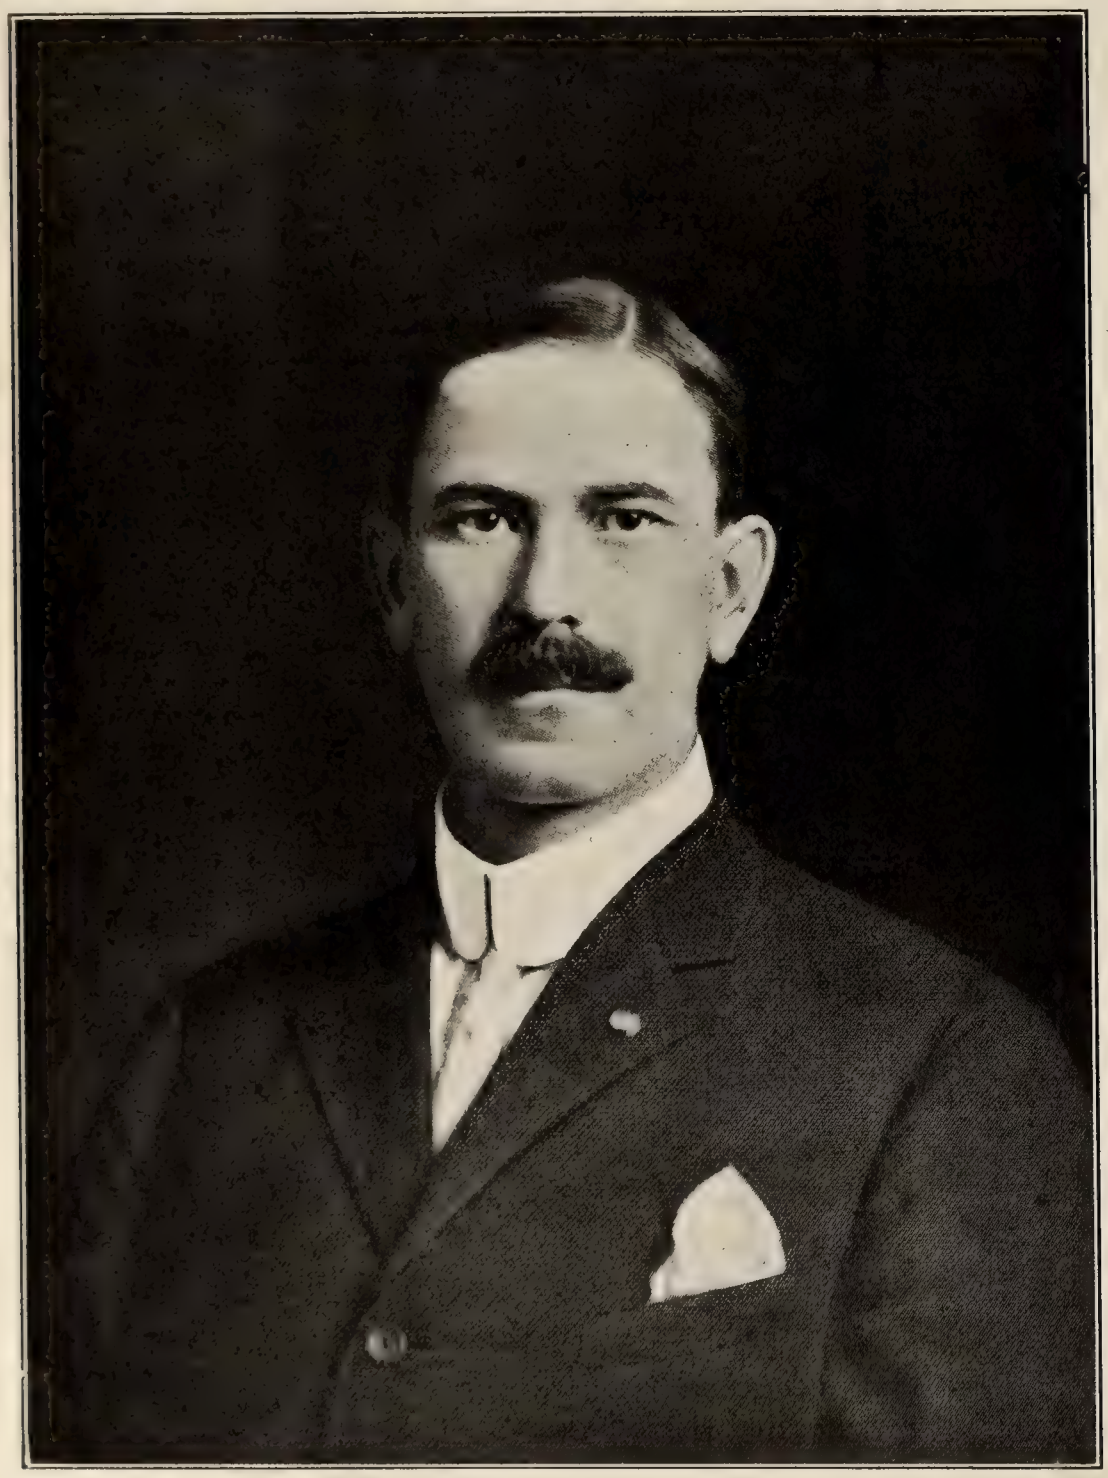
Leaders of Men and Millions

JUDGE FREDERICK A. HENRY, CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMISSION OF BUSINESS MEN.

AT the Men and Million Conference in St. Louis a prominent minister during a private conversation said: "I regard Judge Henry as one of the ablest and most effective laymen in our brotherhood." In point of ability, actual service and prominence he stands first among the laymen of Cleveland, Ohio.

Judge Henry is still a young man, being only forty-six years of age. He was born on a farm in Geauga County, Ohio, about twenty-five miles from Cleveland. He graduated from Hiram College in 1888 and from the Ann Arbor Law School in 1891. Since then he has resided in Cleveland.



Judge Frederick A. Henry, a man who "makes a business of advancing truth and righteousness and practices law to pay expenses."

AN ACTIVE CHURCH MAN.

Ever since coming to Cleveland he has been an active and influential member of the Euclid Avenue Christian Church, in which he has served in almost every conceivable capacity from the most humble office up to that of elder. He was, for a time, superintendent of the Sunday-school. He has for the past twelve years taught a class of young men and women. He is a teacher of rare ability. He was chairman of the Building Committee that led in the erection of the present beautiful house of worship.

While always deeply interested in the extension of the kingdom of God in every direction, his world-wide vision dates from the time of the Laymen's Missionary Conference held in his city in 1910. His world vision has now become with him a compelling world passion.

For a term of six years he served as judge of the Circuit Court, and was elected for a second term; but resigned to resume the practice of law. It is wholly within the bounds of fact to say that he makes a business of advancing truth and righteousness and practices law to pay expenses. His activities are multitudinous and varied. He is vice-president of the Chamber of Commerce, undoubtedly the most aggressive and potent organization of the kind in the United States. For many years he has been president of the Hiram College Board of Trustees and a mighty factor in its financial advances and educational ideals.

He is president of the Federated Churches of Cleveland; and was the one layman on the committee that created this organization, which is used as a model in other cities. This organization reveals his constructive and organizing genius.

The judge is in constant demand for addresses before commercial, political, social, educational, philosophical and religious organizations. One is amazed at his capacity for work, and work so varied in character. Most men would find his large law practice consuming all their time and thought; but he successfully carries additional responsibilities that no ordinary man would dare to assume.

AN IDEAL PRESIDING OFFICER.

As a presiding officer he excels. Those who were at the Toronto Convention will never forget him. His commanding presence, calmness, firmness, fairness and unerring, ready knowledge of parliamentary practice made him complete master of the situation. It is very rare that the Disciples of Cleveland or the Protestant churches of Cleveland have a city-wide gathering at which the judge is not the presiding officer. It is never a question in any one's mind as to who shall preside. There is only one choice.

The home life of Judge Henry helps to explain the man the public knows. His is a home in the fullest sense. It is simple, cultured, Christian. The mistress of this home is a quiet, unassuming, intellectual, able, perfectly poised woman, who is an ideal wife, mother and home maker.

People are first of all impressed by the height of this man, six feet six inches tall. That is the smallest part of him. His intellect is bigger than his body. His heart is bigger than his intellect. He who has the good fortune to get close to him is at once conscious of being in the presence of a great soul.

LIVING CHRIST'S LIFE.

St. Paul, after his conversion, had but one ambition—to live the life of Christ, to bear about in his body the marks of the Lord Jesus. But even that prince of mystics, who was so heroic and tireless in his activities, was able to embody only a part of the riches of grace that are in the mind of the Master. Of Francis of Assisi it has been said that he was the only Christian who has lived since Christ. But that noble and gracious spirit, with its blend of poetry, piety and pity, and his life of beauty in "the Galilee of Italy," was only a star deriving its light from One whom he loved and followed. Jacob Boehme was a man who saw ever the eternal hills. To his gayest hours they formed the background, and by their height he measured all things else. Yet he was only an humble student in the school of Christ, a learner at the feet of him to know whom is life eternal. So we might call the roll of those who heard the perpetual liturgy of heaven, from St. Bernard to St. Phillips Brooks—and they all with one accord confess him to be the light of their heroic and dedicated lives.

JOSEPH FORT NEWTON.

"The dynamic that is to save the world is a heart motor."

"You might as well try to cure smallpox by scenery as to try to save the world by improvement of environment."

"Not, How much of my money will I give to God? but, How much of God's money will I keep for myself?"

"Let us fail in trying to do something rather than sit still and do nothing."

"Nothing is eternal but that which is done for God and others. That which is done for self dies."

"Only consistent giving keeps the soul from shrinking."

Religion at the Panama Exposition

How the "Things of the Spirit" Will Be Represented at the Great Celebration.

BY NOAH C. GAUSE.

IN the early stages of civilization fairs and festivals were held for the purpose of the exchange of commodities. Later they were held for the purpose of the display of products. But in the processes of evolution they have culminated in the modern international exposition where the objects have been enlarged from the mere exchange or display of world commodities to the exchange of ideas and the presentation of ideals.

In view of this fact the exposition authorities, recognizing the inestimable service rendered by the constructive religious forces of the world, invite the churches to participate by holding great meetings and maintaining an exhibit. That this work might be adequately performed a local committee invited the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America to create a "Committee of 100" for this purpose. With this in view, Dr. Shailer Mathews, of Chicago, President of the Federal Council, and the Executive Secretary, Dr. Charles S. MacFarland, of New York, visited San Francisco.

THE COMMITTEE AND ITS WORK.

The committee, representing many of the leading churchmen of the world, is organized and the opportunity lies before them and the Protestant religious forces of the world. Bishop Edwin H. Hughes is Chairman of the Committee of 100. Mr. J. E. White, a prominent attorney of San Francisco, is Secretary. The committee is represented by an Exposition Executive Secretary in the person of the Rev. Dr. H. H. Bell. The members of the Executive Committee are the following men distinguished in various lines of activity: Bishop Edwin H. Hughes, Rev. H. H. Bell, Rev. Charles F. Aked, Rev. George E. Burlingame, Rev. E. F. Hall, Rev. A. Wesley Mell, Mr. L. L. Morse, Mr. I. H. Morse, Rev. E. R. Dille, and Rev. John Bascom Shaw. Many other men as well as women of national and international note constitute the personnel of the Committee of 100.

The work to which this committee is dedicating its service is one of great importance to universal Christian civilization and promises to be far-reaching in its influence. In the main the plan of the work is three-fold—religious activities, religious exhibits and the holding of religious conventions. Briefly religious activities will involve a carefully organized campaign of evangelism of a well balanced effective character. This will include social service, platform meetings, specialized forms of work for boys and girls, and for men and women. There will be classes and meetings for immigrants and for especially unreached portions of the community with generous and systematic distribution of the scriptures. For this work volunteer workers will be organized, trained and directed into channels of the greatest possible effective service. Thus the Evangelical churches of the world will concentrate their thought, prayer, and organized effort with the most improved methods at one given point, and by so doing demonstrate the highest efficiency to which the churches have attained. The coördinate work of various religious and social organizations under the direction of the "Committee of 100" during the nine and one-half months the Exposition will be open will be notable for their thoroughness and efficiency. Such organizations as the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the Young Women's Christian Association, the Young Men's Christian Association, the World's Congress of Young People's Societies, as well as the Woman's Board of the Exposition are planning large things for practical service. For example, the Young Women's Christian Association will expend $50,000 in carrying on the work of the Travelers' Aid. This will be supplemented by other organizations doing similar work, and all will be coördinated into unified action. Every hotel and rooming house in San Francisco and around the bay is being investigated and recorded for future consideration in connection with the work. Railway trains and steamboats will be met and girls and women, traveling alone, will be directed to places of repute and safety. This will form a substantial basis for future work on the Pacific Coast in the interest of the increasing number of immigrants who will migrate to the Pacific Coast when the Panama Canal is thrown open to the commerce and travel of the world. It requires no flight of the imagination to become possessed of a vision of the value of this not only in immediate results but in the creation of an ideal toward which we may strive and from which we may extract working principles for constructive, daily work in all lands.

Through the religious exhibits, a vast Christian laboratory will be maintained in a building which it is hoped will be erected upon the grounds and known as Assembly Hall, to cost not less than $200,000. Here will be presented the historical development of Protestant churches throughout the world culminating in the present day achievements. This will be done by denominational exhibits showing church distribution and the character of church activity, such as Sunday-schools, Young People's Societies, Young Men's and Women's Christian Associations, Men's and Women's organizations, lecture courses, study classes, etc.

EXHIBITS OF MANY KINDS.

The methods of extending the kingdom of Christ through world agencies, such as the Educational Societies and Missionary Societies, will be fully demonstrated. The Social Service feature that has so marked the character of the Federal Council will be especially presented in concrete form showing what the church has and may achieve along the line of helping to solve the social problem. This will include the relation of the church to organized labor, employment bureaus, the industrial problem and international peace. There will be maintained exhibits of the agencies for supplying the needs of the churches, training schools for the ministry, and for other church work and for all forms of social service, publication agencies and societies which issue Bibles, Sunday-school material and general religious literature.

It is appropriate that the Federal Council should make an exhibit of the achievement along the lines of church federation. This will form a part of the general exhibit. It will include a review of inter-denominational movements and tendencies in the development of the churches, including federations of churches, federations of organizations for doing the missionary and reform work of the churches and the numerous organizations Christian in spirit that are coöperating in world betterment.

Perhaps that which is most important of all and may prove more far-reaching in its effects will be the religious conventions. Great gatherings of delegated bodies will be held. Where the gatherings are too large for Assembly Hall on the Exposition site they will be held in the great Auditorium downtown which will seat twelve thousand people. There will be held national and international, denominational and inter-denominational meetings that will reflect the religious thought of the world. The committee is planning a general conference of all Protestant Christians from all parts of the world to consider the program of the church of today. This will mark a new era of world vision, for thus the Exposition will become a universal parliament for the exchange of thought in religious philosophy and for the purpose of presenting and comparing the practical results of religious activity.

TWO GREAT ALLEGORIES PLANNED.

In connection with this "Committee of 100" another committee of like size of the Woman's Board, some of whose leading members are members of the Committee of 100, are directing a phase of the missionary interests of the churches. It is planned to present two great allegories to the public in the new auditorium at the Civic Center. The first will be at the close of the first week devoted to Home Missions and will be a vivid portrayal of the early history, development and present day fruition of the missionary movement in America. This will make the early pioneer missionary activities live again. It will reveal the hardships and privations, the sacrifice and achievements of our pioneer apostles of the faith. It will present in living form the summit of their achievements in the mighty harvest of today. This will be a great lesson presented in sufficiently dramatic form to leave a profound impression upon the audience gathered from all parts of the world.

Likewise there will be a great allegory presented in the same building at the close of the second week of the congress dramatizing the effective missionary movement among men throughout the world. Several hundreds of people will take part in this pageant and the purpose of it will be to show the building of faith, hope and love into the structure of universal Christian civilization.

There is every indication that the Christian activities and exhibits in connection with the Panama-Pacific International Exposition will represent the most comprehensive and universal manifestation that has ever been held at a given time. It is prophetic of a new era in the onward march of civilization and the realization of the kingdom of Christ upon earth.

CHILDREN OF MINISTERS LEAD IN LIFE.

It is the children of ministers more than any other class who in England and America have been the leaders in art, science and literature, declares Mrs. Newell Dwight Hillis in "The Continent." More than any others are they the authors, teachers, college professors, journalists and professional men of note. Nor are their names wanting among successful men in business and politics.

We have lately seen inaugurated into the highest position in the land a minister's son—Woodrow Wilson—which office had also been held by other ministers' sons—Grover Cleveland and Chester A. Arthur.

A few months ago an article appeared in The Popular Science Monthly containing the following statements: "The English Dictionary of National Biography gives these figures: A comparison of eminent men (of England) shows 1,270 to be the sons of clergymen, 510 the sons of lawyers, 350 the sons of doctors; one and a half times as many of the former as of both the latter." Names of some of these were Ben Johnson, Cowper, Goldsmith, Tennyson, Coleridge, Addison, Keats, Kingsley and Matthew Arnold. Daughters of clergymen were represented by Jane Austen, the Bronte sisters, Mrs. Gaskell and Lucas Malet (the daughter of Charles Kingsley).

In America, our "Who's Who" in a list of something less than 12,000 showed 898 to be the sons of clergymen. If the proportion had been the same as for the other professions and callings, there should have been about fifty, but there were eighteen times that number. These include Justice Brewer, Senator Dolliver, Justice Hughes, Levi P. Morton, and Presidents Faunce of Brown University, James of Illinois, Wright of Clark and Taylor of Vassar. Among famous professors are Lounsbury of Yale, James of Harvard and Sloane of Columbia. Others were the railroad king, Edward H. Harriman; W. H. Maxwell, superintendent of schools in New York city; Bishop Potter, Henry James, Governors Bates of Massachusetts and Kellogg of Louisiana, David I. Hill of the department of state, Richard Watson Gilder, Lyman Abbott, William Hayes Ward; among the daughters are Catherine and Harriet Beecher, Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, Jeanette Gilder and Marshall Saunders.

Our hall of fame has fifty-seven American names. Ten of these, almost a fifth, belong to the families of clergymen. They are Agassiz, Beecher, Harriet Beecher Stowe, Henry Clay, Jonathan Edwards, Emerson, Lowell, Morse, Bancroft and Holmes.

These are the true aristocracy, the only kind which America cares to claim, and its mothers were the pitied, censured—but to be envied—mistresses of the manse.

DIVORCE IN BABYLON.

The archæologists who are conducting the German Oriental Society's exploration of the ruins of ancient Babylon, Nineveh, and Ashur, have deciphered two brick tablets that throw an interesting light on the domestic affairs of these long-dead people, records the Youth's Companion.

One of the tablets tells of a divorce case, in which a man, who has made up his mind that he cannot live with his wife any longer, promises to give her what he considers a satisfactory alimony:

"Naid Marduk, son of Shanashbalat, will give, of his own free will, to Mamua, the wife, and Arad-Bunini, her son, four quas of food per day, three quas of drink; per year, fifteen manas of cloth goods, one pi of sesame, one pi of salt, which is at the warehouse. Naid Marduk will not increase it. In case she flees to Nergal, the flight shall not annul it.

"Done at the office of Mushezib-Marduk, priest of Sippar."

It appears that twenty-five centuries ago the wife could be divorced in a most summary fashion; but if she renounced her lord and master, a hard fate was hers, for the second tablet reads:

"Rinum, son of Shamkhatum, has taken as wife and spouse, Bashtum, the daughter of Uzibitum. Her bridal present shall be twenty shekels of money. If Bashtum to Rinum, her husband, shall say, 'Thou art not my husband,' they shall strangle her and cast her into the river. If Rinum to Bashtum, his wife, shall say, 'Thou art not my wife,' he shall pay ten shekels of money as her alimony."

The alimony provided in this case was about six dollars and twenty cents, according to Professor Eiselen. All prices were low in those far-off days, and wages were small accordingly. One brick, dated 2200 B. C., records a contract by which a man hires a son from his mother, to labor for two and a half shekels a year—about one dollar and fifty-five cents.

TRIALS OF A CLERGYMAN.

Do not be a parson unless you are blessed with a strong sense of humor and a thick hide, advises an English clergyman in Pearson's Weekly. A parson's duty is to visit his flock. If he does not, great is the grumbling. If he does, he is snubbed. The snubs mix nicely with the welcomes, to prevent you from being puffed up. The following is one of the neatest of them:

I was asked by a friend who had been offered a living near me to go and see the vicarage and church, and report. I did so, and the clerk showed me round. As we neared the end, he turned to me, and said:

"Be you our new parson, sir, if I may make so bold?" I assured him that I was not. "I be main glad to hear that, sir," he said, with relief. "We've always had good uns so far!"

In a scattered parish, I called upon an old couple about tea time. "Would you like a cup of tea?" the housewife asked. I confessed that I should like it very much. The dear old soul prepared one, and kept apologizing because she had no jam or cake. I assured her that it did not matter in the least. "Well, sir," she said, brightening, "after all, 'tisn't as if you was one of them that feed high. Anyone can see that!"

One more. A friend of mine had got a job for a man who had been for a long time out of work. I guessed he was getting pretty shabby, so I looked up a suit—we were much of a size—and took it round. The man's wife took it, and I waited in the room, ready to be overwhelmed with thanks. She came back, and said:

"My husband thanks you kindly, sir, but he don't hold with parson's clothes; but if you've got anything as 'd suit a man, he'll have a look at it!"

Prayer as Related to Missions

BY J. H. GOLDNER.

The outstanding address at the recent St. Louis meeting of the Men and Millions Movement was that of Mr. J. Campbell White, secretary of the Laymen's Missionary Movement. He sounded the note that should be the keynote of the present campaign—that the money is nothing, but consecration, prayer, holiness are everything. This same note was sounded in the address delivered by J. H. Goldner, at Toronto, from which we quote.

MISSIONS were born in prayer and can prosper only in the prayer atmosphere. Our missionary work moves forward and upward no faster than we pray. We regard it an occasion for widespread rejoicing when a five thousand dollar pledge to missions is announced. There is a reason for infinitely greater joy when a righteous man pledges himself to a life of prayer for missions. No matter what a man's contribution of money, time or service may be, he has not given his best and most needed gift until he has dedicated himself to a daily program of intelligent, specific and importuning intercession.

Who is fit to unite with Christ in prayer for a lost world? Not he who hates a brother and is unforgiving; not he who is malicious and entertains evil designs against God's fellow-workman; not he who is envious and jealous, seeking only his own; not he whose heart is foul and hands stained; not he who is indolent and penurious. The price of fellowship with Christ in prayer is a continuous course of unsparing spiritual discipline, resulting in a heart that is pure and loves steadily; eyes that are clear and see far; a mind that is sober and thinks wisely; hands that are clean and skillful in service; a life with "Holiness unto the Lord" written everywhere.

* * *

We are to engage in a Men and Millions Campaign. Before the exercise of our cleverness must come the exercise of our faith. Before there is any planning there must be passionate praying. Create a church-wide contagion of prayer and there will be a deluge of giving. In the words of another, "Prayer is the only element which can quicken information into inspiration, transmute interest into passion, crystallize emotion into consecration, and coin enthusiasm into dollars and lives."

MODERN WOMANHOOD

Conducted by
Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison

The Children's Month

Man may start out alone in his quest of the Celestial City, like Christian in the immortal allegory, but when woman goes the long journey, like Christiana, she takes the children with her. And so it was inevitable that when the women of the church undertook a missionary organization, they should soon add societies for training the children to this movement. The month of March is the time when the children have the right of way in the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. Their education in missions is the subject of all the auxiliary programs at this beginning of the spring time, and the little ones all over the land are busy preparing for their Easter exercises—the one time in the year when they present their work to the churches.

"Suffer the little children to come unto me."

How perennially fresh and beautiful is the attitude of Jesus to the child! An attitude without parallel in the time when he was on earth. In a day when the child had no rights—when the issues of its life and death were in the hands of the Father, or of the Master if it were born a slave, he said:

"It is not the will of your Father in heaven that one of these little ones should perish"—the everlasting Bill of Rights of Childhood.

He spoke of their place in the other world as one of surpassing honor, when he declared: "In heaven, their angels do always behold the face of my Father." And that other time, when he set the little child in the midst, with the solemn warning to those who had been striving among themselves as to who should be greatest in the kingdom of heaven, with the words, "Except ye become as little children, ye shall not so much as enter into the Kingdom of heaven."

Here, we not only have the child held up as an example of humility for selfish, ambitious men, but a new chapter is opened in the world's book of wisdom. The study of the child in these latter days is elevated to the dignity of a science, it engages not simply the attention of the mother and the poet, but claims the interest of the profoundest psychologists and educators. Even scientists are bearing witness to the significance of the length of infancy in the human race; they remind us that in the lower forms of animal life there is no infancy, and therefore no possibility of development, and that childhood is the great opportunity for the uplift of our race.

One of the rare times when it was said that Jesus was "much displeased" was when his disciples would have driven the children from his presence; and how dear and irresistible is that picture of Him, when He not only granted their wish to come near Him and receive His blessing, but took them up and throned them in His arms, with his "Suffer the little children to come unto Me."

When Jesus took these little ones of long ago up in His arms, He lifted all the childhood of all time with them. Now, we gladly grant that childhood has its inalienable rights in the social structure as well as man—the right to be happy: the right to its wonder world of play, that world wherein lies the beginning of knowledge; the right to grow, unburdened; the right to an education, which shall equip it adequately for the coming duties of citizenship. The rights of the unborn child, even, are being studied in the new science of eugenics. The criminal child has been given a chance to overcome mistakes and sins, by the establishment of juvenile courts, probation officers, and detention homes.

Our national government has at last awakened to the fact that childhood is as important an asset as our material resources, and has organized a Federal Children's Bureau, under the charge of a noble woman, Miss Julia Lathrop. That some of their rights are still infringed by greed and avarice seeking for cheap labor—by little children wearing out their young lives in mills and factories—is no proof that many hearts are not awake to their outrages; under the leadership of the Child Labor Committee, many organizations are striving for effective legislation, which shall soon wipe out this horrid blot and anachronism from our land.

How great then is the debt of childhood to the blessed Jesus—and how compelling is the obligation on us to bring our little ones to Him, as did those mothers of old. They are eager to come—all they ask is for some one to lead them. I was showing a little girl the familiar picture of our Saviour sitting with the children leaning on his knee, and she clasped her hands, and said in a rapture, "How sweet Jesus is." Jesus is sweet to every little boy and girl; all they ask is that He shall be lifted up before them in all his beauty and tenderness, and the little hearts will turn to Him as naturally as a flower to the sun. I. W. H.

A CHILD'S RIGHT TO HAPPINESS.

Shall I mar the morning's gladness,
  Shall I dim its joyous light,
With a whisper of the sadness
  Of the swift on-coming night?

Shall I tell the fragrant flower,
  That its beauty cannot stay?
That its life is but an hour,
  And its doom is sure decay?

Dare I cloud a child's sweet heaven
  With my anxious cares and fears?
Dare I blight its joy God given,
  With a prophecy of tears?

No—no, Father!— to thy dealing,
  That divinest gift we have,
Knowing that thy touch brings feeling,
  Even though it should bereave—

Trusting that when thou dost guide them
  From the valley's shelter sweet
Up the rocky path—Thou'lt hide them
  Neath Thy wing from storm and heat.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

PUT THIS WARNING IN YOUR CONSCIENCE!

THE Disciples' obligation to foreign missions is in danger of being eclipsed and neglected on account of the widespread interest in the Men and Millions Movement which has been launched just as the clock is striking for the annual March offering.

This Movement is the greatest special enterprise ever undertaken by our people. It has our undivided support and deserves the support of all Disciples of Christ.

But the regular offering from the churches is of incomparably greater importance to the Foreign Society than is the Society's share in the six million dollar fund.

Only $600,000 is allotted to foreign missions from this fund, the payment of which is to be distributed over a five-year period.

This means an increase of only $120,000 a year—not much more than the Foreign Society in the regular course of its work could reasonably expect to gain.

If, however,—and there's the danger!—the regular offerings are allowed to fall down through fixing our attention upon the special movement, the net result to the Foreign Society will be costly. The plain lesson of which is that the March offering should receive greater emphasis this year than ever.

AN ANSWER TO PRAYER.

A READER of The Christian Century who is an ardent friend of the cause of progress among the Disciples of Christ sent us last week a check for $500 to pay for 500 new subscriptions to The Christian Century for one year.

Five hundred names will be added to our list immediately—one hundred of them will be ministers' names and four hundred will be the names of intelligent church workers sent us recently by our readers in the Thirtieth Anniversary Subscription Crusade. We have on hand over ten thousand such names, and new lists are coming in each week. They represent the lay-leadership of our churches in all parts of the country.

We have a list of 3,500 ministers who ought to be receiving The Christian Century in this critical year. The above check is the largest but not the only contribution for this purpose we have received. Several friends have sent $100 each to send the paper to 100 new subscribers for a year. Many others have sent smaller amounts—$50, $25, $10, $5, and a great many of our readers in sending their own renewal of $1.50 have accompanied it with an extra dollar for a new subscriber.

There seems to be a widespread feeling that the Disciples of Christ are approaching a crucial moment in their history, a turning point, a decisive hour. Certain fundamental issues which have been for many years taking on definiteness of outline seem about to be joined.

It is felt to be a time when the message of The Christian Century ought not be confined to its present friendly readers but that it should be sent forth as a silent missionary into thousands of homes where it does not now go.

Twenty thousand new homes should be receiving this paper in this year ahead of us. That would mean an enlarged reading constituency of 100,000 persons. The informing and leavening influence of such an addition to our present circulation would do more than any other factor to decide whether the Disciples are to go backward to the status of a sectarian denomination with a human creed and an exclusive fellowship, or forward into a larger and more generous fellowship, maintaining the liberty which their fathers dearly bought, and practicing the plea for unity which at the beginning was the genius of their movement.

Those of us whose hands are closest to the task of producing The Christian Century have done our work through the years in the unwavering conviction that when the crucial hour came there would be ample financial support for quickly and effectively putting the paper and its message into thousands of new homes, the strategic homes of ministers and lay leaders many of whom, through misinformation, and perhaps prejudice, imagine that they are opposed to its teachings. That a body of money might at the providential time be consecrated to this enterprise has been the subject of unceasing prayer for years. The gifts we are now reporting seem to be the beginning of the answer to that prayer.

Our faith in those who share with us the more generous and catholic interpretation of our people's mission prompts us to regard the present gracious gift of $500 as an earnest of many similar gifts—some larger, many smaller—yet to come. We can imagine no missionary enterprise which could take precedence of The Christian Century in the minds of those who share our conception of the importance of its message in these decisive days.

Indeed, the maker of the present gift says, "This is part of my contribution to the Men and Millions Movement." The gift is manifestly conceived as a missionary offering for the furtherance of those ideals for which The Christian Century stands.

We look in confidence for many others to follow this generous example.

ARE EUGENIC LAWS CONSTITUTIONAL?

WE hope they are. They ought to be. But there appears to be some question about it.

The apparent deadlock in Wisconsin over the amendment to the marriage law requiring a physician's certificate as a condition for a marriage license has been broken, for the present, at least, by the decision of the Milwaukee County Circuit Court that the law is unconstitutional and void. The matter was brought before the circuit court on an application for a writ of mandamus, directed against the county clerk, ordering him to issue a marriage license to an applicant without a health certificate. The court held that the amount of fee provided for the examinations as required by law was unreasonably low and that the law was an undue interference with personal liberty. This decision, while only that of a circuit court, will act as a stay to the enforcement of the law until the higher courts have passed on the question. Probably no other topic has inspired so large an amount of newspaper comment in the past month. Wisconsin's experience, says The Journal of the American Medical Association, should be a warning to state legislatures not to enact hasty and ill-considered laws on complex scientific subjects. The discussion of eugenics, race betterment and marriage regulation is productive of a large amount of good, but premature efforts to crystallize hastily-formed opinions into laws can result only in confusion.

Whether Wisconsin stands the tests of the courts or not, some laws concerning the health and decency of candidates for matrimony are sure to come, and ought to come. But such laws ought to be drawn with care and then rigidly executed.

THE OLD ALLIANCE.

IN the chapter of "Thinking Black," in which Dan Crawford makes one's nerves tingle with the story of African slave-stealing, he pays his respects also to the grog business, the second "slave-chain of rum." It is the old alliance. There is not an iniquity abroad which does not yoke up sooner or later with alcohol, if, indeed, it is not alcohol that may be claimed as the father of the evil itself. You know without guessing what will be found in the saloon—profanity, lust and crime. They are there because they are born in the foul alliance of alcohol with every cursed thing under the sun.

MAKING PATRIOTS IN SALEM.

BECOMING a citizen of the United States is an experience which may or may not impress an alien as an important step toward a higher plane of living. It depends on the way in which the process is conducted. Under the prevailing method, the foreigner is hurried before a court, too often by some interested politician, to be asked questions that he does not understand, the answers to which can be given only under coaching; is hastily and perfunctorily sworn, and invested with the rights and privileges of citizenship with nothing to give him a realizing sense of their importance or dignity. Thousands go through this process every year. Salem, Mass., is one of the communities to lead the way in a new movement which should spread throughout the country. When fifty aliens were naturalized in Salem recently patriotic exercises were held in the high school to which the new citizens-to-be were invited. Addresses adapted to the occasion by leading men, vocal and instrumental music, flags and other aids were invoked to make the occasion a thoroughly impressive one; and a solemn hush ensued as the court presented each man with his certificate. Those fifty men will probably never forget the little ceremony, and its influence will go far toward causing them to prize the gift of citizenship. If our foreign-born population are lacking in the deep respect which it is desirable they should feel toward their adopted country, the fault is not with them, but with the community.

MAKING WAR ON WAR.

PEACE among nations has been brought a step nearer by Andrew Carnegie's gift of $2,000,000 to be used through the churches for the abolition of war. This supplements his establishment of the $10,000,000 peace foundation, three years ago. In connection with the present gift is the organization of a permanent "Church Peace Union," with a board of twenty-nine trustees representing all the leading religious denominations of the United States. The income from the $2,000,000, amounting to $100,000 annually, will be used to organize the moral power of the churches on critical international questions, to circulate peace literature among the clergy, and to bring about the annual observance of a "Peace Sunday." It is proposed to hold conferences in America and Europe to discuss the promotion of peace. A resolution has been adopted appealing to the rulers and statesmen of all civilized lands to aid in abolishing war. It points out that the combined debt of the world, mostly borrowed and used for war purposes, is nearly $37,000,000,000; that the amount expended annually for standing armies and navies is $2,500,000,000, and that 6,244,600 men are kept idle in military service; it also calls attention to the destruction of private property in naval warfare. Copies of the resolution will be sent to each sovereign and to prominent officials of the world powers. After the arbitration of international disputes is established and the leading nations have abolished war, the trustees are to divert the revenues of the fund to other philanthropic uses.

CRANE MILLIONS FOR CHARITY.

THE sons of R. T. Crane are making preparations to carry out the provisions of their father's written and verbal will regarding certain philanthropic enterprises planned by the wealthy Chicago manufacturer before his death. These enterprises include an endowment of $1,000,000 to provide homes in the country near Chicago for deserted wives and widows with children; one of similar size to provide pension and disability benefits for the employés of the Crane company; one of $100,000 to the United Charities for the Mary Crane nursery; $25,000 to the Visiting Nurses' Association; and $10,000 to the Lake Geneva fresh air home. Not all of these projects, if indeed any of them, were provided for in the written will, but the two sons, Charles R. Crane and Richard T. Crane, Jr., who were the principal legatees, had verbal directions from their father which were to be carried out within two years. They are accordingly busily engaged in fulfilling Mr. Crane's known wishes in these matters. The pension fund for the employés of the Crane company is said to have been one of the pet schemes of Mr. Crane. At the time of his death it was announced that a pension fund had been established but that he was not satisfied with it. This fund was a part of the profit-sharing plan instituted by Mr. Crane for the benefit of the company's employés. In the completion of this plan will be seen another instance which, with the Ford profit-sharing enterprise, adds to the sum of the world's trend toward the right treatment of labor.

THE PANAMA TOLLS.

THE repeal of free Panama tolls for coastwise steamers in the United States, which is announced as the policy of the administration, will result in general satisfaction. The conscience of the American people has never been quite clear with reference to this matter. The discrimination seemed to be a violation of the Hayes-Pauncefoote treaty and might seriously have impaired our relations with Great Britain had not our friendship for that government been on a so thoroughly well-established basis. Even with that friendship, strong as it is, the matter of tolls was sure to be an occasion of irritation.

The truth is that America and Great Britain need, and are certain to need, each other's friendship. Our relations with Mexico are far from being satisfactory, and Mexico and Japan are maintaining an appearance of friendship, which inclines the United States to make the most of its own friendly relations both with Great Britain and Russia. England can help us much with Japan, because she is friendly with that nation, and Russia for the opposite reason.

Whatever the future of American diplomacy, it is well for the world to understand that the two great English-speaking nations have one common hope and purpose.

"THE MAJORITY OF PROTESTANT MEN."

PRIEST PHELAN, of St. Louis, publishes a paper called "The Western Watchman." It is a thorn in the flesh of many good Roman Catholic officials, for Phelan drives a pen with a sharp point, and sometimes does what greatly needs to be done. In a recent issue, however, he writes unadvisedly concerning Protestant men. He is annoyed to hear a Roman Catholic archbishop saying that, having known a great number of Protestants in public life, and known them intimately, "the vast majority of Protestant men lead pure lives." Priest Phelan says: "That is not what we have gleaned from long intercourse with them. We find that the average Protestant man in this country has very lax views on morality."

It would seem to be a difference in the kind of Protestant men one chooses as his associates.

THE TWELVE APOSTLES.

THE surprising thing about it is the casual way in which Jesus picked them up. We might have expected Him to send official notice to the Roman Senate asking for the appointment of delegates from various nations. Not so. He picked them up as He passed by. He found them as He went along. He seemed to assume that any little group of villages like Capernaum and Bethsaida could easily furnish a dozen men such as He needed. "As Jesus passed by" He called them. That was nearly all there was of it. The amount of raw material for the making of apostles was presumably no more abundant then and there than here and now. As a matter of fact, Jesus still is passing by, and calling.

THE WELL-WORN PATH.

"AN old well-worn path must lead up to a big chief," is the inexorable logic that the African puts into a proverb. And there is no doubt about it. The multitude of paths worn deep by the feet of needy souls that lead to the eternal Christ is the conclusive proof of his power and beauty. From how many climes they come! How varied their grade and the landscape that borders them. Up to God in Christ men by the millions have been beating their paths. The old ways are still full of eager seekers. We look at the myriad paths and we know that they lead to a divine Lord. Christ is supreme.

The Larger Christian World

A Department of Interdenominational Acquaintance.

Doctor Campbell Attacks Militarism.

Dr. R. J. Campbell of City Temple, London, recently delivered a sermon against militarism, in the progress of which he made the following suggestion:

All the Christian churches of the world, Catholic and Protestant, should unite in their request to all the governments of the states which come within the pale of international law to agree to a scheme whereby all disputes between nations must be submitted for settlement to a permanent court of arbitration, and that no two disputants whatsoever shall be allowed by the rest to proceed to bloodshed.

Doctor Campbell further suggests that England, France, and the United States approach Germany and Russia with a view to calling a halt in the present constantly accelerating increase of expenditure on war budgets.

Episcopalians Push Social Service.

The Churchman, in looking back upon the recent General Convention, held in New York City, finds it easier at this time distance "to appreciate the many significant and encouraging characteristics of that great meeting."

Of prime importance, in this paper's opinion, was the stress placed upon the Church's obligation in matters pertaining to social welfare. "The recent Convention," it remarks, "in rather striking contrast with its predecessors, showed a willingness to face the social and industrial issues of our day which was deeply gratifying to all who believe that the Church has some responsibility for social conditions. This was especially manifest in the several conferences and mass-meetings which were held under the auspices of the Joint Commission on Social Service. The value of all that was said at these meetings can be more properly gauged now that the addresses have been brought together in book form. The Joint Commission has done well to preserve this important part of the Convention's proceedings. The book constitutes an important contribution to social service literature."

Sensational Preaching Passing.

The Northwestern Christian Advocate find satisfaction in the fact that sensational topics as preaching themes seem to be passing. It presents the results of a little laboratory work it has been doing. Going over a recent Saturday issue of the Cincinnati Times-Star, reporting preaching topics for the following day it offers the following as the list. Of these, it finds but few objectionable ones—"The Short Bed and the Narrow Covering," "Betrayed by a Mule," and "The Gambler's Paradise."

Here is the list of sermon themes advertised:

"Invoicing Earthly Possessions;" "The Short Bed and the Narrow Covering;" "'Vanity Fair,' or the Rewards of Selfishness;" "Great Messages from Great Books;" "Losing Christ;" "Life for a Look;" "Glorifying God in the Body;" "Some Disciples Succeeding, Some Failing: Why?" "Christianity and Eugenics;" "Some Incentives to Faithfulness and Diligence;" "The Atonement;" "Prayers: Those Answered and Those Not Answered;" "The Divine Panoply;" "The Modern Challenge to Old Ideas;" "A Universal Commission Emphasizes;" "Some More Symptoms of a Spiritual Revival;" "Keeping First Things First;" "Sowing and Reaping;" "Religion and the Affections;" "Martin Luther;" "Loving the World—A Tragedy;" "The Soul's Need and How It is Satisfied;" "God's Promises;" "The Sinful Builders;" "Naaman, the Leper;" "How to Maintain a Christian Life;" "Is It Well with Thy Soul?" "Going Further;" "The Supreme Question;" "The Glory of Man;" "Building a City;" "Messages and Hindrances;" "Betrayed by a Mule;" "The Promise of Knowledge;" "The Gambler's Paradise;" "A Peculiar People;" "Faith in the Devil;" "Bearers of Burdens;" "The Right Kind of a Seeker;" "The Saving Power of Hope;" "The Biggest Selfishness;" "Right Thoughts;" "Satan's Devices."

"The Continent" Sounds Union Note.

The call of Dr. Charles F. Wishart from a professorship in the leading theological seminary of the United Presbyterians, to th Second Presbyterian Church, Chicago, affords The Continent, published in Chicago, an opportunity to make an appeal for the union of these two branches of the Presbyterian fold. This paper's comment follows:

The entrance of Doctor Wishart into the Presbyterian fellowship revives the old question why these two denominations need to be two—incidentally makes the question more unanswerable than ever. Not the most devoted singer of the old psalms will maintain that Doctor Wishart is to be a poorer Christian in any degree or less effective in binding on men's hearts the religion of Christ after he has entered the Presbyterian Church and begun to sing hymns. To put the whole matter with blunt honesty, if there is no reason why Doctor Wishart as a United Presbyterian minister should not become a Presbyterian minister, there is no reason why the whole body of United Presbyterian laymen and ministers together by their own free and joyous act should not make themselves into Presbyterians en masse. Certainly by such an act Presbyterianism would be blessed just a hundred and fifty thousand times as much as it is blessed by the call of Chicago Second Church to Doctor Wishart.

Widow Plans Missionary Cruise.

Mrs. Emma B. Kennedy, widow of John S. Kennedy, banker, railroad builder and philanthropist, will leave on a missionary cruise March 17, making calls at missionary stations and colleges to which her husband gave millions of dollars. She has chartered the yacht Alberta for a cruise of two months in the Mediterranean. Mrs. Kennedy will take with her six guests, Dr. John Henry Jowett, pastor of the Fifth Ave. Presbyterian Church, and Mrs. Jewett; Dr. A. Woodruff Halsey, secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, and Mrs. Halsey; Dr. A. F. Schauffler, superintendent of the New York City mission, and Mrs. Schauffler.

New York for Religious Instruction.

The Protestant churches of New York City are working on a plan to give religious instruction to school children who do not attend Sunday-school, after public school hours. Volunteers from among the Protestant public school teachers are to be secured and classes conducted in churches convenient to the public schools. Already the Catholics of New York have induced 1,325 Catholic women teachers in the public schools to give their time to the teaching of religion to Catholic children. Superintendent of Public Schools Maxwell of New York City has approved the plan.

Endeavor Will "Help Our Church."

The board of trustees of the United Christian Endeavor Society is planning a "Help-Our-Church" campaign. The standards require 100 per cent of the society membership at the Sundav evening service, and each member to read, write, or telephone an invitation to at least one non-churchgoer each week, an organized effort to increase attendance, and active interest in the midweek prayer-meeting; brief addresses on different lines of missionary work at the meetings of the society; an every-member evangelistic campaign in the Sunday-school; the enrollment of every member as a regular contributor to the church and missionary work.

Episcopalians Criticise Mr. Sunday.

The Episcopal clergy of the Pittsburgh diocese united in subscription to a paper censuring coarseness and irreverence in language dealing with religious subjects. "Billy" Sunday, who is "stirring up" Pittsburgh, was not named, but the target of the protests was very evident.

Helen Gould Shepard Gives Away Bibles.

Secretary Daniels of the navy stood beside Mrs. Finley J. Shepard, formerly Miss Helen Gould, a few days since, while she presented a leather-bound Testament to each of the seventy-five officers and men who had been active in the work of the Young Men's Christian Association at sea, and with her, shook hands and congratulated these men who in derision are often hailed as "Bible Backs!" by their shipmates.

Presbyterians in Every-member Canvass.

The Presbyterian Church is pushing its every-member campaign just now with much vigor. It is reported that the committee which has charge of the matter has had an office working day and night for some weeks furnishing the supplies to be used in the canvass. An average of one thousand sets of the duplex envelopes is being sent out daily. The canvass is developing in many congregations a doubling of the contributions to the boards of the church.

Louisville Has "Standing Army."

Louisville, Ky., has organized the 12,000 men of its Protestant churches into a men's federation. This organization is working for a state vice commission, an injunction and abatement law to prevent landlords from renting property for immoral purposes, a law to prevent commercialized vice or the traffic in women and girls.

Chicago Professor Runs for Alderman.

Prof. Allan Hoben of the Divinity School of the University of Chicago is a candidate for nomination as alderman of the sixth ward, Chicago. If the city could have a score or more of men of the Hoben type, remarks an exchange, there would be no danger from the few "gray wolves" remaining in the common council.

Of Human Interest

Edwin Booth's Favorite Hymn and Prayer.

The essentially religious spirit of Edwin Booth, the famous actor, is vouched for by a recent writer in the Chicago Record-Herald, who tells this incident of a Masonic banquet in Omaha to which Mr. Booth had been specially invited:

One of the brothers present asked Booth, "What is your favorite poem?"

After thinking a moment he answered: "Please put that question differently. Ask me what my favorite hymn is."

We all wondered what it could be. He hesitated a moment. There seemed to be something in his throat and then, in a voice low and sweet, while we were all watching breathlessly, he said: "That hymn which the world knows as 'Jesus Lover of My Soul,'" and without waiting he recited the hymn—recited it as we had never before heard it.

A member asked Mr. Booth, "What is your favorite prose production?"

"I thank you, my brother, for asking the question," he said. "The most beautiful, impressive, noble, unforgettable and uplifting words that were ever uttered and preserved to the world I shall do myself the pleasure of reciting. Please be standing with me."

And with bowed head our greatest American actor recited the Lord's Prayer. You can imagine how it was recited.

Senator Cullom Talks of Lincoln.

"There never was a man in history, in my opinion, who was more sincere and tender-hearted, and yet more determined to do what he thought was right, than Abraham Lincoln. He did not think of himself at all on the score of his appearance or anything of that sort. He went along in the commonest sort of way, always behaving himself and yet never putting on airs about any question or subject.

"He was truly a master of men, and yet he never sought to impress upon people any feeling that he was dominating them in any way, but he always had his own way whenever any question arose that justified him in insisting upon it. As you will recall, Stanton made the remark, I think on the occasion of Lincoln's death, that Lincoln was the greatest master of men he had ever known, or something to that effect."

Senator Cullom confirmed for the Chicago Record-Herald interviewer who secured the above, the stories regarding the ungainly appearance of President Lincoln. "And yet," he added, "on occasions he appeared to me to be superior in dignity and nobility to almost any other man whom I have ever seen.

"As I saw him at Springfield when he received the committee from the national convention which came to notify him of his first nomination, he impressed me particularly. As George F. Ashmun, president of the convention, presented the committee one by one, I thought that Lincoln looked what he was—the superior of any man present.

"Again was I similarly impressed when I beheld him at the funeral of his little son, Willie, in the east room of the White House. As he, accompanied by Seward and Chase, stood there beside the bier, looking down at the dead face, the tears streaming from his eyes, a dignity hovered about him that is difficult to describe. He looked like a sure-enough god to me; his heart was so full of tenderness. His lips quivered a good deal, and an expression of supreme grief was on his countenance. Truly, he was at that time, 'a man of sorrow, acquainted with grief.'"

The Chief Peril.

Representative Stephens of Los Angeles was talking in the Capitol one day about the sport of fishing for tuna off the Pacific coast.

"We go out in small motor boats," said Mr. Stephens, so the Philadelphia Telegraph reports, "and fish with a long line baited with flying fish. Anything less than a hundred-pound tuna isn't considered good sport."

Just then a colored messenger, who had been listening intently, stepped up.

"'Scuse me, Mistah Stephens," he said, with an expression of wonder in his eyes, 'but did yo' say yo' went fishin' fo' hundred-poun' fish in a little motah boat?"

"Yes," said the Congressman, with a smile, "we go out frequently."

"But say, exclaimed the messenger, "ain't yo' feared yo' might ketch one?"

One on Secretary Knox.

Mr. Knox, secretary of state in Taft's cabinet, was formerly engaged in the practice of law in Pittsburgh.

One day, says a friend, Mr. Knox was much put out to find on his arrival at his office that everything was topsy-turvy and that the temperature was much too low for comfort. Summoning his office boy, a lad only recently entered in his employ, the lawyer asked who had raised every window in the place on such a cold morning.

"Mr. Muldoon, sir," was the answer.

"Who is Mr. Muldoon?" asked the attorney.

"The janitor, sir."

"Who carried off my waste basket?" was the next question.

"Mr. Reilly, sir."

"And who is Mr. Reilly?"

"He's the man that cleans the rooms."

Mr. Knox looked sternly at the boy and said: "See here, Richard: we call men by their first names here. We don't 'mister' them in this office. Do you understand?"

"Yes, sir." And the boy retired.

In a few minutes he reappeared and in a shrill, piping voice announced:

"There's a gentleman that wants to see you, Philander."—Chicago Daily News.

IT HAPPENED THIS WAY—

A Column of Original Clerical Anecdotes.

An enterprising contemporary suggests to its clerical readers that they send in stories of amusing pastoral experiences. Which suggests to us that this would not be a bad idea for The Christian Century to adopt. You have told to your preacher friends many stories of amusing experiences which have fallen to you. Now we want you to tell them to "Century" readers.

Please observe these rules: Write plainly. Be brief. Punctuate correctly. Sign name and address. We shall head this column "It Happened This Way"—and will present it to our readers as soon as a "stickful" of copy comes in.

The World Is Growing Better

"Movie" Censors Begin Work.

Tight lips were the chief characteristic of the six new civilian moving picture censors, who started work in Chicago under the direction of Maj. M. L. C. Funkhouser, last week. There were five women in the room, but they were the first to draw the line against talking for publication.

They were escorted by members of the police board of censors to the exhibition rooms of two film companies and were tutored in some of the rules established by Major Funkhouser. At the close of the day they said the work was deeply interesting but extremely trying on the eyes.

May Build Radium Hospitals.

Joseph M. Flannery, president of the Standard Chemical Company of Pittsburg, told a House committee in Washington recently that he had a friend "philanthropically inclined," whose name he declined to give, who was considering spending $15,000,000 building twenty radium hospitals in sections of the country where they would serve 66 per cent of the population. Each would be endowed with five grams of radium, not only for the treatment of cancer, but also other diseases.

Flannery intimated under questioning by committeemen that the man he was speaking of was neither John D. Rockefeller nor Andrew Carnegie.

Mr. Flannery appeared before the mines committee, which is investigating the proposed withdrawal of radium lands from entry. He said his company had spent in three years $650,000 to produce two grams of radium. The effort had been inspired by the fact that a close relative was afflicted with cancer, he said. The grams cost $480,000 to produce, he estimated, and brought in $240,000. In April, he said, the company would be producing one gram a month.

"There is enough radium ore in Colorado to supply the world five times over," said Flannery. "Only 200 grams are needed for the whole United States. I will undertake to deliver to the government in five years from Jan. 1, 1915, 200 grams of radium at a maximum price of $80,000 a gram."

Flannery declared his experiments showed that radium was twenty-five times more valuable than only for cancer treatment.

"We have 100 physicians working with it for other diseases with as great results," he added.

The American Bible Society reports sales and gifts of Bibles, New Testaments and Scripture portions during 1913 to have been 1,076,459 volumes, an increase of 280,000 over 1912.

Disciples Table Talk

How Butler Will Use Its Millions.

The commission of business men recommends that Butler College receive $300,000 from the funds raised in the Men and Millions campaign. Prof. C. E. Underwood, of Butler, reports to Indiana's state paper that the college will invest this sum in good securities, and use only the income. At five and one-half per cent. this will produce an annual income of $16,500. If the college receive six per cent. the income will, of course, be larger.

About $6,200 will be used in increasing salaries. Butler has lost some great educators for financial reasons alone, Professor Underwood states, and with increased salaries the college can hold a large proportion of her capable men. The faculty will then become more permanent.

The college will expend about $9,800 in new work. Classes are now overcrowded and additional courses should be offered. With increased resources new men will solve both problems. Especially is it imperative that greater individual attention be given students. The college will strengthen the departments of botany, physics, modern languages, English, the classics, physical culture, and ministerial education. This will mean the addition of seven new teachers of varying grade.

Indiana District Men Busy.

Indiana's new plan of parceling out the state into five districts, with an evangelist over each, seems to be working well. The good work of A. L. Martin, T. J. Legg, G. I. Hoover, Melnotte Miller, Fred R. Davies, the evangelists, is well reported in "The Indiana Worker."

G. I. Hoover of the Eastern District, offers the following "model organization for the churches of a county": "A president, vice-president, secretary, treasurer and county superintendents of Sunday-schools, Christian Endeavor and C. W. B. M., and two representatives from each of the congregations of the county. The ministers of the county churches should be recognized as advisory members of the county board. The members of the board would ideally be laymen. There should be the closest co-operation between the ministry and the laymen in this work." Mr. Hoover states that the churches of Tipton county worked upon this basis for five years and there was never the slightest clash in the work.

Dr. Powell Flays Easy Religion.

In Dr. E. L. Powell's address delivered at the Sunday Evening Club, Chicago, a week ago, on the theme "The Call of the Cross," the speaker had something to say of "pink tea" Christianity:

"You have kept us padded and comfortable so long. You have surrounded us with rose leaves and have not given us a task worthy of our endeavor," Dr. Powell said. "Give us the joy of the runner. Give us something better than pink teas. Let us do more than sit in a drawing room and discuss debatable problems.

"If it had not been for the cross of Christ there would have been no missionary propaganda and no meeting of social needs. It is a challenge to self-sacrifice that is calling man away from a life of ease. The cross represents humility, which means self-forgetfulness. Self put forward as self-depreciation means vanity; put forward as self-exaltation means conceit. Theology means well, but it cannot understand the mystery of the cross. Mystery is essential to worship. It bears the same relation to religion that mist on the mountains bears to poetry. To define the cross of Christ in terms of theology is like putting love in a cold press. If I look at Christ on the cross I feel willing to die for him, but theology says, 'Hold on, be sure you have this thing right.'

"Every word that ever lived had a heart beat in it. Every leader had his Gethsemane and Calvary and was thorn crowned. I once heard the old violinist, Remenyi, play. He hugged and patted his violin. He made it moan and sob. The audience stood on the seats and shouted. It was because it felt a life of sacrifice and struggle. I heard another artist, Kubelik, whose technique was perfect, but who had seen but little of life's bitter experience. He awakened no enthusiasm, though his playing was without fault. The reason the cross is not real is because we have taken out of it the experience and made it over to a mere sentiment or a dogma.

"We are not getting fun out of life. We have thought that music would satisfy us, that physical comforts would at least keep off ennui, but we have been mistaken. The secret of joy is in the cross. It is a mystery, but true, that we do not have real joy until we begin to reach our hands down into the lowest dregs of suffering and sin and seek to rescue men. Henry Ward Beecher used to tell of the wheat that complained when it was cut down, thrashed, ground into flour, put in the fire and baked into bread, but it was the only way that it could be made acceptable to the king. So in life. Who has power in every community? Not the dilettante, academician, not the gay and perfumed cavalier, but the man ready to suffer. It is not the boss who rules our cities but the man who serves. If the cross of Christ should have an entrance into Chicago your streets would be clean, politics would become the science of government, and misery would have a smile on her face."

Dr. H. L. Willett, who addressed a men's banquet at Champaign, Ill., Feb. 16.

Oskaloosa, Ia., Calls Evangelist as Pastor.

Charles S. Earley, a constructive evangelist, went to Oskaloosa, Ia., a few weeks ago, with W. E. M. Hoekleman as song leader. It was the feeling of the church board and so expressed to the evangelists, that great emphasis should not be placed upon numbers, but rather sermons be preached which should increase the spirit of love and loyalty to the Savior, among the membership. Consequently many of the methods used by modern evangelists were not employed in these meetings. The services were quiet and dignified, and sermons were preached which exalted the Christ. Sixty-four people identified themselves with the church during the meetings. Forty-five of these were by confession; fourteen by letter and statement; five, reinstated. The church had called Mr. Earley for these meetings with the hope that he might be the man for the pastorate there; later on, at the recommendation of the church board, a unanimous call was extended to him. The call has been accepted.

Mr. Earley is a graduate of Drake University and has done post-graduate work in Chicago University. He has been in the ministry eighteen years, having in that time served as pastor of churches at Hill City, Belleville and Ottawa, Kansas; Wauseon, Ohio; and the Central church at Pueblo, Colorado. For the past three years he has been in evangelistic work, and has held successful meetings in many places.

The Oskaloosa church is one of the old congregations of Iowa and has had among its pastors many men, well known to the brotherhood. Among these were A. I. Hobbs, G. T. Carpenter, D. R. Dungan, B. W. Johnson, A. M. Haggard, D. A. Wickizer, A. E. Cory, J. P. McKnight and S. H. Zendt. The feeling is that Charles S. Earley will measure up to the standard of his predecessors.

Memorial Service for S. D. Dutcher.

A memorial service for S. D. Dutcher, former pastor at Central Church, Terre Haute, Ind., was held on Feb. 15, at that church, where George Darsie now ministers. Mr. Dutcher died February 8, at Kansas City. The Terre Haute church held for Mr. Dutcher great affection. He left this field in May, 1912, because of ill health. The splendid new building at Terre Haute is one of the fruits of his labors in the Indiana field. Since his resignation, Mr. Dutcher had filled irregularly the pulpit at Eldon, Mo. At the memorial service, C. H. Winders, of Indianapolis, who was a classmate of Mr. Dutcher's, at Christian University, Canton, Mo., gave the address.

Laymen's Missionary Conference, Champaign.

A successful two day Laymen's Missionary Conference was held at University Place Church in Champaign, Ill., February 15 and 16. The team consisted of President Arthur J. Bowen of Nanking; Albert Miller of China; Bruce L. Kershner of Manila; Geo. T. McCollum, Dr. W. S. Marquis and Dr. Herbert L. Willett all of Chicago. University Place Church men had a full share in the responsibility and a large part in the conference. Mr. Kershner spoke at University Place both morning and evening on Sunday and his addresses were unusually helpful. At the Men's Banquet Monday evening February 16, Dr. Willett delivered the principal address. Stephen E. Fisher, pastor at Champaign, reports that his dignified, forceful presentation of the Missionary enterprise as the chief business of Christian manhood was most effective as is evidenced by the fact that at the close the two hundred men, gathered about the banquet table, voted unamimously for the every member canvass for missions. Plans for this work are going forward under the direction of the Inter-Denominational Campaign Committee, which has been made permanent. The canvass will probably be made in all Protestant churches in the city in March and all on the same day. University Place rejoices in the forward step.

In addition to having held living-link relationship with Herbert Smith in Africa, and Mrs. W. J. Bernard in South America for several years, University Place now has several of her own children in the foreign service. Minnie Vautrin, who graduated from the University of Illinois with highest honors among the women of the class of 1912, is at Lu Chow Fu. A. J. Hill and wife of the class of 1910, are at Manila in the government service. W. A. McKnight, '04, and wife are at Buenos Aires, and Frank Stipp, '13, is at Phillips Christian University preparing for foreign service in Japan under the Foreign Board.

J. Randall Farris as Educational Director.

Mark Collis, pastor at Broadway Church, Lexington, Ky., says of the work of J. Randall Farris, the newly elected director of religious education:

"The Broadway school in efficiency and enrollment belongs to the same class as Central, Lexington. At the first of the year J. Randall Farris became superintendent of this school. Under his leadership the Broadway school is steadily growing in numbers and efficiency. Mr. Farris has already won the hearts of our people. Besides helping his own school he is a valuable addition to the working forces of the state."

First, Lincoln, Moving Forward.

The Men's class at First Church, Lincoln, Neb., where H. H. Harmon ministers, is fortunate in having as its teacher the State Sunday-school man, L. Clark Oberlies. The class has made some strides under his leadership—from a membership of 30 to about 90, with 300 present on a special Sunday. This church reports 1600 in attendance at its "Home Coming," held in the city auditorium Feb. 10.

"Indiana Worker" a Model Publication.

We do not know who is responsible for the make-up and typography of the new publication of the Indiana Christian Missionary Association, "The Indiana Worker," but we beg to say that this one of the cleanest, brightest, most attractive publications of this sort that comes to this office. It seems to be an axiom applying to religious papers that they must be dry-looking and unattractive from a mechanical standpoint. Of thirty or forty religious publications that come to the office every month, there are not more than five that one would be attracted to read. We congratulate the new Hoosier paper and its editors, C. W. Cauble and Garry L. Cook.

United Missionary Campaign at Paris, Ill.

The churches of Paris, Illinois, have recently had the benefit of a United Missionary Campaign. All the services were held in First Church and were introduced by a banquet given by the Ladies' Aid Society, at which 250 men were seated. The speakers for the conference were Dr. William S. Marquis, of Chicago; J. Albert Miller, of China; B. L. Kershner, of Manila; Dr. George T. McCollum, of Chicago.

Special interest was taken in the work of Mr. Kershner. His story of the Philippine Islands is reported to be instructing and charming. The conference did all the churches good because they are planning to follow the matter with an entire month of an efficiency campaign.

The plan inaugurated January 1, by University Place Church, Champaign, Ill., of "One Service for Sunday-school and Worship," from 9:30 to 11:30, is proving highly satisfactory, reports Pastor Stephen E. Fisher. Very few from Beginners to the Adult classes have any other thought than to remain throughout the morning. One of the elders conducts the service each Sunday morning for the "Junior Congregation" in its separate apartment. In the Senior Congregation the children's chorus in the balcony is used every Sunday morning as an attractive feature in prayer response and such like. Confession of faith is being made upon the part of Juniors and Intermediates in almost every service.

Benevolent Association Receives Gift.

The National Benevolent Association has just received the first third of a $20,000 bequest ($6,742.23) from the estate of the late Mrs. M. M. Blanks, of Austin, Texas. This bequest is to be used for the benefit of the Association's Texas institutions—The Juliette Fowler Christian Home for Children now at Grand Prairie and The Juliette Fowler Christian Home for the Aged at Dallas. This bequest will make it possible to begin the erection of a new building for the Children's Home at an early date. The building will be located on the 20 acre tract in Dallas on which the beautiful Sarah A. Harwood Hall was built a few years ago.

Bolenge, Africa, Reports.

E. R. Moon and A. F. Hensey, report ninety baptisms at Bolenge on Christmas Day. Among these were to be noted a deaf and dumb woman, one of the most famous witch doctors of this district, who gave up seven wives and all his charms, also there were three young men, who constitute the fruit of the "Ibinza" people—the Gypsies of the Congo.

Galesburg C. E. Hears Report.

Instead of a discussion of the regular topic on Sunday evening, Feb. 22, at the Galesburg Endeavor Society meeting, the Student Volunteers of Knox College brought a report of the Student Volunteer Convention recently held at Kansas City.

The New Third Church, of Indianapolis, was dedicated February 1, by F. M. Rains, Secretary of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. This congregation was organized in connection with the Northwestern Christian University (now Butler College) and for a time met in the University chapel. Later a modest frame building was erected on Home avenue, which served the people until a newer brick structure was erected under the ministry of D. R. Van Buskirk, long gone to his reward. Outgrowing this building, the congregation determined to move into a more central point, and property was purchased on the corner of Seventeenth and Broadway, where the present building stands. T. W. Grafton has been pastor for a little more than a year and under his leadership the new building was completed.

Among the speakers at Bethany Assembly, in Indiana, which will be held July 21-31, are: Pres. Henry Churchill King, of Oberlin College, at 11 o'clock, July 21-24, and Pres. E. Y. Mullins will speak five days at the same hour. Over 500 preachers, 100 singers, and 50 evangelists are expected to be present during these 10 days.

On Monday night, Feb. 23, the men of the Uhrichsville church met in Brotherhood meeting. The topic for consideration was, "Conservation and Efficiency," or "How Best to Save and Use the Forces of Righteousness." A young men's chorus furnished music. C. M. Burkhart, of Coshocton, gave the address.

A union banquet of Men's clubs of several churches of a section of Buffalo will be held at the Christian Church, February 27. The guest of honor and speaker for the occasion will be Frank F. Williams, a prominent Buffalo attorney, who will speak on "International Peace through Justice."

DEATH OF S. M. JEFFERSON.

Sad news comes as this issue is preparing for the press that S. M. Jefferson, professor of Philosophy in Transylvania University, Lexington, Ky., dropped dead suddenly on Friday, Feb. 20. Professor Jefferson has been an outstanding figure in the educational work of the Disciples of Christ for more than thirty years. He was a close frend and co-laborer of Isaac Errett. He filled the chairs of philosophy and psychology, at Bethany College, West Virginia, and Berkeley Seminary, at the University of California, previous to his acceptance some ten years ago of the professorship in Transylvania. For many years he has served as a member of the Executive Board of the Foreign Missionary Society where his counsels and devotion were held in highest esteem. Many are the ministers and teachers throughout the land who trace to him the opening of their minds to the richer values of life and truth.

The Ohio State convention will be held at Bowling Green. In accordance with local conditions which are beyond control, the program committee has fixed the date June 1-4. The committee is diligently preparing a program that will meet the needs of the churches.

The work of F. C. McCormick at Milton and New Lisbon, Ind., affords a splendid example of what a consecrated, talented man can accomplish in the smaller town and rural work. He has attained the truest influence in a very wide section of the state.

The Texas State Convention, to be held in May, will have a session devoted entirely to the laymen of the state, and steps are afoot to bring a large number of business men to the convention.

M. L. Pontius, pastor at Central Church, Peoria, Ill., is in quarentine for a month, because of scarlet fever in his family. Prof. A. C. Gray, of Eureka, filled the Central pulpit Feb. 15.

A. W. Conner is in a Boy's Campaign with the Pittsboro, Ind., church, F. W. Sumner, minister. Later in the year it is proposed to hold a series of evangelistic meetings.

The Bethany Bugle is the organ of the Bethany Park Assembly, edited by Noble Taylor. The 1914 year book of the assembly is now in preparation.

W. A. Shullenberger, of Mexico, Mo., has received calls from several prominent churches recently.

Miss Allena Graftor, Young People's Secretary of the Women's Board, is itinerating in Illinois.

W. E. M. Hackleman will help John Ray Ewers, East End, Pittsburg, Pa., in a meeting beginning Feb. 22.

The church at Uhrichsville, O., is adopting the tithing system. Present indications are for great success.

ON THE WAY TO BATANG.

ON THE TIBETAN BORDER.

Our people should be very much in prayer these days for the missionaries who are making the long, difficult journey across China to our Tibetan mission. The workers who were obliged to flee from their station early in the Chinese revolution have been most anxious to return, and on the first assurance that the return would be safe they started on the long journey. Dr. and Mrs. A. L. Shelton, their children, Dorothy and Dorris, and Dr. and Mrs. Wm. Hardy left Nanking, China in October. Letters have just come from them mailed from Chungking in far Western China. Dr. Shelton says: "The Lord has been very gracious, opening the way every step. All our freight has safely traversed the most dangerous part of the journey through the rapids and gorges of the perilous upper Yangste River. Not a box is injured and none stolen by bandits or injured by wrecking."

Another boat will be taken for a long journey above Chungking, then the party will leave the river for the long overland journey to Batang. The two little girls will be carried in baskets on the backs of coolies for 800 miles. Mrs. Shelton and Mrs. Hardy will be carried in mountain traveling chairs and the men will ride on mules or donkeys this long distance. They will pass through much wild, mountainous country and over numerous high passes, where the snows lie all the year through. From Chungking, where the letter was written, the journey to Batang will occupy two or three months.

J. C. Ogden and family sailed from America on the 22d of January for China, and after joining Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Baker in China, this party will also start on the long journey to Batang. Our people should rejoice that God has led us to occupy this most remote field in the world, and we should place our prayers and gifts alongside the consecrated lives of these missionaries who go to represent us in Tibet.

SUMMER SCHOOL OF MISSIONS.

WINONA LAKE, IND., JUNE 25-JULY 2, 1914.

The tenth session of the Summer School of Missions, under the auspices of the Interdenominational Committee of the Central West for Missions, will be held at Winona Lake, Indiana, opening Thursday afternoon, June 25, with the first lecture on the Study books, and closing with the last lecture of the study course on Thursday morning, July 2.

Bible study will be conducted each morning by Miss Angy Manning Taylor, whose ability in this department is well known.

The general theme for the foreign study is "Social Service in Christian Missions." The first six lectures will be based upon the text book, "The Child in the Midst." The author, Mrs. Benjamin W. Labaree, is the daughter of Dr. H. H. Schauffler, who founded the Slav work in this country, and she herself was a missionary in Persia, but now engaged in work among the Persians in New Britain, Conn. Mrs. J. J. Fisher, of Cleveland, Ohio, daughter of Dr. A. B. Leonard, of New York City, will lecture upon "The Child in the Midst." Mrs. D. B. Wells, of Chicago, favorably known in summer school and extension conference work, will lecture upon the home mission study book, "In Red Man's Land." This is a study of the American Indian. Children's work will be given a period each day. Special arrangements are being made for young women, as to instruction, entertainment, athletics, etc.

Lecturers will each give one of their special evening inspirational addresses. Other noted speakers will be announced later.

Taking the March Offering

1. Take it.
2. Take it on time.
3. The church that fails to take it may make a mistake whatever may be its system of finance.
4. Please make the offering a memorable one. Break all the traditions and all the records of other years.
5. Try to go far beyond your Apportionment. This in many cases is only the minimum of the church's ability. Of course, when the money is given for Foreign Missions it will not be used for any other purpose.
6. Last year 963 churches reached their Apportionment. It would be a great thing if we could double the number this year. Let us try.
7. Make an effort to get every member to give. Probably not more than 25 per cent of our people give anything for Foreign Missions. Let us all try to "get busy" in the world-wide task. See if you cannot enlist more people.
8. Raise the standard of giving. Some business men will give $500 or more if the subject is presented in a large way. Many hundreds should give $100. You can make a big campaign for $10 and $5 gifts. Let us pass out of the penny and nickel giving, and really begin to do business on a large scale, worthy of the task before us. Let us not minimize this call by asking for mere nominal gifts. Ask for big things, and thus dignify the work.
9. A host of churches are determined to give more than in previous offerings. Please see that your church is enrolled in this class. The average per church is not large. Let us undertake to raise the general average. It can be done.
10. Have every detail of the offering well planned before taking it. No part of the service is too insignificant to receive prayerful and careful attention.
11. Remember our work on the foreign field has come to a period when it bulks large. Go over it in your thinking, more than 1,000 workers, nearly 6,000 pupils in the schools, 24 hospitals and dispensaries with 160,000 patients, over 200 orphans, four printing presses, nearly 300 preparing or the Christian ministry, 17,238 in the Sunday-schools and last year nearly 3,000 baptisms. The work is large and growing.
12. March first is a testing day in our churches. If a church ceases to be a missionary church Christ's presence is lost and Christ's work in vain. Every Christian must be a missionary, though he never goes to a heathen land. The mission of the church is missions. Christianity is a missionary enterprise. We can never restore the apostolic church to the world, the apostolic passion for making Christ known to the world unless we have the spirit of missions. It is useless to talk about speaking where the Bible speaks, if we do not emphasize this cause. The Bible is the greatest missionary book.

Please send your offerings promptly Monday morning, March the second, to the undersigned. Be prompt in all the affairs of this offering. Let us remind ourselves that the King's business requires haste.

Summer Conferences for 1914

Locations and dates of the Interdenominational Summer Conferences, under the auspices of the Missionary Education Movement, are announced for 1914, as follows:

Blue Ridge, North Carolina, June 26-July 5.
Pacific Grove, California, July 3-12.
Silver Bay, Lake George, N. Y., July 10-19.
Estes Park, Colorado, July 17-26.
Lake Geneva, Wis., Aug. 4-13.

In addition to these five conferences in the United States there will be six conferences held in various parts of Canada. As will be noted by the accompanying map these conferences or summer training schools are so distributed as to reach practically every large center in the United States and Canada.

IMPORTANCE.

Pastors and church officers are finding these gatherings of increasing value every year as training schools for leaders in church work. Many pastors can join in the testimony of one minister that "Representation at these summer conferences has transformed the life of my church."

PROGRAM.

The program for the conferences is carefully constructed with a view to deepening the spiritual life of the delegates and training them for leadership in the United Missionary Educational Campaign which nearly all mission boards have agreed upon for 1914-1915.

MISSION STUDY CLASSES.

For the first session each day the conference divides into a dozen or more mission study classes under expert leadership. The purpose of these classes is to train the members for leadership of similar classes in their churches during the ensuing year.

One series of classes is devoted to the subject of Graded Missionary Instruction in the Sunday-school.

OPEN PARLIAMENTS.

Following the mission study classes each day comes a series of open parliaments or institutes where on succeeding days practically all phases of missionary work are discussed by the best available experts in each department of work.

PLATFORM MEETINGS.

The closing hour of each day will be given to a platform service addressed by well-known missionary or other religious leaders. The last portion of this hour at noonday is reserved as a period of intercessory prayer.

RECREATION.

The afternoon at all of the conferences are reserved exclusively for recreation. At each of the conferences there are special facilities for tramps, athletics, excursions and other recreative features.

VESPER SERVICES.

The evenings are occupied with vesper services or platform meetings, addressed by representative missionaries from various fields and by other speakers of recognized authority on social, missionary and general religious problems and themes.

DENOMINATIONAL MEETINGS.

Following the vesper services the delegates meet by denominations under the leadership of their denominational secretaries, to outline in more definite form the work of their churches for the ensuing year.

MISSIONARY EXPOSITION SCENES.

Other incidental features such as a model missionary exposition scene, missionary demonstrations and special classes for young people under twenty years of age, combine to make the conferences of great interest and value to all classes and types of workers.

W. B. Clemmer, pastor at Rockford, and the chairman of his Board of officers, called on the Board of Church Extension last week in an endeavor to obtain an increased loan which will enable the Rockford church to complete its building. They are meeting in their splendid basement at the present.

Arrangements are also made for conferences of specialists on various subjects to meet for as long a period each morning as may be desired.

FACULTY.

The faculty will consist of the foremost teachers and leaders in missionary education as well as secretaries representing all the leading home and foreign mission boards and other platform speakers of national and international reputation.

Additional information concerning any of the above conferences may be had by addressing the Foreign Missionary Society, Box 884, Cincinnati.

IN INDIANA FIELDS.

All of our State Evangelists have recently sent in a report for January. This was the first month in which they were all at work, as Mr. Hoover and Mr. Martin just began their labors the first of the year. We are very much pleased with what they did on the field last month. They report 217 additions.

At the present time A. L. Martin is with the church at Kouts, T. J. Legg is at Williamsport, G. I. Hoover is conducting some County conferences, Melnotte Miller is looking after the work at Dugger, finishing their new building and beginning a meeting, and Fred R. Davies is closing a good meeting with the East Columbus church.

Hobart has just been added to our Mission churches. Claude E. Hill held a meeting there recently and organized a church. With the assistance of the State Board they called W. A. Howard, a student at Valparaiso University who is giving all of his time to this work.

Dr. S. H. Creighton, the newly elected president of Bethany Assembly, and his program Committee are working up a unique program. There are to be two schools of ten days each. The first will be a school of efficiency for preachers, evangelists, singers and rural church workers, with Messrs. Morro, Brooks, Hackleman and Street at the head of the four departments. The date is July 21-31. The second term will be a School of Methods from August 4-14. This will be for Sunday-school teachers, Missionary workers, and Christian Endeavorers, with Garry L. Cook, Bert Wilson and Claude E. Hill, and Mrs. O. H. Greist for the C. W. B. M., taking care of their respective work. The new management is expecting to have the largest attendance at Bethany this summer it has had for the last five years.

A new church building is assured at Worthington. The writer was with them the last Sunday in January and they subscribed $10,045.00 for a new house of worship. O. G. Dungan had just closed a meeting in which there were 124 additions.

The first series of County Conferences in this state was February 16-19 in Howard, Tipton and Hamilton counties. G. I. Hoover had charge of these Conferences. It is expected that much of this kind of work shall be done in Indiana soon, as we want to have every county organized to do effective work at home and abroad.

C. W. CAUBLE,
Corresponding Secretary.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

Most of the National Secretaries will make the West Coast Conventions this summer. Mrs. J. McDaniel Stearns will represent the Woman's Board, Robert Hopkins, the American Society, J. H. Mohorter, the Benevolent work, E. E. Elliott, the Men's Movement, W. R. Warren, the Ministerial Relief Board, A. E. Cory, the Men and Millions Movement.

At the Missouri Convention in June the business men of the state will have a meeting which is being arranged by President J. L. Garvin, of William Woods College, for the purpose of considering what part the laymen of the church can take in the work of extending the Kingdon of God.

"The Every Member Canvass" packet issued by the United Missionary Campaign Committee, is ready and may be had for ten cents. It cost more than that amount to print. Make request to Grant K. Lewis, Chairman, 1102 Carew Building, Cincinnati, Ohio.

The Board of Church Extension has granted a loan to the Ross Avenue Boulevard Church, Dallas, Texas. The new building is a handsome little affair and the membership is proud of it. This makes eight Disciple congregations in the Texas metropolis.

J. H. Mohorter, National Secretary in charge of Benevolent work is making it a point to talk to the Men's Bible Classes and Brotherhoods in the churches he visits, and urging men to take a more active interest in religious affairs.

Atlanta tickets from adjacent territory will be sold October 4-5-6, with return limit to October 17. By paying $1.00 ticket may be extended thirty days. Table of rates will be published soon by E. E. Elliott, Transportation Secretary.

Texas expects to carry a special train of folks to the Atlanta Convention. Cephas Shelburne and the Christian Courier will pilot the party and they expect to go via New Orleans, as the rates of fare apply that way.

F. M. Rains will make an itinerary in Arkansas, Oklahoma and Texas during March, in the interests of the Foreign Society, of which he has been one of the efficient secretaries for many years.

A man of first-class business record and a devoted church member, wishes to purchase interest in a mercantile or local fire insurance business in good town where there is a Christian Church. Any one knowing of such opportunity please address The Christian Century, 700 E. 40th Street, Chicago.

Lost==Let Us Find Them!

Pastors and Sunday School Teachers Especially, Take Notice

One of the greatest leaks, numerically, in the church today, is a result of the moving of members from the country districts, the villages and smaller cities to the large cities, and the consequent withdrawal of their active membership from the church. A census of sixteen blocks, in Chicago, made by the editor of "The Conquest" some time ago, revealed the fact that fully 75 per cent of the church members who come to Chicago, are lost, so far as church affiliation is concerned!

"The Conquest" is going to undertake, in a small way, to prevent some of this leakage. Here is your part of the campaign:

(1) If you live in towns or villages, send to "The Conquest" names and addresses of any of your young people who have recently moved to the cities; also name of the town from which these persons have come. These will be published in "The Conquest," and the schools of our cities will be put upon the scent. We must not tolerate this alarming loss.

(2) If you live in the city, keep an eye on "The Conquest" for names and addresses of persons coming to your city, and go after them.

Prepare your information thus:

Name ..... To what city .....

Present city address .....

From what town .....

Send your list to "The Conquest," 700 E. 40th St., Chicago, Ill.

Atlanta's Remarkable Chief of Police

The Man Who Will "Preserve Order" in the Southern Metropolis During the 1914 Convention of the Disciples.

"Have I not commanded thee? Be strong and of good courage; be not afraid, neither be thou dismayed; for the Lord thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest."

Such was the parting word of Atlanta's now famous Chief of Police, James L. Beavers, a few days ago, when during an interview the question was asked the Chief as to what the future would bring forth.

The citizens of Atlanta feel justly proud of having at the head of its police department an officer so well qualified by nature and experience to fill the position as Chief Beavers. He is not the haughty, arrogant and domineering tyrant some are wont to believe is in the make up of every police officer, but on the contrary the Chief is a man, every inch of him, as brave and fearless as the knights of old, easy of approach, kindly and sympathetic in nature, and in the highest and truest sense a Christian gentleman to the manor born.

HE ENFORCES THE LAWS.

A chief of Police is not supposed to make the laws, nor is he a supreme court of authority to decide whether they are good or bad laws. His sole duty is to see that the laws are enforced. Therefore, when Chief Beavers was promoted to the highest position in Atlanta's department, he informed the Powers that be, that if any laws were on the statutes they did not like they had better have them repealed, for all laws would be enforced while he was Chief, and he has done so, by keeping his word and oath of office. A Chief of Police is supposed to be selected according to his special fitness, his executive ability, honesty of purpose and indomitable courage required for the effective discharge of the main duty which he is paid and sworn to perform. Chief Beavers has these qualities in abundance. He is conscientious in his work, displays keen judgment in handling the many and complicated problems that constantly present themselves for prompt solution. He commands the confidence and respect, not only of a perfectly disciplined department, but also of every one with whom he comes in contact. He is an officer of seasoned experience: he has rendered successful service in every branch of the department; beginning 24 years ago as a patrolman in the most dangerous section of the city, he has worked his way through the different ranks not through political favoritism, but purely on his merits. Chief Beavers is a normal human being with rich red blood in his veins, possessing a powerful personal character, the strong will of a Napoleon, the conscience of a Cromweli, and the unlimited courage of his convictions. It is a mistaken notion that Chief Beavers was ever dictated to by any set of reformers; nor do the records show he ever permitted himself to be bullied or domineered by political bosses or gamesters. When the good Chief was considering the question of cleaning up Atlanta, and wiping out the so-called red light district, he took no one in his confidence, except his God. When he reached the decision to do so, he proceeded individually to act promptly, firmly and effectively. And those who knew Chief Beavers knew from that moment that it meant a clean up.

"Tell me, Chief, of the year 1913 in Atlanta as far as your department is concerned," was queried him. He drew from a drawer in his desk figures to stagger the ordinary individual, but he knew every one. "Why my dear brother," says he, "conditions in Atlanta are better than ever before. We have a cleaner city morally, a more law abiding city, and we had less crime than in any preceding year. I say it without fear of contradiction that Atlanta as she now stands, is one of the most moral and law abiding communities in Dixie. Records will show it. Take the records of any other city in the south and they will be convincing beyond doubt that Atlanta is freer of evil than any center this side of the Mason and Dixon line; and I do not doubt but that Atlanta is the cleanest city morally in the nation, population considered. This also can be seen from records. We have no open immoral resorts, no disorderly places of any character; the Sundays are orderly and clean of the 'open' town atmosphere that is notoriously prevalent in many cities both of the south and north. Sunday is observed in Atlanta in fitting manner, and shall be as long as I am Chief of Police." The betterment in conditions in Atlanta is due mainly to the strict enforcement of the law by Atlanta's Chief of Police. Instead of the good Chief weakening as some influences expected, by the grace of God, he grows stronger. Atlanta is not going to be an open town as long as he is at the helm.

Such is the character and courage of a man who has cleaned up Atlanta because he is not afraid. If he lives, he will be Chief of Police when the Convention convenes in Atlanta in October, and many will see him as he goes about his strenuous duties, and will wonder how a man who is really so retiring in his nature, could have accomplished the good he has for Atlanta.

A GREAT AND POPULAR CHURCH MUSIC BOOK

The New Praise Hymnal

EDITED BY GILBERT J. ELLIS AND J. H. FILLMORE

There is no equipment of the church more vitally related to its spiritual development and growth than the kind of hymnal it uses. In other words, a church makes no better investment than the purchase of a good hymnal. It is a serious mistake to buy an ordinary gospel song book for use on the Lord's Day and the Wednesday evening prayer services. Such books cheapen the worship.

The New Praise Hymnal comes as near being the ideal church hymnal for the present day as could well be conceived. It is a handsome book, dignified in appearance and make-up. It embraces in its contents as nearly everything demanded to-day as could be gotten into a book of 600 pages.

The New Praise Hymnal is practical in every way; everything in it is available for use in the average congregation. It contains also what is used by the most advanced churches.

The setting of the hymns and music is engaging to the eye and pleasant to read and sing.

It is a book that grows in favor as it is used. New beauties are discovered from time to time as its pages are tested by use. The hymns and tunes of the church universal are found in The New Praise Hymnal, also the best available Gospel Songs that the modern church has found to be necessary to its various activities.

The New Praise Hymnal is widely used in our churches. We believe it to be the favorite book of the church.

THE LAWFUL USE OF THE SABBATH.

International Uniform Lesson for March 15.

Luke 13:10-17; 14:1-6. Memory Verses, 14:3-5.

Golden Text.—The sabbath was made for man, and not man for the sabbath.—Mark 2:27.

American Standard Bible.
Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons.
(Used by permission.)

13: (10) And he was teaching in one of the synagogues on the sabbath day. (11) And behold, a woman that had a spirit of infirmity eighteen years; and she was bowed together, and could in no wise lift herself up. (12) And when Jesus saw her, he called her, and said to her, Woman, thou art loosed from thine infirmity. (13) And he laid his hands upon her: and immediately she was made straight, and glorified God. (14) And the ruler of the synagogue, being moved with indignation because Jesus had healed on the sabbath, answered and said to the multitude, There are six days in which men ought to work: in them therefore come and be healed, and not on the day of the sabbath. (15) But the Lord answered him, and said, Ye hypocrites, doth not each one of you on the sabbath loose his ox or his ass from the stall, and lead him away to watering? (16) And ought not this woman, being a daughter of Abraham, whom Satan had bound, lo, these eighteen years, to have been loosed from this bond on the day of the sabbath? (17) And as he said these things, all his adversaries were put to shame: and all the multitude rejoiced for all the glorious things that were done by him.

14: (1) And it came to pass, when he went into the house of one of the rulers of the Pharisees on a sabbath to eat bread, that they were watching him. (2) And behold, there was before him a certain man that had the dropsy. (3) And Jesus answering spake unto the lawyers and Pharisees, saying, Is it lawful to heal on the sabbath, or not? (4) But they held their peace. And he took him, and healed him, and let him go. (5) And he said unto them, Which of you shall have an ass or an ox fallen into a well, and will not straightway draw him up on a sabbath day? (6) And they could not answer again unto these things.

Verse by Verse.

By C. C. Buckner.

v. 10. Teaching in one of the synagogues on the Sabbath Day: The Jewish Sabbath was on the seventh day of the week.

v. 11. A spirit of infirmity: It is quite probable that the woman was possessed of a demon.

v. 12. And when Jesus saw her: Note the alertness of Jesus in the detection of need.

v. 14. Being moved with indignation because Jesus had healed on the Sabbath: The ruler held that the day was desecrated by the healing.

v. 15. Ye hypocrites: Their zeal for the Sabbath was only a pretense.

v. 16. Daughter of Abraham: The woman was of his own race.

v. 1. As he went into the house: It was on the trip spoken of in Luke 13:33. On a Sabbath to eat bread: The Sabbath was a day of festivities among the Jews. The food was prepared on the day before.

v. 2. There was before him a certain man: He was probably an onlooker.

v. 4. They held their peace: By answering "Yes" they would endorse Jesus and disapprove their traditions, and by answering "No" they would set the people against them.

v. 5. Fallen into a well: This was common for there were many uncovered wells in this land.

At the Heart of the Lesson.

By A. Z. Conrad.

Synagogue scenes are frequent in Gospel narrative. Not less than thirty-eight times Jesus is introduced to us at church. The habit was fixed early. At twelve he baffled the Temple literalists, with expositions and interrogations. "As his custom was," so the record goes. He advocated by his own practice keeping the special institutions of the Sabbath for spiritual instruction. Sacred times and places had peculiar significance. He did not disparage the Sabbath in order to give meaning to the other six days nor did he ignore the religious significance of all days in order to more magnify the Sabbath. v. 10. "He was teaching." His presence made every place a temple of learning. The sea, the mountain and the plain became vocal with wisdom when he was there. He gave speech to seeds and stones, flowers and fields, birds and beasts. Wisdom flowed from his lips as water from a fountain, compelled by the pressure of abundance within.

THE UNEXPECTED RECOGNITION.

v. 12. "And when Jesus saw her." Jesus saw her. I wonder if the usher or officer did. I wonder if when the poor, bent, lame creature struggled into the synagogue any one made way for her, and made her comfortable. She was not attractive. She probably had little to contribute. Very likely she was poorly clad. She could not be of much use to the synagogue, yet Jesus saw her. Did any else? Her lot was hard. She was accustomed to neglect. Doctors had pronounced her case incurable. The unexpected happened. She came to get strength to bear her affliction with resignation. She knew God's house was the place of all places to receive power to endure. She was startled when she heard her name called. "Jesus called her to him." He is never governed by apperances. Need was the all sufficient appeal.

He saw, he invited, he addressed, he healed, he liberated. That is Christ's usual order of activity. The victim of affliction is always near to us but how rarely we see her. We are preoccupied; we are interested in agreeable people and are afraid to seem too intimate with the unattractive. Those who need us least are sought and seen. We want to fellowship with congenial people. "Do not even the Publicans the same?" "Woman, thou art loosed from thine infirmity." The unexpected had happened. The disciples of Jesus are meeting surprises every day. No word could have been spoken so thrilling, so satisfying. Every physical disability is in the nature of bondage. Health means freedom. She now experienced the joy of unrestricted activity. It is all symbolic. Every act of Jesus had a higher significance than its immediate effects. His acts of healing were typical of the higher spiritual restoration. All sin is in the nature of restraint, repression. It lessens efficiency. It curtails freedom of action.

THE HEALING MISSION OF THE CHURCH.

A definite part of the work of the Christian church is physical healing. It has been much ignored. Jesus never disqualified the disciples from doing this work. The apostles and the seventy were especially instructed to heal the sick. We attach too little importance to prayer for the afflicted. Means are not to be ignored, yet there is no reason to doubt the immediateness of divine action for the afflicted. The church may wisely recognize her right. While this is true, let it be distinctly understood that this is by no means the chief business of the church. It is subordinate. It is secondary. The physical is of far less importance than the spiritual. Jesus went into the synagogue for the purpose of aiding those in attendance to find God. It was a spiritual purpose that actuated him. He was "teaching." The healing was incidental. When the Church puts the body first it is making a tremendous blunder. Right here is the danger of institutionalism. It is easy to expend the energy of the church upon machinery which is in operation for purposes of clothing, housing, feeding and healing the people. This is all well enough, but it is not the supreme business of the Church. Disparage it as some men will, it is still the fact that the great business of the church is salvation. It is desirable to be physically whole but it is infinitely more desirable to be loosed from spiritual infirmity and to become whole in the inner personality.

STRAIGHTENED AND UPRIGHT

v. 13. "Immediately she was made straight and glorified God." We are especially concerned with the great moral and spiritual truth taught by this act. Whatever Jesus touches he straightens. "The crooked shall be made straight." We speak of a dishonest man as a "crook." It is true of all whom Jesus has not "straightened." Humanity is twisted, warped, by sinful indulgence, by intellectual pride, self-conceit, prejudice and bigotry. The unforgiven sinner is spiritually out of shape. He sees crooked, acts crooked, walks crooked, and talks crooked. His judgment is unjust, his observations are from a wrong view point. There is no getting around it, the natural man is all askew. The thing that happens when a man is converted is, straightening. He can stand upright for the first time and the very joy of it leads him to glorify God.

UNRIGHTEOUS INDIGNATION.

There is such a thing as righteous indignation, injustice, oppression, every kind of wrong, ought to awaken in the heart immediately a righteous indignation. "The ruler of the synagogue was moved with indignation because Jesus had healed on the Sabbath." He had been doing God's work on God's day. Why then the indignation? It was a feigned indignation. Jesus called it hypocrisy. The ruler was perfectly right in demanding that the Sabbath should be kept holy. But he was terribly confused as to the purposes of the Sabbath Day. The Talmud reveals to us how easy it is to misinterpret truth and to destroy and distort God's truth through literalism. Sabbath keeping was made ridiculous by its absurd restrictions and permissions.

APPLIED CHRISTIANITY.

The ruler of the synagogue appealed to the people. Seemingly he did not dare to address Jesus. Jesus answered him. Have you noticed how he was always the self-appointed advocate of the people. He always stood for the crowd. Nothing is so pitifully helpless as a crowd without a leader. That is why a multitude so easily becomes a mob when a demagogue directs them. Jesus used simple language and the parable method. The familiar sight of leading an animal to water on the Sabbath furnished his argument. If it was consistent to relieve thirst and hunger why not relieve the greater want of body and soul on the Sabbath? No law exists for its own sake. Law is only God's method of working in his world and invariably it has a benevolent purpose. The argument of Jesus in terms of life was unanswerable. It is never so difficult to understand God's will or way if we do not conceal or confuse it by unnecessary speculations of our own. "Whoso willeth to do his will shall know of the doctrine." "Then shall ye know, if ye follow on to know the Lord."

THE GLORIOUS DOINGS OF JESUS.

"All his adversaries were put to shame. The multitude rejoiced at all the glorious things that were done by him." The pretenders were defeated. They were made ashamed because they had been unmasked. If they had been consciously right they would not have been ashamed. Turn over a board in the door yard on a summer morning and a hundred insects will scamper for cover. They cannot stand the light. Evil is not easily put to retreat. The search light of God's word will soonest silence scoffers and pretenders. Hypocrisy is a great bluffer, but succumbs to divine fire. One glorious fact outweighs the sophistry of pretending sages. There is no argument against real beatitude. One message across the Atlantic cable overthrew all arguments of skilled scientists who denied its possibility. One phonographic record drove scoffers to cover and converted doubters to the truth. The Pharisees did not doubt Jesus' power to heal. It was too evident. His power to evict evil spirits they had been compelled to recognize. Then they attacked his motive and the sources of his power. He pushed that back in their teeth and now it is the Sabbath question. The thing he had done was so glorious that the people were impatient with opposers. The work he had accomplished was so like God that they threw cavilling to the winds, hissed the ruler down, and applauded the glorious doings of Jesus. Christianity in its higher manifestations is always glorious. Glorious for the doer and the recipient. The life and acts of Jesus reveal the glory of God, the glory of human life, the glory of goodness.

The Mid-Week Service

By Silas Jones.

TOPIC FOR MARCH 11.

Bible-school Efficiency. John 5:39; 14:31; 2 Tim. 2:15.

How shall we test the efficiency of the Bible-school? We ask for numbers, for we expect the Bible-school to minister to all the people, not to a few. We demand knowledge of the Bible, believing that the Bible is the one book which the school of the church should teach. We like to hear of men's classes and women's classes; the Bible-school is for all ages. We do not object when the members of the school engage in athletic contests. But the supreme test is not numbers, nor knowledge of the Bible, nor success in athletics; it is character that meets the needs of the world. Does the Bible-school send out men and women who know the best life has to offer and who know how to get their ideals into the social customs and the industrial organization and the political machinery of the world? Are these men and women able to exhibit the spirit of Jesus in their daily lives?

WORSHIP.

It is the fashion in some Bible-schools to regard the worship as preliminary to the lesson study. The emphasis upon teaching has caused many of us to feel that we need not pay much attention to the worship. We may like the singing. Are we learning how to follow the prayer? And is the prayer worth following? It is a great misfortune not to know how to worship God. One who can worship always has a place of refuge in the hour of defeat and a source of comfort when the deepest sorrows assail him. Calm assurance comes to him who begins the day with God. He knows what is great and what is small and he does not fret himself because the world does not accept his advice on every thing. Is the Bible-school teaching the children to worship? Is it studying the mind of the child that it may lead the child to speak to the heavenly Father about the things that interest it most?

TEACHING THE WORD.

The Disciples have entered upon a great campaign to secure six million dollars for their educational and missionary enterprises and one thousand workers for the home and foreign fields. Who will give the money and who will volunteer to do the work? Those who know the will of the Lord. We assume that this campaign will have the blessing of God upon it. Those who know the will of God must study. Mere impulse is not to be trusted. The leaders in this movement are splendid men but they have no right to tell any man what his duty is. Every man is bound to know his own duty. The great enterprises of the kingdom of God are all hindered because the majority of those who help wait to be urged to do their part. The Bible-school is helping to prepare the leaders and the workers of tomorrow.

KEEPING THE COMMANDMENTS.

The efficiency of the Bible-school appears in the work its members are doing. The school looks after the needs of those who live in its own neighborhood. Old persons who cannot read have the news of the day brought to them by those who have good eyes. The sick are visited. The "queer" persons are studied and understood and helped. Young people away from home have companionship of the right kind. The evils that flourish with the consent of the appointed guardians of public welfare are exposed. The members of an efficient school will be informed as to the care the poor of the county receive, and the provisions made for the defectives and the insane. They will be interested in efforts to cultivate a love of the beautiful. Their good influence will be seen in the home. The state will have the benefit of the votes of intelligent, honest citizens.

2 Tim. 3: 14-17; Deut. 31:9-13; Prov. 22:21; Eccl. 5:1; 12:10; Is. 55:10-11; Ps. 143:8, 10; 78:5-8; Luke 4:16-21; Matt. 7:21; Rom. 2:13-15.

this country (I use Robert Hunter's figures) struggling all their lives on the knife-edge between self-respect and pauperism.

NOT "ALL FOR BEST."

I cannot say "All is for the best," when the girls who make our Christmas candy have to work twelve hours a day five days in the week and on Saturday—our half-holiday—eleven hours; when a mother of three children can testify before a recent committee of inquiry in England that, working as hard as she could from six in the morning to ten at night in the making of children's shoes, she could only earn a little over $2 a week; when the children in the cotton mills and canning factories are being cheated of their birthright of fresh air and healthy recreation not so much because of the greed of individual men, but just because "business is business;" when strong men have to sell their strength for barely enough to make ends meet when times are good and sickness passes them by, but not enough to do so when hard times come and the doctor's buggy is at the door; when our Juvenile courts are crowded with delinquents made to order by economic conditions that create the poverty, that fathers the inefficiency, that wrecks the home.

Christ cannot have intended that. He cannot have intended that the weak should be exploited by the strong. He cannot have intended strikes and lockouts. He cannot have intended Kate Mareys and Richard Garvins, Triangle Fires and occupational diseases, trade monopolies, sweatshop labor, "lung-blocks," city slums, Los Angeles Times explosions. He who called the little ones to himself and blessed them cannot have intended that industry should be so organized as to make grist for the money mill out of the souls and bodies of "—Little children

Spilt like blots about the city,
Little children with bare feet,
Whom the angels in white raiment
Know the names of to repeat,
When they call on us for payment."

And if he cannot have intended these things, then it is the supreme business of his church so to work up in the conscience of the world, so to elevate its ideals and humanize its motives that they shall no longer be known among men.

THE NEW FREEDOM.

Brethren, I love the church of Jesus Christ. I believe in her divine mission to the world. I believe that she will ultimately triumph over all obstacles and rise to the full height of her great calling. I believe that she has already heard the call of the "new freedom" and is girding up her loins to follow the gleam wheresoever it may lead. This church is "a living thing. . . . When you enter it you hear a sound—a sound as of some mighty poem chanted. Listen long enough, and you will learn that it is made up of the beating of human hearts, is the nameless music of men's souls—that is, if you have ears. If you have eyes you will presently see the church itself—a looming mystery of many shapes and shadows, leaping sheer from floor to dome. The work of no ordinary builder!

"The pillars of it go up like the brawny trunks of heroes; the sweet human flesh of men and women is molded about its bulwarks, strong, impregnable, the faces of little children laugh out from every corner-stone; the terrible spans and arches of it are the joined hands of comrades; and up in the heights and spaces there are inscribed the numberless musings of all the dreamers of the world. It is yet building—building and built upon. Sometimes the work goes forward in deep darkness; sometimes in blinding light; now beneath the burden of unutterable anguish, now to the tune of a great laughter and heroic shoutings like the cry of thunder. Sometimes, in the silence of the night time, one may hear the tiny hammerings of the comrades at work up in the dome— the comrades that have climbed ahead."

Do you want to belong to that sort of church? Then the way is open. It is the way of brotherhood, the way of love —the way of comradeship—the way of the cross.

Workmen have just regilded the dome of St. Paul's, London, and, while they have perhaps wrought with less "sad sincerity" than did the hands that "gilded Peter's dome," they have worked at a task no less unique and hazardous, says an exchange.

It has been more than 200 years since the great cross and dome of this famous cathedral was set up and gilded under the supervision of its equally famous architect, Sir Christopher Wren.

The cross weighs 3,360 pounds and the ball on which it is mounted is six feet in diameter and will hold ten or twelve adults.

Only the best English "double gold" leaf has been used—that is, pure gold, beaten out and placed on transfer paper treated with paraffin wax, and double the thickness ordinarily employed for outdoor work.

The Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse is fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, the Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Bethany System of Sunday School Literature

It meets the test of use. Note what some of our leaders who have adopted the Bethany System say of it: - - -

REV. HOWARD T. CREE, AUGUSTA, GA.

We have been using the Bethany Lessons from the very beginning and have used no other. Samples of other publishing houses have been submitted but did not meet with the approval of the teachers as did the Bethany.

REV. H. H. HARMON, FIRST, LINCOLN, NEB.

Nothing could pry our superintendent and teachers loose from these lessons. They meet the needs of pupils of all years and make the teacher's work a joy. We have no word with which to express our satisfaction with the series.

REV. P. J. RICE, FIRST, EL PASO, TEX.

We have been using the Bethany Graded Lessons from the time you began to publish them and we are very highly pleased with them. We have often had occasion to compare them with the publications of other houses and can say we have found none that compare with them.

REV. L. J. MARSHALL, KANSAS CITY, MO.

I want to congratulate you upon the high quality of this literature. It is certainly a great satisfaction to feel that we are now able to put into the hands of all our Sunday-school pupils, material so splendidly classified and so thoroughly edited.

REV. JNO. McD. HORNE, CHARLESTON, ILL.

Your Graded material is excellent and provides a basis for genuine enthusiasm.

REV. T. E. WINTER, FULTON, MO.

Over a year ago our school adopted the Bethany Graded Lessons, upon vote of our teachers, who had examined personally the texts for their respective grades. They are a delight to all.

REV. H. D. C. MACLACHLIN, RICHMOND, VA.

We have used the Bethany Graded Lessons for three years, and the longer we use them the better we like them. They offer a Sunday-school course as nearly perfect as can be.

REV. FINIS IDLEMAN, CENTRAL, DES MOINES.

We are using the Bethany Graded Lessons. We would not turn back. The service our Sunday-school specialists are giving us as represented in this course is making a new day in religious education.

REV. EDGAR JONES, FIRST, BLOOMINGTON, ILL.

Our committee made an individual examination of lesson helps and decided unanimously in favor of the Bethany series, arriving at their decisions independently and solely upon the merits of the literature.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, EDITOR HERBERT L. WILLETT, CONTRIBUTING EDITOR

The Conquest of the Gates of Hell

One man made the discovery that Jesus was the Christ. He made it in his own soul; no one told him. Flesh and blood had not revealed it to him —not even the flesh and blood of Jesus. Jesus had not told him, but had waited till he made the discovery for himself. All the great discoveries of life must be made in that way. Every man must see his own rainbow; every man must see in the woman he loves something which no other man can see there. These discoveries are half creations. There is a sense in which the discovery of Christ is essential to the fact of Christ; that is to say, the fact of Christ becomes effective in the discovery.

From the time of this discovery, Jesus changed his address in two particulars. In the first place, He addressed the disciples as having a corporate unity; and in the next place, He addressed them as One known now to them as the Saviour.

He addressed them as having a corporate unity. For Peter's discovery became the discovery of all. Each discovered it for himself as Peter did, but Peter's discovery helped to clarify their vision. It helped to define what they saw. Peter's confession became theirs, and they made it, each for himself.

There are momentous hours in human life in which we frame unconsciously the destinies of ages. The disciples little knew when Jesus called them apart that day and asked them what people were saying about Him that He was putting their own souls eternally on record. "But who say ye that I am?" The question came home. Each man had to answer for himself. It is always so.

We reflect the opinions of our time, inevitably. We are always telling in spite of ourselves what other people think and say. But sooner or later the question must be answered, "But what say ye? What sayest thou?" Then the stammering answer over which we have been brooding either is choked back or blurted out, and we are on record for better or for worse. It was so with Peter. He went on record. Are you a brave man or a coward? Will you be content to say, "It is currently believed that such and such things happened," or "In the judgment of modern scholars it is deemed probable," or will you meet the point-blank question with an honest answer? What do you say for yourself?

But Peter did not make the discovery in isolation. He spoke as an individual, yet he spoke as one who for a long time had been in the companionship of others, learning, with them, of Jesus. Most of the world's great discoveries have been made practically simultaneously by different men. Thus came the telephone; thus came the discovery of the planet Neptune; thus came the discovery of the North and South poles.

Sin is solitary. There are, indeed, sins that link men in wickedness, but this is not the logical result of sin. Sin tends to separateness. The fact that one man meditates a wrong is not a crime in the eyes of the law, but for two or more persons to conspire is a crime, before they do the evil deed they plan. Thus even the law recognizes that sin comes back to the status of the individual. But there are elements in righteousness which no man discovers alone.

Peter discovered who Jesus was in order that he, possessing that truth as his own, might share it with all the rest.

No one man builds a church. No one man originates a great movement. Churches may be built by individual men who name them for themselves, but they will find, as Justinian is said to have found, after he had forbidden any man but himself to contribute to the erection of Saint Sophia, and had a tablet engraved to that effect, that an angel erased the name and put in its place as the real builder, the name of the old woman who pulled straw from her thin bed to give to the oxen that hauled the stones.

The gates of hell are not to prevail against the church of God. This does not mean that the church is to stand their assault. The gates of hell are not moved up against the gates of heaven. It means that the gates of hell are not to withstand the assault of the church of God. The church is not merely on the defensive. She is to batter down the gates of hell.

The gates of hell have stood out a long time. Too many people are climbing over them in eager haste to get in. One could wish the doorstep were on the other side, and that the place were better supplied with fire escapes. But the powers of evil are not to withstand the progress of the kingdom. The cause of righteousness is to prevail. The kingdom of God is coming.

Men and Millions---and the Disciples' Ideals

A Personal Editorial on the Present Crucial Situation.

BY THE EDITOR.

IT grows more clear with each passing week that the good health of our brotherhood demands a full public discussion of certain conditions imposed upon the Men and Millions Movement. The discussion is now and has for some time been going on in a smothered and fearsome fashion, in small groups and conferences and in much correspondence. But it is becoming plain that nothing but an expression of the sentiment of the brotherhood itself can resolve the difference of opinion among the leaders. In the nature of the case, it seems that the questions involved can be settled only by public opinion.

Public opinion, however, must be informed and must find an organ through which it may express itself. Up to the present date the information has been given out by the Disciples' newspapers only in hints and vague suggestions. Obviously there is danger of misleading and deceiving public sentiment with anything less than a full disclosure of the facts and principles involved. I wish to draw the larger outlines of the situation as I see it, in a dispassionate and fair-minded statement, dealing earnestly and frankly with the intimate data that have come under my observation, and writing with the singular pronoun rather than the editorial "we" in order that every reader may feel throughout the article that, in addition to this newspaper's responsibility, there is a definite personal responsibility assumed for every word set down.

At the outset three things at least must be made clear.

ENTHUSIASM FOR THE MOVEMENT.

First of all, there must be no doubt of The Christian Century's enthusiasm for and unqualified support of the Men and Millions Movement. I believe this Movement embodies the biggest idea that our people have hit upon in this generation. The Christian Century is the only newspaper that has, up to date, offered a sympathetic interpretation of the Movement. This paper has tried, to the best of its editor's ability, to disclose the unique idealism of the Movement. It is an inspiration manifestly of God—and whoever opposes or seeks to hinder it will be found fighting against Him.

I wish the full sincerity of this commitment of The Christian Century to the Men and Millions Movement to be duly noted. I am so thoroughly convinced of the ideal significance and unifying effect of such a Movement that I cannot believe any hampering conditions will stand.

FINANCIAL GAIN EXAGGERATED.

I am inclined to the opinion that the financial gain to our institutions through such a Movement is greatly exaggerated. There is a good bit of illusion in it on the financial side. It is quite likely that the agencies co-operating would have almost as much money at the end of the six years through their regular independent activities as they will have with the help of this co-operative campaign.

The imperative of the Movement inheres not in its financial goal but in its idealism. It treats all our unselfish causes as one cause. It unifies benevolence and missions and education. Each giver through its treasury gives to every general interest of the Disciples of Christ. The Movement is the whole brotherhood appealing to every "brother" to give to every unselfish interest through a single treasury, the proportion divided to each being determined by the just claims of all the rest. Here is symmetry; here is justice; here is non-partisanism; here is emancipation from provincialism in giving; here is the attainment of that ideal which puts the whole altruistic service of the Disciples of Christ ahead of local pride or personal prejudice.

In my opinion the effort of the "Christian Standard" to break down the apportionment plan of distributing the total fund involves the sacrifice of the very genius of the Movement. As against its proposal that all donors designate to what institutions they wish their gifts to apply I stand with Mr. R. A. Long in his exhortation to the attendants at the St. Louis conference to refrain altogether from the exercise of the privilege of designation and let their gifts be divided on a principle of impersonal equity.

NOT A PERSONAL ATTACK.

Secondly, it is the purpose of The Christian Century and of its editor to make no statement that can be taken as an attack or an offensive reflection upon Mr. R. A. Long. I believe in his sincerity. His is a generous spirit. His proposal to give the last million dollars of the fund is a generous proposal. A good friend of mine, like Mr. Long also in the lumber business, says that he knows Mr. Long's proposed gift will entail real economizing. Mr. Long has told us himself that it would do so.

Nor have I any suggestion to make in criticism of the methods by which Mr. Long has made his money. Those secular newspapers that have dragged in the industrial question in their sarcastic comments on his gift hold a point of view quite different from mine. I prefer to believe and, in the absence of knowledge to the contrary, will assume, that Mr. Long's money has been legitimately made.

MR. LONG'S SINCERITY.

Moreover, I wish to avoid interpreting Mr. Long's generous giving as a bid for either celebrity or power. Many of my correspondents of late have so interpreted it. I cannot agree with them. I believe, in the absence of contrary evidence, that Mr. Long is sincerely devoted to the cause of Christ as he sees it, that whatever dictation he has exercised has been exercised not from selfish motives but from unselfish solicitude for what he thinks is right. I believe he has been indiscreet. I believe his actions have wrought injustice. I believe he has been profoundly mistaken in his interpretation of the sentiments of our people. I believe he has put himself in the position of an autocrat in connection with the present Movement. But I do not think Mr. Long intends to be an autocrat or wishes to be one—I think he is intent only on attaining certain ends which he regards as essential to the cause he loves.

It will be necessary to use his name frequently as the discussion proceeds. It will be our purpose to make every reference to his words or acts so clearly devoid of animus that any person who interprets such references as a personal attack upon Mr. Long will but betray his own unintelligent reading of my statements.

NO INSTITUTION'S CHAMPION.

Thirdly, I am not willing personally to become nor to have The Christian Century regarded as the active champion of the Disciples Divinity House in the present trying position in which it stands. I am not a trustee of that institution, nor connected with it in any way. My personal interest in the educational portion of the six million dollar fund is biased toward Drake University where I was educated. I believe in the Divinity House. I believe in the scholarly and loyal men who make up its staff. I believe in the wisdom and loyalty of its board of trustees. I recognize gratefully the unique work it has done for an educated ministry among the Disciples. I believe it has before it a unique opportunity for serving our brotherhood in the future. I believe it ought to be included in the list of schools participating in the Men and Millions Movement, and I believe its exclusion was an act of common injustice.

BETTER TO SUFFER INJUSTICE.

But while I might publish an editorial paragraph, as I have already done, calling attention to the unjust discrimination against the Divinity House and expressing the hope that the odium of such an action might be removed, I am free to declare that no single institution—Drake University or the Disciples Divinity House—is important enough in itself to gain the championship of The Christian Century in bringing perturbation into the Men and Millions Movement.

It would be better, were no vital moral principle involved, for any institution—Drake, Divinity House, or Phillips Institute—to suffer injustice in silence and patience, than, on its own behalf, to cause trouble and complication in a far-reaching idealistic enterprise such as this is.

This, as it has been reported to me, is the attitude in which the Divinity House regards the unjust action of which it has been made the conspicuous victim.

Besides, quite as serious, if not more serious, an aspect of the situation concerns the creedal conditions which have been introduced into the Movement, altogether apart from the discrimination against the Divinity House. Had there been no discriminatory act against that institution the problem we are now facing would have been essentially the same.

THE CORE OF THE ISSUE.

The vital core of the problem which I have faced continually since the launching of the Men and Millions Movement does not concern Mr. Long personally, nor the Movement, nor the Divinity House, but the Disciples themselves, as a brotherhood.

Are we Disciples the kind of a people, I have been asking myself, who can accept money on terms that involve the contravention of our most essential ideals and principles.

I do not find fault with the money—it is, so far as I know, good, sincere Christian-enough money—nor with the objects on which it is proposed to be spent. But the terms on which our brotherhood—not the several institutions alone, but the brotherhood itself—is compelled to receive it are theologically partisan and involve us—the brotherhood—in a divisive act of disfellowship and disbarment against an institution whose services to our people and for them have been singularly important.

A QUESTION OF CHARACTER.

Are we the kind of a brotherhood whose money it is impossible, by a united campaign, to collect into a single treasury for proportionate distribution to all our recognized institutions of learning except a theological creed be first set up to which all participating institutions tacitly agree to conform, and except a certain institution whose theology is held by two or three men of large wealth to be unorthodox be first disbarred from participation in the common fund?

It is a question of our character as a people.

It is a fundamental issue.

How does the Commission of nine business men meet this issue and answer this question as to the kind of people we Disciples are?

On this Commission which received Mr. Long's conditional million-dollar offer there was a minority, including Mr. Long, who were determined that the Divinity House should not be included in the list of participants. One or two of these, at least, held the position that the Divinity House had by its teachings put itself outside our brotherhood, that it was not a Disciple institution. Among the majority were some who strongly would have desired to see the Divinity House included in the Movement and others who were without information on the subject and therefore without an opinion. But when the vote was taken it was unanimous, the majority regarding it as inexpedient, in face of the leading donor's determination, to try to include it.

The acquiescent members of the Commission answered the question we still are facing in effect as follows:

Yes, we Disciples are the kind of people among whom it is inexpedient to launch a united movement of this sort without first accepting whatever theological limitations are proposed by the largest givers, and without yielding to the discriminatory excision (however unjust we may feel it to be) of an institution whose theology is under the suspicion of these men of large wealth.

APPEAL TO EXPEDIENCY.

These acquiescent members of the Commission explain their action on the ground of expediency. The important thing is to get the offered million dollars. We are able, say they, to figure out the success of the Movement if the proposed terms are accepted. We are not able to figure out how a large, inclusive, tolerant Movement, embracing with theological impartiality all the recognized institutions of learning of the Disciples and asking the whole brotherhood to give of its wealth to a common treasury to support these institutions—we are not able to figure out how such a Movement can come to success. If anyone can figure it out for us we are open to conviction, indeed we will be willing converts.

In short, the acquiescent majority of the Commission reasoned that it was better to launch a Movement that had a mathematically probable chance to succeed, than one embodying the full idealism of the Disciples' plea and an all-around square deal to all institutions, which ran a large risk of falling short of the goal.

ISSUE JOINED AT TWO POINTS.

With this reasoning of the acquiescent members of the Commission I take sharp issue at two points.

First I take issue with the assumption that the course chosen was the expedient course to take. And secondly, I take issue with the application of the principle of expediency to this case.

I do not for a moment assent to the assumption that the Disciples of Christ are the kind of people whose money can be extracted only upon such terms as these. For the past twenty years our people have been growing marvelously in tolerance, in inclusiveness, in catholicity. Issue after issue has been settled during that period, without a single important exception, in favor of the broader, the more generous interpretation of our people's mission in the world.

WEALTH NATURALLY CONSERVATIVE.

It is true that, as a rule, the men of large wealth are the older men, and, therefore, hold the older type of theological opinion. Wealth tends to be conservative theologically. But there is a new generation of resourceful men and women now on the stage. They have been educated in modern schools. They have caught the modern vision. They have definitely lost interest in many of the distinctions of formal theology and they respond to the appeals of colleges and missionary societies and benevolent agencies with incomparably greater generosity than did their fathers, and for motives more practical, more human, and, essentially, more religious. The overwhelming majority of Disciples of Christ do not wish to fasten their own theological formulas upon their colleges. They trust their colleges. They believe in the ideals of scholarship that obtain in their colleges. They trust the future generations to work out their theology, just as our fathers trusted us to work out our theology. This faith in their fellowmen and the future would prompt large gifts.

I believe that the acceptance of theological definitions of a rich man's own making as in any sense a part of the Movement was an act of the highest inexpediency. And the acquiescence, by the Commission, on the grounds of expediency, in his determination to exclude the Divinity House from the Movement was, in my judgment, an elementally inexpedient thing to do.

In fact, there is no doubt in my mind that, had the Commission, or Mr. Cory, the secretary, declined to indulge Mr. Long or to cooperate with him in his effort to construct the Movement within the limits of his own theological opinion and personal prejudice—had even one Commissioner clearly discerned the inexpediency of such an effort and interpreted it to Mr. Long, I believe so sincerely in his fair-mindedness that I venture to declare on his behalf that he would have relinquished his determination without withdrawing his generous offer.

IDEA GREW IN SINGLE BRAIN.

But the misfortune is that Mr. Long altogether lacked counsellors. The Divinity House was excluded by an action that was not discussed, I am told, more than two minutes, if so long, all the Commissioners present having been informed beforehand of Mr. Long's determination, and assuming that, of course, there was but one expedient thing to do.

It is regrettable that this great Movement reached its maturity in the brain of one man.

Had the structure of the undertaking taken form in the open discussion of a group of representative Disciples instead of in the mind of a single man whose own great gift naturally overshadowed every other consideration in determining conditions, the inexpediency of some of these conditions would have been disclosed.

It is conceivable that I am mistaken on this question of fact. Perhaps the Commission is right and I am wrong. My conviction is based mainly upon faith in the character and quality of the brotherhood to which I belong. I cannot believe that the Disciples of Christ, united within the living Church by the purpose to maintain a fellowship as broad as the living Church itself, are the kind of people who will not give their money to education and missions except creedal and unfraternal conditions are imposed upon its expenditures. I may have mistaken the temper of our people, but I do not think I have.

A CLEAN-CUT MORAL ISSUE.

But while I admit the possibility of mistake in my judgment of our people I cannot admit a mistake in the second point at issue, namely, the application of the principle of expediency to this particular situation. Granting, for the argument, the assumption upon which the acquiescent members of the Commission acted—their assumption that the money could not be secured save by the acceptance of these theological and unfraternal conditions—still I affirm with sure conviction, and with no intention of harshness, that it would have been better to let two or three rich men keep their money than to have accepted it as the price of our historic ideals of liberty and brotherhood.

It is by no abstract mode of reasoning that I come to this conclusion. I am not

FOR SALE?

Shall we give our soul for clinking gold?
Shall we barter truth for fame?
Shall the right to think for a sum be sold,
With a spirit cowed and tame?

Is it God, the Lord of star and sun,
Who needs our paltry pence?
Does He meekly wait till our schemes be done,
And our haggling tongue consents?

Does He pause in His world-creating course
To court us as for trade?
How we strive and cry, like a hawker hoarse,
That the bargain may be made!

Shall we give our soul for clinking gold?
Shall we barter truth for fame?
Shall the right to think for a sum be sold?
Let us bow our heads in shame!

—THOMAS CURTIS CLARK.

opposed to the principle of expediency as such. I have no hesitation in affirming that not a few of our moral problems must be solved by weighing one set of values over against another set, by choosing the lesser of two evils—that is to say, by applying the principle of expediency. But in the present instance we are brought face to face with as clean-cut a moral issue as could possibly be devised for an organized body of people to decide.

OUR LORD'S TEMPTATION REPEATED.

The temptation of our Lord in the wilderness was not more clearly a moral test. The essence of his temptation lay in the suggestion to compromise his essential messianic mission by adopting means for its realization that were inconsistent with that mission.

The temptation which our brotherhood faces is the same: to compromise our historic and essential mission, to blur and eclipse the great end toward which all our history has pointed, by the acceptance of money, ostensibly in behalf of the realization of that mission, but on terms which by an explicit interpretation and a definite, overt act, are plainly inconsistent with that mission.

The Disciples of Christ stand historically against the erection of any human creed whatever, as a test of fellowship or standard of orthodoxy. Mr. Long has injected a human creed of his own formulation into the Men and Millions Movement—a creed allowed to pass at its first announcement as perhaps innocuous enough, but, as is the way with creeds, later elaborated by him into many articles lest the meaning of the original might be misunderstood!

Mr. Long's money cannot be ethically accepted by our brotherhood, or by our colleges, as the matter now stands, without the tacit acceptance of this creed.

Again, the Disciples stand historically for the practice of Christian unity, upon the basis of personal faith in and allegiance to Jesus Christ, the divine Lord.

The loyalty of the Disciples' Divinity House to Jesus Christ, in its faith and teachings and practice, can no more be called in question than can that of any other college among the Disciples, or even Mr. Long's own loyalty. I do not believe that Mr. Long himself dares publicly to judge the loyalty of the professors of the Divinity House, or its trustees, in the matter of their relation to Jesus Christ.

On what ground then is this institution excluded?

Mr. Long is reported authoritatively as holding, as does also at least one other wealthy member of the Commission, that the Disciples' Divinity House does not belong to our brotherhood. Therefore he is determined that it shall have no share in this representative common fund.

A MORAL PRINCIPLE VIOLATED.

Thus the moral principle of Christian Unity is violated by the attempted excommunication of an institution whose loyalty to the only standard of fellowship and orthodoxy among Disciples stands unquestioned.

The other members of the Commission say: The raising of the six million dollars is possible only if the campaign proceeds upon the hypothesis that the Divinity House does not belong to our common life; therefore, without deciding whether it does or does not, we will exclude it for the obvious expediential consideration. That is to say, in order to get the six millions for our other institutions we will allow the un-Christian and un-Disciple hypothesis to stand as if it were true.

Now, there is not the slightest doubt in my mind that if such an hypothesis is allowed, not by nine business men alone but by the whole brotherhood, to stand throughout the period of this far-reaching, deep-going Movement it will have virtually established itself in the thought and practice of our people as a precedent upon which similar discriminating acts will be based for many years to come.

Nor can I imagine that the man, or men, who are responsible primarily for the folding-in of the theological issue into the Men and Millions Movement lack the sagacity to see what its effect will be. They see clearly that the financial success of the Movement, based upon such an hypothesis will accomplish what they wish to see accomplished, namely, the establishment of that hypothesis as a basis for future procedure.

WHAT IT MEANS.

And that means that the freedom, the large Christian tolerance, the unity, of our brotherhood will have been restricted and our progress put back many years. It means the triumph of sectarianism and partisanship among us.

It means, in short, that our very character as a people will have been changed!

We are face to face with a question not of expediency but of elemental sincerity.

It is not a question of prudence but of right and wrong.

The stake is not Mr. Long's generous million but the Disciples' essential mission.

I cannot speak for others, but for my own part I would rather see the Disciples lose the million or the six million dollars than to lose their own soul.

What is a College For?

AN ADDRESS BY WOODROW WILSON, PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

On a recent visit of President Wilson to Philadelphia, he took part in the exercises in the restored Congress Hall. On the same day he spoke at the annual Founder's Day exercises at Swarthmore College, in celebration of the founding of the state by William Penn. The following is his address on the latter occasion.

NO ONE can stand in the presence of a gathering like this, on a day suggesting the memories which this day suggests, without asking himself what a college is for. At times I have suspected that certain undergraduates did not know. I remember that in days of discouragement as a teacher I recalled the sympathy of a friend of mine in the Yale faculty, who said that after twenty years of teaching he had come to the conclusion that the human mind had infinite resources for resisting the introduction of knowledge. And yet I have my serious doubts as to whether the main object of the college is the introduction of knowledge. It may be the transmission of knowledge through the human system, but not much of it sticks. Its introduction is temporary, for the discipline of the hour. Most of what a man learns in college he assiduously forgets afterwards, not because he purposes to forget it, but because the crowding events of the days that follow seem somehow to eliminate it. But what a man ought never to forget with regard to college is that it is a nursery of principles and of honor.

PENN A SPIRITUAL KNIGHT.

I can't help thinking of William Penn as a sort of spiritual knight who went out upon his adventures to carry the torch that had been put into his hands, so that other men might have the path illuminated for them which led to justice and to liberty; and I can't admit that a man establishes his right to call himself a college graduate by showing me his diploma. The only way he can prove it is by showing that his eyes are lifted to some horizon which other men less instructed than he have not been privileged to see. Unless he carry freight of the spirit, he has not been bred where spirits are bred. William Penn, representing the sweet enterprise of the quiet and powerful sect that called themselves Friends, proved his right to the title by being the friend of mankind; and he crossed the ocean not merely to establish estates in America, but to set up a free commonwealth in America and to show that he was of the lineage of those who had been bred in the best traditions of the human spirit. I should not be interested in celebrating the memory of William Penn if his conquest had been merely a material one. Sometimes we have been laughed at by foreigners in particular for boasting of the size of the American continent, the size of our own domain as a nation, and they have naturally suggested that we did not make it. But I claim that every race and every man is as big as the thing he takes possession of, and that the size of America is in some sense a standard of the size and capacity of the American people. But the extent of the American conquest is not what gives America distinction in the annals of the world. It is the professed purpose of the Quaker, which was to see to it that every foot of that land should be the home of free, self-governed people, who should have no government whatever which did not rest upon the consent of the governed. I should like to believe that all this hemisphere is devoted to the same sacred purpose, and that nowhere can any government endure which is stained by blood or supported by anything but the consent of the governed. And the spirit of Penn will not be stayed. You cannot set limits to such mighty adventurers. After their own day is gone, their spirits stalk the world, carrying inspiration everywhere they go, and reminding men of the fine lineage of those who have sought justice and the right.

It is no small matter, therefore, for a college to have as its patron saint a man who went out upon such a quest. And what I should like to ask you young people today is, How many of you have devoted yourselves to the like adventure? How many of you will volunteer to carry these spiritual messages of liberty to the world? How many of you will forego anything except your allegiance to that which is just and that which is right?

SERVICE TO MANKIND THE PURPOSE.

We die but once, and we die without distinction, if we are not willing to die the death of sacrifice. Do you covet honor? You will never get it by serving yourself. Do you covet distinction? You will get it only as the servant of mankind. Do not forget, then, as you walk these classic places, why you are here. You are not here merely to prepare to make a living. You are here in order to enable the world to live more amply, with greater vision, with a finer spirit of hope and achievement. You are here to enrich the world.

It seems to me that there is no great difference between college ideals and ideals of the state. Can you not translate the one into the other? Men have not had to come to college, let me remind you, to quaff the fountain of this inspiration. You are merely more privileged than they. Men out of every walk of life, men without advantage of any kind, have seen the vision; and you, with it written large upon every page of your studies, are the more blind if you do not see it when it is pointed out. You could not be forgiven for overlooking it. They might have been, but they did not wait instruction. They simply drew the breath of life into their lungs, felt the aspirations that must come to every human soul, looked out upon their brothers and felt their pulses beat as their fellows' beat, and then sought by counsel and action to move forward to common ends that would be characterized by honor and achievement. This is the only glory of America.

The Whole Church At It!

BY DAN CRAWFORD.

"For ye all can prophesy one by one that all may learn, and all may be comforted." Paul.

WHY be surprised at Islam sweeping one-eighth of the earth's surface? They have no priestly cult; they are all at it!

One of the strongest proofs that Christ meant His Church to be a pilgrim band is the fact that He stripped it of all ordinances, save the two traveling institutions of Baptism and The Lord's Supper. Wherever man is, there, even there, is water. Wherever the pilgrim rests, there, even there, is some sort of humble table in the wilderness. A sharp intended contrast all this, surely, to the heavy cumbersome Tabernacle furniture of a past dispensation of works. How different the pilgrim Church of the upper room, stripped and lithe for service! There is no ecclesiastical furniture, for the only outfit they have is God's INFIT. That is to say, the minimum of machinery and the maximum of power.

NEW PROOF TEXT.

In this connection, I am indebted to a quaint unlettered African for quite a new proof-text in favor of the "all-at-it" ministry so distinctive a feature of I Cor. 14. That animated photograph of open ministry in Corinth was linked by the African with the wonderful fourth chapter of John. On the one hand he showed how the same Bantu word bound these two seemingly very different chapters together. Lost in Aryan speech, the link is still strong in Semitic; and the "bubbling up" of a living water-spring is the same word as that "bubbling-over" of gifts in Corinth. The Assembly is there seen as composed of a congregation of so many living, bubbling water-springs. "He that believeth" is the man of whom it is declared that in him the up-bubbling spring would assert itself. Thus, the animated photograph of Corinth given by Paul is, therefore, only a natural sequence of "all that believe being together." The God who created so many living inlets, does of sheer divine necessity sanction as many outlets. Hence the blessed word of authority: "for ye all can prophesy (or "bubble up") one by one." There is no ecclesiastical outfit in Corinth. It is all infit. And the ordinance of God is, that what He puts in must come out. "We cannot but speak!" The thing will out.

Nor is that old unlettered African's link exhausted yet awhile. Beyond the link of identical language, you have the stronger link of identical context. Surely the fourth of John is deeply concerned with the very theme of I Cor. 14. For were not the very words regarding the bubbling-up spring of living water uttered in the specific connection of Christ's words as to "worship in Spirit and Truth?" And what, indeed, is I Cor. 14, if not the divine snapshot photograph of true and spiritual worship in the Assembly? "All of you have a hymn, etc." What is that if not each individual well of living water bubbling over? Living water only means moving water. God put it in and God demands that it come out. The water must spring up to the level of its source, hence "the Father seeketh such to worship Him." "Ye can all prophesy one by one." "It shall be in him (in the Assembly) a well of water springing up." How then can mere man shut it down? "The Father seeketh such." Let us all thank God, and that old African for linking John 4 with I Cor. 14; a double link of identical language and identical context. He was right. Worship in Spirit and in Truth is the double theme of these double chapters. The well of water must bubble up if it is living water.

LESS PROTESTANT THAN WE THINK.

Why is it that so many exegetes under a specious plea of rightly dividing the "Word" warn us of "Hebrews" as being a Jewish Epistle? Is it because God has declared that the whole Church of Christ is a priesthood, and proved it to the hilt in one hundred and forty stubborn links of analogy? And if all the Church be a heavenly priesthood where is the laity? And where the status of "clericy?" Truly a straw indicates the current, and we are less Protestant than we think.

The godly Pastor (and we must have him!) is the man who realizes that he only officially exists to foster this "all-at it" functioning of the members of the body. God's big hearted Moses could confound many a weakling jealous of his puerile priestly prerogative. Listen to the royal records: And there ran a young man and told Moses * * Eldad and Medad do prophesy in camp. And Joshua said, My Lord Moses, forbid them. And Moses said, "Art thou jealous for my sake?" Would God that all the Lord's people were prophets that the Lord would put his Spirit upon them!

Big-hearted Moses agrees admirably with brave-hearted Paul who said "Ye may all prophesy one by one."

To sum up. To regulate all this bubbling up gift is one thing. To suppress it is quite amazingly another. Why bring civil war into God's contest? In the very breath where He says "God is not a God of confusion but of peace," the word proceeds "Ye all can prophesy one by one." How then can this connote confusion?

HOW EVANGELIZE THE WORLD?

This and this alone will evangelize the world—all at it! Too long a mere nickname has done duty for an argument. And to call this "Plymouthism" or any other "ism" is merely to be the victim of an exasperated expedient. It is the old obvious artifice of making a nickname do duty for an argument. It takes all sorts of people to make a world and all sorts of members to make a ministering body. That there is a certain kind of powerful, pungent illiteracy can be proved from the inspired Word of God where not a few portions are written in "bad Greek." The pedantic essayist may appeal to the select few, but God's millions are multiform and the majority do not care to catch up a royal rousing man on a mere verbal technicality. The soft eye cannot say to the hard, horny hand, I have no need of thee. Nay, much more, the very members which seem to be more feeble are necessary. For the body is not one member but many.

The case of Islam is a clear convincing proof of a non-clerical caste sweeping one-eighth of the world's population with an "all-at-it" propaganda. From Morocco to Zanzibar, from Sierra Leone to Siberia and China, from Bosnia to New Guinea has witnessed the success of "all-at-itism."

Iowa Has Girl Sculptor

Story of an Interesting Young Genius Who Has Already "Arrived."

BY WILLIAM E. BARTON.

"FAR out upon the prairie,
How many children dwell,
Who never read the Bible,
Nor hear the Sabbath bell."

This interesting little hymn was in the Sunday-school books a generation ago. In at least one family that lived upon the prairie it was resented, for the Bible was industriously read and the Sabbath bell regularly heard and heeded, and the prairies blossoming with wild roses in the spring and changing with the season from colors that are first purple with violets and cranebills and later golden with prairie gum and black-eyed Susans, blossomed also with children who regularly went to Sunday-school and had certain other advantages.

Nellie Walker was born at Red Oak, Iowa, in 1874. Before the year 1914 ends she will be forty years of age, but they still speak of her as "a little girl," for she is small in stature and no one yet realizes that she is not as young as she was.

THE DAUGHTER OF A STONECUTTER.

Nellie Walker's father was a stonecutter. He carved gravestones and Nellie when a little girl took the hammer and chisel and tried her hand on the marble and granite. She did it so well that people came to see her at her task and she was interested in her work and in their approval of it. In 1893, there was a World's Fair in Chicago. Not even the glory of subsequent expositions, with their dazzling bursts of electricity and their avenues of massive buildings gleaming white in the sun that paled the glory of that great exposition. In its Art Gallery appeared among other things a bust of Abraham Lincoln by Nellie V. Walker, and that was twenty-one years ago and she was only nineteen.

Iowa people were proud of that bust, and they had reason to be. To their credit be it said that Iowa has always been proud of Nellie Walker. Some of her best commissions have come from her own state. She has not been without honor in her own country.

Lorado Taft was doing things in Chicago at that time and has been doing them ever since. He saw the bust of Lincoln and he met the "little girl" and she came to Chicago to study under him, and has been in Chicago ever since.

She had to work her way and against great odds. She had no money and at first no very good way of earning it. They provided a task for her at the Art Institute, which paid her $25 a month, and she did her work well and unobtrusively and promptly. She earned her money and they gave her some more work to do.

Nellie V. Walker.

Starvation seems essential to success in art, and Nellie now and then came within sight of it. She boarded herself and if she got enough to eat she did not always look it, but she was always hard at work, striving to do a little better, and every now and then there was an exhibition of art in Chicago and the name of Nellie Walker grew increasingly familiar.

"SCULPTURE" IN CEMETERIES.

About the only use we have had for sculpture in America has been in graveyards. Alas! what a monotonous, uninspiring sort of art it is! Its symbols are largely pagan, its ideals are monotonously commercial. Seldom does a real artist have any share in the designing of a tombstone, and if he does he commonly regards it as a pot-boiler. One of the worst of the granite atrocities in Boston Public Gardens was apologized for by the sculptor who deemed himself to have said quite enough concerning it when he published in the Transcript a statement that he supposed it was to have been placed in a cemetery.

Nellie Walker has made some gravestones. They have meant bread and butter to her, and apparently something more, for she has given to them a certain idealism quite different from the gravestone.

Her last notable work is a statue of the Indian chief, Keokuk, erected in the park of the city which bears his name by the Keokuk Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution. It is a heroic piece of bronze, mounted on a pedestal of granite and shows the old chief in the glory of his war bonnet. It is altogether creditable to her and to the society which has erected it.

Real Art in a Cemetery.

The last statue exhibited in Chicago and said to have been made "for exhibition purposes" is an ideal figure, called "The Young Donatello." The young sculptor stands with his mallet and chisel, but he has caught a vision which he wishes to release from its imprisonment in the marble and reveal in the beauty of his completed work.

Most noted of all the works of Miss Walker is a marble group, entitled "Her Son." It is the figure of a mother and child and it attracts instant attention as soon as it is seen. Its simple dignity and fine craftsmanship appeal both to the lover of art and the ordinary beholder. The lad has such a fine face and such a far look. His left hand resting on the mother's speaks of obedience and dependence but the right hand raised in a gesture of anticipation speaks of the dawn of conscious purpose. The mother's face has in it confidence, affection, maternal solicitude. This lifesize group is distinctly her most popular work thus far, and small replicas of it in plaster command a ready sale at the Art Institute at something like $15.

IN STUDY ABROAD.

Miss Walker has just gone abroad for two years. Thus far all her study has been in Chicago. It seemed that the time had come for her to widen her horizon by the wholesome effect of study and criticism in the old world. Some of her friends thought she was doing well enough here, but others felt that her work thus far was only the preparation for much larger things which she might be expected to do with a little survey of her department in the great field of art. She has good prospects of becoming the foremost American woman in the field of sculpture.

One thing more should be said about Miss Walker. She is a genuine worker in marble. Most sculptors are not. They prepare their model in plaster or clay and hire an Italian by the day to chop out the marble.

"Tell it not in Gath," but they do say that many a sculptor owes more to the skill of his hireling stone-chopper than "the world wots of." It is not so of Nellie Walker. She does her own chopping. Every stroke upon her marble groups was wrought with the chisel in her left hand and her mallet in her right.

Character Even in Tombstones.

Her career has in it so much of struggle and sacrifice, so much of heroic toil against great odds, so much of genuine success wrought under difficulty and so much to commend by reason of the appreciation of her teachers and the recognition of her own state and community, the story deserves to be told.

They speak well of Miss Nellie Walker in the Midway Studios and her teacher, Mr. Taft, speaks of her in terms of affectionate interest and sincere regard. Already she is a credit to him and both he and all her friends are earnest in their hope that she will return to America and make full proof of the promise of these years of preparation for her larger tasks.

Women and the Church

Why They Do and Do Not Attend Its Services.

BY BRUCE BARTON.

Note: In order to find an answer to the question, "Why have so many churchgoers stopped attending church?" Mr. Barton wrote to several hundred representative women living in widely different localities, asking for a frank expression of opinion. The letters received in reply form the basis of two articles, the first of which was entitled "Why Fifty Women Do Not Go to Church." Mr. Barton's second article considers the reverse of the question. We publish this extract from the second article by the courtesy of the Woman's Home Companion. EDITOR.

"I SHOULD like to see any article you may write to prove that modern club women do not go to church," writes one club president, a bit belligerently, "and I should like to answer it."

Unfortunately for her this article promises to be altogether on her side. For if the testimony of the fifty women who do go to church is to be credited the churches are full of women's club members. Indeed, almost every individual one of the fifty takes occasion to give her emphatic opinion that the best club members are the best church members, that the church has trained them in organized work, and that whatever impulse they have for civic and social betterment is drawn out of their religious training gained in church work and worship.

"As president of a club of four hundred women," writes one, "I might say that almost every member is a church worker; and as state director of the State Federation, numbering nearly sixty thousand women, I might add that practically all of the officers are church women."

So says another, who has been a delegate to six of the biennial conventions of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, and adds: "Mingling as I have at these gatherings with women from every state in our country, women who represent all the lines of work that are being carried forward by many different organizations, I am impressed by the fact that practically all of them are devoted Christians, loyal members of their churches. And most of them, if the question were asked, would admit that the vision which made them really successful in their club work had its beginnings in their church life."

CLUB WOMEN AS CHURCHGOERS.

Our fifty women represent almost every section of the country and almost every condition of city and town. We have picked them out here and there, in Eastern cities, in quaint old New England villages, and in raw Western towns. Their clubs vary all the way from the great departmentalized organization of a thousand members, to the little study club of twenty who come on Thursday afternoons bringing their sewing with them. Their churches are great cathedrals, and little white frame buildings with lightning rods running down their steeples. And the little woman in the little town in Missouri is just as proud of the church record of her club as the two prominent women from New York and Philadelphia, whom we have quoted above. Says the little woman:

"In most of the towns of the Middle West the club woman and social leader rather prides herself on not allowing her club work to interfere with her church work; and if she devotes much time to her club she is more anxious and persistent in being seen at her church and missionary society, that she may not feel she is neglecting the church for the club. Many of our prominent club women in Missouri, state officers even, hold offices in state missionary societies. I feel that the place of the church in the life of the modern club woman is a most important one."

Bruce Barton.

"I have had experience in club work in two towns for a number of years," writes another woman, "and I find that the women in the clubs are the church workers, and that they are the ones most interested in the better development of the community and the cause of humanity generally." The same sentiment in different words is found in almost every one of the fifty letters.

Not everyone can report so unanimously as the president of a home circle club in Illinois, who says, "I am glad to say that every member of our club is a church member and two-thirds of them active members." But the evidence is very conclusive nevertheless: apparently the modern club woman—a majority of her anyway—does go to church.

WHY DOES SHE GO TO CHURCH?

Why does she do it? In a good many cases perhaps from mere habit or a sense of duty. Expressions like these run through a considerable percentage of the letters.

"Having been brought up to go to church I go merely from a sense of duty; and habit is strong."

"My reasons for going to church are selfish. I feel better for the mere going, aside from the mental and spiritual good obtained. Churchgoing has become a habit."

"The habit is strong enough so that I should keep on going even though I were convinced that the church no longer benefited me personally in any way. Of course I do not have that feeling now."

"I am loyal to the church because I am a part of it and feel I ought to do my share in helping its various organizations to do their best work."

"I was sent to church as a child because I was taught that church attendance was right. I go now because I feel an obligation to teach my own children by my example that the 'fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom.'"

So we may assume that the clear ring of the church bells on Sunday mornings calls from the warmth and rest of their homes a considerable army of women, who start forth a bit reluctantly, but none the less firmly, in the performance of a clearly recognized duty. But they, as the letters indicate, are not in the majority. To the larger number of women church attendance pays actual dividends in a spiritual uplift, a freshened sense of life's eternal values that they do not find anywhere else. They express themselves in different language, but the thought is the same.

THE CHURCHGOER'S DIVIDEND.

"I was brought up in the city and lived there until I was married, but this poor little village church with its mediocre preaching and wretched music and apparent lack of inspiration brings me a blessing that I cannot get in any other way or anywhere else. There is a distinct blessing in going to church not to be gotten in family worship or private devotions."

"The church gives me personally a great sense of comfort, and I believe it does great good in this little village, where it has stood for two hundred and seven years."

"The Sunday morning service is a wonderful rest from the arduous duties of everyday life. There is a comfort in my church faith and its influence is with me as a power and strength."

"All the spiritual help that I get for daily tasks is drawn out of the Sunday morning church services. The sermons delivered by the pastor are messages of love, power, inspiration and helpfulness."

"It keeps me in touch with spiritual affairs and with its higher ideals inspires me to nobler thoughts and actions than if I allowed my home duties or my club life to fill my thoughts entirely."

"Regular church attendance gives me an uplift spiritually, and greater love for my neighbors. It teaches the real value of true friendship: I expect from it and do receive messages that teach me the really worth-while values of life and help me to attain them."

"To the church I owe whatever I have of spiritual welfare, strength, fairness, and the desire to keep on helping."

The Book World

A Department of Reviews and Literary Notes.

BY ARTHUR GORDON.

American Ideals, Character and Life. By Hamilton Wright Mabie. The custom of exchanging professors among the leading universities and colleges of the different nations has now become a fixed factor in international relationship. We now have our professors in English, German, French, Dutch and other institutions for longer or shorter time, and in return we receive into our academic institutions some of the most noted academicians from abroad. As was to be expected, Japan has sought and found a place in this company of participating peoples. The first exchange professor to be sent to this country was Prof. Inazo Nitobe. He gave a series of lectures upon Japan in six American institutions and before various other organizations. The return of this courtesy fell to Dr. Mabie, who went out, not as a university man but as a representative of the Carnegie Peace Endowment. The present volume contains the lectures delivered by him in Japan, Korea and Manchuria. The lectures were given in the universities of Tokyo and Kyoto, and in the important non-governmental schools of Waseda, Keio and the Doshisha. The volume is a delightful resumé of American history, literature and purposes. It deals with the beginnings of the national life, the gradual possession of the continent, the work of education, the development of art, the political ideals and practices of the American, and a closing chapter upon the country and its people. It is a happy idea that a man as well informed, cultured and optimistic as Dr. Mabie be sent to foreign lands to interpret the deeper life of the American people. We have so many crude and superficial representatives who are sure to take entirely wrong definitions of American life to the watchful nations of the world that it is especially fortunate that now and then we can have an accredited representative who stands for the sane and constructive purposes of our national experience. The impression produced by Dr. Mabie's illuminating and kindly utterances cannot fail to be wholesome, and the American people themselves might well profit by the words of this admirable disclosure of their deeper life. Sadhana, the Realization of Life. By Rabindranath Tagore. It was something of a shock to the western world, but at the same time an interesting and agreeable sensation, when the Nobel Prize for poetry for the past year was awarded to a Hindu of Calcutta. We have perhaps accustomed ourselves sufficiently to the ability of the Japanese to have accepted without marvel the assignment of honors to one of that race, but we were hardly prepared to think of the Indian peoples of Northern Hindustan as the soil from which the fairest flower of poetry was to be gathered this year. But those who have heard this eminent philosopher and poet in any of his American lectures could not fail to enjoy the charm of his style and appreciate something of the strength of his message. This collection of prose essays is a welcome addition to the poetical work which he has published in the west. It is full of the elusive charm of the orient, and yet attempts to grapple in a forceful way with some of the deepest problems of life. That he brings to their solution any particularly new forces of thought is perhaps too much to affirm. But the very fact that he states them in new and poetic ways, and at points throws interesting lights upon the process of world development from those ancient and inspiring messages of religion, the Upanishads and the teachings of Buddha, renders his essays the more pleasing and worthful. Among his eight chapters are treatments of the Individual in Relation to the Universe, Soul Consciousness, The Problem of Evil, the Problem of Self Realization in Love and in Action, and the Realization of Beauty and the Infinite. War and Women. By Mrs. St. Clair Stobert. Here is the story of one woman's singularly intimate and informing acquaintance with the Balkan war, through hospital and field relief service that began under the Red Cross, but was finally devoted to independent efforts. The author of the book tells her story in a very interesting and convincing way. She gives us something of the rough and horrible experience of war. She shows how cruel and barbaric a thing it is at best, and how needless. Yet with a woman's sympathy she pleads that something more be done than even the Red Cross society has been able to do. She believes that a trained force of women actually prepared for field work should be included in every army corps. While recognizing the good intentions and the very valuable services of the Red Cross society she is unsparing in her criticisms of what she regards as its inefficiency to meet certain conditions in war times. She is very positive in the statement of her views, and has plenty of illustrative material, both in work and pictures, to fortify her plea. War is horrible and excuseless, but if nations will go to war, they ought at least to provide as competent a nursing staff as they do in artillery or naval service.

Clear Grit. By Robert Collyer. One of the prominent figures on the Lyceum platform of a generation ago was Dr. Collyer, a Unitarian minister of distinction, whose sermons and published writings made a deep and wholesome impression upon American thinking. Like most of the important lecturers of that time, including Wendell Phillips, Henry Ward Beecher and John B. Gough, he had one lecture that was known far and wide. "Clear Grit" was delivered before audiences in all the important cities in the country, and in some places many times. In this volume it stands first and gives the title, and is followed by a dozen or more lectures upon other themes, such as "Westminster Abbey," "The Pilgrims," "The Human George Washington," "The Heart of Martin Luther," and several dealing with American men of letters. These lectures are marked by the exact information, careful literary workmanship and calm yet earnest appeal which the more stately platform of an earlier day made to the American public. The volume closes with some of Dr. Collyer's more familiar poems and hymns. (American Unitarian Association, $1.50 net.)

The Limitations of Life, and Other Sermons. By William M. Taylor, D. D. A generation ago the two greatest preachers in New York City were John Hall and William M. Taylor. Probably no men of that generation, saving only Charles Haddon Spurgeon and Alexander Maclaren were as widely read. It is worth while to keep at hand some of the most important sermons of such great teachers. No one wishes to preach them, for their message is not wholly suited to the new generation. But their grip upon the great facts of the religious life is very real, and the character of their sermons may well be studied by the ministry of today. In this volume there are some twenty-five of Dr. Taylor's representative sermons. Among them one recognizes with pleasure, "Peniel," "The Eagle's Nest," "The Incarnation," "The Power of God's Gentleness," and "Memory as an Element in Future Retribution." (George H. Doran and Co., 50 cents net).

Crayon and Character. By G. J. Griswold. You have seen the wonderful manner in which crayon artists draw pictures on blackboards or paper spaces before fascinated audiences. Did you ever think you would like to do that kind of work? Or that you had some talent of that sort? Here is a capital book to discuss that question with you, and to show you just how you can develop any skill you may have for crayon drawing. The possibilities of such work particularly in Sunday-schools are very great, and we believe that many a boy and girl will find suggestions for an interesting and valuable career by reading this profusely illustrated little book. (Meigs Publishing Co., Indianapolis, $1.00 postpaid.)

The Home Nurse. By Dr. E. B. Lowry. No one needs to be informed that in all cases of sickness very much depends upon intelligent and efficient nursing. This book, written by one who is an authority upon the subject, gives in a precise and practical manner instructions upon general nursing, nursing in special diseases, and the treatment of minor disorders and accidents, with a competent list of home remedies? It is just the kind of book one would like to have at hand in emergencies either of accident or of such sicknesses as may fall outside the range of professional nursing. (Forbes and Co., $1.00 net).

The Backyard Farmer. By J. Willard Bolte. The possibility of making a small patch of town or city ground both attractive and profitable is the thesis of this worthwhile book. It discusses a very large variety of possibilities in the raising of vegetables, flowers, small fruits, trees and many varieties of chickens, and has some admirable words about the value to children of garden interests. (Forbes and Co., $1.00).

Success with Hens. By Robert Joos. A series of fifty chapters upon the work of rearing poultry, the selection of stock, different forms of incubation, the care of chickens, successful marketing of poultry, the common diseases to be encountered, and the profits in the successful care of hens. (Forbes and Co., $1.00).

MODERN WOMANHOOD

CHILDREN IN COURT.

Part of An Address By Mrs. Joseph T. Bowen of Chicago.

It seems a sad commentary on our civilization to associate children with courts, yet every year sees a sad little procession of underfed and overworked children pass through our Juvenile Court. They come from the streets and the alleys, the tenements and the schools, the poolrooms and the dance halls. Some have stolen, some have been immoral, some are runaways, many have been mischievous, and a few are vicious. All are the product of over-crowding, under-feeding and neglect. The boy who has been put to work too early and made to assume responsibilities too heavy for his slight shoulders seeks relief from his monotonous occupation in some kind of activity which too often leads to the Juvenile Court. The girls, entering industry and leaving behind her the varied life of the school room, finds her work stupid and uninteresting, and soon begins to take her recreation wherever she can find it, and sometimes at a cost which lands her in the courts. We not only want to cure these children, but we want to prevent a recurrence of the conditions which led to their trouble. We need to so treat them that we will develop whatever is good in them, and so promote their vital welfare.

The Juvenile Court should be equipped with a physician who would examine the child carefully, and if possible remedy his physical defects. He should also be examined by a psychologist, who would study his family history and ascertain how far his heredity had influenced his career. His neighborhood and home environment should be studied, and changed if necessary, and trained agents should be sent to study the conditions which brought about his downfall.

Overwork and underpay of parents is resposible for much neglect of children. Scott Nearing—an authority on wages in this country—says that three-fourths of the men in American industry cannot provide decently for more than three children; one-half cannot provide for more than two children, and one-third cannot make adequate provision for one child.

Added to this, we must expect children to be brought into our courts until we have a higher standard of home life. When the father is working for an inadequate wage, and the mother is supplementing the family income by going out to work, when the home is unsanitary and untidy, and the children are underfed—and it is estimated that one-tenth of the school children in this country are seriously underfed—when they are put to work too early, for four-fifths of American school children never get beyond the grammar grades—then something is wrong with our whole system of education and employment, and until that is changed we cannot expect to keep children out of courts.

CONSERVING THE CHILDREN.

The infant death rate in Australia, as well as in New Zealand, has been steadily going down ever since equal suffrage was granted. Under the title "The Renaissance of Chivalry," Margaret Hodge in The Vote of Jan. 16, 1914, contrasts the laws of Australia relating to women with those of Great Britain, showing how much more favorable those of Australia are in various respects owing to legislative changes that have been made since women obtained the ballot. She adds:

"The same care that is shown for women is apparent in the legislation for children, and the steady annual decrease in infant mortality in Australia (from 10.3 per cent in 1901 to 6.8 per cent in 1911) is due in part to the excellent instruction in mothercraft in the schools and the careful legislation concerning dairies." (In England a pure milk bill has been crowded out year after year, the prime minister declaring that all the time of Parliment was needed for more pressing measures.)

In New Zealand trained nurses are sent around to give instruction to every mother, in city or country, on the care of babies and the best way to keep them in good health. Margaret Hodge adds:

"Child labor is practically banished from Australia and New Zealand. * * * I have not space to dwell upon the numerous laws which have improved women's economic position, but the table of statistics of wages from 1901 to 1911 shows how steadily women's wages have risen since they became responsible citizens. In these, Greater Britain's capitalists are not piling up profits from the labor of the sweated women and starving the potential and actual mothers of the race."

DEATH OF A REMARKABLE WOMAN.

One of the most scholarly ministers among the Disciples of Christ a generation ago was Henry T. Anderson. His translation of the New Testament anticipated many of the things that are familar to us now in the English and American Revisions; for one thing he arranged the text in paragraphs according to the subject matter, instead of cutting it up into verses.

Zoe Anderson, the subject of this sketch, was his daughter, born while he was pastor of a church in Central Kentucky. She was one of the most brilliant graduates of Daughters' College at Harrodsburg, an institution far in advance of the usual school for young women of that day. She was a person of unusual versatility; in addition to her mental gifts, she was a fine musician, and achieved success as an artist, especially in portrait painting; besides, she possessed exceptional personal beauty.

She married Spencer Norris, and they lived awhile in Kentucky, then moved to Kansas, and finally made their home in New York, where she made a name for herself in literature; her style was unique and individual, and she became a popular magazine contributor, besides writing several books. She became a social worker in New York's slum sections, and many of her stories dealt with conditions she found there. Finally, she took up her residence in the east side of the city and for several years has edited and published The East Side, an attractive and characteristic magazine; as a help in her social work she founded the "Ragged Edge Club," for the welfare and uplift of the women of the section.

Her death, a few days ago, has been widely noted in the daily press, because of her life and gifts, and because by one of those premonitions that we cannot explain, she had predicted the time when her end would come. She made every preparation for her death, writing her own obituary, and arranging all the details of her funeral. By her request, the little East Side German band played her only requiem, and the women of the "Ragged Edge Club" had place with her relatives as her chief mourners.

AN IMPORTANT LAW.

The passage of the Kenyon Red Light Bill through Congress is a cause of warm satisfaction. It would be too much to hope that the social evil will be wholly uprooted in Washington; but at least it will not flaunt itself under the very shadow of the Capitol, in defiance alike of law and decency. It is a source of satisfaction also to know that the resolution in favor of the Kenyon Red Light Bill passed by the National Suffrage Convention, and the tour of investigation made through the red-light district afterward by some of the delegates, with the letters and telegrams poured in by suffragists upon Congress, helped materially in getting the bill reported out of the committee where it seemed likely to slumber indefinitely and passing it through the House. Incidentally, here is another case where the influence of the suffragists does not seem to be tending to immorality.

President Wilson has signed the Kenyon bill abolishing Washington's segregated district.

"MODERN" EDUCATION COSTS!

The Harvard University Register for 1913, published by the Student Council, gives estimates of the expenditures of students for the various items in addition to board and tuition charges. Books cost the students about $71,000 a year, while the bill for drinks is estimated at $73,500, and for tobacco $98,225. Theater tickets, suppers after the shows, and taxi fares amount to more than $200,000.

Here are the expenses in tabular form, according to the Central Church Advocate:

Drinks	$ 73,500
Tobacco	98,225
Theaters, taxis, etc.	200,000
Three items	$371,525
Books	71,000
For "modern" education	$300,525

THE OMISSIONS OF EUGENICS.

The chart before him lay, wherein to see—
Defeat and failure as his ancestry,
Weakness and pain as his heredity.
He bowed his head in bitter agony
Feeling himself unworthy utterly.
Then light, through black despair,
Shone piercingly.
"They have forgot, my brother," whispered he,
"Jesus, who died for others on the tree,
And my great father God, who strengthens me."

—Elizabeth C. Billings, in the Survey.

The Protestant Episcopal Church seems now to be struggling with the question as to whether laity rights shall be extended to women members. At the annual diocesan convention an amendment to the canons extending the rights of the women to vote in the parish meetings was laid over until the next annual meeting when it is to be the subject of a committee report.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

THE PRODUCTION OF LIFE.

WE READ frequently that some naturalist at Wood's Hole or elsewhere has bridged the gulf between the organic and the inorganic in nature, and evolved low forms of life from matter by chemical processes, and not from antecedent life. Not long ago we saw what purported to be microscopic enlargements of these infusoria. We are waiting for the confirmation of these discoveries, and are in no haste. We have neither prejudice against the experiments nor very great confidence in them. We are simply waiting.

But when a man shall learn at length how to create life, he ought to be placed under lock and key until the world is assured of the quality of the life he is to produce. We want no more diphtheria germs or typhoid fever bacilli or gypsy moths or English sparrows, or ravenous beasts, or bad men. If any man has the power of producing life he ought to do it under legislative enactment, after due consideration of all the interests involved. A fearful thing would be done if a new form of face is toward the past, and was accepted in America in a life should develop into a new pest like the potato bug, or the canker worm, or the seventeen-year locust, or the Canadian thistle, or the upas tree, or the deadly nightshade, or the human degenerate. It gives us pause when we remember the sacred and dangerous power which God has given to all life to reproduce its kind. A power so marvelous, so fraught with manifest peril to human welfare, should be most sacredly guarded at the springs.

THE NATIONAL AIR.

AN inquiry addressed to the War Department concerning the national air brings from the Adjutant General the following reply:

"Since the year 1899 the War Department, by general orders and official regulations, has recognized the "Star Spangled Banner" as the national air of this country. No law has been passed by Congress giving legal sanction to this designation, but the War Department appears to have recognized what by common consent has been selected by the people of the country themselves.

This paper wishes to file an exception to this inference. The "Star Spangled Banner" is a very suitable composition to be played by a band and within certain limits is effective as a solo, but it is not and never can become in any proper sense our national air. It never can be sung by a congregation and if it could it lacks those elements which can by any possibility fit for permanent usefulness in that relation. It cannot be understood without footnotes telling us that a particular American citizen, being detained over night on a British warship in time of battle, was grateful next morning to find the flag flying from an American fort. This was an interesting incident and one that fitly expressed itself in a poem, but it is only one of ten thousand or million incidents in which American citizens have been glad to see their country's flag. It contained a stanza which was entirely natural as the expression of national enmity toward the country with which we were then at war, but which is entirely unsuitable for permanent preservation as a part of our national hymn.

We earnestly protest against the assumption that the "Star Spangled Banner" is for any other than orchestral purposes our national air, for three good reasons:

First, it is unsingable; secondly, it is unintelligible except as related to a particular incident in the life of an individual not otherwise associated with our country's history in any notable way; and thirdly, the movement to elevate the "Star Spangled Banner" into first place as our national hymn is in the interests of a sectarian movement to displace "America."

We are not speaking in behalf of "America," nor are we advocating a new national anthem, made to order! For we do not believe great songs can be manufactured. They are born out of crises in individual and national life. But that is apart from the present discussion.

The War Department has a right to order the "Star Spangled Banner" to be played by its bands on any occasion when it deems it fit that a national anthem should be played. The "Star Spangled Banner" is worthy thus to be played and it is a national air suitable for such rendering, but it is not the national air and if the War Department should attempt to make it so it would exceed its authority.

HONOR SYSTEM FOR CONVICTS.

ONLY a short time ago the convict was regarded as a savage, soulless beast, and society's attitude toward him was that of fear, aversion and severity. The horrors of Sing Sing and Auburn, typical of the old traditions, are well known. It has been thought that the more odious the condition of prison life, the surer deterrent from crime it would prove. But this has not been the case. It is impossible to say where the idea of prison reform originated; but in Colorado, Arizona, California and Washington, in Illinois and to some extent in Minnesota, Indiana, and other states, clear thinkers have arisen who have insisted that criminals are human beings and that the true purpose of the prison is not punishment, but reformation. The most striking change of all is the success of the honor system. In Canon City, Colo., convicts are sent out without guards to work in the fields and on the public roads. In Great Meadow, N. Y., prisoners operate the farm, play football and baseball and are encouraged to live a healthfully active, normal life amidst clean surroundings. When John Cleghorne, who was the warden at Canon City a dozen years ago, sent out a gang of over 150 convicts with an unarmed prison official as foreman, but without guard, to work on a road forty miles from the prison, much alarm was felt by families living in the neighborhood. But the convicts camped there for a week, like any other workmen, and there was no attempt at disorder or escape. The indeterminate sentence and parole law, passed by Indiana in 1897, proved another step in the right direction. Instead of the old plan of "breaking the will" of the moral delinquent, that of gradually rebuilding the character through hope and appeal to honor, has proved immeasurably superior.

WHO PAYS THIS COST?

LET us pause and take out our pencils before we talk too much about war with Mexico or any other nation. War is a court of last resort, but unlike our supreme court it makes no provision for the payment of the costs by the party which makes the appeal. This would seem an oversight worthy the attention of the Hague tribunal.

If every generation paid for its own wars out of its own pockets there would be one thing less to say against war. This is far from the custom. Pensions and interest on war debts load their burden on posterity unto the third and fourth generation. There is no nation in the world that can so quickly meet the costs of war as the United States, and we are still paying the single item of pensions for every war we have ever had from the Revolution down. We shall be paying pensions for the Spanish War until into the twenty-first century.

How much is the world paying for the dead horses of war, for wars of the past? We have seen a statement recently which we presume is sufficiently accurate for practical purposes. If any one doubts it he may gather the figures and rectify the error if there is one. We give the statement as we found it.

But first let us analyze the matter a little, for the sum is to be expressed in dollars. How much does a dollar cost? The average wage earner and salaried person employed in the United States in manufacture receives somewhere about from $1.50 to $2 a day, and certainly pays not less than 75 cents a day on an average for board. A dollar a day, then, is a good average wage even in the United States with board provided, fair average gross wage. After deducting clothes, carfare, provision for those dependent, and the various necessary expenses of living other than board, it may be doubted if the average wage earner in the United States can hope to save a dollar in less than a week. A dollar, then, represents, let us say roughly, the gross amount which the average man could contribute in a week to the general good, after deducting the necessary expenses of himself and those dependent upon him. That is the approximate value of a dollar in America—the net worth of a week in the life of the average stalwart man. In the world at large a dollar is worth much more.

Now then the statement which we saw was this, that the amount which the world pays for past wars in interest on national debts, pensions, and claims for military damage, that, if gathered into one pile of one dollar bills would make a stack fifty-two miles high. This, mind you, is not represented as taking into account present war preparations, new warships and cannon, or the cost of anything but past wars. This is the burden which each generation saddles onto the future for its own love of fighting. Before the world can do anything more than merely live, before it can build a bridge or improve a harbor or erect a lighthouse or found a library or endow a school or do anything except just live, before it can pay its life insurance or open for its own children a savings bank account, it must pay every year into the open mouth of the past that is already full of skulls and fearful memories, a pile of dollar bills, each representing a man's net labor of a week, a pile of dollar bills fifty-two miles high.

SACRILEGE !

A METHODIST preacher in a fashionable Chicago suburb cut his sermon short last Sunday and upon the congregation rising to sing the final hymn it appeared that only two members of the quartet choir were in their places. The other two confusedly entered the choir loft in the midst of the second stanza. Upon inquiry the pastor learned that the absent singers had been spending the period of his sermon in the basement smoking cigarettes. The newspapers reporting the fact say that the pastor gave vent to his indignation by issuing an order forbidding smoking in the basement!

But what about the two singers? Will they retain their positions in the choir? Will they lead the people in the worship of Almighty God next Sunday? Peremptory dismissal of both of them was the only adequate expression of a right-minded pastor's indignation under the circumstances. And this not through any personal "huff" at their indifference to his sermon, but for the sake of the sincerity and good faith and integrity of public worship.

How can worship be real and sincere and spiritual when leaders of it use it as an occasion simply to exploit their professional talents and, having played their role, "cut" the portion of the service in which they have no public part? They sing God's praises but their minds are far from him.

The whole business of a merely professional choir is downright sacrilege. Choirs should be composed of Christian-minded singers, reverent, earnest, sincere worshipers themselves. Only these can truly aid in spiritual worship. If a church must choose between non-religious professionals who sing beautifully and sincerely religious amateurs who sing but passing well there should be no hesitation in choosing the latter. But if the taste of the congregation is so sensitive that it cannot endure any but the best, then let it get on without any choir at all, and it will be surprised to discover how well the worship of God can proceed without such assistance. And by all means abolish that curtain or screen that hides the seated choir from the view of the congregation. It suggests to the choir members that they are not a part of the congregation of worshipers but a group of paid performers.

No wonder they read books or engage in whispered conversation or go to the basement to smoke when the very arrangement of their seats suggests to them to do anything but listen reverently to the preacher.

THE OLD BETTER THAN THE NEW.

FOUR great religious bodies through their official publishing houses united to produce, if they could, a body of Sunday-school literature on the new international graded lessons.

They were, the Presbyterian church through the Presbyterian Board of Publication, the Methodist church through the Methodist Book Concern, the Congregational church through the Congregational Publication Society and the Disciples of Christ through the Disciples Publication Society (not an "official" publishing house).

The work was begun and carried forward in a remarkable spirit of prayer that God might lead these great religious peoples into a demonstration of their present essential unity by enabling them to produce from top to bottom of the series a body of literature transcending all denominational differences.

To each publishing house with its editor was reserved the right to get out its own quarterly in its own way in any case of irreconcilable difference that might arise.

For over four years this wonderful system has been growing. It is now practically completed, and stands as an unexampled monument to the real unity of these divided brotherhoods.

It seems to settle the question of the possibility of union.

If we can agree on what we shall teach our children, can we not agree practically on what it is important for our ministers to preach to our grown-ups?

Just as the course was approaching completion certain reactionary critics among the Presbyterians arose and objected to three out of the 132 texts on the ground that they were not quite Calvinistic enough. In order to keep down agitation the General Assembly appointed a committee to revise these texts. The revision is now completed. The Presbyterian Advance (Nashville), after regretting that the denomination felt it necessary even so slightly to depart from the text worked out in union with the rest, enters upon a comparative analysis of the old and the revised texts and concludes that it has been a case of "great cry and little wool."

Yet it epitomizes what differences it does find in the following very intelligible statements, letting R stand for the three revised texts and O for the old texts:

"The main difference between O and R is in the method of approach. O is historical. R is traditional. O is inductive, R is deductive. O studies the history with a view to discovering what it teaches, R uses the material to illustrate and enforce accepted truth. There is little to choose between the spirit and aim of the two. The old type of Sunday-school teacher will find R easier to teach. The modern teacher, eagerly seeking the best methods for creating and maintaining interest, will find O more suggestive. The original graded lessons seek to bring the most approved pedagogic principles to bear in the teaching of Christian truth, while the revised lessons show a greater solicitude for the pattern of sound words."

The other communions will continue to use the old text, and no doubt most of the Presbyterian schools in the progressive communities will do likewise.

A POEM BY DR. WASHINGTON GLADDEN.

I go not where I will but must;
This planet ship on which I ride
Is drawn by a resistless tide:
I touch no pilot wheel but trust

That One who holds the chart of stars,
Whose faithful lines touch lower deeps,
Whose eye the boundless spaces sweeps,
Will guide the ship through cosmic bars.

My soul goes not a chosen way:
A current underruns my life,
That moves alike in peace or strife,
And turns not for my yea or nay.

Not on the bridge, but at the mast,
I sail o'er this far-streaming sea:
I will arrive: enough for me
My Captain's smile and words at last.

The Larger Christian World

A Department of Interdenominational Acquaintance.

Unity Promoters Embarrassed?

Our good friends, the Episcopalians, anxious as they are for church unity, will be compelled to pause for a moment to adjust matters in East Africa. A real tangle seems to have put in its appearance. The hero, or villain, in this African drama is the now famous bishop of Zanzibar.

Here is the so-called "Kikuju Incident" in a nutshell, as put by one of our exchanges:

"When several evangelical churches in East Africa had gathered in consultation with the Anglican Church to consider ways and means whereby they could unitedly present a bold front against the encroachments of Mohammedanism, they formed a close union and ended their successful meeting with the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, administered by the bishops of Mombassa and Uganda. The service seemed perfectly acceptable to all parties concerned and nothing further was thought of it until the bishop of Zanzibar stumbled upon the fact. Immediately the excitement began to brew. He appealed to the church at home, lifting his hands in holy horror at the thought of a bishop in the Anglican Church administering the sacrament to unordained members of another denomination. The matter has been carried to the archbishop of Canterbury by both parties concerned, and there it hangs while fierce discussion is engaged. Of course to grant the act of the bishops of Mombassa and Uganda would be to destroy the cherished doctrine of the apostolic succession. This the High Church wing is not disposed to admit, while the Low Church wing is rallying to the support of these broad-minded and big-souled bishops who make no distinction between those having the spirit of Christ."

The whole matter, it is reported, has been turned over to a commission to be thrashed out, and it is needless to say much curiosity is noted regarding the coming decision concerning this "much ado about nothing."

Some Revelations of the 1914 Report.

The recently published report of the status of the churches prepared by Rev. H. K. Carroll has aroused keen interest. The following are some of the deductions made from the facts and figures of Dr. Carroll:

The gain in the erection of churches has been extraordinary, averaging six new churches a day throughout the year.

There was a gain in the last year in the membership of the thirty-six denominational bodies which compose the federal council of nearly 2 per cent.

The exact gain of all the denominations was 1.8 per cent. If certain very small bodies which lost members are excluded and only denominations carrying on active work are counted the gain is a slight fraction less than 2 per cent.

The gain in numbers, if all bodies are counted, is 618,000; if the smaller bodies which lost members are counted out the gain is 655,000.

The following are the largest religious bodies in the United States:

Roman Catholic	13,099,534
Methodists	7,125,069
Baptists	5,924,662
Lutheran	2,338,722
Presbyterian	2,027,593
Disciples of Christ	1,519,369
Protestant Episcopal	997,407
Congregational	748,349

These eight bodies contain 34,000,000 of the 37,280,000 of actual members of churches within the United States.

The Methodists made the largest increase, 220,000. The Roman Catholics had the next largest increase, 212,500. The Baptist growth was 64,000, the Presbyterian 45,600, the Lutheran 36,000, the Disciples of Christ 21,800, and the Protestant Episcopal 16,500.

The Roman Catholic figures follow the government census plan of deducting 15 per cent from official Roman Catholic population for children not confirmed, thus representing the actual membership on the same basis as other denominations have their membership represented. The year 1913 has been in all respects one of the best years the churches in the United States ever had. It showed a considerably larger gain than did the year 1912.

James Bryce Discusses Bible Study.

James Bryce, democratically speaking, or Viscount Bryce, as King George of England decrees, had somewhat to say concerning Bible study, at a recent educational conference in London. He dwelt upon general educational conditions in Great Britain, and spoke of the importance of moral and religious training in schools. He put special emphasis on the value of knowledge of the Bible. "It is with great regret that one sees in these days that knowledge of the Bible seems declining in all classes of the community. I was struck with the same thing in the United States. Looking at it from only the educational side, the loss of a knowledge of the Bible and of all that the Bible means would be incalculable to the life of the country. It would be a great misfortune to the country if generations of children grew up who did not know their Bible."

Lord Bryce held that training given on the continent and in the United States is better adapted to present social and commercial conditions than that of England.

Newspapers and Religious News.

A recent Saturday number of the Baltimore Sun devoted four pages to religious matters. These pages contained a survey of the current activities of the religious world in general, a collection of interviews obtained from Baltimore ministers on various matters of interest to the social and religious life of the city and a half-page Christian message with a large reproduction of Lerolle's famous painting of the Nativity. The New York Evening Post, the Boston Evening Transcript, the Chicago Inter-Ocean, and the Springfield Republican publish weekly pages of the nation-wide work of the churches. The Chicago Tribune, which calls itself "The World's Greatest Newspaper," just last week began the publication of a special religious news page, with announcements of church services. If the newspapers really do report the pulse of the people, there is surely reason for optimism.

Here and There in the Religious Field

Portable Churches for Evangelism.

Kansas City Presbyterians are to use portable churches in developing new fields. When larger churches are needed, these portable structures will be taken down and moved to other localities. These movable structures have been used with success in China and other missionary fields.

Religious Paper for Bohemians.

An important meeting was held by the leaders of Protestant Churches in Chicago last week, at which time representatives of five Protestant Bohemian Churches within the city were present and pledged their support to the efforts to create a union Protestant paper for the Bohemians in America.

Unity in Canada.

The Church Union Committee of the Presbyterian Church of Canada, at a recent meeting, voted by an overwhelming majority to proceed with the proposal for the union of the Presbyterian, Methodist and Congregational churches in Canada.

Doctor Chapman Ill.

Messages from Scotland report that Doctor Chapman has suffered another attack of angina pectoris such as interrupted his preaching at the height of his Australian campaign two years ago. He was obliged by this misfortune to suspend preaching for several days just at the outset of his mission in Edinburgh.

Cincinnati Christian Women Unite.

One of the most successful union missionary efforts by the women of any city of the country is that which has marked the activity of the women of Cincinnati recently. Representatives of fifteen churches—every Protestant denomination in the city—are included in the women's foreign missionary union.

New Christian Endeavor Campaign.

A movement has been started in the Christian Endeavor Societies to encourage young people to form a definite purpose to enter active Chirstian service. The field of that service is not limited and may include the mission field, the ministry or any other organized Christian service. It is hoped that an organization as virile and praiseworthy as the Student Volunteers may gradually develop within the ranks of Christian Endeavor.

Largest Y. M. C. A.

The largest Young Men's Christian Association in the world is said to be the West Side Young Men's Christian Association at Eighth Ave. and Fifty-seventh street, New York City. Its present membership is 6,245 and the general attendance for the past year reached a total of 750,567.

Of Human Interest

A Child's Memories of Lincoln.

One of the clearest recollections of my childhood is of a tall man who sat two seats in front of our family pew in the old First Presbyterian Church of Springfield, Ill., recalls a writer in The Continent; a man with a sad face, but whose eyes could light up with a merry twinkle.

His black frock coat never seemed exactly new and had a queer habit of drawing up in the middle of the back, looking as if it were made for someone else. Mrs. Lincoln, on the contrary, was exquisitely gowned. "Ashes of roses" was a fashionable color of those days and I can remember her coming to church in a silk dress of that shade, whose satin bayadere stripes spread in rich folds over a voluminous hoopskirt. Perhaps I had better explain that a bayadere stripe was one that ran across the width of the silk and had to be matched quite carefully in the cutting of the skirt, or the result was disastrous. But Mrs. Lincoln's was correctly made and I heard it whispered that she was extravagant enough to go to St. Louis for it, instead of letting Miss Van Norstrand, the home dressmaker, "put the scissors in it." This toilet was completed by a black lace shawl, pinned on each shoulder by small gold pins. Mrs. Lincoln's smoothly brushed hair was crowned by a white bonnet set off with white plumes. A point lace collar and white kid gloves completed a costume which stirred my childish admiration.

Children always went to church in those days, so I had abundant leisure to observe my interesting neighbors, and they were interesting. It is not given to every little girl to sit behind the President-elect of the United States and I heartily appreciated my position. That I had always set behind the Lincolns in no way disturbed the novelty, for the President Lincolns differed widely from the everyday Lincolns I had always known.

I remember one Sunday that President and Mrs. Lincoln came into church with some strangers. They were rather late and created quite a stir, which had scarcely subsided when a small figure crept furtively in and seated itself close by the President's side. At the first glance toward the lad (it was "Tad") Mrs. Lincoln grew crimson with mortification, for Master Tad's toilet showed hasty preparation and lack of maternal supervision. All this, however, mattered not to the indulgent father. He drew the child close to his side, and there in a short time Tad was happily asleep.

Mayor Mitchel Discusses Silence Policy.

Apropos of his policy of silence, Mayor Mitchel of New York said at a dinner:

"In silence there is safety. They who want opinions often get opinions they don't want. Take the young planter's case.

"A young Mississippi planter had a servant, Uncle Jeff, who had cared for him as a child and who was very devoted to him. The young man became engaged to a neighboring beauty, who was credited with a very bad temper. Noticing that Uncle Jeff never mentioned his approaching marriage, the young planter said one day:

"'Jeff, you know I'm going to marry Miss Lamar?'

"'Yes,' was the reply, 'I knows it.'

"'I haven't heard you say anything about it,' persisted the planter.

"'No,' Jeff acknowledged. 'Tain't for me to say nuthin' about it. I isn't got nuffin' to say.'

"'But what's your opinion about it?'

"'Well, massa,' said Jeff with some hesitation, 'you knows one thing—the most pisenest snakes has got the most prettiest skins.'"

Secretary Bryan on Optimism.

Secretary Bryan is an incurable optimist, and he put down a pessimist superbly at a recent diplomatic dinner, records the Chicago Record Herald.

The pessimist, after pointing out that food had gone up two-thirds in price since '99, that leather was 10 per cent adulteration, and that all the good writers and actors were dead and gone—the pessimist, after this tirade, groaned dismally and said:

"Is life worth living?"

Thereupon Mr. Bryan's eye beamed with optimism, and with an optimist's indomitable smile he cried heartily:

"Life is worth living—better than you live it."

Orville Wright on "The Future."

A Chicago physician was congratulating Orville Wright on his new aeroplane stabilizer.

"I'm taking a lot of work from you doctors, I am afraid," said Mr. Wright, with a mischievous smile. "I feel sorry for the young Dayton medical student I heard about the other day.

"Two medical students were discussing their prospects in the profession, when one of them said:

"'To succeed in medicine it is necessary to specialize.'

"'Decidedly,' agreed the other. 'What specialty are you going to choose?'

"'I'm going to specialize in aeroplane accidents—there'll be a great future there.'"

Carter Glass Defines Obstinate Man.

Representative Carter Glass, the promoter of the new currency bill, was talking about a man who had wrong-headed ideas on finance.

"I argued with him for two hours," said Representative Glass. "I laid all the facts before him. But it was no use. He was obstinate, hopelessly obstinate."

Mr. Glass frowned and shook his head. Then he ended:

"An obstinate man, you know, does not hold opinions—they hold him."

President Wilson Notes Improvement.

President Wilson, at a dinner in Washington, said of commercial honesty:

"Commercial honesty is improving. When a man lies to you and cheats you, it no longer excuses him to say, 'caveat emptor' (it's business) and shrug and smile.

"In fact," the President ended, "things have now so much improved that if some multimillionaires were to lose their fortunes the same way they gained them, they'd insist on somebody going to jail."

Judge Lindsey Discusses Divorce.

In a discussion of the divorce evil Judge Ben B. Lindsey, during his New York honeymoon, told this story of an unhappy marriage:

"Over their tea at the window of a Fifth avenue restaurant one woman said to another:

"'There goes Jim's wife. She's never at peace when Jim is out of her sight.'

"'Dear me!' said the second woman. 'Is it because she loves him so?'

"'No; it's because she knows him so!'"

Governor Glynn on Resolutions.

Governor Glynn, at a dinner in Albany, said of a reformed grafter:

"He is always reforming. He is always turning over a new leaf. Then he slips back again.

"In a word," the governor ended, "he is one of those professional New Year resoluters of whom it has been well said:

"'The man with the largest experience in resolution making turns out the poorest quality of resolutions.'"

The World is Growing Better

Iron Masters in Social Service.

The Sunday-school Times has given publicity to the effort which the Huston brothers, Charles L. and Abram F., are making through their business—The Lukens Iron and Steel Company of Coatesville, Pa.—for the religious and economic restoration of "down-and-outs" gathered from the streets of Philadelphia. The men are gathered up in Philadelphia by the Inasmuch and Galilee rescue missions. They are taken in charge in Coatesville by Alfred S. Jackson, an enthusiastic Christian worker who serves as chief of police for the Lukens plant. The men, on coming to Coatesville, are taken care of until they can secure boarding houses for themselves in the old Lukens mansion, which is fitted up not alone with comfortable dormitories, but with a cheerful parlor and reading room Mr. and Mrs. Charles L. Huston frequently hold meetings with the men in this parlor, and every effort is made to confirm them in the Christian life. In all, 800 men have been reclaimed by this method.

Growth of Universities.

The decade of 1903-1913 has been a decade of growth and progress for our colleges and universities. They are doing more and better work than ever before; they are becoming more democratic and more efficient and vital.

During the ten years the attendance at the leading universities increased 68 per cent—more than three times as fast as the population. New courses have been provided to meet the conditions and requirements of the time. Research work has been extended and improved. Summer, evening and correspondence courses have been introduced. Some colleges have "peopleized" themselves to a remarkable degree and are educating thousands who long since passed the "school population" stage.

Some universities have passed others in the race, owing to geographical and financial conditions, but all have advanced. Here is a table showing how the leading universities now rank as regards attendance:

Columbia	9,929
California	7,071
Chicago	6,834
Michigan	6,008
Pennsylvania	5,968
Wisconsin	5,890
Harvard	5,627
Cornell	5,612
New York	5,508
Illinois	5,259

More About Professor Jefferson's Death.

Further information concerning the details of the passing of S. M. Jefferson has come in.

"Prof. Jefferson was apparently in his usual health and spirits when at the conclusion of his lecture, about 11:30 o'clock, he left the Bible College to go to his home for luncheon. He had walked several blocks when he suddenly began to feel weak and ill, and asked a negro nearby to assist him to a neighboring grocery. Prof. Jefferson noticed Dr. J. C. Carrick passing in his buggy, and calling to him that he was ill, asked that he stop and give him medical attention. Dr. Carrick at once alighted and helped the sick man into the grocery, where Prof. Jefferson became very ill and leaned upon the counter, complaining of an acute pain in the region of his heart. He remarked to Dr. Carrick that it was the worst attack he had ever experienced. Realizing that Prof. Jefferson was in a very serious condition Dr. Carrick removed the patient's coat and gave him a hypodermic injection in the hope of giving at least temporary relief until he could be removed to his home. However, Prof. Jefferson did not rally and he was placed on a pallet which had been made on the floor of the grocery. Dr. Carrick worked heroically to arrest the progress of the ailment, but despite all efforts Prof. Jefferson grew rapidly weaker and expired before any members of his family could arrive. The body was removed to his home. Besides his wife, Mrs. Annie W. Jefferson, Prof. Jefferson is survived by three daughters, two brothers and two sisters. The daughters are Miss Louise Jefferson, a well-known teacher in the Lexington city schools; Miss Ruth Jefferson, of Brooklyn, N. Y., who is connected with the schools of that city, and Mrs. J. O. Donaldson, of Aberdeen, Miss. His surviving brothers are James W. Jefferson, of Springfield, Ill., and Thomas Jefferson, of Logansport, Ind. The sisters surviving are Miss Mary A. Jefferson, of Lafayette, Ind., and Mrs. Elizabeth Fairman."

Eldred Boys Find a Home.

The death of missionaries on the foreign field is not an unusual occurrence, though it always brings sadness to the home churches. When, however, death is the result of accident, as in the case of Ray Eldred who lost his life in swimming a swollen stream, the element of tragedy is added and the pathos of the situation is deepened. But perhaps no fact in our recent missionary experience has so touched the heart of the brotherhood as the orphaning of those three Eldred boys, Ray, Ward and Joe, by the death of their mother last year and the sudden and tragic taking off of their father in the heart of Africa. There was a certain satisfaction in knowing that these lads of seven, eight and nine years were well cared for in the Missionary Home at Hiram, but there has been a tug at the emotions of every one who contemplated their bereavement. Now, however, there comes the singularly cheering and satisfying news that all three of the boys have been adopted by Dr. and Mrs. Hugh T. Morrison of Springfield, Ill. No one who has ever enjoyed the hospitality of Logan Place, a fine old house set in a spacious lot on the edge of the capital city, could for a moment question the extremely happy solution of the life problem of these children. The very act of adopting three boys illustrates more eloquently than words could describe the large heartedness of Dr. Morrison and his wife, Mary Coleman Morrison, who are among the most devoted members of the Springfield Church, and hold an important place in the regard of all the citizens of that city. To have these boys grow up under the influence of that home will be a satisfaction to every Disciple. It is a unique act of self-dedication to a noble task that is thus performed by these earnest friends of every good work among us. Congratulations are certainly due to the boys themselves, and to all those who hold them in tender love for the sake of their father and mother, who from the dark continent of need and opportunity have entered into the life that is life indeed.—H. H. E. Stafford, Continues Unity Campaign.

Two weeks ago was reported the campaign being caried on in Massillon, O., by H. E. Stafford, of the Christian Church of that city, in behalf of Christian Unity. Mr. Stafford invited to his pulpit the other ministers of the city, to tell why they held to their several beliefs. Mr. Stafford then followed in a sermon on unity, from which we quote: "That all may be united in one great, glorious body to attack the ramparts of sin, I am willing to give up anything that will not be detrimental to character or detract from salvation there and hereafter," said he. "If there is anything in Prof. Charles M. Sharpe, Ph. D., who has led in the raising of $50,000 additional endowment for the Disciples Divinity House of the University of Chicago.

the name 'Christian,' 'Disciple,' 'Christian Church,' 'Church of Christ, or God,' that is wrong I'll give it up. If there is anything wrong in my creed I'll give it up. We have no written creed save the Bible, and only one article of that we make binding on men—'I believe that Jesus is the Christ the son of the Living God.' If all the churches of Massillon can get together and baptism is the only hindrance, I'll let each man who will study earnestly God's word, take his choice of the manner in which it will be performed. I'll give up 'my kind' of baptism. 'But you ask me, 'Will you give up your pulpit and congregation?' During my ministry I have never been with a congregation I love more dearly, never worked with ministers and other religious peoples where I had as sweet fellowship, never felt so much at home in a city as I do in Massillon, but I would want to be the first to say, were a union of the churches consummated and fewer ministers needed, "you take charge of the First Christian Church and I'll go to the needy fields of the West, where there are hundreds of churches without ministers."

Ft. Worth Pastor Calls Religion Cure.

L. D. Anderson, pastor at First Church, Ft. Worth, Tex., held in a recent sermon that religion is the means to make "unprofitable men profitable." "The unprofitable man, the man who produces nothing, can be made profitable," he declared. "The indolent, criminal classes, the impediments of civilization, constitute the gravest problem of society. Education, laws, environment and companions cannot solve the problem. The religion of Christ offers the only solution. Men have suggested many remedies. Some have claimed that education is the chief need. Others have insisted that the remedy lies in proper laws. Others still have argued that the cause lies in environment, and the remedy consists of improving the surroundings, companions. Probably no one will deny that each of these involves an important factor in life. All are needed to secure the best results. Yet neither, nor all combined, can of themselves produce the desired results. Christ's answer differs from those of men. He points to religion as offering the remedy. Fortunately nineteen centuries bear testimony to the effectiveness of our Lord's method. It was no little thing that the gospel proclaimed by an imprisoned apostle changed a fugitive slave into a faithful servant who voluntarily journeyed 1,000 miles to resume the duties of servitude. It is a marvelous tribute to the power of the gospel that it rescued multitudes from the depths of paganism and made them to be worthy and profitable servants of God."

Los Angeles Churches' Building Plan.

A mass meeting was held by the Christian churches of Los Angeles, Feb. 15, in the First Church of that city in the interests of the campaign of the joint board of churches, composed of the official boards of the various churches, in securing a building fund of $120,000 to erect six neighborhood churches to cost $20,000 each. The sum of $50,000 will be raised this year toward this project. Already $14,200 has been pledged, $5,000 the gift of W. F. Holt, of Redlands and a like sum by George H. Waters of Pomona, while E. N. Thomas of Los Angeles has pledged $1,000.

Playground Activities in Chicago.

The recognition of the value of neighborhood houses and playgrounds has reached an admirable stage of development in the larger cities. Mr. Clarence Rainwater, a graduate of Drake University and the University of Chicago, is the superintendent of Hamilton Park, one of these interesting social centers in this city. This Park consists of a considerable space of open ground in one of the congested districts of Chicago. A well equipped building with audience room, officers and refectory occupies the center. Near it there is a bathing pool and in-door and out-door gymnasiums. Here all sorts of wholesome physical and intellectual recreations minister to the life of the community. Mr. Rainwater reports a recent addition to the plans in the activities of the civic music association, whose business it is to promote and encourage the understanding, appreciation and study of the art, movement and development of music throughout the community, principally by providing entertainment or instruction either free or at little expense in the small parks and playground of the city. New Endowment for Disciples Divinity House

Trustees of the Disciples Divinity House are glad to announce that there has just been completed the raising of a new fund of $50,000 for additional endowment. This added to the endowment fund of $30,000, raised a few years ago, makes our present endowment fund $80,000. The Divinity House also owns a splendid lot in the immediate vicinity of the University of Chicago, worth more than $30,000, making the present holdings of the house $110,000. The further needs and plans of the institution include endowment funds and buildings up to at least half a million dollars.

musical and philanthropic organizations in the city are co-operating in this work, and several of the best choirs, orchestras and musical clubs are furnishing their services. The concerts thus rendered at Hamilton and other parks are an admirable stimulus to the social and artistic life of the local communities.

Dr. Ainslie's Brother Passes Away.

The report has just come in of the death of Charles H. Ainslie, brother of Dr. Peter Ainslie, at the old family home in Virginia, where he has been living for several years, though his home was in Washington, D. C. On the day of his death Dr. Ainslie reached Baltimore, on his return from his trip abroad. Of the family Dr. Ainslie alone survives. The deceased was 60 years of age. The burial took place in Virginia. The Christian Century tenders to Dr. Ainslie its sincere sympathy in this time of bereavement.

New Building for Juliette Fowler Home.

Plans are being made for the erection in Ft. Worth, Tex., of a modern brick building at a probable cost of $40,000 for the housing of the orphan children of the Juliette Fowler Home, conducted under the direction of the National Benevolent Association. The new building will probably be started in April. It will be located about 200 feet south of the Sarah Harwood Hall, which is also the property of the Christian Church. The new building will care for 100 children. There are now forty-four children in the home at the home on the Fort Worth Interurban. There will be modern improvements throughout the building. The structure will be of brick, two stories high with high basement, about 165 by 50 feet.

Beaver Falls, Pa., Reports.

Beaver Falls, Pa., church reports $4,775.75 raised last year, a membership of 350. A recent evangelistic series, conducted by E. N. Duty, of Charleroi, Pa., closed with twenty accessions to the church. Edward Daugherty led in song.

Governor Major as Church Boomer.

Being told that he is directly responsible for the increased attendance at the Christian Church of Wyaconda, Mo., on account of the success of the good roads propaganda in that county, Governor Major was asked by Mrs. James N. Suter, a member of that congregation, for a donation to help enlarge the church building. Gov. Major responded to the request by forwarding a generous check to Mrs. Suter. Incidentally he remarked in mailing the check that the request was the finest compliment that has been paid to his road building efforts.

Oklahoma Churches Unite.

An organization of a ministerial association composed of the ministers of the Christian churches of Oklahoma City, Norman, Edmond, Britton, El Reno, Chickasha, Guthrie, Geary and Shawnee was perfected at a meeting of ministers from these churches held in Oklahoma City two weeks ago. H. E. Vanhorn, pastor of First Church, Oklahoma City, was elected chairman. The association will meet on the second Monday in every month in Oklahoma City for a discussion of affairs.

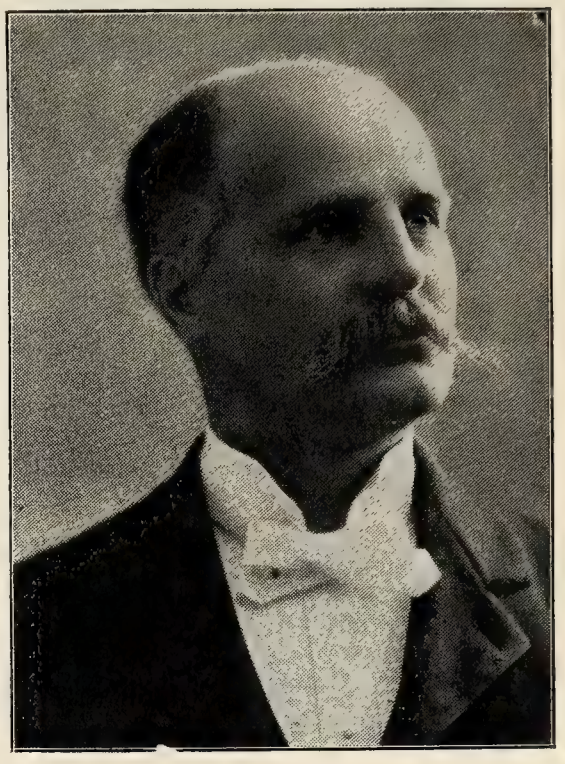
Richmond, Ind., Pastor on Amusements.

L. E. Murray, minister of Central Church, Richmond, Indiana, proposes for this church a choir of 60 members, and declares that no one can be a member of the choir who indulges in dancing and card-playing. In taking this stand, the minister declares he is not attacking these forms of amusement, but because active church work in any department would not permit one to indulge either in dancing or card-playing. Mr. Murray believes that these amusements, at the present time, are taking up so much of people's leisure that the remnant left for religion is too small to answer the purpose. This is an age of pleasure. It is largely devoted to the business of tickling the nerves and there is not enough left to minister to the spirit.

An Illustration in Evangelism

BY W. BAYARD CRAIG.

From latest statistics it seems we are not now making the large percentage of growth that gave us the lead among the hosts in preceding years. We seem to be suffering a reaction from the "big" meetings with their thousands of additions. Such a reaction was to be expected. When a protracted meeting brings in all the prospects immediately in sight—friends and hearers who already know the church and are favorably inclined, enough has been done for the time. New members already acquainted with the church, its pastor, and its methods can be easily made to feel at home and settle down into a reliable membership. But when the meeting goes on under abnormal conditions bringing in hundreds who are entire strangers to the church and its ways, it is inevitable, that when the meeting closes, with its crowds, its music, its continuous services, its high keyed intensity, and extravagant type of preaching, many converts will not survive the change to normal conditions. Such a meeting is followed by a depressing reaction and thus prejudice against protracted meetings develops.



Rev. W. B. Craig.

We have put too high a premium on numbers gained in a meeting. We developed evangelists and evangelistic machinery that brought in converts faster than our churches could care for them successfully. The large infant mortality among the 'babes in Christ' scared us and has greatly limited the demand for the great evangelists and big meetings.

The remedy is not to cease protracted meetings and enthusiastic efforts to win converts. The remedy is to keep the number of converts and the ability to care for them in something like reasonable balance. We must place more emphasis on the spiritual uplift and improved efficiency of the church that holds the meeting and less on the number of converts gained. A new type of preacher-teacher evangelist is springing up to meet this need. By way of illustration, here in Redlands we had a hard time getting the consent of the officers to undertake a protracted meeting. A former ambitious attempt in a big tent ended disastrously. They finally consented to invite Dr. Bruce Brown. He proved the possessor of a unique ability to make the simple, unquestionable, essential truth of the gospel so winsome, so interesting, so instructive, so captivating that there was no need of anything eccentric, queer, or shocking to attract and hold the people. His sermons were big, carefully constructed, and full of sound, well-balanced instruction, but presented so eloquently, illumined with apt illustrations or artistic charts, that even the children listened open eyed to the close.

Every one was helped by the meeting. Every one rejoices in the meeting and the pastors' work will be easier and more fruitful. There were only sixty-two accessions, forty confessions, but we consider it a wonderful meeting. It is for us in Redlands. We consider the results so valuable that we are asking a place for this story as an indication that the churches are ready again to make an evangelistic campaign all along the line, with the thought of building up the Christian life in the hearts of believers, old and new, rather than a more spectacular result in noise and numbers. If we find the normal thing to do in evangelistic efforts we will grow as rapidly as ever and escape reactions.

Prof. S. M. Jefferson--an Appreciation

BY ELLIS B. BARNES.

The sudden and unexpected death of Professor Jefferson has brought sorrow to the hearts of all who knew him, and particularly to those of us who knew him intimately, and who have followed with unabated interest his work in the college of the Bible.

Professor Jefferson was a man of large sympathies and wide tolerance. He was a Disciple after the mould of Isaac Errett. Those who heard his address upon that distinguished leader at the Pittsburg convention will not forget the high and genuine praise bestowed, nor the rare discriminations which only a scholar of Professor Jefferson's sympathies could make. A man of prominence was heard to remark at the close of the convention that Professor Jefferson's address was among the greatest delivered at that gathering.

The incident interprets the man. He was really a survival of the catholic days of the movement, though just entering into the sixties. When influences that would have made us forget the breadth of the movement were dragging many in their train he stood aloof, and offered his manly protests. While his name has not been in the prints in late years everyone knew exactly where he stood, and his candor and his firmness were alike worthy of emulation. He was a Disciple to whom we all looked for the preservation of the most worthy ideals of our history. He had no pleasure in the strife of those who looked upon all innovations as departures from the faith. He was willing to prove all things and to hold fast the good.

He was a valued teacher and his place will be difficult to fill. His class room work was always conscientious, and the young men who sat under his instruction were led to believe in his worth more and more. To that work the latter days of his life were wholly given up. He had learned how to combine the best in the old and the new beliefs, and stood for positive truth, and the liberty to find pearls in many seas. That spirit was imparted to his students, and we may look for beneficent results from his ministry as a teacher of youth in days to come.

He was a teacher in the pulpit, and wherever his ministry has been, he is thus remembered. His utterances were always weighty, and often touched with tender pathos. The happy combination of heart and intellect opened to him the lives of his congregation. He was a friend and a brother beloved to hundreds in the wide circles of the several activities of his life.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

A splendid County Conference was recently held at Arcadia, Ind., near Noblesville, under the supervision of G. I. Hoover. the efficient district evangelist. All the state officers were present. These new County Conferences, which are being held will be consummated in "Diamond" Jubilee state convention at Terre Haute, May 11-15. It will be Indiana's historic seventy-fifth anniversary. One thousand delegates are expected. L. C. Howe is President.

The West Boulevard Church, Cleveland, observed Men's Day with pleasure and profit. The Franklin Circle Church had a magnificent men's program, of their own making. Hundreds of churches throughout the country gave the laymen an opportunity to tell what they were doing, or what they hoped to do for the kingdom of God in the future.

Mrs. Katherine Oliver McCoy, reader, who several weeks ago gave at Memorial Church of Christ, Chicago, her reading of "Tomorrow," by Percy Mackaye, read again at this church on Sunday evening, March 1. "Dr. Luke of Labrador," one of the thrilling stories connected wth Dr. Grenfell's career on the Labrador Coast was the subject of the last reading.

Mrs. B. W. Johnson, mother of Mrs. Haggard of Des Moines, and of Mrs T. W. Grafton, of Indianapolis, is seriously ill as these lines are written and her children have gone to her bedside at Oskaloosa, Iowa. Mrs. Johnson is the widow of B. W. Johnson, a great preacher in his day, and at one time editor of the Christian Evangelist.

The church at Uniontown, Ind., the oldest in Northern Indiana, has just concluded a meeting with fine results. Richard S. Martin, was the evangelist. This church has had, among its ministers, J. V. Updike, L. L. Carpenter and Noah Walker. The church has two elders who have served it for fifty years.

Roanoke Church, Kansas City, has $5,000 debt on the building, which they hope to wipe out this year by a plan of Life Insurance, which holds great promise: The pastor writes the policies and the agent's commission goes into the building fund of the church.

B. S. Ferrall, pastor of the Jefferson Street Church, Buffalo, N. Y., says: "The past twelve months have been the most fruitful of my more than ten years pastorate here. More people are assuming definite Christian service than ever before."

G. J. Chapman, for more than three years pastor of the First Church, Joplin, Mo., has temporarily entered the evangelistic field and began a meeting in Marshall, Texas, February 22. His permanent address is Joplin, Mo.

M. M. Nelson, pastor at Highland Christian Church, Denver, Colo., reports that the Ladies' Aid there secured 34 new members one day last week. A $10,000 addition to the church building is planned for this year.

E. L. Powell, pastor of the Louisville, First Church and Mrs. Anna R. Atwater, National President of the C. W. B. M., were speakers at the annual dinner of the women's federation in Chicago during February.

The Brotherhood at Carthage, Mo., has adopted a ritual and studies prepared by J. O. Boyd, of Keokuk, Iowa. Copies may be obtained of the National Brotherhood Movement at Kansas City.

P. C. Macfarlane, once General Secretary of the Brotherhood Movement was one of the speakers in his home church in New York City, on Men's Day, Sunday, February 22.

The churches of Fairbury, Nebraska, are planning a "clean up" on the liquor proposition, in which J. K. Shellenberger, formerly of the Brotherhood, is a leading factor.

HIRAM COLLEGE NOTES.

Hiram won first place again in the Ohio inter-collegiate oratorical contest at Wooster. The winner is Robert W. Peden, of Youngstown. Mr. Peden's theme was "An International Illusion." His oration was a powerful arraignment of war and plea for peace. In the last dozen years Hiram has won first place four times and second place four or five and has never fallen below middle rank.

The canvass for the Almeda A. Booth Memorial chair which has been going on quietly for eighteen months is nearly completed. Over $45,000 of the $50,000 required has been pledged and it is expected to secure the balance before April first. Miss Booth was first a student and then, for fifteen years, a teacher at Hiram in the "Eclectic" period of the institution. Both as pupil and teacher she was an associate and worthy yokefellow of Garfield who regarded her as the peer of any women teacher in America.

The college has recently called C. O. Reynard of Toronto, Canada, as field secretary. Mr. Reynard is a Belmont county boy and since his graduation in '05 has been giving admirable account of himself with the Second Church of Warren, O., and at Cecil St. Church, Toronto. We commend him to the entire confidence of the brotherhood.

The Disciples' Club has grown in interest and practical value with every week during the year. Such topics as these have been discussed: Thomas Campbell and the Washington Address; Barton W. Stone and the Last Will and Testament of the Springfield Presbytery; Alexander Campbell, and his Sermon on the Law, his Debates and the "Christian Baptist;" Isaac Errett and his Tract on "Our Position;" The Baptism Question; The Mahoning Baptist Association and the Reformation; and The Work of the Fathers of the Reformation. Dean Vernon Stauffer is president of the club and has given several addresses. Others assisting either in the discussions or by addresses have been President Bates, O. G. Hertzog, Morton D. Adams, S. H. Bartlett, and Professors Wakefield, Peckman, Dean and Snoddy and J. E. Pounds. While the interest has been remarkably sustained through the whole year, it will not, I am sure, be thought invidious to speak especially of Professor Snoddy's four addresses on The Fathers and their Work. He discussed their work in the light of: (1) Their Purpose; (2) Their Appeal to the Scriptures; (3) The Restoration Ideas and, (4) Their evangelism. Professor Snoddy's high appreciation of the Fathers and his philosophical grasp of their plea gave to his addresses a very rare value. He deserves to be much more widely known to the brotherhood.

UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO NOTES.

The presence of Dr. E. L. Powell of Louisville at the University as preacher for two Sundays, gave many of the students an opportunity of renewing acquaintance with the celebrated Louisville preacher. His sermons on the Sunday mornings produced a deep impression. No more acceptable service than his has been enjoyed at the University during the year.

On one of the days of Dr. Powell's visit there was a luncheon gathering of the members of the Disciples Divinity House at which he was present. There were about twenty in attendance. Dr. Powell gave a very inspiring talk at the conclusion of the meeting.

Mr. Hamilton, who is finishing his work in the department of philosophy, who occupied that chair at Bethany College during the absence of Prof. Johnson in Europe, and who has proved himself a most valuable member of the Disciples group at the university of Chicago has been appointed to the chair of philosophy at the Nanking University. Pres. Bowen, who is in this country, has expressed great satisfaction at the prospect of having Mr. Hamilton associated with the faculty of that rapidly growing institution. It will add to the Disciples contribution already made to the work of unity in education in China.

Dr. John R. Mott addressed the members of the university in Mandel Hall on Thursday afternoon of last week. He gave his time to the description of the new Christian opportunities offered by changing sentiment among the student populations of Russia, Turkey and China. It is expected that Mr. Sherwood Eddy, closely associated with Dr. Mott in the work of the Student World Federation, will spend some days at the university in the near future in the conduct of a missionary institute and lectureship.

LATEST NEWS FROM NANKING, CHINA.

We as a community and the Medical College in particular are happy to welcome Dr. and Mrs. Butchart and their four children as residents of Nanking. Dr. Butchart comes to take up his work of teaching in the Medical department of the university. For both Dr. and Mrs. Butchart this is in a way a home-coming, as both were formerly residents of Nanking. They are at home at the Frank Garrett house.

Dr. and Mrs. Macklin celebrated their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary recently with a very pleasant reception to their old friends and neighbors. The house decorations were of evergreen and heavenly-bamboo and silver hearts. The refreshments, which were dainty and tasteful, included the bride's cake. A very interesting feature was the display of the photographs of the bride and groom 25 years ago, together with those of their oldest son and his fiancee. There was a short program of felicitous speeches and music. We all join heartily in wishing the doctor and his wife as many more years of life and work together with us.

Mr. Albert Pontius has been appointed American consul in Nanking. He has been here before and comes back to his many friends and acquaintances bringing his wife and son with him.

Mr. E. T. Williams has made a very acceptable Charge de Affairs in the U. S. legation in Peking for nearly a year now, and goes to Washington, D. C., as chief of the Bureau of Far Eastern Affairs.

Last week was commencement week here. This follows the old custom of closing the year with Chinese New Year's. While the Chinese New Years has been officially done away with, still the common people will continue to observe it for years to come. So we have to fall more or less in line whether we wish to or not. Our Union Nurses' Training School graduated a class of six young women. Some of these nurses have already proved to be very useful in the homes of foreigners. These young women are prepared to assist in either Chinese or foreign homes or hospitals.

Last Wednesday a class of twenty young evangelists was sent out from the Union Theological Seminary here. We are very glad to have as large a class as this to go out with the message of the gospel, but they are almost like a drop in the ocean as far as supplying the present needs is concerned. One of these men only belongs to the Christian Mission and goes to work in the Luchowfu district.

The Medical Department of the university graduated its first class on Thursday afternoon. Ten young men go out with western ideas and methods and a good deal of Christian training. All of them are Christians and we trust they will follow altruistic rather than selfish ideals in their work. It is an exceedingly great temptation to a young doctor in this country to use his western knowledge simply to make money for himself.

The medical faculty is now a strong one and its number will be increased almost every year.

Union evangelistic meetings are in progress and are drawing large crowds. All the churches and missionaries work together and good results come from these meetings which are held annually at Chinese New Years. CHAS. S. SETTLEMEYER.

ONLY A START.

The first Sunday in March is only a starting period for the annual offering for Foreign Missions. The offering begun last Sunday ought to be followed up in each church next Sunday. Some could not be present for various reasons last Lord's day. They should be seen at once. An earnest effort should be made to secure a gift from every member.

Some churches could not call for the offering the first Sunday in March for good and sufficient reasons. These churches will, no doubt, step into line next Lord's day. This is the time for loyal, faithful attention to this offering, lest it goes by default.

If the matter does not receive attention during March there is serious fear that the church will not take the subject up later. We are sure the friends will not permit the missionaries to pass out of their minds. There is too much involved. They have plans for increased usefulness. Continuation and efficiency of a staff of workers depend upon the response of the churches. The program of the missionaries is business-like and daring. We must help them to carry it out.

The importance of the whole work cannot be overlooked. We have laid foundations in many communities. We must go on with the structure. The obligations we have assumed must not be ignored. This is no time to run away. It is time for prayer and faithfulness. It is time to dare and do. It is no time for white feathers; we must beat no retreat. Onward! is our slogan. Let us shout good cheer to every missionary on the firing line.

Please forward the offering promptly, and a proper receipt will at once be returned.

Frank L. Bowen has been City Evangelist of Kansas City for 17 years. He has recently been called back to the pastorate of the Jackson Avenue Church, where he labored for 13 of these 17 years, bringing the church out from a storeroom mission to a congregation of no mean proportions and abilities. Mr. Bowen will accept the call, but will continue to superintend the work of City evangelization.

A GREAT AND POPULAR CHURCH MUSIC BOOK

The New Praise Hymnal

EDITED BY GILBERT J. ELLIS AND J. H. FILLMORE

There is no equipment of the church more vitally related to its spiritual development and growth than the kind of hymnal it uses. In other words, a church makes no better investment than the purchase of a good hymnal. It is a serious mistake to buy an ordinary gospel song book for use on the Lord's Day and the Wednesday evening prayer services. Such books cheapen the worship.

The New Praise Hymnal comes as near being the ideal church hymnal for the present day as could well be conceived. It is a handsome book, dignified in appearance and make-up. It embraces in its contents as nearly everything demanded to-day as could be gotten into a book of 600 pages.

The New Praise Hymnal is practical in every way; everything in it is available for use in the average congregation. It contains also what is used by the most advanced churches.

The setting of the hymns and music is engaging to the eye and pleasant to read and sing.

It is a book that grows in favor as it is used. New beauties are discovered from time to time as its pages are tested by use. The hymns and tunes of the church universal are found in The New Praise Hymnal, also the best available Gospel Songs that the modern church has found to be necessary to its various activities.

The New Praise Hymnal is widely used in our churches. We believe it to be the favorite book of the church.

TAYLOR, TEX., CHURCH GOES VISITING.

W. H. Bagby, pastor, and the members of First Church, Taylor, Tex., went visiting two weeks ago, attending the First Baptist Church of that city in large number. As a result of the recent fire disaster in their church building, the heating apparatus was out of commission, and Mr. Bagby determined to go visiting rather than use the inadequately heated auditorium. The Baptist pastor requested Mr. Bagby to occupy his pulpit and Mr. Bagby consented, preaching from the subject, "God's Power Plant," which he had announced for his own church for Sunday evening. "God's Power Plant," Mr. Bagby said, "is like a great electrical power plant of Niagara. The people are the motors. The Celestial Power Plant is connected with the human motors like the great Niagara power plant is connected with the motors in distant cities from Niagara. There are three kinds of motors—the uninstalled motors, the disconnected motors and the installed motors. People are divided into these three groups. Some have never been installed; the machinery of their being is there, ready for active work, but they have never been connected with the power from Above. Others have been installed but have become disconnected and are practically as useless as the uninstalled motors. The last and best class are the installed motors, which are performing their tasks with efficiency and dispatch, and amount to something in God's eternal Kingdom." A local paper reports the delight of the Baptist people with Mr. Bagby's sermon.

NEBRASKA MINISTER ADVOCATES UNION.

J. E. Holley, the newly installed pastor of First Church, Hastings, Neb., has caused a stir among religious circles through his espousal of Christian union at Hastings. Mr. Holley declared that the twenty denominations here have $500,000 invested in church property and expend an average of $24,000 yearly in ministers' salaries, besides paying running expenses amounting to $16,000 yearly. These religious bodies, by combining, he asserts, could invest $200,000 in a temple, build four smaller buildings costing $25,000 each, pay $5,000 a year to one of the ablest clergymen in the land, give him four assistants at $1,200 each and have $200,000 to invest in an endowment, all of which would mean a saving of $40,000 a year, as compared with the present investment and expense. "With this saving," said Rev. Mr. Holley, "we could send seventy living link missionaries to the heathen, solve the problem of the poor, of the hospital, of the Young Men's Christian Association and every financial question of the church."

M. M. DAVIS SPEAKS AT HOME-COMING.

The Ross Avenue Church, at Dallas, Tex., held a Home-coming service Feb. 15. The musical program consisted of old-time hymns, two orchestra numbers, an anthem, duet and solo. The audience was large and appreciative, and many persons, once members of the congregation, but now living elsewhere, were present. M. M. Davis, the pastor, in his sermon, emphasized the place of worship in human life. "Man by nature is a worshiper," he declared. "It is not more natural for him to eat when he is hungry, and drink when he is thirsty than it is for him to worship. This is evident when we remember that we cannot create faculties by education and cannot educate faculties which do not exist, any more than we can improve the sight of a man who has no eyes. In all ages and places and among all peoples worship in some form is to be found. Our Lord whose life is our model was a worshiper. A single passage in Luke gives us the only glimpse we have of that life during the eighteen years between 12 and 30, and that says: 'He came to Nazareth, where he had been brought up, and as his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day, and stood up to read.' So regularly did he go to the public worship that it was called a 'custom.' The songs, the sermon, the Supper of the Lord all fill our souls and send us away stronger for the duties of life, and more secure against its dangers. Mixing and mingling with good people in the congregation tend to make us good. A coal of fire left alone soon dies, but in company with other coals it lives and burns more brightly because of the contact."

The Central Church, New York City, has become the big brother of the Russian Mission, according to P. F. Jerome. The formality of acceptance of this relationship was undertaken only recently with 30 members of the Russian congregation present at the Central Church.

The Disciples Congress this year is to be held in Lexington, Ky. The dates and program will soon be announced. The committee in charge consists of C. M. Sharpe, chairman; E. L. Powell, of Louisville; and W. F. Richardson, of Kansas City.

Graham Frank, of Liberty, Mo., recently preached a sermon on "Hell and the Devil," which attracted a great deal of attention.

Luke 13:18-35. Memory Verses, 18, 19.

Golden Text.—Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven.—Matt. 7:21.

American Standard Bible.
Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons.
(Used by permission.)

(18) He said therefore, Unto what is the kingdom of God like? and whereunto shall I liken it? (19) It is like unto a grain of mustard seed, which a man took, and cast into his own garden; and it grew, and became a tree; and the birds of the heaven lodged in the branches thereof.

(20) And again he said, Whereunto shall I liken the kingdom of God? (21) It is like unto leaven, which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal, till it was all leavened.

(22) And he went on his way through cities and villages, teaching, and journeying on unto Jerusalem. (23) And one said unto him, Lord, are they few that are saved? And he said unto them, (24) Strive to enter in by the narrow door: for many, I say unto you, shall seek to enter in, and shall not be able. (25) When once the master of the house is risen up, and hath shut to the door, and ye begin to stand without, and to knock at the door, saying Lord, open to us; and he shall answer and say to you, I know you not whence ye are; (26) then shall ye begin to say, We did eat and drink in thy presence, and thou didst teach in our streets; (27) and he shall say, I tell you, I know not whence ye are; depart from me, all ye workers of iniquity. (28) There shall be the weeping and the gnashing of teeth, when ye shall see Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, and all the prophets, in the kingdom of God, and yourselves cast forth without. (29) And they shall come from the east and west, and from the north and south, and shall sit down in the kingdom of God. (30) And behold, there are last who shall be first, and there are first who shall be last.

Verse By Verse.

By C. C. Buckner.

v. 19. It is like unto a grain of mustard seed: The mustard plant, as we know it, is quite small, but in Palestine it is quite large, often attaining a height of twelve feet.

v. 21. It is like unto leaven: Leaven is anything that produces a fermentation; in this case the reference is to a portion of fermenting dough, which, mixed with a larger quantity of dough, produces a general change in the mass and renders it light and large in bulk. Till it was all leavened: We should be reassured, by this teaching, that all of our efforts, in the interest of the coming kingdom, will be rewarded. Leaven will leaven.

v. 23. Are they few that are saved? The questioner is sounding the depths of the new order. They were unaccustomed to teachers who really meant what they taught.

v. 24. Strive to enter in by the narrow gate: Jesus makes no direct reply to the interrogation; but he emphasizes the responsibility of each individual.

v. 25. When once the master of the house is risen, etc.: The Christian life requires that "all things be done decently and in order." There is also the teaching, here, that we should respect the conventionalities of the age in which we live.

v. 27. Depart from me, all ye workers of iniquity: This is quoted from Psalms 6:8.

v. 28. There shall be weeping and the gnashing of teeth, when, etc.: The Jews believed the Kingdom would come with a great feast at which all the great of the race would be present. There would be no Gentiles present at the feast.

v. 29. And shall sit down in the kingdom of God: There are no geographical or racial lines of demarcation which shall exclude any of the noble of humanity from the joys of the future life. See Acts 10:34.

At the Heart of the Lesson.

By A. Z. Conrad.

Here is a man talking about world-wide imperialism. He is surrounded by a little band of apparently unimportant men and a few interested women. He goes from town to town in the rugged hill country of Perea near the Jordan and with all the confidence of assured victory tells them of world-wide conquest. Could anything have seemed more absurd? Not a soldier among his followers. Not a capitalist, not a statesman, not one high official. And who is he? A man who is lately from the carpenter's bench at Nazareth. Mystified and unlettered followers are associated with him. Now and then a great multitude gather together as a result of his demonstrations of divineness. His teaching is super-ordinary, his working mystifies witness and challenges enemies. This man of Galilee has set for himself the task of mastering the whole world. He seriously predicts the time when he will be at the head of an all-embracing kingdom. He expects to realize his ideal of universal imperialism without unsheathing a single sword. At the very time he is making the prediction he foresees and portrays his own crucifixion and points to the shadow of the cross on his path. Such a proclamation from the lips of any other man would have marked him as hopelessly insane. Those nearest Jesus had an indefinable faith that he would fulfill his own prophecy concerning himself. How can you account for such confidence? Somehow he had the power to awaken it and to hold it. The only explanation is that he was already the one imperial force in the universe of God.

MUSTARD SEED PHILOSOPHY.

No one recognized the seeming preposterousness of the claims of Jesus more than did he. He foresaw the ridicule his followers would be subjected to. Without sword, crown, or throne they were yet to proclaim the coming of the kingdom. The serried ranks of marching Roman armies must be halted. The pride of pagan philosophers was to be humbled by truth so simple that a child could comprehend it and so profound that sages could not exhaust it. Wealth with its blazing splendor must be made servant instead of master. The pleasure passion must be transformed into altruistic fires of holy humanism. All this must begin to be at a time when pagan altars smoked with victims and every throne of earth was stained with blood and every crown flamed with selfish ambition. How could such a kingdom as Jesus proclaimed expect support and advocacy? By virtue of the mustard seed philosophy. A declaration that the potential and not the actual is the true basis of value and the ground of action.

v. 19. "It is like a grain of mustard seed which a man took and cast into his garden and it grew and waxed a great tree, and the fowls of the air lighted in the branches of it." That, Jesus said, is symbolical of the kingdom. The seed was so small as to be apparently negligible, yet the tree was in the seed. So with the kingdom germ that Jesus was planting in the heart of humanity. The seed became the tree in which the birds lodged by virtue of just one thing, growth. Through a process of development, by virtue of the life in the seed. The mustard seed was one of the smallest seeds in comparison with the plant it produced. Some identify it with the khardel, which by the Sea of Galilee often attains a growth of twenty-five feet.

GROWING TOWARD GLORY

The garden was Israel. The growth was gradual. It was at first imperceptible. So with the kingdom of God. In comparison with world kingdoms it seemed insignificant. It grew at first almost in concealment. Its progress was so slow that the beginning awakened no particular comment. Indeed, it seemed at times to have been uprooted and exterminated. But it grew. Life was in it. God nurtured it. Ineradicable and inextinguishable life kept enlarging and expanding. When cut down it would send out a hundred shoots about the stump upon which it had stood. Every time the axe felled the tree a forest sprung up to take its place. Nero, Domitian, Trajan, Hadrian, Septimus Severus, Marcus Aurelius, Valerian, Diocletian, all these, and others not only cut down the tree but cast it in the fire and vainly thought that they had exterminated it. Then they discovered that they had only scattered more widely the seed of the kingdom, and extended the kingdom itself. As in the world, so in the individual. The kingdom life makes little show at the beginning but the great fact is growth. Finally it becomes the supreme fact of life. Its branches afford asylum for the needy and the oppressed. It stands out in all its splendid reality of divineness.

VITALITY AND VIGOR.

v. 21. "Leaven—hid—till it was all leaven." Another symbol of the kingdom of God. "It is like leaven which a woman hid in three measures of meal until all was leavened." Be not deceived by appearances is the admonition of Jesus. Imperceptibly but persistently, pervasively, by processes of assimilation the kingdom extends. There is a vitality in the truth which nothing can destroy. It was as though Jesus had said, "I am the Kingdom which I proclaim. When most the world will think me overthrown then most will my divine energy be operating to develop the kingdom. Have faith. Work. Witness, and wait. You must place the leaven in the meal. You must proclaim my gospel. There your duty ends. When you have put it in the dough it will work its own way. Leaven is minute living organisms which rapidly reproduce themselves. Every cell produces from three to six other cells. Particle by particle the leaven permeates, giving to each added particle its own quality and power of reproduction, and so the whole is finally subdued and all is leavened. From individual to individual the kingdom is to extend. What a fine picture of the vitality and the method of building the kingdom of Jesus. Our Lord himself and the power of the Holy Spirit is the energizing principle. He imparts his very self to one and then to another and through the spiritualized individuals he continues thus to reach out in leavening the world. The Leaven Parable is the closest, clearest possible declaration for personal evangelism. It is the "Win One More" Fellowship parabolically presented. Each leavened particle to leaven that which it touches. Here is the whole secret of kingdom growth. This is the evangelism indeed that does evangelize. The Pastor must lead the movement with whole-souled ardor. The professional evangelist may stimulate it and may stir the meal and accelerate the action, but the individual disciple must evangelize the multitude. There is no other way.

MUSTARD SEED AND LEAVEN IN HISTORY.

Two thousand years nearly have passed since Jesus painted that picture. Was it true? Was Jesus a prophet? What did he essentially say? Turning to Gulick's "Growth of the Kingdom" we discover in the year 30 A. D., Jesus Christ and a little band of twelve apostles soon increased to a few hundred. One hundred A. D., has come and now we have so many that Trajan declares, "So many believe in Christ that the temples of pagan worship are deserted." At the end of the third century there were five million believers. Jean Paul Richter says of those times, "The Church lifted empires off their hinges and turned the stream of the centuries out of its channels." A thousand years have passed and the church has increased ten fold at the end of the third century, and there are now fifty millions of Christians. The year 1500 witnesses a hundred and fifty millions. The church had doubled in five hundred years. Eighteen hundred comes and there are two hundred millions. the church has doubled in three hundred years. Eighteen hundred and eighty has come and there are four hundred and ten million. The church has doubled in eighty years. Nineteen hundred has come and there are four hundred and seventy millions of Christians, a 16 per cent increase in twenty years. There are now nine hundred and thirty-seven million people under Christian government. Such has been the onmarching movement of history. Not only however, in the matter of numbers do we discover how truly Christ was a prophet. but in the influence of the church upon the activities of the world. By her. empires have been subdued. Humanism has taken the place of barbarism. A passion for universal education has arisen through the influence of the church. Cathedrals. hospitals and universities have everywhere prepared for the working of the leaven in the dough.

The Mid-Week Service

BY SILAS JONES.

TOPIC FOR MARCH 18.

The Christian and His Money—Mal. 3:7-18; Luke 12:13-21.

There are two questions which the Christian must face when he considers the question of money. These are, What is the right way to get money? and, What is the right way to spend it? A disciple of Jesus cannot permit himself to follow blindly the accepted standards of the world. Legal ways of getting wealth may not be just. The pirate used to sail the seas and appropriate to himself whatever goods he found that pleased him and were not too strongly guarded. The method of the pirate has, we are forced to confess, sometimes been followed by professed followers of Christ.

The Christian does not make war upon wealth. He knows that the world is yet too poor to support all the enterprises his ideals demand. He therefore gives encouragement to the inventor in the hope that the resources of the earth may be brought more and more into the service of man and he promotes scientific discovery that man may know how to use the earth without exhausting it. It is not wealth that destroys nations, it is wealth obtained by injustice and used to foster pride and corruption and vice.

GETTING THAT IS GIVING.

Having renounced the methods of the pirate, the Christian endeavors to engage in occupations that benefit others as well as himself. He does not think it is enough to refrain from taking what belongs to another; he likes to feel that he gains nothing for himself that is not a gain for his countrymen and for all mankind. The first business of a Christian is to get his living by an occupation that is socially useful. One of the most prominent business men of the United States, whose patriotism and generosity place him among whom we delight to honor, has raised the question whether justice is possible and advocates charity as a substitute for it. The Christian man is aware that there is much injustice in the world but he believes that justice is something more than a dream of impractical men. He refuses to profit by injustice. He declines to apologize for institutions and conditions that enable some men to live by the misery of others.

WISE INVESTMENTS.

"We are tired in this world, every time we see an idea near by, of this eternal running and teasing for money. Why run? Why tease? Who are these people that we should ask them? We will strip their souls naked and we will find out! If a man has a soul, the more money he has and the more wages are being paid by him, the better we like it. In very truth, we consider the rich, but we are not going to consider the urns in their windows, their motor cars or bank accounts. We are studying their faces. Have they got anything in their faces—the show-windows of their souls—that we want? If they have not, we will help them move on. We will not live in a world, if we can help it, seeing all these poor people about us everywhere with their thoughtless heads and bored faces sitting on piles of our money—of everybody's money." The challenge of this writer is one the Christian ought to welcome. Men who have money ought to be intelligent about other things than getting money. Many of them are. Many are not. There are many opportunities for the man of brains and wealth to put his money to social uses.

TESTING THE LORD.

If we give to the Lord, will he take care of us? Faith answers that he will. But let us not think narrowly of his care. If I give ten dollars to missions today, I have no right to expect it to come to me tomorrow in some mysterious way. It is for my good that I have to work and save in order to have money for personal and social uses. This is the test God invites us to make: See clearly what the right is and support it with all available resources.

TO REMOVE CONFUSION

The National Benevolent Association of the Christian Church, 2955 N. Euclid Ave., St. Louis, Mo., has no connection whatever with "The Christian Woman's National Benevolent Association," 5861 Plymouth Ave., St. Louis, Mo., Mrs. T. R. Ayars, President.

The National Benevolent Association has served our churches for twenty-eight years. It is now conducting twelve institutions in ten different states, there is scarcely a state these Homes have not served.

The Association has only one institution in St. Louis, The Christian Orphans' Home 2591 N. Euclid Ave. In 1911 The Mothers and Babies Home work in St. Louis was consolidated with this Home.

The Association's Eleven Other Institutions are: Cleveland Christian Orphanage, Lorain Ave., and Bosworth Rd., Cleveland O.; Southern Christian Home, 299 Lee St., Atlanta, Go.; Juliette Fowler Christian Home (for children), Dallas Texas; The Colorado Christian Home, West 29th and Tennyson Aves., Denver, Colo.; The Christian Child Saving Institute, 42nd and Jackson Sts., Omaha, Nebr.; Northwestern Christian Home, (for old and young), Walla Walla, Wash.; Christian Old People's Home, 873 Grove St., Jacksonville, Ill.; Juliette Fowler Christian Home (for the aged), Dallas, Texas; Havens Home, East Aurora, N. Lost==Let Us Find Them!

Pastors and Sunday School Teachers Especially, Take Notice

One of the greatest leaks, numerically, in the church today, is a result of the moving of members from the country districts, the villages and smaller cities to the large cities, and the consequent withdrawal of their active membership from the church. A census of sixteen blocks, in Chicago, made by the editor of "The Conquest" some time ago, revealed the fact that fully 75 per cent of the church members who come to Chicago, are lost, so far as church affiliation is concerned!

"The Conquest" is going to undertake, in a small way, to prevent some of this leakage. Here is your part of the campaign:

(1) If you live in towns or villages, send to "The Conquest" names and addresses of any of your young people who have recently moved to the cities; also name of the town from which these persons have come. These will be published in "The Conquest," and the schools of our cities will be put upon the scent. We must not tolerate this alarming loss.

(2) If you live in the city, keep an eye on "The Conquest" for names and addresses of persons coming to your city, and go after them.

Prepare your information thus:

Name ..... To what city .....

Present city address .....

Indiana Pastor Says "A Character Builder."

The first copy of "The Conquest" gives promise of a great character builder for our young people. It has in it education, inspiration and culture. I want my young people to have its influence.

Rev. Elmer Ward Cole, Huntington, Ind.

Founder of Intermediate Endeavor Delighted.

I have received the copies of "The Conquest" and I want to say that it seems to me an admirable paper in every way. I believe it will have a wide circulation and will do a vast deal of good.

Rev. A. Z. Conrad, Boston, Mass.

Doctor Ainslie Says It Has Real Merit.

I am greatly pleased with your publications, and especially "The Conquest." It is a paper of real merit and ought to have a most cordial support.

Rev. Peter Ainslie, Baltimore, Md.

Ohio Pastor Makes "Conquest" Picture Gallery.

I am preserving all the "Faces You Ought to Know," which you print each week in "The Conquest." This will make a fine collection of our leading men, when completed. I am greatly impressed with "The Conquest," not only for this feature, but for the many short articles and items that are so valuable for future reference, which may be clipped and filed. Its C. E. lessons and prayer-meeting lessons are among the best that come to my study. It ought to be the most popular paper published by the disciples.

Rev. W. G. Loucks, South Akron Church of Christ.

Youngstown Pastor Complimentary.

I am delighted with "The Conquest." It gives promise of supplying a very vital need. Its editors seem to appreciate the type of religious literature demanded by the youth of today.

Rev. Wm. Dunn Ryan, Central, Youngstown, O.

"Men's Class MUST Have The Conquest."

I must have "The Conquest" for my men's class. It is an admirable paper. Send me your rates.

Rev. Roger T. Nooe, Frankfort, Ky.

What a "Clipper" Says of "The Conquest."

I have the "clipping habit." I went through the first issue of "The Conquest," and when I had finished a mere skeleton was all that remained. That speaks for itself. Every page contains something worth filing. It is the best paper of its kind published.

C. Manly Morton, Winston-Salem, N. C.

Ten Big Reasons Why

BETHANY GRADED LESSONS are being adopted by so many of the best schools among Disciples.

1. There is more to them—at least a third more—than is contained in any other series.
2. They are rich, vital and full of suggestion to teacher and pupil.
3. They are free from the sectarian spirit.
4. They are soundly and fervently evangelical.
5. They are truly artistic in all their illustrations.
6. They are printed on better paper with better binding and in better taste than any other series.
7. Every lesson writer is an expert of interdenominational reputation.
8. They are a monument to the modern spirit of unity—several leading denominations have co-operated to produce them and are now using them.
9. The Disciples possess full editorial rights, through the editor, Charles Clayton Morrison.
10. Every Disciple school that uses them participates in and promotes a great Christian union enterprise.

Bethany System of Sunday School Literature

It meets the test of use. Note what some of our leaders who have adopted the Bethany System say of it: - - -

REV. HOWARD T. CREE, AUGUSTA, GA.

We have been using the Bethany Lessons from the very beginning and have used no other. Samples of other publishing houses have been submitted but did not meet with the approval of the teachers as did the Bethany.

REV. H. H. HARMON, FIRST, LINCOLN, NEB.

Nothing could pry our superintendent and teachers loose from these lessons. They meet the needs of pupils of all years and make the teacher's work a joy. We have no word with which to express our satisfaction with the series.

REV. P. J. RICE, FIRST, EL PASO, TEX.

We have been using the Bethany Graded Lessons from the time you began to publish them and we are very highly pleased with them. We have often had occasion to compare them with the publications of other houses and can say we have found none that compare with them.

REV. L. J. MARSHALL, KANSAS CITY, MO.

I want to congratulate you upon the high quality of this literature. It is certainly a great satisfaction to feel that we are now able to put into the hands of all our Sunday-school pupils, material so splendidly classified and so thoroughly edited.

REV. JNO. McD. HORNE, CHARLESTON, ILL.

Your Graded material is excellent and provides a basis for genuine enthusiasm.

REV. T. E. WINTER, FULTON, MO.

Over a year ago our school adopted the Bethany Graded Lessons, upon vote of our teachers, who had examined personally the texts for their respective grades. They are a delight to all.

REV. H. D. C. MACLACHLIN, RICHMOND, VA.

We have used the Bethany Graded Lessons for three years, and the longer we use them the better we like them. They offer a Sunday-school course as nearly perfect as can be.

REV. FINIS IDLEMAN, CENTRAL, DES MOINES.

We are using the Bethany Graded Lessons. We would not turn back. The service our Sunday-school specialists are giving us as represented in this course is making a new day in religious education.

REV. EDGAR JONES, FIRST, BLOOMINGTON, ILL.

Our committee made an individual examination of lesson helps and decided unanimously in favor of the Bethany series, arriving at their decisions independently and solely upon the merits of the literature.

The Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse is fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, the Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

"The Genius of Elizabeth Anne"

OUR NEW SERIAL STORY

It Starts Off Like This:---

"THAR mus' be somethin' awful chillin' 'bout that thar firs' yell they give," said Marthy Prouty awesomely, hovering over the chip fire in the kitchen stove. "I hain't never heerd it no more'n twicet in my life, an' both times, though 'twas a fur throw frum bein' chilly, I felt like 'twar cold enough t' freeze the har off'n a dog."

"Gimme that sarrer o' lard," responded Mrs. O'Hara, noncommittally, indicating with her head, since both of her hands were occupied, "an' thin whim ye've hunted me up a bit o' cloth fer bundling it in, ye kin go on bock t' bed. Ye'r more throuble'n ye'r worth, annyhow," she added amiably.

Marthy, who never absorbed a complete idea with any degree of alacrity, lifted the saucer from the back of the stove with slovenly disregard for her nightgown sleeves, and stood staring dumbly while the older woman performed feats that would have raised the hair of a trained nurse.

Mrs. O'Hara, it happened, was not a trained nurse. It is doubtful if she had ever heard of the genus. More, Modern Science as concerns the child, would have passed serenely over her head. But she had "had ten of her own" which was ample qualification in Cull Prairie.

"Guess I will," said Marthy, upon whom the final injunction had begun to dawn—"go on back t' bed, I mean. They got me out 'fore the crows gaped, s' help me! Beats all, how flighty folks is with their first, don't it? An' the younger they be the scar'der they git. (She's no more'n twenty-one, las' birthday, I hear.) Workin' out, a body's got t' be glad o' the little critters, though. I expect I'd never git a job 'thout 'em."

She yawned profoundly, making of her mouth a capacious red cavern. Everything about Marthy was big and red, from her round, artless face to the voluminous flannel petticoat which she had hastily slipped on over her nightgown, and which she held helplessly clutched at either side, in her thick, raw-looking

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, EDITOR HERBERT L. WILLETT, CONTRIBUTING EDITOR

The Christian Century Ought to Receive $20,000 for 20,000 New Subscribers Right Now!

WE have the names of nearly that many church leaders already—they have been sent us in the Subscription Crusade started a few months ago—but they are filed away in the Circulation Manager's desk.

Think of the names of thousands and thousands of office-bearers—elders and deacons and Sunday school superintendents and teachers and C. W. B. M. presidents and C. E. officers and other laymen and women of Christian intelligence and influence from the rank and file of our churches, together with 3,500 pastors, being filed away in desk drawers while the clock is striking these great transition hours for the Disciples of Christ!

Our whole movement for Christian unity is in the process of re-making at this moment. The currents of new life are flowing through the body of our communion. Not in one type or class alone, but in all types and classes of our ministers and laymen the leaven of the newer idealism is fermenting. The heart of this brotherhood of ours is true and sound on the elemental principle of liberty in Christ, and in its determination to practice a more generous fellowship in the bonds of his spirit.

At no time has this soundness of heart been more manifest than in the episode now decisively closed. The utterances of men unaccustomed to take active part in these discussions have been among its chief features. Many of these utterances have been sent to us for publication. The sudden passing of the occasion for their appearance will afford no less satisfaction to their authors than to us.

But the time ought soon to come when occasions of acute strain such as this, where the basic principles of our movement are involved, shall be no more. The Disciples of Christ ought some day to leave the discussion of the first principles of their movement and go on to perfection in the practice of them. That day can be brought about not by any sudden magic, but by education.

The colleges will help bring it about, by educating the youth of the church.

Therefore endow our colleges!

Our Bible Colleges and Divinity Schools will help bring it about, by educating a higher order of ministers.

Therefore endow every institution devoted to the preparation of a thoroughly trained ministry

The Christian Century wishes to help—and, no reader doubts, will help—to bring it about, by educating the rank and file of our churchmen in the better things, the more spiritual things, of the gospel.

Therefore The Christian Century deserves the substantial support of men and women of means!

The most substantial thing its friends can do for The Christian Century is to put it into twenty thousand new homes. How much will you give to see this accomplished?

The Publishers will give fifty cents for every dollar you send them.

One thousand dollars from you will thus send the paper to one thousand new homes.

Five hundred dollars will send it to five hundred new homes.

One hundred dollars will send it to one hundred new homes.

One dollar will send it to one new home.

Already the hearts of our readers have been moved to send gifts of money for this purpose. We have recently received close to $1,000, of which $500 came in a single gift.

Think of the service to the cause of Christ which that $500 is thus rendering! Where is there a missionary or educational appeal more imperative than that which can be made for The Christian Century at this strategic time?

Nothing less than the character of the Disciples brotherhood is at stake in the interplay of forces and ideas that will be especially active during the next year or two or three. The quiet, constructive influence of The Christian Century should be felt steadily in thousands of new homes during these years just ahead of us.

The message of The Christian Century should reach the eye of every minister of our brotherhood every week. It ought to reach the laymen leaders of all our churches.

Will you, good friends, provide us the money to send them the paper?

THE ORIENTAL POET-PHILOSOPHER AND HIS OCCIDENTAL INTERPRETER.

It was something of a shock to the Western world to learn that the Nobel Prize for Literature for last year fell to the lot of a Hindu poet of Calcutta, India. Rabindranath Tagore paid a visit to this country recently, lecturing at our university centers, and created a deep interest in his views of philosophy and religion. The works of Tagore are both in poetry and prose. The "message" here given is based particularly upon his collection of sermons and addresses, "Sadhana," or "The Realization of Life," which was reviewed in the Book department of The Christian Century last week.

The Message of Tagore

The Philosophy of the Indian Poet in Its Relation to Today's Problems.

BY EDWARD SCRIBNER AMES.

IT may be of interest to some of you to realize that since you were at church last, there has been rapproachement between the Orient and Occident in matters of religion as well as of social custom. Life moves forward, and moves today as never before in the world's history, toward a greater appreciation of the vast developments of human life which have hitherto remained quite isolated and detached. We have now, for the first time, the voice of a prophet, able to speak our language, to translate it, to bring to us out of the living heart of Hinduism new ideas, fresh interpretations of the experiences of life. He is no impressionist; he does not give us theosophy or any other vague cult which represents but a partial, fragmentary interpretation of the great Oriental life, but he brings to us a large-minded interpretation of his national culture. He is disciplined by Western culture and life, and is able to see the problems of our own time in a way few men of our modern age are able to do.

RELIGION COMING INTO ITS OWN.

Here I find great confirmation for the conviction that religion is coming into its own in a new way. At last, we face religion as we face all the other experiences of life, for what it is, for what it proves itself to be in experience, and for what it shows itself to be among different peoples and environments all over the earth. We have come to realize that religion is the fulfillment of the ideal interests of man, the realization of the cravings of human nature and rests on the bed-rock foundations of experience. We have been accustomed to see how Jesus interpreted his message through the idealization of the most natural, common relationships of life such as that of the parent to the child. In the light of that one can understand God's relationship to us. There is also the experience within the limited groups of friendship. Jesus makes that bond of friendship the basic requirement of his kingdom. When you have once understood this quality of friendship, what freedom and unity, what respect and enthusiasm, what dignity and elevation of life accompany it. You have laid hold in this simple experience upon the fundamental principle of the kingdom of God as Jesus interpreted it.

The Christian missionaries are finding out in their experiences with all sorts of people, that this is what the great religions of the world have been doing throughout all the ages. Buddhism and Brahmanism have brought to a vast fulfillment, certain impulses, certain tides that rise for expression in the natural human life. The appreciation of these experiences rests upon the power and resources they bring to us. Therefore, it is of great significance to us Christians, to find the great confirmation of these ideal tendencies of human nature in people on the other side of the globe, different in habits and customs, traditions and culture, to find that this kingdom of God is also the supreme thing in their lives. The things of this kingdom become the symbols by which our common bonds, even among the lowest, come to be understood; and these are the things which have stirred most deeply the great prophets of all peoples in the different ages of the world. There is no longer any sense of conflict between the great religions for supremacy in the narrow sense of the term. It becomes everywhere at last a conflict between the vast things of human life and the baser, more selfish things that everywhere beset our human nature.

A NEW DEPTH TO FAITH.

Tagore brings us with great confidence and assurance into the realm of these larger things of life, and gives us a new depth to our own faith in these sacred ideals. His message as set forth in these sermons may be put in one word: "The Wholeness of Life." The great demand of our hearts after all is for largeness, for proportion, for symmetry. Not fragmentariness, not selfishness, not piecemeal experience, but the whole, the infinite, the completion of life is what we crave. He has worked it out, as I may put it, in terms of three things; the problem of evil, the nature of the soul and the relationship to God.

THE PROBLEM OF EVIL.

The problem of evil is treated as by so many other alert minds, in terms of the positive significance of the limitations that beset us. Tagore gives an illustration of this. It is in terms of a road which at first sight separates us by its great length from our desired object and goal. We look upon that long way which the road opens before us, deploring the fact that the goal lies so far away. The road seems to reach out as an obstruction, a distance difficult to be overcome. But when viewed aright the road is the necessary means by which we attain the goal. That is the positive, reassuring, optimistic view of it. Evil, then, is not a mere barrier, an obstruction, a distance which hinders the onward-flowing current of life. It is a means by which we escape and get freedom to attain the things we desire. Thus the good is embodied in these difficulties which we encounter in life, these limitations, barriers, obstructions. When we are fatigued, pessimistic, or discouraged, or when our minds are not quite clear, when we are irritated about life, we succumb to these barriers and limitations. But when we are full of energy and faith, when we feel our spirit young and buoyant, then these barriers and obstructions become the promise of something beyond them; they are the challenges to our nature to enter upon a larger, better world. The walls around the cities of China are indicators of something lying beyond. Every limitation of life may be so interpreted and then each restraint seems to point to something higher and better.

REARED IN SIMPLICITY.

This Hindu, reared in a family where the texts of the Upanishads were used in daily worship, was nourished upon the simple teachings of his Hindu Bible, just as we, in simple and pious homes were nourished upon our Scriptures. From this book of the Upanishads, Tagore derived an attitude toward nature which expresses this conception of a positive and good attitude toward life. With nature we are in harmony, and only because of this can we use the forces of nature for our own purpose. Thus the ancient Hindu found the forest a place of satisfying companionship, an abode of rest and quiet. Water, as Tagore points out, not only blesses our lives, cleansing our limbs, and purifies our hearts, but it carries us along an speaks a message to our souls. As we stand on the shore of the lake and look at the waves surging up in a storm, we are amazed at the terrible energy of it yet we realize at its heart the wonderful, deep peace of it. It is not merely there as a brute material fact; it is something for our inmost life as well. So, all about us, the conditions of natural existence do not merely show us the outer, barren fact, but they are blessings in disguise, and lead us on.

SCIENCE IN MODERN LIFE.

Another matter of emphasis in Tagore's message is the place of science in our modern life. Science might be interpreted as the record of errors men have made. If that were done, there would be many more errors in the record than successes. If one wanted to be cynical and pessimistic about the facts of human experience, one could take the record in terms of the errors that have been made. People often take religion in that way. Viewing it merely from the errors in its history, they say: "How vain and inconsistent it is!" But, of course, when anything is judged in terms of its errors, it appears very limited. But when science is taken for what it is, moving ever forward in the discovery of truth, its very limits become a background for the positive appreciation of the things which men have discovered. The facts of science are not brute facts to be taken in a detached and one-sided point of view. Instead, they are but steps in the development in an ongoing life and movement toward a goal.

WISDOM THROUGH HARD EXPERIENCE.

For example, as our prophet points out, it is a painful thing to see a child learn to walk if one takes just the view of the process itself. With what hesitation, with what danger the seemingly helpless child takes its first steps! Yet we never feel depressed about this painful process; instead we feel a strange elation and see that it is but the first stage in his adjustment to the world about him. In spite of its repeated failures, its weakness and countless falls, we think not so much of these as its power to keep its balance even for a fleeting moment. Now, why not regard life in that way? Why not think of the race as learning to walk, faltering and falling many times, but gaining wisdom and profiting in the experience? If we can thus, with some imagination, look upon life, and see what is to come, we realize that all of life is not merely the first stage of infant walking. Much of it does get forward. We do learn to walk, to run, to fly toward our chosen goals. So the seeming failures, the obstructions which temporarily thwart us, are after all the things which clarify us, and often when we wrestle with them and conquer them, they contribute to our fullest development.

So Tagore says that it is absurd to suppose that the violin was made for discord. If you sat down to calculate it mathematically, however, you would no doubt find greater probability of discord than harmony coming from the violin. It is quite likely that most people produce more discord than harmony in playing the violin. But it would be quite wrong to dwell only on the discords and not recognize the wonderful harmony of violin music. As we overlook the discords in music, so also in religion do we lay stress on the harmony, the fundamental unity of it. Therefore we cleave to it and it satisfies us. All this struggle toward our goal is small in comparison with the achievement.

PERSPECTIVE IN LIFE INSISTED UPON.

There are many things, as Tagore insists, that our minds may not hope to obtain and to adjust. If we would insist upon dwelling upon these things, we might make ourselves bitter, might become almost insane. In the presence of death, how much joy, and buoyancy of laughter! Of course, when one detaches it as an individual fact, it becomes a blank, painful experience. Suppose someone, for example, were always thinking of the morgue, the cemetery and the undertaker. He would have facts upon which to base his contemplation. It is true to experience so far as brute fact is concerned, but what a miserable, sordid experience of life, what a destruction of proper perspective! In the midst of all these things which we recognize as facts, we still go on, go forward with energy and power with the sense of something regal, something dominant, something deep in life moving forward to fulfillment.

We come to Tagore's view of the soul of man. What is the soul of man? The psychologists, of course, have long ago gotten rid of it, and for scientific purposes it does not exist any longer. But what is the significance of the soul from the point of view of religion? Surely the term has meaning for us when we ask each other, "How is your soul?" and when a man fears for the state of his soul, fears that it may be lost, and seeks for means to save his soul. Tagore answers that it is the larger life, that it is the sense of the big self, of a wider outlook upon life. That is the soul. In contrast to this, a man may live within a very narrow, circumscribed sphere of life, he may be occupied with petty interests from a selfish point of view and in this way lose his soul. The parables of Jesus often illustrate this point. We hear of the rich fool who was always cultivating farms, always thinking of plentiful harvests, but who lost his soul in the process. He was too occupied to appreciate his neighbors, his friends and the wonderful message of religion which Jesus was preaching. He could not see the diameter of life, the great unexplored margins of spiritual experience. He could not understand the beauties and wonders of the world in which we live.

THE REAL LOSS OF THE SOUL.

Men have capacity for the development of such souls and what a real satisfaction we get from communication with such souls! The greatest tragedy of all human life is the loss of the soul in this sense—the loss of the understanding and appreciation of the larger, freer life. The tragedy lies in our living on a sordid, mean, plane, absorbed in the petty things of life, never adequately attaining the scale which is possible to us.

So a man ought to live for his country or for the good of humanity. Just in so far as he is devoted to any ideal cause does he live a soulful life. If a man does not live with a patriotic impulse, with a humanitarian interest, he has no soul. It is like the use of words without meanings. Tagore tells of an experience which all are able to appreciate—the way in which he was required as a boy to learn mechanically, commit to memory, many Sanskrit words, the meaning of which he did not know. Only gradually, in later experience, the meaning of these symbols dawned upon him, and in his further experience he used them with no consciousness of them as mere words. The same process occurs in our own experience. As we read sentences, we do not at all dwell upon the separate words with the consciousness of them as distinct entities. The meaning carries satisfaction straight to our minds and hearts. In a way like this, one gets the significance and meaning of life. People employed in the mere externals of life cannot get the full force and sense of its beauties and wonders.

A STORY FROM TAGORE.

Tagore tells a story illustrating how one can be blinded to the inherent glory and significance of nature. It is a good example of the way some of us regard other people as well as the beauties of nature, merely from the standpoint of tools serving our material ends, and not from the point of view of nature and mankind as a whole, as something to be respected, to be appreciated, to be brought within the world of affection, within the world of love. Properly interpreted and understood, they become not merely useful instruments, but full of ideal significance as well. Tagore was out in a boat on the Ganges, on a beautiful evening in autumn. A wonderful calm had fallen over the water and the light of the setting sun was everywhere reflected in all the changing colors of the closing day. As they moved quietly along where the water was deep, a great fish moving out of the depths, leaped into the air, and all the colors of the evening sky fell upon its scales, reflecting the hues in all their wonder and beauty. Suddenly the oarsman in the back of the boat exclaimed in a tone of regret: "Ah, what a big fish!" as though he thought of nothing else but of the nice supper it would make. So, many people take life always in terms of the size of the catch, and therefore are never quite withheld from such a judgment as the helmsman made in the presence of those beauties and charms which represent the sacred agencies and elements that operate within the divine life. Only when we elevate ourselves above these material considerations can we realize fully that other higher world, that spiritual world of our ideal experience.

LIGHT ON PRAYER.

Tagore has interestingly placed emphasis upon the way in which our souls fulfill themselves by meeting the obligations of the laws of life. Our prayers ought no longer to be mere petitions for our individual welfare and advancement. We know now that the laws of nature cannot be set aside and our own development consists in our obedience to these laws, which place us under obligation to them. But in this obedience we become strong; for this law is not something foreign, divorced from our nature. Each one of us, in following the universal law, becomes thereby a law unto himself. Only when we are small and petty and set against the stream of human life will this law obstruct us. When we are great, it aids us, and we gain in power. So everywhere in life we are discovering that modern science discloses the world as a world of law. To many people, such an interpretation of the world makes it matter-of-fact, mechanical, materialistic; but for this Hindu, for his artistic, sensitive mind, this law becomes one with our own deepest nature. In the very presence of law and by the means of it he finds his faith, a wonderful mysticism, a sense of awe, a symbol of things unachieved, of nobility, of the great new refreshing experiences of life. Thus, in poetry the words by themselves are obscure to us: we know not what they are. They become but a set of detached sounds to us. But when we understand the inner meaning of the poem, we discover a law permeating it, a law of ideas, of music and form, and only then do we grasp its full significance and get the heart of the poem.

A LAW OF LIFE.

The force of gravitation shown in the fall of an apple is one of the great mysteries of life, yet it is also a law of life. We must be able to keep to this sense of the depth and movement of life at the moment when we know most about it. Only in hard, little minds does the world close in, shutting out the wider, larger realms of art, poetry and religion. In those minds living on a lower plane, there are no cravings, no aspirations, no sensitivity for the diviner things of truth and beauty. But on the higher level, these very discoveries of the scientists disclose to us new fields which move us and satisfy us.

Tagore never wearies in insisting that the great thing man needs is God, the Infinite. How many people in our own society are confused by this! They think of God only in a childish fashion. They recall the God they knew in the earliest beginning of their experience, and they are therefore still in the kindergarten stage of religion. It is only when they come to understand what is stated here that they are able to see God as an actual living force in their lives, and in actual living relationships. The Bible teaches us that God is love, God is light, God is spirit. He is, therefore, as Jesus says, here, wherever men worship him in spirit and in truth. Tagore tells a story of the morning after a joyous festival, when the holiday pilgrims were standing on the bank of the river calling to the ferryman on the other side: "Carry us across." Also in the din of work we hear the cry of the drivers of carts, "Take me across." Tagore says this is like our life. Everywhere men are not quite able to find the infinite close at hand, but they are always seeking to be carried across to another goal as though there were the satisfaction and the reality of life. That saying of Jesus is so true: "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." For God discloses himself to the heart which seeks the truth, which fulfills itself in love, which is amenable to the measureless beauties of the world.

A SIGNIFICANT PRAYER.

In conclusion, I read a prayer from Tagore, which is prefaced by the following passage: "The river finds its holiday in its onward flow, the fire in its outburst of flame, the scent of the flower in its permeation of the atmosphere; but in our every-day work there is no such holiday for us. It is because we do not let ourselves go, because we do not give ourselves joyously and entirely to it that our work overpowers us."

The prayer is as follows: "O giver of thyself! at the vision of thee is joy; let our souls flame up to thee as the fire, flow on to thee as the river, permeate thy being as the fragrance of the flower. Give us strength to love, to love fully, our life in its joys and sorrows, in its gains and losses, in its rise and fall. Let us have strength enough fully to see and hear thy universe, and to work with full vigor therein. Let us fully live the life thou hast given us, let us bravely take and bravely give. This is our prayer to thee. Let us once for all dislodge from our minds the feeble fancy that would make out thy joy to be a thing apart from action, thin, formless, and unsustained. Wherever the peasant tills the hard earth, there does thy joy gush out in the green of the corn, wherever man displaces the entangled forest, smooths the stony ground, and clears for himself a homestead, there does joy enfold it in orderliness and peace.

TO THE WORKER OF THE UNIVERSE.

"O Worker of the universe! We would pray to thee to let the irresistible current of thy universal energy come like the impetuous south wind of spring, let it come rushing over the vast field of the life of man, let it bring the scent of many flowers, the murmurings of many woodlands, let it make sweet and vocal the lifelessness of our dried-up soul-life. Let our newly awakened powers cry out for unlimited fulfillment in leaf and flower and fruit."

Leaders of Men and Millions

JUDGE J. N. HAYMAKER, A MEMBER OF THE COMMISSION OF BUSINESS MEN OF THE MEN AND MILLIONS MOVEMENT.

THE Disciples of Christ know Judge Haymaker as the National President of the Brotherhood Movement. The people of Kansas, his state of adoption, know him as a lawyer, statesman, philanthropist, and leader in religious endeavor. Oklahoma recognizes him as one of the leaders in the educational interests of the state, being prominently identified with Phillips University, our school in the new state.

HONORED IN HIS HOME TOWN.

The citizens of his home city of Wichita have honored him repeatedly with city, county, and district office, sent him times without number to represent his political party in conferences which have laid the foundations for successful campaigns. Not only have these honors been thrust upon him, but he has been importuned to enter the race for the high office of the National Congress, which honor he has steadfastly declined on account of his love for home, and church, and school interests which command large portions of his time, talent and money. In the recent presidential campaign, he labored in the interests of Woodrow Wilson, and later when the official plums were being distributed he was the recipient of the offer of a foreign portfolio, which he declined largely because of the advanced age of his mother, who would be deprived of the presence of her son in the closing days of her long and useful life. Judge Haymaker came to Kansas from Indiana in 1887, and immediately entered into the social, political, and religious life of the state. For many years now he has been president of the Kansas Christian Missionary Society, giving his time as religiously to this work, as to the calls of his large law practice. Phillips University, of which he is a trustee, commands portions of his time, as does also the work of the Brotherhood of Disciples of Christ. The Judge is clean-cut, discriminating, hating sham, and fighting error both in the political and religious world. No stronger advocate of justice to our educational institutions could have been chosen for a place on the commission of the Men and Millions Movement. He is the teacher of one of the largest Men's Bible classes in the state of Kansas, and is in demand for addresses upon all themes connected with the work of the church, not alone in our own communion but in other churches as well. He is the author of numerous articles discussing the educational theme especially as it is related to the young men of the church. While not a rich man, his gifts to charity, philanthropy and the church agencies are steady and liberal. More than these gifts, however, is the gift of his devoted life to the cause. What better words could be written?

THE QUICKENING OF THE NATIONS.

"Your young men shall see visions." What an appeal the present world situation should make to the imagination and heroism of the young. Hear the tumult of the peoples—the whole non-Christian world astir with a movement that is shattering dynasties, reshaping civilizations and > "Casting the Kingdom old

> Into another mold."

The rivalry of Turk, Slav and Greek in the Balkans, the rumblings of incipient democracy in Persia, the meteoric rise of Japan, the renaissance of India, the revolution in China—these are but external and spectacular demonstrations of deeper revolutions that are going on in the thought of the nations quickened by the impact of Christ. Just as surely as the gospel is the power of God, the missionary is largely the maker of that marvelous history now unfolding in heathen lands. CHARLES T. PAUL.

The Soul of a Mohammedan

BY HERBERT L. WILLETT, JR.

To what extent is a missionary's success to be judged by the number of converts he is able to report? Of two missionaries, one of whom was able to receive a large number of church members without being over-particular as to their instruction in the gospel, or their devotion to the new life in Christ, and the other was able to bring only a few to an obedience that satisfied him of their preparation and consecration, yet who was permitted through his influence to uplift an entire community to better living, and thus to prepare for a later and more complete acceptance of Christianity—which would be doing the more effective work? Mr. Willett's article discusses one phase of this subject.—[THE EDITOR.]

IT is natural that missionary boards in America, and those who contribute to them, should look for visible, numerical results in the way of conversions on the foreign field. It is not always possible to understand the slow and cautious steps which must precede open discipleship. Sometimes very grave injustice is done the missionary who is too conscientious to take immature inquirers into the church, and in other instances an over-sensitive and insufficiently-poised worker may be led into improper practices in the effort to meet expectations and quiet criticism.

Too often does such a demand for results lead to an unjust limiting of help to the worker who has not won a sufficiently large number of converts in the past year, or in extreme and pathetic cases, to trickery on the mission field. An unusual instance of such deception was reported in this vicinity a short time ago. A certain missionary had many visitors from his denomination. All asked about the number of converts on his list, and many were dissatisfied at the report. So he arranged to have a baptism by which to impress each newcomer, and for a considerable period the immersions were of almost daily occurrence. Nor did any one of the visitors, whose edification at this proof of progress was evident, know that the "convert" of each ceremony was the preacher's own mother. Something had to be done to justify the appeal for funds with which to carry on the instructional and sanitary work which was really being done with much profit to the village. But if visitors would not be satisfied with cleaner houses and healthier people as visible results, desperate measures seemed necessary to the missionary. Happily such instances are so rare as to be almost negligible. But far more common are the unwise and over-zealous efforts of men who are more eager for numbers than for the richer gifts of Christian character.

THOROUGH TRAINING NECESSARY.

Had I space I could detail inspiring records of results attained by slow and consistent efforts. But such stories are the commonplace of true missionary work, and in most instances may be taken for granted. But one does not always perceive that a single worker earning the disapproval or dislike of the natives among whom he works may counteract the efforts of ten better men. Good and useful missionaries sometimes lose out because those at home do not understand what they have to do, and demand impossible returns. Let both the eager missionary and the Christian at home note that trained and efficient Mohammedans can do more to uplift their people than half-converted native Christians, and that unless faith comes to transform and to abide, it can accomplish but little.

After my Sunday-school class last week I had a long talk with one of the students, the son of a prominent Beirut banker, captain of the class football team, and a very earnest Mohammedan. After we had spent over two hours together, discussing various phases of our belief, and searching, not for points of attack in each other's faith, but for points of contact between the two, Wakil said: "Do you know, sir, you are the first Christian to whom I have ever talked frankly about my religion? Why? Because every one else has tried, almost at first breath, to convert me, or to prove me a faithless outcast. Today we have argued, and you have spoken freely of what you find amiss amongst us. Let me tell you what my experience with Christians has been." He then went on to outline the efforts of various teachers to interest him in the Bible and in Christianity, and to indicate why they failed. Born in India, it was in a little mission school that he first heard the story of Jesus. He was told that he was a divine, superior being, who deigned to mingle with humanity, and to die that men might be saved to live whatever sort of lives they desired, and then to appeal to infinite mercy in the dying breath. Such a Master was less to the boy's taste than Mohammed, who had no such aloofness and gave no promise of such a type of redemption. The second teacher began by slandering Islam, Mohammed and all that Wakil had been taught to hold sacred, and earned the boy's dislike when he tried to win his devotion. Another so disregarded the "Pagan creed" that he refused to do more than mock at it, but fought so violently with a rival sect of Christians in the village where he was stationed that he became the laughing stock of the native population, and with him the church he was trying to serve.

A POINT FOR MISSIONARIES.

Finally Wakil met a splendid teacher and was almost won to the message, when it was discovered that the home church of which the young man was a member had cast him off because it could not agree with certain of his views. The student admired his teacher, but felt that were he to become a Christian his affiliations would be credited to that denomination, which he respected but little, rather than to the missionary and the Master of whom he taught. And so he remained loyal to his traditions. Here at the college he has learned to listen to and value the opinion of many men, but feels that his best work can be done as a strong educated Mohammedan rather than as a Christian belonging to one of several religious bodies, divided by controversies over creeds, beliefs and doctrines. "What Christians need to realize," said he, "is that we are contented with what we have until we see that Christianity works better, and no thrusting of a dogma upon us, or urging us to comply with an outward form like baptism can produce any useful or lasting results. Men must be taught the larger and deeper truths of religion before they are won."

AN UNWISE SERMON.

I felt that Wakil had had a harder experience than is common, but that very night I heard a sermon from a prominent minister and missionary of Syria,

A Look over the Roofs of Beirut.

A Statement by Secretary Cory

Containing a letter from Mr. R. A. Long and the announcement of a reversal of the Men and Millions policy toward the Disciples' Divinity House. (See editorial pages.)

EDITOR THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY:

The following questions have been raised regarding the Men and Millions Movement:

First—Are there any creedal or theological conditions attaching to it?

Second—Are there any limitations as to class of institutions or societies to be included?

Third—Are givers limited so that they must give according to the announced apportionments of the Men and Millions Movement?

In answer to the first question, let me state most emphatically, "no." Mr. Long has made certain personal statements of belief which some have so taken, but the following letter under the date of February 25, shows clearly that he has not made any theological conditions or imposed a creedal obligation upon any individual or institution:

Kansas City, February 25th, 1914. Mr. A. E. Cory, Cincinnati, Ohio. Dear Brother Cory: I have been given to understand that there has been more or less misapprehension as to the statement made by me at St. Louis in relation to the Men and Millions Movement. All that I said as to doctrinal matters was purely an expression of my own deep personal feelings as to what constitutes loyalty to our Lord. There was no thought, however, of making conditions or imposing what has been termed a "creed" upon others. I am too familiar with the genius of our Movement to think of trying to exact of our schools or of individuals a promise or subscription to any statement of belief drawn by any man. The statement I read was merely explanatory of my former statement and was a right which every man has to make, namely, of his personal belief in his brethren, and of their loyalty to the whole future. Our obligation, as we all understand, is to the Lord and to him alone. I trust this will set at rest any misapprehensions that have been set afloat regarding my expression at St. Louis. Yours fraternally. (Signed) R. A. Long.

In answer to the second question, I desire to state that, because of financial limitation it at first seemed impossible to include all the work that was being done. This seemed especially true of one class of institution which is described in the following resolution of the Business Men's Commission adopted at the St. Louis conference in February:

Whereas, having carefully continued its general survey of higher education as related to the Disciples of Christ in America, and being in thorough sympathy therewith, this Commission finds that in connection with many State and other universities not founded by the Disciples, a field for religious education is open, and should be entered or further developed as soon as possible; that in some instances where beginnings have already been made, work of this character should be enlarged, in others it should be started or recast, and in all it should be strengthened where their purpose and teaching is in harmony with the Restoration movement; and that this entire field presents a distinct problem which demands most earnest attention and united effort at no distant day.

Be it therefore resolved, that because of the necessary financial limitations of the Men and Millions Movement, it is unwise to apply upon the educational share of the six million dollars to be raised any gifts designated for the work of religious education now or hereafter organized as adjunct to State or other universities not founded by the Disciples.

This limitation has now been modified as will be seen in the answer to question three.

In answer to the third question I desire to say that many friends of the institutions mentioned in question two, and friends of agencies and work not included in the allotment, wanted to have a part in the Movement, so after fuller discussion earlier actions excluding schools and agencies of this class from the privilege of receiving designated gifts through this Movement have been reconsidered, and it has been decided to allow friends of such institutions and agencies to designate their gifts. The executive committee, and the Business Men's Commission, of course, believe in the allotment that has been made, and urge it, but the movement stands for the general cause of Missions, Benevolence and Education. It is sincerely hoped that all givers will accept the allotment so that each contributor may in the days to come feel happy in the thought that because of his contribution having gone into the great central fund a portion of his contribution is at work in the various channels of Christian education and missions. It is sincerely hoped that after this frank statement of principles, we may go forward together to the accomplishment of this great task.

May we not turn our faces to the actual task of securing and sending forth the thousand workers with the prayer, sympathy, and co-operation of the entire brotherhood?

Yours in Christian co-operation,

A. E. CORY.

A STATEMENT BY THE DISCIPLES' DIVINITY HOUSE.

The officers of the Disciples' Divinity House have received the statement of Mr. Cory with genuine satisfaction. The elimination of creedal conditions, or any suspicion of such, from the administration of the contemplated Men and Millions fund brings relief to every Disciple, and removes the most serious difficulty in the pathway of a united and successful prosecution of the campaign.

Furthermore, the decision of the Commission to reconsider its former action by which the Disciples Divinity House was excluded from participation in the fund appears to us to be an act of simple justice, in which we rejoice. It has been our purpose even prior to the present announcement to issue a statement assuring the brotherhood of our hearty and substantial co-operation in the Men and Millions Movement, regardless of the particular solution of the embarrassment in which the earlier attitude of the Commission placed us.

We rejoiced in the prospect of a more adequate endowment for our colleges even though the Divinity House were excluded from participation in the Movement. And it has been the spirit of both our faculty and trustees to co-operate in those unofficial activities, which no act of the Commission could deny us, in promoting the interests of all our institutions of education. All the more is this our attitude in the changed position in which the Divinity House now finds itself.

Not all that we wished has been granted us. Not all the injustice done us in the early stages of this campaign has been undone. But the assurance that has come to us from the leaders of the Movement forbids us to doubt that both in the explicit phrasing of Mr. Cory's statement and in the spirit which it discloses there is ground for confidence that the day of discrimination is past, and that the sentiments of unity and good will are to characterize the further prosecution of this great work.

In this connection we are committed in the most urgent spirit to the Men and Millions Movement. And we venture to hope that all friends of the Divinity House and of higher education among the Disciples may share the satisfaction of generous participation in so important a cause.

HEBREW BIBLE REVISED.

For the first time an English version of the Bible is to be issued which has been prepared entirely by a group of Jewish scholars who may be called representative of Judaism in the United States and Great Britain. The Bible translation committee, which has been at work for six years on the translation and revision of the Hebrew Bible, has just ended its last sessions at the Jewish theological seminary. Some of the most prominent Jews in America were present at a banquet held at the seminary in celebration of the virtual completion of the committee's work.

The English Bible in use in many of the synagogues is the one translated more than half a century ago by Isaac Lesser of Philadelphia. This for several reasons is not considered adequate for the needs of the Jewish community.

Many eminent Jewish scholars shared in the present work, which tries to combine the spirit of Jewish tradition as embodied in the Hebrew scriptures with the results of the biblical knowledge of ancient, medieval and modern times. The chairman of the committee is Dr. Cyrus Adler, president of Dropsie College, Philadelphia, and his associates on the committee are Solomon Schechter, president of the Jewish Theological Seminary; Dr. Samuel Schulman of Temple Beth-El; Kaufmann Kohler, president of the Hebrew Union College of Cincinnati; Dr. Joseph Jacobs, professor of English in the Jewish Theological Seminary and editor of the American Hebrew, and Professor Max L. Margolis of Dropsie College, who is secretary of the committee and editor in chief of the work of translation.

MODERN WOMANHOOD

Conducted by Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison

MISS LATHROP'S REPORT.

Without a word in it about suffrage, Miss Julia C. Lathrop's admirable report for the Federal Children's Bureau is one of the strongest arguments for woman's ballot ever printed. The fact that about 300,000 babies under a year old die annually in the United States—fully half of them from preventable causes—shows the great need of more attention to child conservation. In New Zealand, where women vote, government-trained nurses are sent around to all mothers to teach them how to keep babies healthy; and New Zealand's infant death rate is the lowest in the world.

Striking proof of the good sense and tact of Miss Lathrop's women investigators is furnished by their success in getting the information wanted. The first investigation was made in Johnstown, Pa.

"A schedule was prepared for this inquiry, to embody, when filled out, a picture of the social, civic and industrial conditions of the family studied, together with a careful history of the growth of the baby during the first year of life, with special attention to feeding. The questions were necessarily intimate and difficult, and only women agents were, of course, employed in securing the replies. How far the good will of the community was secured is indicated by the fact that 1,551 schedules were secured and there were two refusals."

The Children's Bureau has done wonders with its small staff of fifteen helpers and its small appropriation of $25,640; but, while it is a cause for legitimate rejoicing that the bureau has at last been established and a good beginning made, it is a cause for shame that it should be so sorely hampered for lack of money and workers. The tiny appropriation made for the children is in sharp contrast with the enormous sums voted for the army, the navy, and a variety of business interests.

Miss Lathrop asks for an increase of the staff to 76 persons, and an incease of the appropriation to $164,640. If the mothers of the United States were voters, there is no question that the request would be granted.

PASSAGE OF THE KENYON RED LIGHT BILL BY CONGRESS.

The Kenyon Red Light bill passed the House of Representatives Monday, January 26, without a dissenting vote. The discussion on the bill was short, not occupying much more than an hour. None of the members placed obstacles in the way, although there were numerous queries as to what provision had been made for the 250 or 300 girls that would be homeless, as the law became operative immediately instead of in ninety days.

The provisions of the measure are so drastic that it will amount practically to an automatic closing of every questionable resort in the capital city. To remain open for a day or an hour after the bill becomes a law would jeopardize not only the liberties of the property owners and the inmates, but make property itself liable to confiscation. The belongings of the resorts, by terms of the new law, would be held and sold to pay the cost of court proceedings, and the houses would be closed with a prohibition against opening again for any purpose within a year.

It is safe to say that nothing has come to Washington in recent years which caused such interest, or provoked such discussion as the passage of this measure. Women representing Christian organizations are going two and two to these houses and talking with the girls, offering them homes where they can be looked after until they can obtain employment; or to aid them in returning to their own homes. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the Federation of Women's Clubs, the Florence Crittenton Mission, indeed a number of missions, have thrown wide open their doors, and the Social Welfare League, with Mr. Stanley W. Finch, of the Department of Justice, superintending, has engaged a suite of rooms in a prominent office building, where girls are invited to come and confer with members of the Mothers' Congress and others, and work will be provided for all who want honest employment.

This bill for abolishing the Red Light section in the District of Columbia is the culmination of a series of statutes for the suppression of the White Slave Traffic, passed by Congress in the past seven years. In 1907, the United States became a party to an International Treaty between the great powers of Europe, for regulating the business of transporting girls from our country to another for purposes of prostitution; in the same year, a bill was passed by Congress imposing a fine of five thousand dollars and imprisonment for five years on any one who should import an alien woman into this country for immoral purposes.

Not long after, the Mann White Slave Act was passed, imposing a large fine and imprisonment, for transporting women from one state to another for purposes of prostitution—and now comes this Kenyon Red Light bill!

Surely this is a splendid record of Federal legislation!—and it is a challenge to the General Assemblies of the various states to emulate this noble example, by making laws for the protection of young womanhood from the greatest wrong that can be inflicted on her—and on society at large! I. W. H.

SOCIALISM AND SUFFRAGE.

A correspondent of the New York Sun insists that suffrage means Socialism, and adds that, without the support of Socialism, there would be hardly anything left of the suffrage movement. How then does he account for the fact that suffrage has already carried ten states of the Union, while Socialism has not yet carried one?

This gentleman says that in Wyoming, Colorado, Utah and Idaho—the only states where women have had a chance to vote at two presidential elections—the Socialist vote was bigger in 1912 than in 1908. But it was bigger in every state in the Union.

Divorce is gradually increasing in the suffrage states; but it is also increasing all over the country. To make out a connection between suffrage and divorce, our opponents would have to show that it is growing faster in the suffrage states than elsewhere. Instead of this, the states showing the most rapid growth of divorce are non-suffrage states.

The Socialist vote has grown in the suffrage states; but its rate of increase there has been below the average for the country at large, which was 112 per cent. between 1908 and 1912. In Wyoming it was 61 per cent, in Utah 84, in Idaho 87 and in Colorado 106. In many non-suffrage states the growth was much faster. Thus in Delaware it was 132 per cent, in Illinois (where women had not then gained the right to vote for president) 134 per cent, in Pennsylvania 147, in Ohio 166, in Indiana 174, in Kentucky 178, in North Dakota 188, in Nebraska 190, in North Carolina 197, in Tennessee 216, in Virginia 222 and in West Virginia 317.

THE SOUL OF A MOHAMMEDAN.

which would have kept me from accepting Christianity had I been, as were many of the boys who heard it, without any background of history and custom against which to throw the speaker. Said the worthy gentleman: "I go into a field with a boy. There is a rock, and near it a blade of grass, one dead, one alive, higher than the inanimate stone. We discover a sheep in the field. It is alive, but in a higher way than the grass—they are not on a level. The boy with me is alive, but how much higher a life he has than that which is possessed by the sheep; finally we meet a Christian and behold, his life is far above that of the boy. Now only a miracle can change the stone into a blade of grass; natural laws will never make that grass a sheep: no sheep can of itself become a boy. So the boy cannot of himself become a Christian; what he must do is to live as well as he can, and perhaps Jesus, who is ever looking for worthy men, will stoop down in his infinite love, and pour divine redemption into the heart of the boy. Then his life will be lifted above the level of common humanity.

From the comments I have heard on that sermon from various students, I doubt if the anticipation of a possible visit for a constantly searching Master will influence many to purity of life, and for every one who is so reached ten are repelled. Educators who understand the need of the East rejoice in the presence and help of consecrated, devoted missionaries. But they deplore the constant demand for converts, native Christians who can be counted in larger numbers, only at the imminent risk of repelling the strongest, most earnest natives, who cannot be coerced nor dazzled into a change of faith.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

A Triumph of Magnanimity

WHEN last week's issue of The Christian Century was sent forth to its subscribers there was nothing on the horizon to indicate that the problems raised in connection with the launching of the Men and Millions Movement were any nearer solution than they had been at any time during the three months that have elapsed since the original announcement was made.

Yet things have happened at the very hour of preparing the forms of the present issue for the press which entail upon us the re-making of a considerable portion of the paper, especially of those pages in which not only the editors but many of our readers would have expressed their convictions on what was believed to be a crucial situation.

But it is now believed that the crisis is safely passed.

One cannot fail to recognize in the letter of Mr. Long a genuinely magnanimous spirit. Only those who know the intensity of his theological convictions, and recall the fact that the ten schools receiving the lion's share of the prospective fund were asked to register their loyalty to two of these convictions before he announced his gift of a million dollars, can imagine the struggle and tension of soul through which Mr. Long has passed in gaining the consent of his mind to make such an interpretation of his St. Louis utterances as is contained in his present letter to Mr. Cory. These St. Louis utterances amplifying his earlier statement of belief, he now says, are to be taken as representing only his own personal opinions and are in no sense—neither as a legal condition nor as a moral obligation—bound upon the colleges benefiting by the fund about to be raised.

OBLIGATION TO CHRIST ALONE.

A fine sentence is that in which he states the ground of our liberty as Disciples of Christ: "Our obligation, as we all understand, is to the Lord, and to him alone." This obligation to our common Lord, Mr. Long would say, is the basis of our fellowship in Christian service and in the Church. No individual's personal understanding of what is implied in this obligation is to be taken as standard of orthodoxy or rule of life for all the rest. "I am too familiar with the genius of our [the Disciples'] movement," says Mr. Long, "to think of trying to exact of our schools or of individuals a promise or subscription to any statement of belief drawn by any man."

These words ring with the note of doctrinal self-restraint which characterized the Campbells. Men of strong theological convictions intensely and passionately preached, they never undertook to fix their own views upon their brethren or to tie the hands of the future by incorporating their doctrines into the charters of churches or colleges. They trusted the future. They believed in their brethren. They had faith in the power of Christ to lead the Church of tomorrow into the truth for tomorrow. So they took us up to the feet of the Master and left us there with him.

A MAGNANIMOUS AND INCLUSIVE PRINCIPLE.

Mr. Long's present letter represents to us the triumph in his own soul of this magnanimous and inclusive principle upon which the Disciples' movement for unity is based, over the principle upon which sectarianism is based. Contemplating the making of an unprecedented gift to our educational institutions, it was inevitable that questions as to their loyalty to his own intensely-held convictions would arise. On the heels of such questions naturally came suggestions by which this loyalty could be guaranteed. Lest the simpler statement of loyalty at first suggested to the colleges for their approval, and approved by them all, might be open to variant interpretations, it was not unnatural that the giver should further set forth his understanding of the implications of this earlier statement in a set of articles of belief. The effect of this, of course, would be to guarantee the kind of doctrinal loyalty desired (so far as doctrinal loyalty can be guaranteed), by the creation of a moral or tacit obligation, which a prominent legal authority has been quoted as saying could be enforced in the courts.

All this, of course, was humanly natural, and would have been tolerable in many Christian communions. Even among Disciples of Christ it was not unprecedented. There are two or three instances of this very thing having been put through, even in more crude and grotesque form than in the present case. But in those instances a single institution and a limited constituency were involved, while in the present instance the whole body of the Disciples and all their institutions of learning were involved.

MR. LONG'S PROMPT REINTERPRETATION.

That the conscience of the brotherhood made its protest to this procedure so decisively is no less admirable and heartening than the prompt action of Mr. Long when the un-Disciple character of his course had been pointed out to him by his counsellors. The Disciples' heart is sound on that fundamental principle of theological and academic liberty. And Mr. Long by his disclaimer shows himself to be a true spiritual son of the fathers. He is willing to practice the principle of loyalty to Christ, as well as to phrase it. He is willing to risk a million dollars in its practice. He will risk it on the loyalty of his brethren; he will risk it on the ideals of scholarship that obtain in our colleges; he will risk it on future generations of teachers; and, reverently, he will risk it on the power of the great Teacher at whose feet he believes the scholars of the future will sit with even finer teachableness than do the scholars of today. He is taking the risk of faith rather than the guarantee of sight.

This is why we call Mr. Long's letter magnanimous, and why we find joy in interpreting its great significance for the new day of good feeling and doctrinal liberty and wider fellowship into which the Disciples are so manifestly hastening.

Twenty-five years from now when the historian sits down to write he may overlook Mr. Long's million dollars, but he will not overlook Mr. Long's letter to Mr. Cory, which, we believe he will say, marked the finish of the last attempt to bind a human standard of orthodoxy upon the Disciples of Christ.

A FLY OR TWO IN THE OINTMENT.

Upon reading the remainder of Mr. Cory's communication all friends of justice will wish that the Commission had done as fairly by the Disciples Divinity House as Mr. Long has done with the matter of the creed. The half-way action by which the Commission reverses its earlier policy of exclusion will seem to those who read only the letter, the bare words, of the record to be unfrank, if not disingenuous. There is present both in Mr. Cory's report, and in the text of the resolution adopted at St. Louis, a patent effort to avoid direct dealing with the Disciples Divinity House. The institution is confusingly classified with our very admirable Bible Chair work in State Universities with which it has little more similarity than has Drake University.

This indirect method of treatment and the implications of it are misleading. Under cover of this method of dealing with the matter Mr. Cory says, and the resolution is made to say, that the Divinity House was excluded from the Movement on account of "financial limitation." This is not so. The record of fact must be kept clear on this point. The reason the Divinity House was excluded was not because it was believed to belong to a class of institutions which the financial limitations of the Movement forbade the Commission to embrace, but because two or three rich men on the Commission, chiefly Mr. Long, were hostile to what they understood to be the theological teachings of the Divinity House, and the remainder of the Commission—a majority—in order to insure certain initial gifts to the fund acquiesced in the determination of the minority to exclude it. This point must not be overlooked in the general rejoicing.

NO DESIRE TO CAVIL OR QUIBBLE.

It is not in harmony with our present mood to cavil over the failure of the Commission to make a "clean breast" of the whole matter in the reversal of its policy of exclusion against the Divinity House. In view of the significant act of Mr. Long in completely reinterpreting his creedal utterances it is to be regretted that the ACT of exclusion was not as fully rescinded as the PRINCIPLE of exclusion, upon which that act was based, was disclaimed.

It is, perhaps, asking too much, in view of all that has happened, to stand critical or even hesitant until the Commission shall have fully reinstated the Divinity House. There is magnanimity enough to go all around without insisting upon more at the cost of somebody's humiliation.

The Divinity House does not wish to contend over merely its financial rights in the Movement, nor about its formal status as an institution of the Disciples. At no time has it been anxious about any share it might reasonably expect from the great fund. It has been anxious over the clear violation of a first principle of the Disciples' movement involved in the unfraternal discrimination of which it was the victim. So far as its material prosperity is concerned the Divinity House may well have confidence in its friends, and in the continued progress of educational ideals among our people.

As we interpret its statement found on the same page of The Christian Century with Mr. Cory's communication, it is clear that the Divinity House has dismissed all questionings and thrown itself with hearty good will into the Men and Millions Movement.

ANALOGY IN PERSONAL ATTITUDE OF FACULTY.

Such an attitude is expressive of the same unselfish devotion to the cause of education and higher ideals among Disciples that has for many years characterized the individual members of the Divinity House faculty, and particularly its dean, whose labors and personal example have made him the symbol of the more and more conscious aspirations of our people for a scholarly and competent ministry. Throughout the years of his inspiring labors he has personally suffered the coarsest and most brutish attacks which have fallen to the lot of any public man in American Protestantism to endure. All this time, in unassuming demeanor, asking nothing for himself at the hands of his brethren, he has proved his loyalty to our people's heavenly vision by the rejection of emoluments and recognition from other communions which no man among his detractors could dream of.

He has been content to see the cause of liberty and culture and deeper spirituality go forward among us, no matter whose hands bore the standards.

Characteristic of his twenty-five years of service of inspiration to our new generation of ministers was his reply to a friend after a session of the Toronto Convention last fall. The friend was commenting gloomily on the fact that Doctor Willett's great missionary message was not heard from the platform of that convention. Looking at the program and reading the names of former students of the Divinity House who were making the great addresses of the Convention, Doctor Willett said, in his quiet way, "Why should I speak when men like these are so gladly heard!"

UNDIVIDED BACKING FOR MR. CORY.

This personal attitude of magnanimity, of rejoicing in the forwarding of the good cause quite aside from one's own active part in it, illustrates the attitude in which the Divinity House regards the Men and Millions Movement. It has suffered injustice. But it thinks of its sister colleges, of their sore needs, of their present hopeful prospects of securing funds, and pledges itself to aid the Movement on their behalf in every way it can.

If we know the Christian spirit when we see it, this is the Christian spirit.

This attitude of the Divinity House, taken with Mr. Long's elimination of all creedal complications, brings unity into the Movement, casts out discord and furnishes to Mr. Cory and his colleagues an undivided backing for the prosecution of their far-reaching work.

This is a time for rejoicing, but not for jubilation. Too vividly in our minds are the sensations of recent peril so narrowly escaped. Awed, too, by the remembrance that there are yet among the Disciples many who share the prejudices which lie at the root of all our agitation, and who would even now repeat the original un-Christian procedure of the Commission which has wounded and shamed our brotherhood, The Christian Century cannot shout, but it can and does join its thoughtful and earnest readers in a prayer of thanksgiving to God, and in a fresh consecration to the great ideals our fathers so plainly saw and which we, their sons, so often sadly forget.

THE SPIRIT OF BROTHERHOOD.

THERE are but two attitures possible toward men of other faiths. One is that of fraternal appreciation of the best that religion has produced among them, though the interpretation and forms of that religion are not held by us. Is it not difficult for the open-minded Christian to perceive that the religious spirit among all men produces likenesses and sympathies which the Christian should be eager to recognize and esteem. There is not a religion so limited but that it reveals some marks of that divine life which has been disclosed among all men. It is the task of the Christian to watch for such signs of promise, and employ them as means of approach, whereby the larger truths of our holy faith may be brought to the attention of the non-Christian world. To miss this vision of the work of the spirit of God in all the world is to limit the divine interest to a fraction of the human race, and to deny all that the Scripture and history affirm regarding the presence of genuine religious interest among all nations. The privilege of Christianity is to evaluate at its proper worth this sense of the divine among all men, and to make such use of it in a fraternal and appreciative spirit as shall not undo the work of grace in the hearts of other races than our own, but shall enter through doors already open, and possess the rich domain of individual and national life now but little aware of Christian ideals. The true missionary is he who perceives that his work is to be constructive and not iconoclastic. And this is becoming increasingly the spirit in which missionary work is prosecuted. Life, both individual and national, is too short to permit the diversion of attack and destruction in the fields of any faith.

THE OPTIMISM OF CHRISTIANITY.

IT HAS been charged against the prophets of the Old Testament that they were pessimists. They lived in times of spiritual decline, and their rebukes of iniquity and predictions of the disasters to follow the wake of sin certainly did not constitute a pleasing message for those at ease in Zion. It may indeed, be said of almost any one of the prophets that he was a pessimist as related to the immediate future. They had little use for that philosophy with which Little Bo-Beep and her school of teachers has used to soothe the world to unheeding slumber. When the sheep were astray, they were not content to leave them alone, assured that things would come right after awhile. And so they wept and pleaded and denounced, and predicted disaster, and were in a way, pessimists. And yet to bestow that title upon them, or any of them, unqualified, would be a gross libel. Jeremiah, weeping as he did, was the profoundest optimist in Jerusalem, the one man willing to invest his cash in real estate when the armies surrounded the city. Isaiah was the one man in Jerusalem in the days of Sennecherib's invasion who saw the approach of the army undismayed. Amos, confident as well as awestricken in his contemplation of the justice of God; Hosea, learning mercy through sore trial and heartache—these and all the rest were profound optimists.

Hardly even in the Gospels is there a finer strain of optimism than in the second group of prophecies that come to us in the book of Isaiah. "The bruised reed shall he not break, and the dimly-burning wick shall he not quench. He shall not fail, nor be discouraged."

We deal with a God who knows the possibilities latent in human life, even in its unpromising relations. The poor bruised life, bowed by the wind of temptation, and trampled by lust or greed, withered and dying, He can bind up and make it bloom with beauty. The lamp of the back-slider, that once burned brightly, but now gives forth smoke and stench, He can fill with oil of a new joy, and make it radiant so that he who bears it may walk in its light, and others may be lighted and cheered by its glow.

With too much apparent reason we are at times discouraged. We have failed, and we know it. But no man has a right to be discouraged concerning himself so long as God is not discouraged concerning him. Do you believe in me? Is there on earth one friend that has faith in me? Then I will have faith in myself. And if God is not discouraged concerning me, I will believe all good things possible that He expects.

And we cannot be discouraged concerning the world. It is God's world. He made it. Christ died for it. The Spirit of God lives in it. God has faith in it. "He shall not fail, nor be discouraged." And because He is not discouraged, we will have faith.

RETURNING PROSPERITY.

THERE are indications that the period of business depression is nearly over. This spring promises to bring a return of quite general prosperity. Our fields are productive and our people are industrious. The last few years have seen the withdrawal of enormous amounts of money from legitimate channels for investment in wholly unnecessary wars. The Balkan War and the strife in Mexico have to be paid for. It comes ultimately out of the pockets of the people. At this present moment there are on file in Washington claims of American citizens for $300,000,000 for losses in Mexico, but other countries have filed their claims to an unknown total. Every mine shut down, every railroad bridge burned, every laborer called from the farm and converted into a soldier, means money to be repaid. Every act that unsettles public confidence means a bill of expenses which ultimately must be paid for at a high rate of interest. If to these were added the amounts plundered from the pockets of the people who pay dividends on watered stock, we should have no lack of money for all the people in America at least. The settlement of the tariff and currency questions put to rest two disturbing conditions. Money is no longer tight, interest rates are dropping. The indications are that there will be money enough for all legitimate enterprises. We ought to have no difficulty about prosperity during the next few months.

CO-OPERATIVE CREATION

THE time came when God needed help. That is the lesson which confronts us as early as the first chapter of Genesis, and is repeated again and again through the history of the world. "Let us make man!" Who beside God are included in the plural pronoun, "us?" No matter; it is significant that the plural is used. It is the first use of the plural in the universe. What had been done thus far, God was competent to achieve alone, now He says, "Let us." From that moment until now creation is co-operative. The universe is established henceforth on the profit-sharing plan.

God needed man's help in creating the world. The draining of its pestilential swamps, the destruction of its poisonous plants and reptiles, the irrigation of its deserts, the cultivation of its fruits, all belong to creation, and they are achieved by God and man jointly.

God needed man's help in creating man. The man himself must do something, or he will forever go on all-fours, or not at all. That man who walks erect is a triumph of soul over matter. That he feels God in his soul and responds to the impulse, is a triumph of God in man.

What we call the redemption of man, was in a large sense only the completion of his creation. What God did in Christ was a co-operation with humanity. And what God does in manhood and womanhood to make the work of Christ effective is still co-operation. And it is really creation. It is not merely restitution. It is not simply the snatching of brands from the burning; it is the communication of celestial flame to give the light and warmth and life of God.

God had on hand vast enterprises, too great to be undertaken without assistance. He was about to begin a Bible. And that Bible was to be not only a revelation, but a record of a revelation, and there was need of men to record it, and men to whom it could be revealed, and men who could feel the impulse of it's revealing in humanity.

Therefore God no longer says, "Let there be," but "Let us do thus and so." The whole scheme of creation enlarged itself to include the work of man. It was a step which God never could retrace. Henceforth to all eternity the universe is coöperative.

Jesus said, "The branch cannot bear fruit of itself except it abide in the vine." That is true. And it is equally true that the vine cannot bear fruit, except it put forth branches. It is the branches, not the vine, that bear fruit. Jesus said, "Without me, ye can do nothing." He might have added, "And without you I cannot do the things I most want to do." The inability of Omnipotence is in the confession, "He could not do many mighty works there, because of their unbelief."

"Without me ye can do nothing," says God. But with us God can do great things; and we with God can be almost omnipotent.

THE MASTER OF MY BOAT.

I owned a little boat awhile ago,
  And sailed a morning sea without a fear;
And whither any breeze might fairly blow
  I'd steer the little craft afar or near.
    Mine was the boat and mine the air,
    And mine the sea; not mine a care.

My boat became my place of nightly toil,
  I sailed at sunset for the fishing-ground;
At morn the boat was freighted with the spoil
  That my all-conquering work and skill had found.
    Mine was the boat and mine the net,
    And mine the skill and power to get.

One day there passed along the silent shore,
  While I my net was casting in the sea,
A man who spoke as never man before;
  I followed Him—new life began in me.
    Mine was the boat, but His the voice,
    And His the call, yet mine the choice.

Ah, 'twas a fearful night out on the lake,
  And all my skill availed not at the helm,
Till Him asleep I wakened, crying, "Take,
  Take Thou command, lest waters overwhelm!"
    His was the boat, and His the sea,
    And His the peace o'er all and me.

Once from His boat He taught the curious throng,
  Then bade me let down nets out in the sea;
I murmured, but obeyed, nor was it long
  Before the catch amazed and humbled me.
    His was the boat, and His the skill,
    And His the catch, and His my will.

THREE SONGS.

"Sing me, thou singer, a song of gold!"
  Said a careworn man to me:
So I sang of the golden summer days,
And the sad sweet autumn's yellow haze,
Till his heart grew soft, and his mellowed gaze
  Was a kindly sight to see.

"Sing me, dear singer, a song of love!"
  A fair girl asked of me:
Then I sang of a love that clasps the race,
Gives all, asks naught—till her kindled face
Was radiant with the starry grace
  Of blessed charity.

"Sing me, O singer, a song of life!"
  Cried an eager youth to me:
And I sang of the life without alloy,
Beyond our years till the heart of the boy,
Caught the golden beauty and love and joy
  Of the great eternity.

"My Little Sister" *

BY EDGAR DEWITT JONES.

I HAVE included Elizabeth Robins' "My Little Sister" in this series of month-end addresses with no small hesitancy, and for two reasons: First, I have no great liking for the books of this type, they are only too often harrowing and morbid. This one, though harrowing, is not morbid. Second, books of this kind usually portray vice with so full a round of gayety, luxury and dazzle of lights that glamor is thrown over iniquity. This book, however, is sure and safe in its pictures of the palace of sin and will repel instead of invite. One of the critics has said that "My Little Sister" is to white slavery what "Uncle Tom's Cabin" was to black slavery.

The Story in Brief.

Imagine a pretty little country place in rural England. Picture a family of three, a frail, yet beautiful mother of gentle birth and two fair and interesting daughters. The mother, high strung, poor, and ambitious for the daughters. Fancy these girls brought up without any knowledge of life and totally ignorant of the ways of the world. Picture the girls growing into young womanhood in that quiet, lovely country, living midst flowers and birds, and overflowing with joy. Imagine the two girls in all the glory of maidenhood, both attractive, but the younger one, Bettina, of rarest beauty. Picture the little family all excitement as the two girls prepare to go to London for a visit with an aunt whom they have never seen, but whose picture they have often seen and about whom they have often talked. Imagine the girls as they are fitted out in their new frocks by a French dressmaker from London, who asks many questions and simply cannot keep her eyes off Bettina. Imagine the French dressmaker asking for the London aunt's picture and its subsequent disappearance from the house. Imagine the two fair young maidens leaving on their wonderful trip, and their being met at the station by a woman, who they suppose is Aunt Josephine; their getting into the wonderful automobile and stopping at last before a large house. Imagine these two guileless girls ushered into this place, the fine home as they think of their aunt. Fancy them dressing for dinner and going down to meet those whom they believe to be guests of their aunt. Try to imagine their feelings as they attempt to account for the rather free and easy manner of the guests. Fancy one of the men after dinner, in sheer pity and at a big personal risk, by degrees informing the older girl that she is "in one of the most infamous houses in Europe" Imagine him instructing her how she may escape if she is cautious and will follow his instructions.

Fancy this older girl as she slips out of the parlor, glancing back at her little sister Bettina, who is singing and laughing all innocent and unaware of any peril, fancy her last look at that face of girlish beauty and purity and then plunging out in the night crying for help, reaching at last the home of her aunt, telling her story, seeking the police, nearly wild with fear and quite unable to locate the house she had left. Her little sister lost forever! Fancy this poor girl so shocked by what she had gone through and the loss of Bettina that she falls seriously ill, lies at the point of death for weeks; fancy her beholding in a dream or a vision the serious face of Bettina looking down upon her as from heaven, and beseeching her sister to spend her life saving young women from the fate that had befallen her. Imagine all this and you will have in barest outline the terrible and pathetic story of "My Little Sister."

White Slavery.

The author of this book, Miss Robins, says that the story is absolutely true, except that it was softened in many points. Miss Robins laid the story before a noted justice in London. He said that it was "really commonplace." Every year in our United States 50,000 girls disappear and all trace of them is lost. In 1910 over 1,700 girls disappeared while traveling between New York and Chicago alone. It is possible that there is actual white slavery in Bloomington—and by that term is meant the forcible procuring and keeping for gain, of women in immoral life. Where such immorality exists voluntarily and without the commercial feature, it is not white slavery. The past eight months three girls have mysteriously disappeared from our own city and their fate is unknown. The mere fact of such disappearances here at our very doors is startling in the extreme.

Parental Follies.

Mothers and fathers make a tragic mistake when they permit their young daughters to gad about the streets after dark or go to the moving pictures unattended. Unless accompanied by reputable escort, by brother, or parents, the streets or the moving picture show after dark is the last place for girls scarcely in their teens. Temptation of many kinds abounds. Pitfalls, snares and lures even in a city of the size of our own are all about. It is perfectly natural for young life to seek amusements, but safeguards should be provided.

Segregated Vice a Failure.

The attempt to segregate vice is confessedly a failure. One might as well try to segregate pestilential winds. The scientific attempt to regulate the social evil by segregating it is admittedly a failure, and continental Europe, where the system originated and was once very popular, is now acknowledging defeat. Whenever a community has an officiary that have the courage to do it, and a citizenship that will try to meet the problem of dealing with the women of the half-world in a really Christian way, "red light districts" will cease to exist.

Atlanta, Georgia, has abolished segregated vice. Washington, D. C., has done the same. Bloomington could if she would, and Bloomington would if public sentiment were sufficiently aroused.

Any reform movement that stops short of seeking to provide for the women involved stops too soon. Both destructive and constructive reform is needed here as elsewhere. When a committee visited Mayor Golden Rule Jones of Toledo and pleaded with him to close up the segregated districts he asked what provision they had made for the women of those districts. The committee confessed they had not given that matter thought. "Well," said the mayor, "I will tell you what we can do. I will agree to take one of these women in my home; if each member of your committee will do the same and we can find sufficient homes for all of these women where they can be taken care of and helped on to a different way of life, I will agree to close the places." This proposition quite shocked the committee and they left the mayor's office with very little more to say.

Whatever we may think of the mayor's method we must surely acknowledge that he was right in spirit and principle.

Society will have to enter into this great movement in a larger way than merely to abolish either the saloon or segregated vice. It must both abolish and conserve, tear down and reconstruct, and it must lay its biggest and best emphasis on saving the oncoming generation from, rather than the present generation out of, the cesspools of iniquity.

The New Chivalry.

There was an old chivalry of knights who fought for fair ladies and gladly went to death for their favor. There is a new chivalry, the knights of which must fight the dragon of impurity and if need be, lay down their lives for the sanctity and the chastity of their womanhood, and the purity and strength of their manhood. Like all great movements in behalf of the weak and trodden upon this reform seems slow in coming and often temporary defeat is experienced but Religious Education Association Meets.

Diplomas for efficiency in Sunday-school studies, with class numerals and graduating exercises like those in high schools and colleges, were suggestions put forward by E. Morris Fergusson of Philadelphia last week in discussing Sunday-school work at a departmental conference of the Religious Educational association, which held its international convention at New Haven, Conn.

He would grade boys and girls by age, with the class just entering intermediate work ranked as 1920, and allow a six year course of study. The "'old' young people" would be in a postgraduate course.

John L. Alexander of Chicago declared there were too many organizations in Sunday-schools for students between the ages of 12 and 18.

Officers elected of the Sunday-school workers' section are as follows:

Chairman of committee, Prof. Norman S. Richardson, professor religious education at Boston Theological seminary.

Vice chairman, Rev. W. E. Gardner, general secretary religious education department Protestant Episcopal Church.

Recording secretary, Rev. C. E. Frank, director of religious education Delaware Avenue Baptist Church, Buffalo.

Executive secretary, Rev. J. W. F. Davies, Winnetka, Ill., Congregational Church executive committee.

Methodist Union Again Fails.

The two largest branches of the Methodist Church, the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church, south, have once more failed to find a basis of union, according to the report of the special commission on federation, whose report was published recently in the denominational papers.

"With deep humiliation," the report of the commission representing the Methodist Episcopal Church reads, "it must be confessed that these two great families of our one Methodism, while agreeing abroad, singing the same hymns, and teaching the same doctrines everywhere, have not ceased to contend at home and in the very presence of the people they are seeking to save through the gospel of peace and reconciliation.

"As for organic union, it has become evident after the most brotherly and anxious conference between their representatives, that the historic and deeply rooted differences between their respective conceptions of civil, and hence of ecclesiastical, representative government interpose a barrier not to be at once broken down."

The report says that the effort of the churches to get together was begun ten years after the close of the war. The report is signed by Bishops Earl Cranston, C. W. Smith, and N. Luccock, and by six other members.

Marion Lawrance Declines Honor.

Marion Lawrance has declined the world's Sunday-school secretaryship which was offered to him following the Zurich meeting. Mr. Lawrance prefers to continue in the international work which he has been doing. The declined office has been offered to and has been accepted by Frank L. Brown, of Brooklyn. Mr. Brown is a Methodist layman who gave up business some years ago to devote his time to Sunday-school work in connection with a Brooklyn, N. Y., church. He will take up his new duties April 1, with offices in New York City.

To Promote Purity of the Stage.

A movement has started in New York to make the sentiments of the Roman Catholics of the country for a purified drama felt throughout the country. It is proposed to publish a list of plays which are suitable for Catholics in good standing to attend.

Presbyterians Fight Saloon.

The Presbyterian Church will send 250 temperance workers into California, Colorado, Washington, and Oregon to help to carry prohibition in these four states at the next autumn election. They will use moving picture films to reenforce their arguments against the saloon. The campaign will be under the control of the Presbyterian Board of Temperance.

What Church Music Costs.

It is estimated that the bill of the churches for music each year is as follows: Organs built, $10,000,000; choir salaries, $30,000,000; organists' salaries, $25,000,000. Sheet music, including hymn books, is estimated at $7,500,000.

Epicopalians for Bible Teaching.

The Episcopal deans of the diocese of Chicago have adopted resolutions calling on all boards of education in the district to provide for Bible reading, without comment, in the schools. Provision for the instruction of the school children weekly, according to their respective religious affiliations is also urged on the grounds that a child has an inalienable right to be taught the religion of his parents.

Laymen's Missionary Movement.

The Laymen's Missionary Movement of the Southern Presbyterian Church has published in pamphlet form a series of addresses delivered by Rev. W. R. Dobyns, at the laymen's missionary convention held in Memphis. They put emphasis on "personal work" in a way that is suggested by these titles of chapters: "Soul Winning the Business of Every Believer," "Where to Begin," "How to Use the Word," "An Example," "Rendering Account." Copies can be secured at five cents each or $3 a hundred postpaid. Orders for the booklet should be sent to the Laymen's Missionary Movement, Box 334, Athens, Georgia.

A Manse for Every Minister.

The Board of Church Erection of the Presbyterian Church are promoting a campaign looking toward "a manse for every minister."

Quoted From a Contemporary.

"Pittsburgh placed between forty and fifty thousand dollars at the feet of Evangelist Sunday for eight weeks' preaching. Eighty-four Methodist preachers laboring in the mountains of the South receive for twelve months' constant preaching and work a total of $20,487, or one-half the Pittsburgh contribution."

The Church Wants Holiness

W. F. OLDHAM IN THE NORTHWESTERN CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

O, my Methodism, which found me a careless, godless youth, a world's diameter from where I now stand—would God I could cause thee to hear the voice of the Son of Man as He crieth, "I counsel thee to buy of Me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich * * * and anoint thine eyes with eye salve, that thou mayest see." Then wouldst thou see that not great buildings and mighty institutions, not high scholarship nor proud gatherings of large numbers, not talks of a splendid past nor pride of ancestry, but having the spirit of devotion to God and a flaming zeal for the souls of men—the abiding tokens of a clean heart filled with the Holy Ghost—that in these are thy strength, thy promise for a better future and the real grounds of hope for being trusted with a great program for a world's redemption. Yet there are many, though generally of our humbler folk, who are called, have heard, and accepted—effectually called to be saints—who know the cleansing blood and wear "a white stone and in the stone a new name written, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it," that new best name of perfect love, and for these I am sure I speak when I say they want holiness—they want it in the pulpit, they want the deep, cleansing streams to flow up through their pastors' hearts, through their lips into the hearts of the listening congregations. They want these to flow through our editors' hearts and down through their pens till the pages of our official papers will be filled with the tender green grass upon which the flocks of God may feed. They want it in our schools and colleges and seminaries. They want that which has been the birthright of Methodist schools, not to be hidden from Methodist eyes or so muffled as not to be perceptible to Methodist ears.

Of Human Interest

A Montessori Story.

"Your aristocratic American millionaire will often make a mesalliance, and marry a chorus girl or a parior maid. But I notice that your aristocratic American millionairess, always keeping her head, makes a good match."

The speaker was Mme. Montessori, the Italian educationalist. She continued:

"On my way hither on the boat there was a beautiful American heiress to whom a young magazine writer from the West paid assiduous court. But he, on account of the low rates of the magazines, was as poor as a church mouse, and so the heiress would not consider him seriously.

"As they leaned side by side over the rail one afternoon, the heiress, looking out over the rolling blue waters, sighed and said:

" 'I love the sea.'

"The impoverished and embittered magazine writer retorted with a sneer:

" 'I don't see why. It hasn't got any money.' "

Li Hung Rebukes Westerners.

The following passage from the "Memoirs of Li Hung Chang," which have been recently edited by Mr. W. F. Mannix, is typical of the great viceroy's attitude toward most of the foreigners who were sent out to the Flowery Kingdom—an opinion that was typical, no doubt, of the Chinese nation at large:

Sometimes the pretensions of these "learned men" from the West anger me, at other times I feel sorry for them, and now very often I sit down and laugh at them until my dinner is all upside down! Today I was talking with a professor, who came all the way from Massachusetts to teach in the new university, and he was telling me that he should be lost until his books arrived.

"I have eighteen large volumes that I use in my work," he said; "books of science, art, ethics, and lexicography."

"Eighteen?" I asked. "Do you need them all?"

"Oh, yes; but they cover the whole range of my work."

I did not like to smile in his face, but I could not help it. He asked me the reason for my apparent merriment.

"I was only thinking how much more exhaustive your Western wisdom must be than ours," I replied. Then I told him that Kang Hsi, our literary emperor, had compiled and issued the Pei Wen Yun Fu (Literary Concordance) in 1711. and that it consisted of 130 volumes.

How Mark Twain Proved It.

When Mark Twain was living in Hartford, Connecticut, where Dr. Doane, now Bishop of Albany, was rector of an Episcopal church, he went to hear one of the clergyman's best sermons. After it was over Mark approached the doctor and said politely:

"I have enjoyed your sermon this morning. I welcomed it as I would an old friend. I have a book at home in my library that contains every word of it."

"Why, that can't be, Mr. Clemens," replied the rector.

"All the same, it is so," said Twain.

"Well, I certainly should like to see that book," rejoined the rector with dignity.

"All right," replied Mark; "you shall have it," and the next morning Doctor Doane received with Mark Twain's compliments a dictionary.

The President's Joke on Himself.

President Wilson does not hesitate to tell jokes on himself, and he has more than once remarked that compared to the football captain in the fall season he was a very inconspicuous personage on the Princeton campus. To illustrate this he cited the case of a freshman who accosted him at a railroad station in a town in New Jersey. It was a few days after college had opened and the president's face seemed familiar to the freshman but he confused it with that of a tailor from whom he had just purchased a suit of clothes. The youth asked about business in Princeton with something of a patronizing air and nonchalantly gave his opinion of current campus events. Mr. Wilson tried to be as polite as a tailor might be to his customer until the train departed.

Robert Bridges Gives Advice.

Robert Bridges, the new English poet laureate, is a fastidious critic, and hence sees little to admire in commonplace verse.

A poet once brought to Mr. Bridges two very long odes that he proposed to submit to the English Review.

"I'll read them both aloud," the young man said, "and afterward you will tell me which is in your opinion the more likely to be accepted by the English Review."

Poor Mr. Bridges sighed and settled himself in his chair, and the other in his loud, harsh voice, read the first ode. It was very long, and at its conclusion Mr. Bridges leaped to his feet and said briskly:

"Now, my young friend, I can advise you. Send the other ode to the Review."

An Exacting Command.

When Andrew D. White was minister to Germany, he received a mandatory epistle from an old lady in the West, who enclosed in her letter four pieces of white linen, each some six inches square. "We are going to have a fair in our church," she wrote, "and I am making an autograph quilt. I want you to get me the autographs of the emperor, the empress, the crown prince, and Bismarck, and tell them to be careful not to write too near the edge of the squares, as a seam has to be allowed for putting them together."

Carter Glass on Currency Bill.

Representative Carter Glass, congratulated on the currency bill, said:

"It has received a good deal of unfriendly criticism, but it is a good bill, a fair bill. If all bills were as fair we would be well off. But all bills aren't as fair. Take the Blue Ridge doctor's bill, for example.

"A Blue Ridge man on receiving his doctor's bill, hurried to the doctor's office and protested:

" 'What does this mean, doc? Besides the stipulated fee you have charged me $100 extra for instruments!'

" 'Yes, I know,' said the doctor. 'That's for a very valuable saw that I left in your wife after her operation through inadvertence.' "

The World is Growing Better

The Church and Downtown Districts.

The church seems to have taken a turn for the better in its treatment of the downtown districts, where the people are massed together whose lives are as precious surely as those who live in the more fashionable parts of town. New York City has but few churches holding the fort in its downtown district. The same is true of other eastern cities. Kansas City Disciples have recently determined to continue, with zeal, the work of the old First Church there. St. Louis, be it said in sorrow, is going to let the old "Mother Church"—the First, "go west."

But Chicago churches have awakened to the appeal of the downtown district. We quote from the "Record-Herald:"

"It no longer is fashionable or customary for Chicago churches to 'sell out' and move when the manufacturing district, the slum or the levee creeps up to their portals. The church of today refuses to be swept aside by either commerce or evil. Instead, its people stand their ground, remodel their place of worship to meet the new needs of the community, and fight a harder battle than before. The churches of Chicago now are bearing the burden of the city's social service work.

"Chicago churches, in a little more than five years, have broken out from the chrysalis of centuries of exclusive shrine maintenance: they have begun more practically to live the lives of their people, to take up their people's burdens, feel their sorrows, share their joys and move with them and for them toward the kingdom of the Master."

In recent days the question of losing old Trinity Church (Episcopalian) has been agitating that people. But the decision is that that important work will go on. Determination to save the historic landmark crystallized into action when a resolution unanimously adopted by the vestry at a special meeting held last week was read:

The resolution follows: "It is the sense of the vestry of Trinity Episcopal Church that its first obligation is to make every effort possible to save Trinity Church and its historic memories at its present location."

The enthusiasm of the parishioners, awakened by the communication from the vestry, expressed itself in two ways: Immediate individual pledges to the endowment fund. Promises of personal service.

Constructive plans for the perpetuation of the church provide for the subscription of a guarantee fund to cover the current expenses of the parish during a period of three years and for the raising of a permanent endowment before the expiration of that time. The total endowment so far subscribed was raised to approximately $77,500 before the conclusion of the meeting last week. Subscriptions at the meeting ranged from small salary sacrifices of choir boys to $3,000.

Disciples Table Talk

C. S. Medbury on "Witnessing."

Dr. C. S. Medbury believes that "the issue in the church today is to get men to testify if they have been witnesses to the Lord's work," according to statements made in a recent sermon preached at University Place Church, Des Moines. "Many of the people of the church may say that it is inappropriate for them on account of lack of experience to bear testimony,' he said. "Moody comes to me as an example. To him the certainty of Christ's resurrection was as clear as anything of the material world, and was clearer than it was to the Apostle Paul himself. Moody had the same visions as Paul did, and besides that had the experience of twenty centuries to bear him out. There are hundreds of others who have the same clear vision that Moody and Paul did. True it is that there is a difference between the testimonies of many, and that accounts for the differences of sects. Like the testimony of the witness in court, if often happens that men see the same thing differently. Vision, honor and information are necessary for the equipment of every witness, and his privilege is testimony. The call of a witness for Christ is a world ambassadorship, and carries with it more than to be an ambassador at the court of St. James. The call is with a purpose cosmopolitan, with a sense of humanity, and for the betterment of the world."

R. H. Crossfield in Florida.

Among the Disciple pioneer workers in the difficult Florida field is E. W. Elliott, who ministers at Tampa. He realizes that the kind of evangelism that counts is the solid, informing kind, and for that reason suggested that the church call President R. H. Crossfield of Transylvania, for a meeting. "The preaching was instructive, informing, inspiring," writes Mr. Elliott. "Dr. Crossfield finely combines the teaching and hortatory elements in his utterance. There were sixty additions to our congregation as one result of these special services—twenty-six of them by confession. Many people heard our distinctive position set forth in true fashion. Pres. Crossfield spoke before the High School, the Civic Lunch Club, the Y. M. C. A., and delighted all who heard him. He graciously gave his services to us, using a part of a granted vacation and for which we are profoundly grateful. We need men of his type here on the firing line of our brotherhood. He will be held in lasting remembrance for the good work he did among us. In the pulpit, in the homes, on the streets, in places of business—everywhere, his gentlemanly and Christian bearing added dignity and strength to the cause we plead." Miss Una Dell Berry was the efficient director of song during the meeting.

Christian Man Sets High Standard.

Mr. Fletcher Cowherd, President of the Disciples' Church Extension Society, was recently elected president of the Real Estate Board of Kansas City, and made an inaugural address at the annual meeting of that Board which prompted much favorable comment on account of the high level upon which he insisted the affairs of the city should be conducted. The Kansas City Star calls it a "memorable speech," and says editorially that Mr. Cowherd "ranged himself on the side of human welfare against the forces of selfishness and greed." "The city ought not to seek the least it can do for its poorer working classes, but rather the most," said Mr. Cowherd. "We ought to insist on a housing code which will require houses that are built and rented to be at least healthful and safe." The municipally owned water works, with its profits for the city and its comparatively good service, was contrasted with privately owned utilities, with their profits taken out of the city and their frequently miserable service," says the Star: "The wretched condition of street paving and the lack of traffic ways were stated by Mr. Cowherd in an inspiring way; for his plain facing of the facts was inspiring. It proved a determination not to permit the bad facts to continue if emphatic protest and constructive work for better things could overcome them. With such an inaugural address, with its enthusiastic reception and with the other accompaniment of a declaration for the great station park, the Real Estate Board has been pledged to a year of fine work for the best interests of Kansas City."

S. G. Inman's Tour.

S. G. Inman, missionary in Mexico, left Saturday, February 28, on a six months' tour of South America in the interest of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. On his trip Mr. Inman will take greetings to all mission stations in Latin America, and will investigate the social, economic and religious conditions in Porto Rico, Jamaica and various countries of South America, with a view of strengthening the work already established, but especially with the objective of enlarging the work by finding where it will be best to secure locations for new mission stations.

Mr. Inman will represent also the Committee on Co-operation in Latin America, which was appointed by the General Missionary Conference of all boards on Latin America, in which capacity he will help to solve the urgent problems of co-operation in the publication of evangelical literature, of arousing interest in the first general conference on Latin America, which will be held most probably in 1916 in some city of Latin America, and of finding the best ways in which the committee can render help to Latin America. In this capacity Mr. Inman takes greetings to all missionaries in Latin America from all evangelical churches in the United States. The itinerary of Mr. Inman is reported as follows: Sail from New York, steamship "Brazos," N. Y. Porto Rico Line, Saturday, Feb. 28; arrive at San Juan, Porto Rico, March 4, mail address, care Rev. More Constructive Evangelism.

"Theological pugilism, mob psychology and ecclesiastical quackery," had no place in the recent evangelistic campaign at Carthage, Ill., writes A. L. Cole, pastor of the church there. And yet he pronounces it the most successful protracted meeting with which he has been connected. Dr. Chas. A. Lockhart, of Canton, Mo., and Elmer E. Rice. of Dixon, Ill., led in the meetings, which continued through February, until the 22d. Mr. Cole writes further: "We were so busy working for the cause of Christ that we forgot all about the 'sects' and no attempt was made to give them 'medicine' or 'put them out of business.' Dr. Lockhart preaches the gospel in terms of modern speech. He preaches the gospel to the people of today. That is enough to say of any man. Mr. Rice is a fine souled, sweet spirited young man and a master of song. He is a splendid soloist and chorus leader. Seven grown people entered the larger field of Christian service and in no uncertain way will they be 'workers together with God.'"

Dean Lhamon at Indianapolis.

Dean W. J. Lhamon, head of the Biblical department of Drury College, in Missouri, delivered a course of lectures at the College of Missions, Indianapolis, Feb. 24-27. The general theme was "The Character of Christ," special subjects being as follows: "The Argument—A Study in Relativity," "The Universality of Christ," "The Masterliness of Christ," "The Love of Christ," "The Severity of Christ," "The Continuity of Christ," "The Finality of Christ," "Christ and Other Founders of Religions."

The church at Freeport, Ill., which has been holding services in the Masonic temple for several years, will soon come into possession of property of its own through purchase of a residence property. It is proposed to remodel the house in order to use the first floor for church and Sunday-school purposes, and to use the upstairs as living rooms for the pastor. This church has been without a permanent house of worship since the work was established eight or ten years ago. E. T. Cornelius ministers in this field. The congregation has been prospering under Mr. Cornelius' work and the result is the steps to acquire a permanent place of worship.

Clarence Mitchell of Kalispell, Montana, has resigned after a successful ministry of three years with that church. The Kalispell church is one of our strong churches in the state of Montana. Mr. Mitchell is going east again on account of his mother's age and health. Mr. Mitchell has a fine record of splendid work done both as a pastor and a general evangelist. He was for several years pastor of the church at Lima, Ohio. He has the degree of Master of Arts and Doctor of Divinity, the latter conferred last year by the Ohio Northern University, Ada, O., where he was pastor previous to coming to Kalispell. He may be addressed at the latter point.

The Christian young people of Champaign, Ill., have formed "The Christian Young Peoples Union of Champaign and Urbana. The organization was perfected at a big banquet in the parlors of University Place Christian Church, in Champaign, recently. More than four hundred people, mostly members of young people's societies represented in the newly formed union, were present at the banquet. The new organization succeeds the Twin City Christian Endeavor Union which was organized several years ago. Fourteen societies are included in the present organization.

As a farewell to their pastor the Monmouth, Ill., congregation recently held a reception for Mr. and Mrs. D. E. Hughes. Mr. Hughes was presented with a silver loving cup. Engraved on one side of the loving cup was "Presented to Delaney E. Hughes by the First Christian Church congregation of Monmouth, Illinois, in appreciation of fifteen years of service, 1889 to 1914." On the other side was engraved a cross and an open Bible, and on the Bible the words, "Well done, good and faithful servant."

A Hand Book of Union Avenue Church, St. Louis, has recently come from the pen of B. A. Abbott, the pastor. It contains chapters on the Disciples of Christ at large, the Disciples in St. Louis, the Union Avenue Church—its property and equipment, doctrines and ideals, management, revenues, departments of the church, the music, organ, social life, and some little sermons that the world needs. The idea of the book is worthy of emulation.

R. H. Ingram, a well known Iowa minister, has gone to Baltimore where he will enter the hospital at the Johns Hopkins University and submit to radium treatment for cancer. Mr. Ingram has been suffering for several years with a growth on the back of his head, which has involved the glands on his neck. He has been treated at Rochester and the surgeons there believe that the radium treatment will successfully combat the disease.

About forty representatives of the Christian churches of the county met at Severance, Kan., recently, and perfected an organization to be known as the association of the Christian churches. The purpose of this organization is to assist in evangelizing the county, assisting the weak churches, and promoting a closer fellowship between the Christian people. The association will hold a general annual meeting each year.

We are in receipt of the program of the commencement exercises of the East China Union Medical College, at the University of Nanking. The exercises occurred January 22. There were five graduating students. On the program, among others, were Dr. W. E. Macklin; the Military Governor, Gen. F'eng Kuo Chang; the Civil Governor, Hon. Han Kuo Chuin; the University President, and Rev. J. E. Williams.

J. B. Holmes has asked to be released from the pastorate of the First church, Forest Grove, Ore. He will take up work in California, where he is at the present time. Mrs. Holmes and the three children will remain in Forest Grove until the end of the school term. The church has granted the desired release and will seek a new pastor. Mr. Holmes resigns the pastorate here to take up a larger charge.

There was a good attendance of the Knights of Pythias lodge of Liberty, Mo., at the Christian Church two weeks ago, to hear the special sermon by Mr. Frank upon the subject, "The Brotherhood of Man." The Knights of Pythias fraternity was fifty years old that week, and the local lodge asked Mr. Frank to preach this sermon as the beginning of their celebration week.

By a unanimous vote the congregation of First Church, Fresno, Calif., adopted the plans for a new building presented by the building committee. The new building will cost $70,000. The floor plan calls for a structure 81x119 feet with a modern basement and thorough heating and ventilating devices. Whitestone, marble and concrete will be used in construction.

Geo. L. Peters has resigned the pastorate of Central Church, Springfield, Mo., of which he has been pastor for five years. He closes his work April 1. This is one of the largest of the Disciple churches in the state and under the present pastorate it has been a force for righteousness in the city, and aggressive in all missionary work.

The time for the simultaneous "Every-member Canvass" for missions in our churches is soon at hand. The packet of literature issued by our people may be secured for ten cents upon application to Grant K. Lewis, Carew Building, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Colorado State Convention will be held in three sections in June. Greeley, Canon City, and Paonia. There will be sessions devoted to the United Missionary Campaign and the Men's Movement.

R. G. Frank, of Liberty, Mo., is getting to be such a busy man that he has rented two rooms in a new bank building of Liberty, and will have his office there. He has much correspondence as secretary of the general convention.

The mother of Burris A. Jenkins, pastor at Linwood Boulevard, Kansas City, died two weeks ago. Mr. Jenkins is having a recurrence of the trouble in his knee, from which he has suffered much in late years.

It is rumored that Arthur Lindsay, pastor at Clinton, Mo., is a possible candidate for governor. Mr. Lindsay is well known by reason of his connection with the Federation of Missouri Commercial Clubs.

On Sunday, March 8, the first services were held in the new church at Winchester, Ind. C. W. Cauble, State Secretary of the Churches of Christ in Indiana, spoke at both morning and evening services.

The churches of Oakland, Kan., are joining in a public welfare campaign. Union services, under the auspices of the Kansas Public Welfare League, were recently held at the Christian Church of that town.

The Kansas Christian Ministerial Institute will be held April 7-9 in Arkansas City, where J. E. Henshaw ministers. The Oklahoma ministers, it is reported, will also attend this meeting.

The church at Benton, Ill., burned with a loss of $8,000, insurance $3,000. The structure will be replaced immediately with a $20,000 building.

NEW YORK NOTES.

The Central Church of the Disciples of Christ met on Sunday evening, March 8, in the Lenox Ave. Church of the Disciples, in a union service. Dr. J. M. Philputt, pastor of Central Church, preached. On the next Sunday evening the members of the Lenox Ave. Church will meet in Central Church and Dr. Z. T. Sweeney, pastor at Lenox Ave., will deliver the sermon. This is the beginning of the services looking toward the union of the two congregations.

MISSOURI BIBLE COLLEGE PROSPERS.

The work of the Bible College of Missouri at Columbia is prospering. Under the leadership of Dean G. D. Edwards, and with A. W. Taylor and Walter C. Gibbs assisting in the work of instruction, excellent results are reached in preparing young men for the ministry and in affording students of the State University an opportunity of Bible study and other Christian disciplines. With M. A. Hart, pastor of the Christian Church in Columbia, these men represent the Disciples in a most helpful way. Nor must it be forgotten that Christian College for Girls, of which Mrs. St. Clair Moss is president, is a Disciple institution. The close co-operation of the Bible College with the Y. M. C. A. in the religious care of the students is a ground of satisfaction to all interested in the educational work done at Columbia. The influence of the Bible College is felt in all parts of the university, and not only is credit given for a considerable part of the work done, but the instruction given here is highly regarded by the leaders in university work. The Bible College appears an admirable curriculum for men preparing for the ministry and other religious work.

Dr. H. L. Willett spent four days a week since in lecture work at the University of Missouri, under the joint auspices of the Missouri Bible College and the University Y. M. C. A.

UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO NOTES.

Announcement was made during the past week that President Judson is to visit China in the near future to inspect and report upon the medical educational work for the trustees of the General Educational Foundation. He will start about March 20, and accompanied by Mrs. Judson and a medical expert, will spend about six months in China. This will be welcome news to many Chicago people now at work in the new republic.

Ground is being broken for the new classical building, which will be located on the southwest corner of the quadrangles, just south of South Divinity Hall, and extending eastward toward Harper Memorial Library. This is one of the new buildings greatly needed, and long promised. Ground is soon to be broken also for the new Geology Building, adjoining Walker Museum.

Prof. Paul Shorey, who has been occupying the position of Roosevelt exchange professor at the University of Berlin, has finished his work there, and will spend a few weeks in Italy, before returning to the University of Chicago.

Prof. Allen Hoben, who has been supplying the pulpit of Memorial Church of Christ since the resignation of Mr. Dakin, has announced his candidacy as alderman for the Sixth ward in the approaching municipal elections. Professor Merriam has demonstrated the ability and duty of university men to take an active and informed part in city affairs. We are glad to see Professor Hoben take a similar step. Of course this will not interfere with his professional or ministerial duties.

General satisfaction has been expressed this week on the quadrangles at the successful completion of the campaign of the Divinity House for an additional endowment fund of fifty thousand dollars. The city press has had a good deal to say about the campaign, and especially the exclusion of the Divinity House from participation in the Men and Millions Movement. As was to be expected therefore, extended announcements of the completion of the fund appeared in several of the city papers, with more or less close approach to the facts. The result of this campaign so admirably conducted by Doctor Sharpe and the other officers of the Divinity House opens the way for the early creation of the building fund, long needed and now soon to be realized.

NEWS FROM THE MARCH OFFERING.

March 1 was a cold, disagreeable day in most parts of the country. This interfered with the offering. We hope the churches will push the offering with great vigor all through March.

The church at Providence, Ky., sends $100 as its March offering for foreign missions.

The church at Remington, Ind., reached $82.50 on the March offering, and will make it $100. This is aside from their weekly offering for missions. They expect to become a living-link in the Foreign society in the near future.

One of the coldest days in the season was March 1, a small congregation, but contributed to date $466, which assures the $600. John S. Crenshaw, Cadiz, Ky.

The Frankfort, Ind., church raised over $500 Sunday March 1. They expect the $600 next Sunday. Mrs. E. M. Drummond of Harda, India, their living-link spent the Sunday with them, and the people are delighted with her.

The Tabernacle Church, Lincoln, Neb., is providing their Living-link Fund in the support of W. H. Scott of India. They received three subscriptions of $100 each and five subscriptions of $25 each.

Weather very disagreeable yesterday, but first call for foreign missions resulted in an offering of $530. This is our largest offering on the first call. Of course we shall easily remain in the Living-link, and I will be disappointed if we do not go beyond it.—W. A. Fite, Paducah, Ky.

The churches in Mason County, Ky., become a Living-link in the Foreign Society, and will in the future support Miss Mina Van Cleave, China. A. F. Stahl has led in this campaign.

The First Church, Omaha, Neb., Chas. E. Cobbey, pastor, becomes a Living-link in the Foreign Society, and will in the future support their own missionary. This is an important step for Omaha. Bert Wilson, secretary, spent Sunday, March 1, with them.

The Scottsburg, Ind., church more than doubled last year's offering. W. T. Sellers is the minister.

The Angola, Ind., church sees its Living-link fund in sight. This is one of the steadfast missionary churches of many years' standing. They support Miss Bertha Clawson of the Girls' College, Tokyo, Jan. It is by no means a wealthy church, but always loyal.

Lathrop, Mo., sends $100 and says there will be more. STEPHEN J. COREY, Sec.

NOTES FROM THE HOME FIELD.

The American Christian Missionary Society is gathering data concerning all the work either under missionary societies or by local churches among foreigners in our own land. It is important for us to know more about the workers and the work we are conducting as a people among the immigrants. We most respectfully urge all the pastors and secretaries of either churches or missionary boards to write us for a statistical blank in order that this data may be gathered.

A few imperfect issues of the Year Book were mailed before the fact was discovered. Anyone receiving an imperfect book can have the same replaced by addressing this office.

Mark Wayne Williams, our missionary for the Second Church in Milwaukee, carries the Gospel message in varied form to his entire community. He speaks regularly once a month at the Old Folks' Home and also twice a week at the big shops, where sometimes as many as two hundred men are reached. He has a men's club that meets at 10 o'clock each morning for conference and Bible study; also a gymnasium class for boys and one for girls meeting weekly.

O. P. Spiegel of Montgomery, Ala., opened a beautiful chapel to the public with a week of revival service in January. He reports the Sunday-school as having doubled and the audiences quadrupled since getting into their own building. Mr. Spiegel was the speaker at a great mass meeting at the court house on World's Temperance day.

Grover C. Schurman is making progress as minister of our church at University Pl., Minneapolis. Recently D. E. Olson, our missionary to the Scandinavians, held a successful revival which resulted in sixty additions to the church.

M. B. Ryan, our superintendent for Alberta, gave most of January to the work at Calgary where he lives. The church held its first anniversary meeting January 5. Within the year the membership has grown from twenty to fifty-four.

Morton L. Rose is laboring under many handicaps and at great sacrifice to establish our cause at Edmonton. We now have fifty-one members. The church is compelled to meet in a rented hall. Its one great need is a home of its own. Our missionary work is seriously handicapped for the lack of some way to help weak congregations in strategic centers to an outright gift of a lot or building in which to meet.

S. L. Jackson of Daytona reports a unique work in the vicinity of his town called the Holly Hill Union Church of Christ. In this thriving little community, without any church, he found nine different bodies represented. They agreed to accept the New Testament as their rule of faith and practice and at once proceeded to organize a congregation. When disputed points have arisen they have referred to the Book. This thus far has proved satisfactory in settling all differences including that of the form of baptism. Mr. Jackson occupies a prominent place in the community life of his town.

J. R. Blunt is getting well started as our missionary in the great city of Winnipeg. He recently went here from Missouri. He is maintained as the Living Link of the Independence Boulevard Church, Kansas City.

Our work at Pensacola under Thos. Lennox is growing well since it took possession of its new home. Seventy-five percent of the membership is reported as attending services regularly.

W. L. McIlvaine, well known for his long service in Washington, is now in Alberta where he has charge of a congregation of forty-four members at Erskine. Mr. McIlvaine is a frontier missionary to the manner born and we have many congregations in the Northwest that owe their present life and activity to his devotion.

Reports from Harrisburg tell us of a great meeting just closing with the Minges Evangelistic Company. F. J. Stinson, with a persistency worthy of the great cause which he represents, is responsible for this great awakening in Harrisburg. Full reports of the meeting have not reached us. We understand that many additions were secured to various churches, something like 100 being added to our congregation of Disciples and the church, practically reorganized, now faces fair prospects of success.

Our work at Gary, Ind., has been making substantial progress under the ministry of S. W. Nay. The church is one of the prominent and dependable factors for moral and spiritual progress in that industrial center. It is gradually becoming self-supporting. With the other churches of the city it serves through the Young Men's Christian Association, along many institutional lines, bringing help to the thousands of employes, foreign as well as American, of the steel mills.

Arrangements are practically concluded which will reopen our work at Galveston under an efficient ministry. The churches at Houston and Beaumont, with the allied forces of the State and National Home Missionary Boards, have adopted a program which will provide the necessary funds through a series of years to secure the full time service of an able minister. As soon as the man can be found he will be located. This practically assures the success of our work at Galveston.

Our mission work among the Bulgarians in Chicago, reports progress. It has the best night school for teaching immigrants the English language in its history. Basil S. Keusseff reports an enrollment in this school of 120 scholars and an average attendance of over forty. By degrees he is winning converts among the people. Recently he has baptized four young men and two young women. Substantial progress is being made though everything is hindered for lack of a proper building. The one great need for our foreign work in Chicago as well as other cities is a settlement house of our own in which to do the work.

A SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

We are pleased to announce that Mr. Carey E. Morgan, pastor of the great Vine Street Church at Nashville, has accepted the presidency of the Board of Trustees of the American Christian Missionary Society.

Mr. Morgan will give considerable time to the administration affairs of the American Board. This will in no wise alter his relations to the great church for which he so effectively ministers. After much persuasion and from his deep sense of loyalty to the American Society, he consented to an arrangement whereby an assistant will be secured to relieve him of much of the details of his pastorate in order that he may serve the Home Board until such time as a permanent officer can be found. To this plan the Vine Street Church graciously gave consent. Some such arrangement became imperative in order to relieve the pressure of work in the home office until the committee succeeds in securing another secretary.

Mr. Morgan's thorough knowledge of the delicate problems facing our great Home Society gained by long service as a member of its Board of Directors, the strong confidence imposed in him by our brethren everywhere, the wide recognition freely given him for wisdom in counsel and ability in speech, mark him peculiarly as "the man of the hour" for the task to which he has been called.

NEWS FROM THE FOREIGN SOCIETY.

Last week a friend made a direct gift of $2,500 for the work of the Foreign Society. This friend expects to add $2,500 to this amount later on. This society is needing many such friends in the rapid development of its important work.

A friend in Indiana sends $200 on the Annuity Plan. This is his sixteenth gift on this plan. No safer and wiser step can be taken. Many have given no less than ten different gifts. The money can be put to a wise use at once.

A new railroad is expected at Luchowfu, China. This will put one of the important stations of our people in a more prominent position. Dr. Wakefield is now in full charge of the hospital since Dr. Butchart has been transferred to the new Medical College in Nankin. He is calling for another doctor.

The new missionary home for D. C. McCallum, Vigan, P. I., will have been completed during this month.

Our missionary press and the Vigan, P. I. hospital both had booths at the Provincial Fair, Jan. 1-2.

A number of baptisms are reported at different points in the Philippine Islands. Our work is progressing. Six were baptized at Vigan recently, and the native evangelists report conversions in their various fields. Dr. L. B. Kline, Vigan, P. I., reports 1,055 medical treatments during the month of December. There were twelve operations; twenty-nine were admitted to the hospital. The whole number of surgical cases amounted to 388. This is a fine medical record for one month.

The C. W. B. M. will build a Girls' School at Luchowfu, China. The money has been sent on to buy the land.

The contract for the new church building at Luchowfu, China, was let the day before Christmas. This building will provide for all church meetings, with room for Sunday-school. The main room will seat 350. By opening the Sunday-school rooms and crowding about 700 can be accommodated. The location is only a few steps from the main business street of the city.

Miss Alma Favors, sailed from Shanghai, China, January 9, on her furlough, and has reached her home in California. She was compelled to take her furlough six months earlier owing to her nervous condition.

The missionaries of Luchowfu, China, gave a Christmas Eve supper for all the Christians, with the teachers, etc. Fourteen tables, with eight at a table, were served.

Mr. Arthur Wang, who has been teaching in the Ling Yuen School for several years, will enter the Nanking Bible College.

W. H. Scott, our new missionary to India, writing from Luchow, Feb. 4, says, "I have been in India now a little over four months, and believe I am enjoying it more and more."

Dr. G. E. Miller of India, has finished certain studies in the College of the Bible at Lexington, Ky., and goes to Danville, Ill., where he and his wife will remain until time for sailing.

WOMEN AND THE N. B. A. EASTER, THE ANNUAL OFFERING DAY.

There has never been a time when women have not been represented on the official boards of the National Benevolent Association and its institutions with a strong majority. Out of a total of seventy-eight persons composing the official family of the Association and its institutions, forty-one (or 52 per cent), are women.

The Association does not draw the sex line in any department of its work. Men and boys are equally eligible with women and girls for admission into the Homes of the Association. However, a larger percentage of women and girls, than of men and boys, is to be found in these institutions.

Approximately seventy per cent of those cared for in our Homes for the Aged have been women. Indeed, in the beginning of the Association's work for the aged only women were admitted. When finally, a dear aged brother was received into the Home at Jacksonville the sisters were so pleased that they requested that others be sent.

Hundreds of widows with their children have been received into our homes. The mother is given employment in the Home. Her children are given the best possible advantages of church and school. Positions are secured for the sons or daughters after they have been equipped with training. The mother and her children then reestablish themselves in a home and give place for others. There is no more profitable feature of the Association's work in its Homes than this service it renders the mother and her children and, through them, society at large.

This great and worthy enterprise has been developed largely by the annual Easter offering. This offering has become the main dependence of our Homes for their daily necessities.

Last year we asked for an Easter offering of $35,000. While we did not reach that mark we were most thankful that we could report more than $25,000—our largest Easter offering.

Because of an additional instntution (The Christian Child Saving Institute, Omaha, Nebr.), and because of the increasing demands made upon us by our brethren everywhere we need at least $40,000 this Easter. Brethren, make Easter unanimous for the N. B. A. and this amount will be reached.

"Loving in Deed and in Truth," the finest Easter Exercise the Association has ever offered is just off the presses. Order your Easter supplies today.

LIVING HEAVENWARD.

A Review of the Quarter's Lessons.

I Teachableness and Trustfulness. Mark 9:30-40 and 10:13-16.

We have been ninety days with Jesus among the mountain-like hills of Perea. Twelve great lessons on the high art of "living heavenward" have been presented by the master teacher. He began with initiation into the mystery life of the Christian. He shamed pride by a living picture of greatness. He took a child and set him before the proud Pharisee and the self-assertive men of learning and he said, "Of such is the Kingdom of Heaven." Savants and sages were silent and conceit was chilled by his rebuke. The novitiate must kneel. Beatitude falls on the bowed head. The first requisite to greatness is humility. Teachableness can alone woo and win the truth. No pride is so likely to become hard and arrogant as pride of learning. Self-sufficiency is always impatient of revelation. Spiritual truth does not and cannot invade the castle of human assumption. God comes to man as a loving benefactor, but he compels no man to receive his gift. Divine love is never forced upon any.

II Holiness and Happiness. Luke 10:1, 20-24.

Holiness and happiness are God's plan for man. The mission of the twelve and of the seventy was a mission of healing and of peace. The broken life awakens pity. God cannot use a fragment of a man, hence he seeks his restoration. Since all lives are broken by sin Jesus Christ comes to repair and to restore. He accomplishes this by imparting himself. The moment he has an unhindered opportunity to take the broken fragments, he welds them together in the fires of holy affection. A fractional life is a failure. Jesus manifested his interest in human happiness as well as in human holiness.

III. Brothering the Broken and the Belated. Luke 10:25-37.

The victimized Jericho traveler presents one of the most thrilling of Biblical pictures. The Good Samaritan story will live as long as language is spoken or written. It establishes forever God's thought as to the kinship of humanity. It compels the removal of all boundary lines between nations and races. True humanism has no relation to latitude and longitude. Revelation and religion declare for the universality of human relationship. The reach of human sympathy must ignore all barriers and sweep beyond them. Only opportunity can measure obligation. Service is a stern duty but it is also the highest of privileges. No man can live heavenward alone. The world is filled with over-borne pilgrims, with belated travelers and with overwhelmed and victimized sufferers. It is not enough to see and to pity. Our gospel is a gospel of help in order to hope.

IV. Womanhood Winning the World. Luke 8:3, 9:57-62, 10:38-42.

Jesus discovered womanhood. It had never been either appreciated or understood. Christ was the most virile of men yet exalted the virtue of gentlenss and graciousnss. Feminine refinement responded to his divine personality. He attracted by his regal kindness, his noble courtesy, his serenity and his sincerity. The ministering women won for themselves an unexpected immortality and fame where contemporary Pharisees passed away ignominiously to be forgotten. No monuments are comparable with a fragrant memory. The urgency of the kingdom call is set forth powerfully in the incidents relating to proposed discipleship. One said, "Lord, I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest." He was promised no reward, but homelessness here, yet urged to follow. Another was called, temporized and trifled with his opportunity and met with serious rebuke. No apology for neglect is accepted. All excuses for failure to respond to the call of Christ are ruled out of court.

V. A Working Model of Prayer. Luke 11:1-13.

The search for God is universal. Even those who are afraid of him are drawn toward him resistlessly with desire to discover and determine what is involved in the relation of man to God. How are we to bring God's wisdom and power to bear on life's problems? The struggle is severe. Fighting is fierce. The early disciples had suspicions of lurking danger. They were in fellowship with one who was acquainted with God. They wanted to make the same acquaintance. It is the prayer question, "Lord, teach us to pray." How to gain the ear of God, that is the great question of life. Jesus answered the question by giving to the world the model prayer. We must find the way to God before we can know the will of God. The Lord's prayer passed to the prayer road which leads to the throne. It is not exhaustive, it is simply suggestive. It is not the whole of the prayer road. It is the posted sign-board giving the direction we are to go. We follow the model by the method to be adopted. Prayer must be importunate and persistent. The reason of this is not God's unwillingness but our own unpreparedness for the very blessings we seek. It is when prayer becomes a passion that it prevails.

VI. Eviction Through Occupation. Luke 11:14-26, 33-36.

The pervasivness of evil requires no evidence beyond its effects in the world. The broken pieces of the wrecked ship are evidences enough of storm. Uprooted trees are sufficient evidence of the cyclone. Man's proneness to evil doing is sufficient evidence of satanic solicitation. Evicting evil spirits is a divine business. Entrance and occupancy were Christ's way of restoring sanity. He warned against the light which seeks to be moral but is not willing to be spiritual. The "empty, swept, and garnished" room is in perpetual peril. The unoccupied castle, however clean, is not safe. Emptiness is Satan's opportunity. The crown unworn will be the object of covetous ambition. To be filled with the spirit is to make usurpation impossible. Busy in blessing others we are safe however seriously assaulted. Substitution is God's way of transforming life. Evil is never dethroned until goodness is enthroned.

VII. Profession and Possession. Luke 11:37-54.

Jesus made the commonplace the vehicle of profoundest truth. Cup and platter philosophy presents an unanswerable logic. Not what we seem but what we are tells God's estimate of us. Shams are our shame. Pretense is our peril. Profession does not create obligation. The outside of the cup ought to be cleansed. Confession of Christ and profession of religion is a universal duty. Failure to acknowledge an obligation never lessens it. While profession does not create obligation, nor does the lack of it excuse from obligation, yet it does not itself fulfil obligation. With the confession of Christ there must be the possession of Christ. The life within must accord with the character of Jesus Christ. Christianity is the only religion that demands a morality correspondent to religious ceremonial and ideal. It makes little of form but everything of fact. True religion is concerned something about appearances but everything about reality.

VIII. Fear and Faith. Luke 12:1-12.

Fear is the enemy of humanity. The bane of life is the fear of passion, of poverty, of failure, of criticism, o disappointment, of disapprobation, of death and of the great beyond. The Gospel of Christ is one continuous exhortation, "Fear not." Jesus came with assurance to every benighted child of the human race. The possession of saving grace rules out all fear. The fear enjoined in the word of God is a reverential awe toward the Eternal and the Infinite. The only thing man needs to fear is unforgiven sin. He need not fear that, because he may bring himself into affectionate relationship with God instantly, by surrendering faith. Confession of Jesus relates us harmoniously to God.

IX. Vanishing Values. Luke 11:13-34.

We follow the path that leads to the most desired goal. "Where your treasure is there will your heart be also." With skilful hand Jesus pictured the man in pursuit of the golden goal. He has lost sight of God. He recognizes no rights, but only desires. He said, "My fruit, my barn, my corn, my goods, my soul." God is nothing. Goods are all. He had everything, yet, he had nothing. What did he leave? Everything. What did he take with him? Nothing. "This night thy soul shall be required of thee." The longest life is just a breath, a fleeting cloud, a passing shadow, but the life that is shortest is still long enough to acquire measureless and indestructible wealth. Man is all for the momentarily intoxicating. God is all for the enduring. Man considers quantity but God considers quality. The profitless life is one that is all for profit. The day's journey is not worth while if night does not find us folded by the Great Shepherd. It is a pitiful voyage that ends in shipwreck with the harbor lights in sight.

X. Valor No Substitute for Vigilance. Luke 12:35-48.

God's sentinels must be open-eyed. The enemy is always at the gate. The emissaries of evil are lying in ambush all along the way. Temptations are hot, and never wanting. The last battle is not fought until the day here is done. Slumbering under guard is criminal. The insistence of evil is only equalled by its insidiousness. Satan appears as an angel of light. He comes well dressed and well mannered. There is safety only in vigilance. There is not a sword thrust that may not be parried if we are on guard. There is not a fiery dart that will not fall extinguished at our feet without harming us if we know how to use the shield of faith. There is not a poison in the calyx of a single fragrant flower of pleasure that may not be neutralized by the dews of divine grace.

XI. Ties and Sanctities. Luke 13:10-17, 14:1-6.

All time is God's time. Minutes are sacred. All places are holy. Yet a seventh of the days of life are set apart as peculiarly the Lord's. Just to live occupies and preoccupies. Bodily necessities present compulsions so urgent as to lead to the peril of neglecting the soul. In addition to all this there is the appeal of ambition, the love of pleasure. There are the fierce competitions of life. There must be some time when we let go of earth and take hold of heaven. There must be a definite period set apart for soul cultivation, or the heart will be barren. The Lord's day is for soul delight and soul development.

XII. The Expanding Life. Luke 13:18-35.

"Amplius." This the watchword of the life in Christ. From the minute to the majestic. The mustard seed and then the tree, the single particle of leaven, and then the whole transformed. The rivulet and then the river, the bay and then the ocean; the sunbeam and then the day of splendor; the sketch and then the life-like painting; the alphabet and then thought flowing in rythmic paragraphs, a lifting root, widening walls, deepening minds, that is the all-glorious life in Jesus Christ.

The Mid-Week Service

By Silas Jones.

TOPIC FOR MARCH 25, 1914.

Obstacles to Christian Union. Gal. 5:19-21; I Cor. 3:17.

The obstacles to Christian union which we are to consider this week are the evil thoughts and practices of Christians. The first obstacle which every one of us should examine is the evil in his own life. We have been engaged in pointing out the bad ways of our neighbors which prolong divisions among the disciples of Jesus. If we can muster up enough wisdom and courage for the task, we shall promote union by frankly stating to ourselves, possibly to the world, our own deficiencies.

DISCUSSION.

We arrive at truth by discussion. We may hope for all aspects of great questions to be presented only when every man is at liberty to speak his mind. Says Bagehot: "All the great movements of thought in ancient and modern times have been nearly connected in times with government by discussion. * * And it has been at the time of great epochs of thought—at the Peloponesian War, at the Roman Republic, at the Reformation, at the French Revolution—that such liberty of speaking and thinking have produced their full effect." But when the time comes for action discussion is a menace to progress. In many places union would be promoted if people would quit talking about it and go to work at what they know should be done by the united efforts of the disciples of the Lord. Discussion frequently magnifies differences. When it begins to do this, we need to be brought to see things in their right relations by coming face to face with the disagreeable work that confronts all Christians. Sermons on Christian union may intensify or allay sectarian feeling.

SKEPTICISM.

"There is," says Professor Perry, "a more restricted form of anarchism in skepticism which attached finality to differences of opinion, and overlook the fact that these very differences must be regarded as approaches to the common truth. For men can differ only in the presence of identical objects which virtually annul their differences. To be free to think as one pleases cannot but mean to think as truly as possible, and so to approach as closely as possible to what others also tend to think." This skepticism would let every man go his way unchallenged. What seems right to you is right and what seems right to me is right, and it is foolish for us to try to understand each other or to discover a basis for satisfactory co-operation.

THE GLORIES OF THE PAST.

The prophets encouraged Israel by reference to her history. "Look unto the rock whence ye were hewn, and to the hole of the pit whence ye were digged." The trials and victories of ancestors are never forgotten by their worthy descendents. No group of Christians that has any just grounds for its existence can be without pride in its history. Just here we encounter a hindrance to union. We have heard how our fathers met the champions of error and put them to flight. These champions of error happened to be connected with some of the Christian bodies with which we are asked to unite. We may be told that times have changed and that some of the subjects debated are no longer up for consideration in the form they assumed in the days of our fathers. We may feel that it would be disloyalty not to continue the fight. Shall we allow the Philistines whom our fathers put to flight to defy the army of the living God? Thus in our zeal for the past we miss the duty of the present. When Christian unity finally arrives, we shall claim as our spiritual fathers the great men of all the denominations. We shall be proud of them because they loved the truth, not that they had more of it than their brethren from whom they differed

TO REMOVE CONFUSION

The National Benevolent Association of the Christian Church, 2955 N. Euclid Ave., St. Louis, Mo., has no connection whatever with "The Christian Woman's National Benevolent Association," 5861 Plymouth Ave., St. Louis, Mo., Mrs. T. R. Ayars, President.

The National Benevolent Association has served our churches for twenty-eight years. It is now conducting twelve institutions in ten different states, there is scarcely a state these Homes have not served.

The Association has only one institution in St. Louis, The Christian Orphans' Home 2591 N. Euclid Ave. In 1911 The Mothers and Babies Home work in St. Louis was consolidated with this Home.

The Association's Eleven Other Institutions are: Cleveland Christian Orphanage, Lorain Ave., and Bosworth Rd., Cleveland O.; Southern Christian Home, 299 Lee St., Atlanta, Go.; Juliette Fowler Christian Home (for children), Dallas Texas; The Colorado Christian Home, West 29th and Tennyson Aves., Denver, Colo.; The Christian Child Saving Institute, 42nd and Jackson Sts., Omaha, Nebr.; Northwestern Christian Home, (for old and young), Walla Walla, Wash.; Christian Old People's Home, 873 Grove St., Jacksonville, Ill.; Juliette Fowler Christian Home (for the aged), Dallas, Texas; Havens Home, East Aurora, N. Y.; Christian Hospital, Valparaiso, Ind.

That it may be adequately maintained and developed to meet the demands of our brotherhood we ask that our Bible Schools, "make it unanimous" this Easter for the N. B. A. At least $40,000 is needed.

THE REMARKABLE SUCCESS of "The Conquest," our new paper for adult and young people's Sunday School classes, Christian Endeavor societies, etc., is a matter of note. This paper is now two months old, and hardly a day passes without our hearing from various parts of the country enthusiastic words of praise for this new and unique weekly. "It stands in a class all its own," says one. "It has no competitor," says another. "It is a character-builder," says still another. And multitudes say that "The Conquest" fills a place which has been waiting for years. But read below just what is being said about "The Conquest."

What Some of Our Leaders Say

Rev. Peter Ainslie, Baltimore, Md.—"I am greatly pleased with your publications, and especially The Conquest. It is a paper of real merit and ought to have a most cordial support."

Robt. M. Hopkins, National Bible School Secretary—"It has been a great pleasure to read The Conquest. In my opinion you have given to our Sunday schools a most excellent journal. If you can maintain this high standard in its mechanical appearance and its literary contents, The Conquest will soon find a place in a large number of our senior and adult classes. Let me wish for you and this paper every success."

Rev. Claude E. Hill, National C. E. Secretary—"This paper ought to have a wide circulation among the young people of our churches. I like, especially, your treatment of the Endeavor Topic. I certainly wish the paper abundant success."

W. O. Rogers, of the Sunday School Times Staff—"I have examined your new paper, The Conquest, with great interest. It looks interesting, which is the first requisite. Then it is interesting, which is the second. It has a fine tone. I predict for it a real success."

Rev. A. Z. Conrad, Boston, Mass., Founder of Intermediate Endeavor—"I have received the copies of The Conquest and I want to say that it seems to me an admirable paper in every way. I believe it will have a wide circulation and will do a vast deal of good."

Dr. Franklin McElfresh, International Teacher Training Superintendent—"The Conquest is coming to my desk regularly now. It is a fine, live paper and looks like a live message to the Christian young man and woman."

Garry L. Cook, Indiana State Sunday School Superintendent—"I want to say that The Conquest looks good to me. I certainly like the general appearance of the paper. It is neat and dignified and attractive. I also like very much the different departments that you are using in the paper. I see no reason why you will not find a place for this paper. I am sure that we have schools that will find The Conquest just what they have been looking for. Congratulations!"

Rev. J. H. Goldner, Euclid Ave. Church, Cleveland—"I like The Conquest immensely. The treatment of the Sunday school lesson, C. E. and midweek prayer-meeting topics is fresh and satisfying. In addition there is an abundance of readable and informing matter of a high order. The paper merits a hearty reception."

Rev. G. L. Lobdell, Stockton, Cal.—"I am very favorably impressed with The Conquest. It is Christlike in spirit and scholarly in tone, yet sufficiently simple to meet all needs. The department of Modern Science and the World's Work, is alone worth the subscription price."

Rev. Elmer Ward Cole, Huntington, Ind.—"The Conquest has won a victory here. We like its dignity. Its tone is high. It belongs in a class all its own."

C. Manly Morton, Winston-Salem, N. C.—"I have the clipping habit. I went through the first issue of The Conquest, and when I had finished a mere skeleton was all that remained. That speaks for itself. Every page contains something worth filing. It is the best paper of its kind published."

Rev. Wm. Dunn Ryan, Central Church, Youngstown, O.—"I am delighted with The Conquest. It gives promise of supplying a very vital need. Its editors seem to appreciate the type of religious literature demanded by the youth of today."

L. C. Oberlies, State Bible School Secretary of Nebraska—"I want to congratulate you on The Conquest. It is a fine, snappy paper."

Some of "The Conquest's" Departments

The Conquest Bible Class, the most comprehensive and helpful lesson page published by the Disciples.

Bethany System of Sunday School Literature

It meets the test of use. Note what some of our leaders who have adopted the Bethany System say of it: - - -

REV. HOWARD T. CREE, AUGUSTA, GA.

We have been using the Bethany Lessons from the very beginning and have used no other. Samples of other publishing houses have been submitted but did not meet with the approval of the teachers as did the Bethany.

REV. H. H. HARMON, FIRST, LINCOLN, NEB.

Nothing could pry our superintendent and teachers loose from these lessons. They meet the needs of pupils of all years and make the teacher's work a joy. We have no word with which to express our satisfaction with the series.

REV. P. J. RICE, FIRST, EL PASO, TEX.

We have been using the Bethany Graded Lessons from the time you began to publish them and we are very highly pleased with them. We have often had occasion to compare them with the publications of other houses and can say we have found none that compare with them.

REV. L. J. MARSHALL, KANSAS CITY, MO.

I want to congratulate you upon the high quality of this literature. It is certainly a great satisfaction to feel that we are now able to put into the hands of all our Sunday-school pupils, material so splendidly classified and so thoroughly edited.

REV. JNO. McD. HORNE, CHARLESTON, ILL.

Your Graded material is excellent and provides a basis for genuine enthusiasm.

REV. T. E. WINTER, FULTON, MO.

Over a year ago our school adopted the Bethany Graded Lessons, upon vote of our teachers, who had examined personally the texts for their respective grades. They are a delight to all.

REV. H. D. C. MACLACHLIN, RICHMOND, VA.

We have used the Bethany Graded Lessons for three years, and the longer we use them the better we like them. They offer a Sunday-school course as nearly perfect as can be.

REV. FINIS IDLEMAN, CENTRAL, DES MOINES.

We are using the Bethany Graded Lessons. We would not turn back. The service our Sunday-school specialists are giving us as represented in this course is making a new day in religious education.

REV. EDGAR JONES, FIRST, BLOOMINGTON, ILL.

Our committee made an individual examination of lesson helps and decided unanimously in favor of the Bethany series, arriving at their decisions independently and solely upon the merits of the literature.

The Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse is fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, the Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, EDITOR HERBERT L. WILLETT, CONTRIBUTING EDITOR

God's Profit and Loss

When Eliphaz asks, "Can a man be profitable unto God?" he appears to expect a negative answer. He seems to assume that no other answer is conceivable. He proceeds to argue on the basis of everybody's tacit admission that he must be right. He asserts, "Surely he that is wise is profitable unto himself," and he asks, "Is it any pleasure to the Almighty that thou art righteous? Or is it gain to him that thou makest thy ways perfect?"

This is the language of a man who feels secure in his position, and has no expectation of being contradicted. And no one ventured to contradict him. With surprising unanimity Job and his friends heard the word in silence.

Succeeding ages have done the same. They have affirmed that we might very naturally be religious for our own sake or for humanity's sake, and that God might possibly love us for Christ's sake. But that we should be able to do anything of substantial value to God, or that God, for the sheer value of anything that He can discern in us should love us and care for us, seems to them preposterous.

Nevertheless, Eliphaz may have been wrong. And all the people who through all the centuries have consciously or unconsciously borrowed their thought from him may have been wrong. When all has been said and done, it may be that man is profitable to God.

It seems to be fairly evident and nearly undisputed that man is capable of inflicting a loss upon God. Sin is a painful and nearly an indisputable fact; and sin is a divine loss. But if man is capable of inflicting a loss, is he incapable of conferring a benefit? Is it possible for him to be a liability, and impossible for him to be an asset? That, surely, would be a strange doctrine. It would be an untrue doctrine. The possibility of man's sin is the assurance of his potential goodness. The certainty of his ability to inflict a loss is the proof of his power to gain a profit. Not only so, but his sinfulness is the minimum measure of his potential goodness. The greater sinner he is the greater saint he might have been. There may be a limit to the possibility of sin; but in virtue, it doth not yet appear what we shall be. We shall be at least as good as we ever have been bad. There cannot be in human life a badness greater than that same life's possible goodness. We might almost encourage ourselves by our sinfulness. We might almost say as John Hay said of Jim Bludsoe in the hour of danger:

> "They all put faith in his cussedness,
> And knowed that he'd keep his word."

There is something both terrible and triumphant in the word of God when man had become a sinner, "The man has become as God, knowing good and evil." The fact that man can inflict a loss on the moral universe is proof that he is capable of returning a profit.

To be sure man is very small. He is a mere grain of sand on the surface of the earth and the earth is a mote in the universe.

The universe is big. If Columbus had been sailing to the moon he could have reached it in a dozen years, sailing at the same rate of speed that brought him from Spain to America; but if he had sailed toward the sun he would not yet have arrived, not even if he had sailed the Lusitania, and never stopped for coal. Had he started for one of the outer planets of our own solar system, and kept going until now, he would need to have taken an express train. Indeed, that would have arrived too late; for a cannonball fired on the morning of July 4, 1776, would just about now be reaching Neptune, and Neptune, you will remember, is one of the other six little stones in our small circle.

But even the mote may have a value. It can clog the wheels of a watch. It can carry a disease germ. It can contain the potency of an electric spark. It can do damage or good quite out of proportion to its bulk.

It is not in mere bulk that we count with God. There are times when one man is more than an army. There are occasions when a very humble man rises to almost infinite importance.

Jesus never treated human life as if it were negligible. He taught us that as the one lost coin is valuable to the woman who still has nine, and as the one lost sheep counts with the shepherd who lacks only that one of having a hundred, so we count with God. There is a literal translation of a sweet verse in Peter's epistle, "Casting all your care upon Him for it matters to Him about you." It matters to God! The Incarnation says so. The whole Gospel story says so.

The question with the father seeking a lost child is not whether that is a large child or a small child, nor even whether it is a good child or bad child. He seeks the child because it is his own. We are of worth to God.

But we can do things that really count. God needs us. He has work which depends on our doing; it will lack something if we do not do it. It will have something added if we do it. We are of value to God.

Kentucky's Moonlight Schools

The Story of an Original and Unselfish Experiment.

BY CORA WILSON STEWART.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE.

BY IDA WITHERS HARRISON.

The most talked of woman in Kentucky, probably in the United States, at this time is Mrs. Cora Wilson Stewart, superintendent of the public schools of Rowan county, where the successful experiment in the elimination of adult illiteracy was completed last fall. This campaign is of special interest to Disciples, because Mrs. Stewart is a loyal member of our church, a Mountain woman, and a product of the Morehead Normal Academy, the Mountain Mission of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions.

Last month in Congress, the Home Committee on education presented its report, providing for an investigation of illiteracy among the adult population of the United States, and said this in regard to Mrs. Stewart's work:

"If all communities could have the able leadership, the constructive ability and the co-operation of all the forces used, as had Rowan county, Ky., perhaps this legislation might not be needed.

"In Rowan county through the co-operation of the people and the teachers of the public schools, under the leadership of the county superintendent of childhood, or some other cause, but who schools, Mrs. Stewart, the illiteracy among grown men in that county has been reduced in three years from over 13 per cent to practically nothing. Mrs. Stewart wrote the Commissioner of Education a short time ago that there were now only six men and women in the county who could not read and write.

Last week, Mrs. Stewart was invited to address a joint meeting of the General Assembly of Kentucky, and at the conclusion of her speech the legislature, by a unanimous vote, created an Illiteracy Commission whose work was to be the wiping out of adult illiteracy in Kentucky. There is such wide spread interest in Mrs. Stewart's remarkable achievement, that she has written a book, giving a history of the movement, which will soon be on sale. Until then, this article, written by her, will doubtless be read with pleasure. Such a noble and original experiment, carried to a successful issue without any assistance save the unpaid services of the fifty teachers of Rowan county, is a challenge to the whole country to go and do likewise.

MRS. STEWART'S STORY.

THREE years ago there was inaugurated in Rowan county an institution known as moonlight schools. They were designed to clear the county of illiteracy, and to set free those who were enslaved in its bondage. They were, also, intended to afford an opportunity to those who possessed a limited education, and to those who had been scholars in their time, but had become rusty and desired "to brighten up."

Had not the teachers of Rowan county been heroically self-sacrificing, and had not the people possessed a desire for better things, and a determination to secure them at any cost, and a fine spirit of co-operation, this story would never have been written. When the plan and purpose of the moonlight schools were explained to the teachers, they received it with sympathy and enthusiasm, and responded heartily to the call for volunteers. They not only offered their services to teach at night, free of charge, but to canvass their districts and explain to the people the purpose of this new institution, and to urge them to attend. They did their work well, and they met with hearts responsive and minds hungry for learning and souls that yearned for higher things, for when the first session of moonlight schools opened on the evening of September 5, 1911, twelve hundred men and women, of all ages and stations in life, came into the schools and took up their books.

SOME OF THE STUDENTS.

The students ranged in age from 18 years to 86. There were young men, who for various reasons, had dropped out of school at an early age, and when they had once fallen behind their class-mates were ashamed to return and be classified with the "tiny tots" in the day school, and these came to the night school to "catch up" again; there were young women, who had "missed their chance," because of home duties, long distance from the school, periods of invalidism who dreamed that there were in the world better things for them than the darkness of a life-time of ignorance; there were women who had married in childhood, as is too much the wont of our mountain girls, and they craved their birthright—their mental development; there were beside these their husbands, who had burned under the humiliation of making "their marks" in the presence of the educated, and of asking the election officers at each election to cast for them a vote for the candidates of their choice; there were middle-aged men, who had seen a hundred golden opportunities pass them by, who realized that the educated man had held their time, their strength, their energy, as well as their timber and mineral and all their stores in his grasp, controlling both the price of their labor and their material, making them but beggars on the bounty of those whom they enriched; there were women who had seen their children grow up and go away, sometimes to distant states, and when the spoken word and the hand-clasp had ceased, heart-to-heart communication were no longer possible, for the third party as an interpreter between mother and child is but a poor medium at the best.

A DESIRE FOR LEARNING.

"Just to be able to read my Bible," was the cry of many a patriarch and many a withered dame. "Just to write my name," to escape from the shame of making his mark, was the appeal of many a younger man, inspired by pride, rather than the reverence of his fathers. Three hundred learned to read and write and to solve simple problems and some other things. Two school trustees, who could barely read and write before, received an inspiration in the night schools and encouragement from the rapid progress which they made, and after the night school closed, they entered the day school and secured an education, and are today members of a body of the most renowned public school teachers in the world. One man, a day-laborer, at the low wage of $1.50 per day, attended night school for six weeks, specializing in mathematics and mastering the principles of the subject as applied to the line of work in which he was engaged—lumbering. At the end of the six weeks' term, he was promoted at a salary double that which he had received before. The position had been waiting for him for years, and was offered him as soon as he was prepared to fill it. The joy in achievement—even simple achievement—expressed on the countenances of those students and by their words and actions, is beyond human power to describe. Those who learned to write, wrote their names on fences, posts, trees, barns, as well as on every available scrap of paper, and those possessed of means, even though slender, deposited it in bank, and wrote their checks and signed their names with pride.

A Mountain School in Kentucky.

This was an institution too popular to abandon. It had vitalized communities and brought teachers, children and parents into a full spirit of co-operation for the first time. When the teacher entered his district the next year, he was greeted with a chorus of inquiries, "When will the night schools begin?" The next session brought larger numbers and older students. Sixteen hundred were enrolled, and a man eighty-seven years of age surpassed the proud record of the schoolgirl of eighty-six of the former session. Mord knowledge was gained by those who were the newly-learned of the year before, more illiterates were taught, and illiteracy was reduced from 1,152 to nearly the 500 mark. The six weeks' term was all too brief, and after it had closed here and there in such day schools as would admit, a man or woman could be found sitting at a desk with a child, pursuing the knowledge which had taken root in the night school.

A MEMORABLE CAMPAIGN.

The session of 1913 was a memorable one. Such a campaign against illiteracy the world has never known. It was the final conflict in a three years' crusade against illiteracy in the county, with the stubborn resolve to reach and conquer. A home department was organized, where the feeble and those disinclined to come to school were taught. Two thousand five hundred persons enrolled, and the illiteracy record of the county was erased so rapidly that it was almost too fast for an actual count. At its close only 23 unlettered ones could be found, and only four of these, besides two who moved in at the close of the campaign, were capable in every way of learning.

Through these cold facts it is impossible to gain, in any appreciable degree, the heroic spirit of the teachers, who taught by day and by night, and instructed men and women in their homes during the intervening hours. This article can portray nothing either of the eagerness of the people as they wended their way in large groups at night, or of the earnest efforts which they made as they sat at their desks, or worked at the blackboard or stood in a row in class and spelled. This merely presents the bare outlines of a Kentucky born institution, which has passed beyond the experimental stage and stood the test, and has had in the soil from which it sprang a steady and substantial growth, and which has achieved the results for which it was designated—results which are verified by hundreds and hundreds of well-written letters in the possession of the writer, from men and women who could not write before.

HOW THE MOVEMENT HAS SPREAD.

This article presents only in brief an institution which has developed, not on its own birth-place only, but all over the state and all over the South, and even to the farthest corner of the far West. Twenty-five counties or more in Kentucky have made in some one or more districts a test of it, and whether it was among the tenant class of Madison, or the distillery region of Garrard, or the farm lands of Muhlenburg, or the tobacco district of Grayson, or wherever it was made, it was always with the same result; it was met by men and women with eagerness and gratitude that they had, at last, found their opportunity. In Tennessee, in South Carolina, in Georgia, in Arkansas and in the far state of Washington, there are countries which have organized or are organizing moonlight schools today, and all for the same primary purpose—to open the door of opportunity and let illiterate men and women escape from the thralldom which holds them. Kentucky, the state which has given this institution to the world, should be the one to foster it, and the first to profit by it. If this institution affords an opportunity to the German illiterates, who are being taught through it in Walla Walla county, Washington, it affords one for the pure-blooded Anglo-Saxon and noble hearted people of Leslie county, Kentucky, where one-third of the population cannot read or write, and for the illiterates of every other county in the state, north, east, south or west, possessed of few illiterates or many.

A REBUKE TO THE INDIFFERENT.

Shame on us that we have remained so long indifferent and inactive, while men and women passed us by with averted heads and heavy hearts! Shame on us that we have submitted to conditions which caused the world to declare Kentucky to be one of the most illiterate of the states! The hour is at hand for a holy crusade against illiteracy. The Governor of Kentucky has called upon the General Assembly to create an Illiteracy Commission, and to their everlasting credit, every member of that distinguished body has responded and has voted favorably on the passage of such a measure, making it the one matter upon which they stood unanimous during the present session. Kentucky's illiteracy must be wiped out! Kentucky's fighting spirit is known the wide world over, and Kentucky soldiers are the best. They are no more valiant, surely, in a war with bullets than with books. Oh, that all of our splendid Kentucky intellect and strength and energy and mettle could be put into this conflict!

Illiteracy would vanish before our forces like the mist before the morning sun, and men and women who today are languishing in cabins and behind prison doors in ignorance, helplessness and despair would rise in new strength and power and help to build of this the greatest Commonwealth that the world has ever known.

How? When? Where? Why?

BY F. J. BROWN.

YOU ask me how I gave my heart to Christ?
I do not know;
There came a longing for him in my soul
So long ago.
I found earth's fairest flowers would fade and die,
I yearned for something that would satisfy;
And then at last somehow I seemed to dare
To lift my broken heart to him in prayer.
I do not know;
I cannot tell you how;
I only know
He is my Saviour now.

You ask me when I gave my heart to Christ?
I cannot tell,
The day, or just the hour, I do not now
Remember well.
It must have been when I was all alone
The light of his forgiving Spirit shone
Into my heart so clouded o'er with sin;
I think 'twas then I trembling let him in.
I do not know;
I cannot tell you when;
I only know
He is so dear since then.

You ask me where I gave my heart to Christ?
I cannot say;
That sacred place has faded from my sight
As yesterday.
Perhaps he thought it better I should not Remember where. How I should love that spot!
I think I could not tear myself away,
For I should want forever there to stay.
I do not know;
I cannot tell you where;
I only know
He came and blessed me there.

You ask me why I gave my heart to Christ?
I can reply:
It is a wondrous story; listen while
I tell you why
My heart was drawn at length to seek his face.
I was alone, I had no resting-place;
I heard of how he loved me, with a love
Of depth so great, of heights so far above
All human ken,
I longed such love to share.
And sought it then
Upon my knees in prayer.

You ask me why I thought this loving Christ
Would heed my prayer?
I knew he died upon the cross for me—
I nailed him there.
I heard his dying cry, "Father, forgive!"
I saw him drink death's cup that I might live;
My head was bowed upon my breast in shame.
He called me, and in penitence I came.
He heard my prayer—
I cannot tell you how,
Or when, or where;
Only I love him now.

Religious Intolerance

A Chapter in History Which Forever is Being Rewritten.

BY ELLIS B. BARNES.

IF there is one chapter in the history of Christianity that men would forget, if forgetting were possible, it is the chapter of religious persecution. The name of Torquemada, though on the calendar of the saints, is devoted evermore to the scorn of mankind. The one blight on the fame of John Calvin is his connection with the death of Servetus; and we cannot wonder that such an event shocked the moderate spirits of an age that had hoped to escape the barbaric enforcement of popular dogmas through the acceptonce of the doctrines of the Reformation. All classes inquired whether they had not left one tyranny only to be torn by the teeth of another.

Underlying all religious persecution is the delusion that honest error is a crime. Into this snare Protestant and Catholic, different races and different creeds have fallen. And the fallacy is no less real whether the punishment be the stake, the dungeon, the rack of the Middle Ages, or the proscription of dissent by the majority, the unfair insinuation or the hounding by self-appointed censors of those who are just as conscientious in their dissent as are their brethren who adhere to the established rules of faith and order. If the premise be accepted the conclusion is inevitable; and wherever persecution in any form exists, from ostracism to exile, we may be sure that the fundamental error is being put into practice. If the older brutalities are among the worst instances of human perversity, the later forms are the scorn of the skeptic and the sorrow of every tolerant lover of truth.

THE INQUISITION.

As a result of this fundamental error 30,000 persons suffered death in Holland and Friesland for Anabaptist errors; while in Spain, according to Prescott, during the eighteen years of Torquemada's administration as inquisitor, 105,000 persons were punished, of whom 8,800 were burned. In Andalusia alone, in a single year, the Inquisition put to death 2,000 Jews, "besides 17,000 who underwent some form of punishment less severe than the stake." Nor is this the end of the disaster, for an eminent historian has pointed out that "history takes no account of those who have been spared in body that they might suffer in mind. . . . . For in this way, men become constrained to mask their thoughts, there arises a habit of securing safety by falsehood, and of purchasing impunity by deceit. In this way fraud becomes a necessity of life; insincerity is made a daily custom; the whole tone of public feeling is vitiated, and the gross amount of vice and folly fearfully increased."

It is remarkable that it is the best of men who have been the persecutors. This was the case in the days of the Roman Empire. We are told that "the most thoroughly depraved of all the emperors were certainly Commodus and Elagabulus, neither of whom persecuted the new religion, or indeed adopted any measures against it." On the other hand, we find that the great enemy of Christianity was Marcus Aurelius, "a man of kindly temper, and of fearless, unflinching honesty, but whose reign was characterized by a persecution from which he would have refrained had he been less in earnest about the religion of his fathers."

The last, and one of the most strenuous opponents of Christianity, who occupied the throne of the Caesars, was Julian, a prince of eminent probity, whose opinions are often attacked, but "against whose moral conduct even calumny itself has hardly breathed a suspicion." Concerning the members of the Inquisition at Barcelona another historian, who had every reason to be prejudiced against it, tells us that "all its members are men of worth, and most of them distinguished for humanity."

IS RELIGIOUS PERSECUTION JUSTIFIED?

Such considerations as these should lead us to inquire whether the Emperors were justified in their persecution of the Christians? Whether the Popes were justified in their slaughter of Jews and Anabaptists? And if they were not, were the English Bishops justified in their persecution of the Catholics? And were the Puritans justified in their persecution of the Episcopalians and Papists? There can be no difference of opinion on matters of this sort in an enlightened age. If cruel persecutions are atrocious to the intellectual and religious sensibilities of our time, how can petty persecutions be justified? The man who takes his neighbor's life today because of differences in matters of faith would be regarded as a felon or a lunatic, to be dealt with by the law of the state.

But, unfortunately, there exists a notion that it is lawful to destroy the reputation of those whose teaching is regarded as erroneous, although they hold to the same faith as do their accusers, by whispering the word "heresy" against them, by attempting to silence them by appeals to popular prejudice, and by making their ministry so difficult that in self-defense these suspected ones seek refuge in other communions. How can we sympathize with the proscribed in other days who for conscience' sake were forced out of their livings by kings' decrees, when we force them out of their pulpits by editorial denunciations? How can we sympathize with the Pilgrim exiles while we continue policies of ostracism against those who are just as honest and God-fearing as any who ever braved the terrors of the wintry sea?

NO INFALLIBLE INTERPRETERS.

If we could only be sure of our ground in all these variations of faith we could readily agree that sharp lines should be drawn between heretic and orthodox, but that we are not able to do; that the world has never been able to do. If we had infallible interpreters for an infallible Book the ease would be radically different. Think of the varities of opinion that exist in a church that boasts of its infallibility! Where can we set the boundaries between the false and the true, between radicals and conservatives, between faith and opinion? Where is the man outside of Rome whose business it is thus to fix the limits of separation? Our incompetency is all the more evident when we remember that the heresies of yesterday are the commonplaces of today, and that the orthodox beliefs of one generation are often absurd or superstitions in the next—witchcraft, for instance. The framers of penalties for dissenters must have a high regard for their own ability when they attempt to damn their God-fearing fellow men who cannot see the truth with any eyes save their own. It is better to question the correctness of our own conclusions than to assume the task of a diminutive Torquemada.

Rather than the spirit of the fanatic let us cultivate the relation of teacher and disciple. Let charity abound, for, with it, a pernicious zeal for uniformity of thinking will disappear. There is no difference at heart between protestant intolerance and papal: one is as un-Christian as the other. We do not need either. Rather do we need the spirit that will help us all to arrive at the truth as comrades in the common quest, though we have come by divergent roads. Freedom to investigate, the right to differ, the duty to love as brethren all those who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity, and the insight to find our highest joy in serving him—these are the great notes that now need to be struck.

BIGOTRY MUST DIE.

The spirit of the bigot dies hard, but it must die. Only let us hope that in the process of dissolution it will not be guilty of such iniquities as will compel our children to apologize for us, as we are compelled to apologize for those who imagine that rack and dungeon and fagot could be valid instruments of conversion or of orthodoxy when in the service of him who declared that those who live by the sword should perish by the sword.

Vacation Bible School Work.

Under the direction of the Daily Vacation Bible School Association, with headquarters at the Bible House, New York City, 215 vacation Bible schools were conducted in thirty-four cities and towns during the last summer vacation period. Fifty thousand, five hundred and fifty-two children were enrolled in these schools, three-fourths of whom belonged to no Sunday-school.

Dr. Willett's Missionary Message

The Discovery of a New Note in a Favorite Lecturer.

BY EDGAR DeWITT JONES.

ABOUT fifteen years ago Dr. Herbert L. Willett came to First Church, Bloomington, Ill., for a series of Bible lectures. The attendance upon those lectures was extraordinary. After the first or second lecture people began to come as early as 6 o'clock in order to get good seats. Such was Prof. Willett's introduction to Bloomington, and ever since his constituency here has never failed to take advantage of an opportunity to hear him.

He delivered a second course of lectures in First Church, afterward a course in the Normal Christian Church; several popular lectures upon various lyceum courses in the city; spoke in the Coliseum at a state convention; and at the Congress of Disciples held at First Church in the spring of 1907 he delivered one of the evening addresses.

Sunday evening, February 1, 1914, after an interim of seven years, Dr. Willett spoke again in Bloomington. His topic was "The Changing East." The announcement of his coming brought out again the usual large attendance. The evening he spoke in Bloomington there were three large revival meetings in progress at other churches. One of these was in its closing service at the First Methodist Episcopal Church and another meeting was in its climacteric service.

A COSMOPOLITAN AUDIENCE.

Despite these widely advertised meetings the capacity of First Church was taxed for available space and people were standing. It was a most cosmopolitan audience.

As I looked out over the audience I saw representatives from the Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian, Congregational, Unitarian, and Catholic churches. There were also representatives from other Disciples' churches here in the city and Normal, and a large number of the Centennial Church, which holds its services one-half hour earlier than the others, came later in a body.

Dr. Willett spoke with all the abandon and grace and fluency that has ever characterized his public address, but besides this there was tremendous heart power and vigor and glowing enthusiasm throughout his message. I think I never heard him when there was so evident a passion in his words. In his former visits to Bloomington he was always the instructor bringing light to our minds—eloquent, lucid and convincing. But in this address he was the preacher bringing heat, the heat of a great passion which I had never felt in him before. It may be the ripening years of personal experience, or it may be the effect of his first-hand study of the mission field, but whatever the explanation I was aware of a great increment of power, a surge of his will upon the will of his audience which gave his message a prophet's urgency.

AN UNIQUE ADDRESS.

Four features of his address stand out in my memory.

The approach to the subject was unique. Beginning in the far past with the much traveled Marco Polo and his fellow explorers and their fantastic account of China the mysterious, the speaker built a golden bridge across the gulf between that period and the beginning of modern missions. Then came successions of pictures. One could see Old China as a sleeping giant slowly awakening, rubbing his eyes, sitting up and beginning to take notice of the world. The changing of the entire Orient before the onmarch of Christian civilization was shown to be like the change wrought by the advent of spring after drear winter has had his sway.

The tribute to missionary heroes and heroines was exceedingly tender. The career of Charles Darst, Westpointer in the Land of the Mikado, was shown to be better and bigger than a major generalship here. The work of Doctor Osgood and Macklin was portrayed with a sympathetic appreciation that was felt by us all. We saw these men and others walking in the Way of the Great Physician, blessing and healing and helping every day. Then, too, we beheld them as missionary statesmen grappling successfully with age-old problems of evil.

JESUS' GOSPEL PUT TO THE FORE.

While the educational and medical work of the missionary received due emphasis the preaching of Jesus' gospel was put to the fore. An illuminating anecdote told by Dr. Willett in the course of his lecture is to this point: An American tourist whom he met in one of the great cities of the Orient expressed himself as greatly pleased with the educational and medical phase of missions, but was inclined to scoff at the preaching services. To his sarcastic comment on the part of the missionaries' preaching Dr. Willett replied: "So you approve of the schools and the hospitals but you disapprove of the preaching?" The worldly wise cosmopolite nodded his head in hearty affirmation and Dr. Willett rejoined, "Why, sir, without the preaching of Jesus, the hospital and the school could not be. It is the gospel of God's son makes them possible."

There was in Dr. Willett's message, as I have said, a heart power that was contagious. It gripped us from the beginning of the speech to the end. It made us to feel the essential righteousness and the vast worth whileness of the cause.

MESSAGE HIDES THE MESSENGER.

It had in it the ring that one feels in the messages of our missionaries who come back from the far fields of victories for Christ. In the warmth and cordiality and urgency of the speaker we found ourselves in the spell of the message, almost forgetting the messenger; and I fancy there is no greater praise for any speaker than this. A verse of an old poem well describes Dr. Willett and his message in Old First Church, Bloomington, Sunday, February 1, 1914.

"He held the lamp of truth that day
So low that none could miss the way;
And yet so high to bring in sight
That picture fair—the world's great Light;
That, gazing up—the lamp between—
The hand that held it scarce was seen."

And when the lecture was ended it was "like the ceasing of exquisite music."

MORE CHAPLAINS FOR THE NAVY.

In connection with the naval appropriation bill Congress has under consideration a proposition to increase the number of chaplains in the navy. The need for an adequate increase is shown in these three facts.

1. In 1842 the navy numbered 12,000 men; in 1914 it numbered 67,000; in 1842 the navy had 67 ships; in 1914 it had 390 ships. In 1842 it had 24 chaplains; in 1914 it has no more chaplains than it had 72 years ago. That is, the number of men and ships has increased more than fivefold; the number of chaplains not at all.

2. The churches are urging upon Congress an increase that will give the navy at least one chaplain to every one thousand of the personnel, which would still leave the service deficient relatively by more than one-half on the basis of 1842.

3. The church are also agreed in the conviction that the present discrimination against chaplains in the matter of consideration according to rank and length of service is, in effect, a disparagement of religion and the worship of Almighty God; which disparagement should not longer be countenanced by the national government.

4. Strange as it may appear, it is nevertheless the fact that for ten years efforts have been made without success to secure a more adequate supply of chaplains. The Secretary of the Navy, in his report to Congress, says: "It is a reproach to our country that we have only the same number of chaplains in the navy for 1913 as there were in 1842." Now that a favorable opportunity offers to secure the desired legislation, the Executive Committee of the Federal Council earnestly requests every pastor and every church member interested in the welfare of the men of the navy to write or wire to his senator and congressman, urging them to give their hearty support to this measure and to use their influence with members of the Naval Committee. The time to do this is now.

Leaders of Men and Millions

WILLIAM G. IRWIN, A MEMBER OF THE COMMISSION OF BUSINESS MEN OF THE MEN AND MILLIONS MOVEMENT.

IT would be pretty hard for William G. Irwin, of Columbus, Ind., to be anything else than a Disciple of Christ, even if he were disposed so to be, and it would be quite impossible for him to be other than a generous, broad-visioned, vigorous leader of his fellows in whatever church he found his fellowship. The reason is that he is the son of his father. Joseph I. Irwin was for many years the strongest layman among Indiana Disciples, making money and giving much of it away to all good causes—to education, missions, benevolence and all good philanthropies. With his wife, Clementine Irwin, the father came to Indiana in an early day and both became great supporters of the Disciples' movement in its very beginning in that state.

William G. Irwin.

A PASTOR'S "APPRECIATION."

The son, William, who, since his father's death in 1910, has had the chief responsibility of managing the affairs of the large Irwin estate, was born in 1866 in Columbus. He inherited strong traits from both his father and mother. "He is reserved and modest in manner, a lover of truth and sincerity and possesses a vigorous mind and a warm and sympathetic heart"—so writes Rev. W. H. Book, his pastor, in appreciation of him. Mr. Irwin graduated at Butler College, Indianapolis, in 1889. This school has ever had a warm place in his heart. He has been for a number of years a trustee of the institution and has supported it with generous gifts. The Bible Chair at the state university of Indiana has also received substantial encouragement from him. This practical minded business man has caught the missionary vision—or inherited it. The Foreign Society received whole-hearted support at his hands, and his generosity together with that of a few other men of means in the Columbus Church, keeps that congregation well to the front of the list of dependable and liberal upholders of missionary agencies.

"THE PASTOR'S HELPER."

Mr. Irwin's business is described as that of "managing the Irwin estate." He is president of Irwin's Bank of Columbus, of the Indianapolis, Columbus and Southern Traction Company, the Union Starch and Refining Company of Edinburg, Ind., and a director in many other enterprises in which he and the estate are interested.

Mr. Irwin is a bachelor. His sister is the wife of Rev. Z. T. Sweeney, of New York City. He is a member of the Commission of Nine Business Men of the Men and Millions Movement. Mr. Book, his pastor, to whom we are indebted for these data, says in significant conclusion, that he is also "the pastor's helper," which, taken with the implications belonging to it in this case, is about as fine a thing as can be said of any man.

Art and Morals

Is There a Relation Between the Two?

BY CHARLES H. BURKHOLDER.

IN every city fortunate enough to possess an art museum, art enthusiasts are continually discoursing on the uplifting influence of art. Some even give much energy to imparting knowledge to the unfortunates of the poorer districts. These honest missionaries are endeavoring zealously to elevate society by bringing to the minds of the lower classes glimpses of better things, and at night the consciences of the reformers are satisfied, believing that the world has been blessed through the sacrifice.

Another company of enthusiasts, equally honest, rather ridicules the idea of moralizing human beings through the influence of art, citing the nations of Greece, Japan and France as glaring examples of highly developed ideals with a low degree of morals. They also cite certain modern artists of renown whose characters would not entitle them to high seats in the synagogue. These reformers see no elevation for the race save in the teaching of moral laws repeated suggestively. It is difficult for these two temperaments to understand each other, chiefly because both are partially correct, although neither of them could give assent to this last statement.

An art lecturer, having spoken to an intelligent audience, was asked publicly by a well-read and cultured clergyman the astounding question—"what relation in the mind has art to religion?" The reply, frank and different from some of the ideas advanced by art students, was that art relates to form, color, composition, and ideality, and that religion as taught by Jew and Gentile is to love the Creator with all the heart and the neighbor as one's self; that there is no direct relation between the two, but that there could be; that religion could be associated with art and art with religion; that he had read of certain masters without character who had painted strong religious themes, and had known personally conspicuous modern artists who could not be held up to youth as exemplary citizens; that he also knew many pious and unselfish churchmen who had no appreciation either of art or music; that a bad man has been a good artist and that some saints have not received thrills from a cold marble statue; but that the art of a religious artist will take on different aspects from that of the depraved, as a man's work sooner or later reveals him.

ART WITH A MORAL SUGGESTION.

The arguments are convincing, as we reflect upon them, that art with no moral suggestion might not exalt a character, but with the moral attribute will be tremendously potent in elevating the world. The question could be asked, will a lad in a luxurious suburban mansion, without moral suggestion, be any less likely to fabricate because he has on his chamber floor a rich oriental rug which for two hundred years had no moral effect upon an eastern harem? or, would a slum-lad, without moral training, with a Venus de Melos on a pedestal, a Japanese print on one wall and a Turner sunset on the other, be so convicted of sin through art that he would beg of the corner grocer an opportunity to work during a hot July day to atone for the basket of peaches stolen from his stand the year before?

We conclude therefore that art to produce a moral effect must have in it a moral suggestion, and that in order to produce a worshipful spirit there must be a suggestion of worship. When one views Millet's "Angelus," if not too much absorbed in technique, he will at once be affected by the prayerful peasants. When one sees in the blue moonlight, with a sinister countenance Prell's "Judas" bartering away his master, the spirit of unfaithfulness is suggested. The painting "Breaking home ties" at the World's Fair produced deep feeling, because every grown man understood the experience suggested. The prohibition of prize-fight motion-pictures has been profitable because of the suggestiveness of degrading subjects and the action of the government in putting a ban on certain pictures passing through the mails has been commendable, because a picture is more powerful for evil than words.

ART STRIKES THE IMAGINATION.

But can it be said that pure art, without suggesion for good or for evil, is negative? Has a landscape, a seascape or a painting of an architectural subject no effect upon human consciousness? When color and form and composition exist only for their own sakes, it seems impossible that the influence upon the mind is simply negative. There must be a suggestion of refinement, of purity and of delicacy. It may be that a student drawing from a cold plaster cast has little else than mere intellectual pleasure, such as may be derived from the gymnastics of mathematics. But whether the moral emotions are stirred or not, it is certain that art strikes firmly upon the imagination and as every greater imagination produces a greater individual, the study of art increases one's vision of bigness, delicacy, and beauty. Great imaginations produce great men; all great enterprises of commerce, mechanics, religion and education were first conceived in imagination. The study of art enables one to see beauty from which the untrained eye is holden, and as every thought is the result of a mental picture, to study to see more, means a widened imagination.

While it may be true that a Navajo rug in an Indian wigwam may not prevent the scalping of a humble pale-face, we are certain that ten years study of drawing and painting, with ten of decorative designing, and ten or architecture, would convert a Sitting Bull into a tame Indian.

Needlessly Anxious.—By Ernest Zimmerman.

Jesus Christ---Union Carpenter

CHARLES STELZLE, IN THE PRESBYTERIAN ADVANCE.

I was asked in a public meeting recently if I thought that Jesus would become a member of the Carpenters' Union were he on earth today. Just what Christ would do in regard to organized labor in the twentieth century, no man dare prophesy. Any other man's opinion on this subject is as good as mine. But I do believe that Jesus was a member of the Carpenters' Guild of his day, which was the nearest approach to the forms of organized labor in this generation. It is also quite likely that were he to come again as a carpenter, with all that this implies—a workingman's trials as well as a workingman's sympathies—he would identify himself with that organization which is doing most to better the conditions of all workingmen. And if he were to manifest the same spirit toward those who oppressed the poor and helpless that he did when he was on earth in bodily form, he would probably become known as a "labor agitator."

Those who assert that Jesus would in no case identify himself with any organization that practiced slugging or that was unfair in any particular—of which things these persons insist organized labor is guilty—forget, or do not know, that he became a member of the very organization of his day which was guilty of everything that is today charged against organized labor. When he addressed the leaders of the scribes and Pharisees, he not only reminded them that their fathers had scourged and persecuted the prophets, that they had killed and crucified those who had been sent to them, but that they, themselves, were guilty of the most damnable sins—hypocrisy, graft, persecution. And these very leaders afterward crucified him for his persistent declaration that he was the Son of God, and that he had been sent to save the people. Jesus Christ was a member of that ancient organization, because—in spite of the fact that it was largely controlled by men of this type—it had within it the elements of true piety and faithfulness toward God and toward men. It must in all fairness be said today with reference to organized labor that it, too, contains the elements which make for a higher type of manhood and womanhood, even though there are within its ranks some men who dishonor the cause. These must soon be eliminated, so that the movement which represents the best interests of the working people may no longer be handicapped by unfaithful leaders.

To this end, why would it not be well to invite into membership the man who may truly be claimed as "Labor's Champion"—Jesus Christ? Let organized labor take its stand behind him. Permit him to speak for you. You need never again quote the political economist. Quote Christ. Never has any man more bitterly denounced the oppressor. Invite him to sit upon your platform. Take him into your councils. If you will, you are sure to win, for Christ is sure to win. I have a very strong conviction that if the workingmen of the world were to claim Christ as their exponent, their Leader, with all that goes with this claim, no power on earth could withstand their onward march. Does this seem visionary? But hasn't the church done this very thing? The true church rests absolutely and specifically upon the person of Jesus Christ. All of its progress is due to this fact. Its sacrifices as well as its victories were founded upon its faith in Christ. He is claimed today by the church as a living, personal power. Labor, too, may have him—in the broadest, fullest sense. And when it again lays claim upon Christ its victory is assured.

NATIONAL COMMITTEE ON CHURCH EFFICIENCY.

A Church Efficiency Committee has been appointed by the national Efficiency Society, Inc. Charles Stelzle, of New York, is chairman, and among those serving with him are the following: Judge Martin A. Knapp, of the United States Commerce Court; Prof. Henry C. Metcalf, of Tufts College; Prof. Walter Dill Scott, of Northwestern University; Dean C. H. Benjamin, of Purdue University; Prof. Edwin L. Earp, of Drew Theological Seminary; Harry Franklin Porter, Editor of "Factory;" Prof. Ernest C. Moore, of Harvard University; Henry Snyder Kissam, Consulting Architect; E. R. Hudders, Public Accountant; Edward L. Suffern, Certified Accountant; F. S. Tomlin, Secretary, Joint Labor Legislative Conference; Charles W. Gerstenberg, Secretary, New York University School of Commerce; Dr. Melvil Dewey, originator of the Dewey Library System; Dr. Frederick B. Greul, of Brookline, Mass., and Dr. Charles S. Macfarland, Secretary, Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

The first task of the Church Efficiency Committee will be that of working out a system of church records and budgets, which will be applicable to churches of all denominations. From time to time other tasks of a similar general character will be undertaken by the committee.

The committee may call upon other members of the Efficiency Society for expert advice and assistance and it will thus have at its command the most efficient men in American business and professional life. The Efficiency Society, Inc. has headquarters at 41 Park Row, New York City, and is an educational society. The aim of the society is to keep its members in touch with the efficiency movement.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

THE TRIUMPH OF TEMPERANCE.

NOTHING is more cheering than the steady progress which the temperance movement is making throughout the nation. A few years since it was only the most persistent optimist who felt confident that the saloon would be driven from American life. Today the average man sees the signs of a fulfilment to that hope, the temperance workers are confident of early victory, and the supporters of the liquor traffic are fighting desperately against the advancing wave which threatens soon to sweep them out of business.

The triumph of temperance during the past ten years has been astonishing. With now and then a defeat, the march of the cause of sobriety under temperance, anti-saloon and prohibition leaders has been majestic and heartening. Formerly it was a question of winning here and there a spot of dry territory in the midst of a surrounding wet district. Now the movement spreads by townships, counties and states.

But most significant of all is the introduction into Congress of a bill for nation-wide prohibition.

It is not presumed that this bill will be passed without a desperate struggle on the part of the retreating and enraged friends of the saloon. But the very contest itself, thus carried to the supreme forum of the nation, will have very great educational value, and in the end is bound to win. Men now living will survive to see a saloonless nation.

THE SPIRIT OF ISLAM.

ONE of the interesting events of recent days at the University of Chicago has been a course of four lectures on "Aspects of Islamism," by Dr. Christian Snouck Hurgronje of the University of Leiden. Along with Doughty and Burton, Doctor Hurgronje shares the unique experience of a visit to the sacred and forbidden city of Mecca. But unlike any of his adventurous fellow-scholars he is the only non-Mohammedan who ever spent an entire year in study under the very shadow of the Sacred Stone. His lectures dealt with the life of the prophet, the development of Islam, and the relation of the system to modern thought. The course was very largely attended and was deeply interesting.

On the subject of missions among the Mohammedans Doctor Hurgronje is conservative, probably because he has been the witness of many ill-advised efforts in this direction, especially in Java where he has lived for many years among the Mohammedans who are the subjects of the Dutch rule. But he believes that there is a possibility of constructive access to the Mohammedan mind by Christian teachers who have the tact and wisdom to first understand the best that Islam affords, and then to employ it as the gateway for Christian approach.

ASPECTS OF PROPHETIC THEORY.

THERE was gathered recently in this city a considerable body of ministers and teachers for what was known as an International Prophetic Conference. The sessions were held at the Moody Church, and were largely attended by visiting members and those locally interested. The emphasis of the conference was placed upon those phases of prophecy which relate to the fulfilment of early Christian hopes in the approaching end of the world and the coming of the Lord.

We have deep respect for men whose interests lie in this field of apocalyptic and eschatology. We believe however that we are speaking no word of disrespect concerning them when we affirm with emphasis that these aspects of the Christian doctrine of prophecy have largely ceased to interest the readers of Christian thought in our century. They are among the forms of Christian teaching which have failed to receive the vindication of the best Christian scholarship. There is to be sure a certain type of mind that finds great value in the apocalyptic books of Daniel and Revelation. It is not difficult to read into this curious type of Jewish and Christian literature the events of any period of world history, and the figures that have played important parts in the drama of state-craft or religion. There are those who find marked satisfaction in the attempt to discover Mohammed in the Book of Daniel or the Pope of Rome in the Revelation.

We are not impugning the motives of these excellent people when we say that all this kind of exegesis is merely trifling with the established principles of biblical interpretation. We make these remarks less with reference to the recent prophetic conference than in regard to vagaries of biblical study which appear from time to time in the religious press. So far as we are informed, the points of stress at the Moody Church gatherings were the imminent return of the Lord and the necessity for a vigorous and insistent evangel in preparation for that event.

On the second point we are in warmest sympathy with the objects of the conference.

Anything that can stimulate missionary zeal is worth while, even though it be a mistaken theory of the second coming. We believe that theory is capable of great abuse both at home and on the mission field, even though it is proclaimed by many excellent people. But the gospel has endured many errors of view through the past, and will not be greatly injured by this one, which is usually associated fortunately with pious living and a prayerful mind. We shall all of us yet learn that prophecy moves on higher levels than the mere prediction of future events, either by Old or New Testament prophets, and that the coming of the Lord is no far-off or imminent event of history, but an ever-present and increasing fact of experience in the individual soul and in the life of the Church.

"J. B." PASSES AWAY.

FEW are the ministers of evangelical denominations all the world over to whom the news of the death of Rev. J. Brierley will not come as almost a personal sorrow. His books of religious essays have been growing in number at the rate of two a year for ten years, and have been eagerly devoured by the thoughtful as soon as they fell from the press.

These essays were in the main collected from the author's editorials appearing each week in The Christian World, of London, over the initials "J. B." These initials came to possess a cryptic suggestion to the initiated, who knew at once on seeing them that whatever article they were attached to was worth not only reading but clipping and filing away for future reflection.

Mr. Brierley held a thoroughly modern point of view in his thinking. He wrote fearlessly. But there was no hint of iconoclastic purpose in his words. Rather, he seemed to have set himself the task of illuminating the abiding truth in old doctrines by throwing upon them the light of modern scientific and ethical concepts.

Mr. Brierley was the son of a worsted manufacturer with a strong Puritan taste for theology. He was ordained to the Congregational ministry in 1871, and served as pastor in London from 1876 to 1880. Health obliged him to abandon the ministry for a time, and he then became the first pastor of a new church in the London district known as Balham. All of his pastorates were highly successful, but finally his physical frailty drove him to less active work, and he entered upon the career of a writer in which he has rendered a unique service to the whole English-speaking world.

SAFETY FIRST.

THERE is no sovereign cure for accident. So long as we have the human element to deal with, we shall have some accidents. But there are some things which will tend to reduce their number.

Secure for yourself and for other men suitable hours of rest and relaxation. Two French statisticians have gathered statistics on the hours of the day in which accidents occur. Briefly their investigations show that accidents happen during the hours when men are tired. From the time men begin work in the morning there is a steady increase till nearly noon, and a great drop during the noon hour and for a time thereafter, but an increase as the day wears on. We know how often the excuse is given after a train wreck that the men had been on a steady duty for twenty-four or thirty-six hours. It is important that we rest when we ought.

It is important that we secure to men a Sabbath of rest, and teach them to use it properly. The Sabbath should not become a day of exhausting pleasure-seeking, but of restful reinvigoration.

Avoid excesses of every kind. The railroads have become among the foremost temperance societies in America by their insistence that their employés shall be total abstainers. Refrain from cigarettes, tobacco and headache cures. Live a clean life.

Preserve a wholesome mind and a clear conscience. Keep in your heart nothing to worry over. Avoid melancholy preoccupation. Let the picture which you frame in the inner sanctuary of your imagination be pure as will bear the light of day.

The mental element is great in fatigue, in disease, in every state that can lead to accident and blunder. And the moral element is great in the mental situation. Good morals are an important element in the "Safety First" crusade.

CHILD STUDY VS. THE CHILD.

IN A CERTAIN home in Massachusetts is a young wife who has been married ten years, and to whom children have been born somewhat rapidly. The mother has become well known for papers read at gatherings that increase in size on questions relating to the care of children. Her husband loves his wife and has a certain measure of sympathy with her work. But he confessed to a friend a little feeling of anxiety because of the neglect which his own children were suffering while the mother's studies ran increasingly to statistics.

"Yes," said he, "we have no guest-room now; we have turned it into a laboratory for child-study. We have painted circles on the floor, and the closet is stuffed full of beads and colored straw and paper strips, and we have a very excellent nurse who is a trained kindergartner. My wife is enthusiastic over child study, and can talk of hardly anything else. But meantime, there in her own home is the child."

THAT ROMAN CATHOLIC OATH.

IN VARIOUS discussions of the Roman Church the question arises how far that organization in America has been modified by its environment, how far it has become Americanized. The claim of Rome itself, of course, is that it has never changed in any particular; that it is the same "Always, everywhere and in all." This is not true, and we may well be glad that it is not true. The Roman Catholic Church in America has been greatly modified by its contact with organizations that have partaken of the American spirit. But it would not be safe to infer that this modification had extended to the whole spirit of its priesthood.

Let it never be forgotten that in the last few days of the year of our Lord 1910 every Roman Catholic priest in America took a most solemn oath that he would not think in terms of the thought of the present generation.

When Cardinal Gibbons brought together the priests of his archdiocese, which includes the city of Washington and all of Maryland, and proposed to them the oath prescribed by the pope's encyclical of September 1, 1910, it was accepted by all without the slightest demurrer. Indeed, there appears to have been no overt dissent anywhere in the United States, though in Germany a considerable number of priests refused to commit themselves to the pope's stipulations. The object of the oath was to swear all Roman priests throughout the world against modernism and that object, so far as America was concerned, was a complete success. The encyclical was worded in the characteristic legal style of the Vatican, which aims to stop every possible loophole of evasion from its specific terms. The document contains in all about 600 words and begins: "I accept and firmly embrace everything that has been defined by the unerring magisterium of the church, whatever has been declared and promulgated, especially those doctrines which are directed against present-day errors." After specifying a number of points of special Catholic dogma, the oath continues: "I firmly believe and with due reverence submit to all the condemnations and declarations which are contained in the encyclical letters, 'Pascendi,' and in the decree of 'Lamentabili,' especially concerning that which they term dogmatic history." The encyclical and decree thus referred to are those with which the pope began his anti-modern crusade. It has been disputed whether or not these documents come within the limits of the pope's infallibility, but this oath makes it plain that the pope himself intends to demand that the church shall accept both as infallible.

NOT VINDICTIVE BUT CONSTRUCTIVE.

IN FAIRNESS to the Disciples Divinity House and to those who contributed the recently announced $50,000 to its endowment fund it should be made clear that this money was not secured by a sudden spasm of effort on the part of the board of trustees nor were the donors actuated by a feeling of resentment at the position in which for a time the Divinity House was placed in relation to the Men and Millions Movement.

Doctor Sharpe and the trustees have been at work for several months collecting subscriptions to such a fund. A large portion of the $50,000 was pledged before the Men and Millions Movement was projected. When the plans of the unified Movement were first announced it was of course far from anybody's thought that the Divinity House, whose membership in the Disciples Association of Colleges would naturally entitle it to share in any plans for the more adequate equipment of our school, would be omitted.

The officers of the Divinity House therefore set about closing in on the first third of a fund of $150,000 of which they were in quest. It was deemed best to conclude as soon as possible the current effort, that no conflicting interests should obstruct the ongoing of the larger enterprise. The smaller amount was almost in hand, and with an extra spur Doctor Sharpe succeeded in altogether rounding it out.

The motives of the donors were not connected in any way with the unjust discrimination which the Divinity House was at that time resting under. It was neither a vindictive nor a sympathetic offering, but was made in response to the recognized claims of an institution which has served the Disciples of Christ for twenty years, in the preparation of a competent ministry.

Dean Willett and his colleagues have been all along deeply concerned in the success of the Men and Millions Movement, whether the Divinity House were included or not. They know that the future of the institution does not depend upon the policy of this particular campaign. They are convinced that any discrimination based upon prejudice harms the brotherhood and all its interests rather than the one excluded institution.

It is but fair to these men to make clear their attitude, and the reasons which impelled them to terminate their campaign at this time, rather than permit the suspicion of competitive effort in a time when unity should be the watchword.

HERODIAS TO SALOME.

"At last thou'rt come!—And so, my drunken lord
  Has sworn an oath to give thee thy desire,
E'en to his kingdom's half! It is the word
  I longed to hear. But one thing I require
To give me ease!—Nay, child, I crave no hoard
  Of gold or gems, no rich and rare attire. . .
Shall those who sit about the birthday board,
  Be all who feast in honor of thy sire?

I, too, would spread a banquet of such food
  As this glad hour shall fitly celebrate;
A royal dish I'd serve—the head, the blood,
  Of that dread enemy whom I deeply hate.
Go, claim thy gift!—the king's oath makes it good—
  The head of John the Baptist on a plate."

Passing of Two Leaders.

It is not only the Methodists and United Presbyterians who have lost in the recent death of Bishop Bowman and Professor W. G. Moorehead. The world is a loser.

Bishop Thomas Bowman died two weeks ago at his home in Orange, N. J., in his ninety-seventh year. He had long been retired from active service, but his influence was still felt in the counsels of the church. His ministry began in 1839. But he was more a teacher than a pastor, and after service in various academy and college faculties, he was chosen in 1859 the president of what is now De Pauw University at Greencastle, Indiana. In 1872 he was elected to the bishopric and served until after retirement for age in 1896. During his bishopric he was especially popular as a dedicator of churches and is said to have preached no less than 1,100 dedication sermons.

Prof. William G. Moorehead died at Xenia, Ohio. He was chiefly known as a Bible lecturer, especially at Y. M. C. A. conventions, and similar meetings. He was a favorite lecturer at Winona assembly. For forty years Professor Moorehead served as Proffessor of Greek Exegesis and Biblical Literature in Xenia Theological Seminary.

Defends Business Methods of Church.

President Lemuel H. Murlin, of Boston University, dissents from the charge that the church is not conducted on business principles. He points to the fact that the Methodist Episcopal Church alone has $60,000,000 invested in educational institutions, $10,000,000 of which has been added within the last four years. In these colleges are 60,000 students and 6,000 faculty members. Contrasting the business management of the church in New England with that of the railroads in the same region, President Murlin says: "I am very sure that efficiency in the business management of the church in New England vastly outstrips the business management of the transportation problem." And, considering the present conditions of the railroads of New England, his point seems well taken.

Religious Censuses Popular.

Whether the religious census is a natural outgrowth of the "Go-to-Church" campaign we do not know. But it is a fact that local censuses are becoming popular. Several are noted in this week's exchanges.

An elaborate religious census has been made in Lowell, Mass., under the auspices of the local Federation of Churches. The colporteurs conducting the campaign have spoken at 524 meetings during the time of their presence in the city. They have personally met 77,608 people. They have called on about 20,000 families, representing a hundred thousand souls and more. There have been revealed in this canvass 7,248 Protestant families, nearly 11,000 Catholic families and 2,400 families of other religious faith or no faith at all. Among these people the records reveal that 8,650 Protestants are regular attendants at their numerous churches, while 6,374 attend with more or less regularity, and nearly 7,346 are non-attendants, while the proportion of Catholic non-attendants is much smaller. Three hundred and ninety-three families expressed no religious preference, while forty-one families absolutely declined to reveal their religious affiliation.

The religious census of Iowa City, Ia., was taken in two or three hours Feb. 18, and revealed some interesting information. Of 1,281 families and 7,730 individuals recorded, only 313 expressed no church preference. Forty-six per cent are enrolled in Protestant churches. A most important discovery was of 399 church members without their letters.

Evangelizing a University.

Evangelistic effort is being carried to the universities. A four days' evangelistic campaign was begun in Columbia University, March 3. The first mass meeting was held in Carnegie hall, followed on Wednesday by meetings for women in Horace Mann school and for men in Columbia gymnasium. Joint mass meetings were held Thursday and Friday evenings. The principal speaker was John R. Mott, secretary of the World's Student Christian Federation. Among the other speakers were George Sherwood Eddy of the student volunteer movement and Robert E. Speer.

Country Preachers to Meet.

The first National Conference of Country Preachers will be held at Louisville, Ky. The date will be April 7-10. One of the questions to be considered at the Conference will be, "How can a pastor live in the country and devote all his time to church work under present financial conditions?" Reports upon the financial methods of rural churches which have recently been reorganized upon satisfactory bases will be presented from a number of states, and consideration will also be given to means by which the city church may aid her sister organization in the country. One session will be given to consideration of the means by which the country church can aid in developing the industrial, intellectual and social life of the community. Under this head will come accounts of what has already been accomplished in promoting community welfare of every kind. Special attention is to be given to improving the health conditions of the community.

Death of Canon Driver.

The death of Rev. Samuel R. Driver, D. D., D.Litt., on February 26, is reported from London. Dr. Driver was Regius Professor of Hebrew at Oxford University, and Canon of Christ Church. He was one of the most distinguished Hebrew scholars of the day and is chiefly known for his works on Biblical subjects and in Hebrew. Among his better known works are the volume of Isaiah in "Men of the Bible;" Introduction to the literature of the Old Testament; and various volumes in leading commentaries. Dr. Driver was a member of the Old Testament Revision Committee that worked on the Revised Version.

Kansas Town Tries Church Union.

Marion, a Kansas town of 2,300 population with six churches under the influence of the Jay Hawkers Club, made up of business and professional men, finally brought about the federation of the Baptist and Presbyterian churches which is now called the Federated Church of Marion. The new plan has now been in successful operation for a year.

Here and There in the Religious Field

Dr. Jowett Refuses Call.

The call of Islington chapel, London, to Dr. Jowett of Fifth Avenue church, New York City, has been declined. He cabled the London church that although he greatly appreciated the invitation, he saw no justification for leaving his present charge.

Chicago is Waking Up.

Chicago Christianity is waking up! Churches, Bible classes and Endeavor organizations of the city have decided to make the city council feel the influence of the moral forces of Chicago. A proposed ordinance abolishing the "family entrance" to saloons is being supported vigorously. An effort is being made to support the present board of censors of moving pictures.

Concerning "Billy Sunday."

Evangelist Sunday is now in Scranton, Pa., in a month's campaign. He refuses to go to Philadelphia for the reason given in an interview: "The Philadelphia churchmen will not agree to my conditions, and, of course, I will not spend a year there. When I go to a city, the churches have to do as I say during the revival."

The Portland, Ore., ministers' federtion has invited Mr. Sunday to conduct an evangelistic campaign, and in this invitation the Oregon Anti-Saloon League and the mayor of the city have joined. Mr. Sunday will be unable to come before March, 1915.

Anarchists Attack Labor Temple.

It was something of a sensation when during the last blizzard anarchist leaders of New York City led their followers in an attack upon Labor Temple and the First Presbyterian Church demanding a place to sleep. Tannenbaum, the insolent young leader of the 200 men who entered the "Temple" did not help his cause any, it seems, by the attack. The "Temple" received gladly with food and shelter sixty of the men who proved to be really needy. It was on the following evening, Sunday, that First Presbyterian Church was visited.

More Fresh Air.

With the purpose of having plenty of fresh air supplied to every gathering of people in church, school room, or factory, the National Fresh Air For All Association has been incorporated with the secretary of state. Moving picture shows, some of which have defied the health department and evaded the law, will be the first to be regulated, says Kate F. O'Connor, secretary. Some of the charter members are Mrs. Ella Flagg Young, Dr. Emil G. Hirsch, and Miss Jane Addams.

The Book World

A Department of Reviews and Literary Notes.

Chicago and the Old Northwest. By Milo Milton Quaife, Ph. D. This large volume covers the period from 1673 to 1835. Its author, who is professor of history in the Lewis Institute of this city, has made a careful study of that abundant, but for the most part fragmentary literature, which is now chiefly to be found in the historical collections of the various states of the middle west, especially Illinois, Wisconsin and Michigan. The book is an exact and careful narrative of the beginnings of American history in this region. The figures of Joliet, LaSalle, Father Marquette, Father Charlevoix, St. Cosme, Cerre, La Taupine and Father Dablon move through these pages in fleeting but alluring record. The various chapters are devoted to the Chicago portage, the story of the seventeenth century, the Fox wars, Chicago in the Revolution, the fight for the northwest, and the long and exciting narrative of Fort Dearborn, with its romance and tragedies. Appendices consider more fully the sources of information, such as Swearingen's journal, the records of the Fort Dearborn massacre, Nathan Heald's journal and other documents of interest. Numerous illustrations and maps are included, and a carefully prepared bibliography reveals the wealth of material which has been consulted. (University of Chicago Press, $4.)

Bible Studies in the Old Testament. By Henry Ward Beecher. One of the best bases for the work of the minister is some competent knowledge of the messages of the great preachers of the past. Henry Ward Beecher undoubtedly occupies the foremost place in the list of American preachers. He was a leader of thought, a champion of progressive ideas, and an eloquent exponent of the Scriptures. He lived too early to enjoy the opportunities of modern scientific study of the Bible, especially the Old Testament. And yet he made admirable use of such works as Dean Stanley's "History of the Jewish Church," which was itself an interpretation of Ewald's great work on Hebrew history. For this reason the present book, though in no sense a scientific study of Old Testament literature, is masterful in its treatment of the great characters of the Hebrew Scriptures, and does not lack insight into those studies which have in our own generation so greatly illuminated the earlier portion of the Bible. Anything Beecher uttered in the way of sermons was worth study and this volume contains some of the best of his Old Testament work. (Revell, 50 cents net.)

Some By-Products of Missions. By Isaac Taylor Headland. One who was so long a missionary in China, as was the author of this book, naturally observes many of the interesting effects of missionary work aside from its direct results in the transformation of individual and national character. It is the thesis of Dr. Headland that missions far more than pay for themselves in their indirect effect upon the life of the world. He is convinced that the great business enterprises of the west could afford to underwrite every missionary expenditure undertaken by the combined missionary societies of the west merely for the increased income brought about by the creation of new demands for western commodities by the Orient. Similar by-products in government, science, civilization, civic life, education, music, art, exploration and the like make an interesting recital, and prove the far-reaching importance of the greatest of modern enterprises. (Jennings and Graham, $1.50 net.)

Pilgrims of the Lonely Road. By Gaius Glenn Atkins. The reading of works of meditation and devotion is clearly not the passion of the present age. Yet every now and then one comes upon some choice spirit who keeps a little shelf of devotional works close to his bed and dips into them from time to time for refreshment of spirit. The author of this volume is the minister of the Central Congregational Church in Providence. He has gathered into this volume some readable chapters on eight of the classics of devotion, from "the Meditations of Marcus Aurelius" to "Tolstoi's Confessions," including along the way "The Confessions of St. Augustine," "The Imitation of Christ" and "The Pilgrim's Progress." One would like to have had in companion form chapters on Jeremy Taylor, John Taulor and St. Theresa, but is thankful for these glimpses of some of the great pilgrims who have left memorials of their journey in works of priceless worth. (Revell, $1.50 net.)

In the Days of Christ. By Alfred Edersheim. One of the best known writers in the religious field during the last generation was the converted Jew, Edersheim. In his writings on early Christian history, especially in his books, "The Life of Jesus the Messiah," "Sketches of Jewish Social Life," and "The Temple" he contributed a wealth of information on Jewish manners and customs to the study of the New Testament. The present volume is a reprint of the second book mentioned above, "Sketches of Jewish Social Life." It deals with life in Palestine, the manners and customs of the age of Jesus, the Jewish sects, the Synagogue and its worship, and other related matters. A useful volume, though now rather superseded by later and more competent works. (Revell, 50 cents net.)

The Temple. By Alfred Edersheim. This Jewish Christian writer, the author of the work noted above, placed the Christian students of the last century under obligations by the preparation of this elaborate work on the Holy City and the holy house. Well acquainted as he was with the Talmudic literature, he presented an interesting picture of Jewish customs connected with the sanctuary, and thus threw light upon many passages in the New Testament. Though this work has been to a large degree superseded by such books as Schuerer's "The Jewish People in the Times of Jesus Christ," it is still an admirable compendium of information, and is more concise. (Revell, 50 cents net.)

Harriet Beecher Stowe. By Martha Foote Crow. The story of the writer of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," the book that more than any other single force wrought the liberation of the slaves, is told in simple and attractive form for girls. Any open window into the life of the remarkable Beecher family would be worth while. The influence of that family upon American thought would be difficult to trace to its rich completion. There are twenty-one chapters in the book, and every one is interesting. It will probably surprise most readers to note by the bibliography at the end of the volume that the number of published books to Mrs. Stowe's credit ran to thirty-eight. (Appleton.)

The Heresy of Cain. By George Hodges. The reprint of an admirable series of addresses by the dean of the Episcopal Theological School at Cambridge, Mass. It reveals at once a deep sympathy with all the advancing forces of the new philanthropy, and regards the heresy of Cain, the spirit of unbrotherliness, as the most serious indictment that can be brought against the church. The score of chapters deal with a variety of themes all the way from the Christian family to foreign missions. Very suggestive are the chapters dealing with "The Cattle of Nineveh," and "The Man with the Measuring Line." (Macmillan, $1.25.)

Usury. By Calvin Elliott. A protest against the use of money for interest. The author believes that any taking of reward for money is wrong, and tries, though with scant success and frequent misuse of Scripture, to prove his thesis from the Bible. His chief difficulty is that he tries to prove too much. He is at his best when he shows the evil results of the love of money and the misery which has been wrought by the selfish passion for its accumulation. (Anti-Usury League, Millersburg, O.)

The Real Billy Sunday. By Elijah P. Brown, D. D. A book of two hundred and eighty-five pages written by the former editor of the "Ram's Horn," who has been associated with Mr. Sunday in a good deal of his evangelistic work. It tells of his early life in Iowa, his baseball career in Chicago, his conversion at the Pacific Garden Mission, and his successful career as an evanglist. It contains many illustrations, and closes with two or three of Mr. Sunday's characteristic sermons. (Revell, $1 net.)

Thirty Pieces of Silver. By Clarence B. Kelland. The story of Judas and his treachery is re-told in the form of a modern dream. An eloquent, gifted lecturer, a determined foe of Christianity, after addressing an admiring audience on the folly of Christian belief, has a dream in which the tragedy of Gethsemane and Calvary is vividly portrayed. The dream works the profound change from skepticism to faith, and the old Salvation Army man whom the lecturer had scorned at first says to him at last, compassionately, "You have stood on the road to Damascus." (Harper, 50 cents net).

In Greece the minister of education has opened negotiations for the installation of four thousand natural color moving picture machines, with supplies of films, for use in the state schools.

Of Human Interest

Lincoln Satisfied Both Sides.

Mr. G. W. Harris, who was a clerk in Lincoln's law office at Springfield, gave to the editor of "The Every-day Life of Abraham Lincoln" an interesting reminiscence of Mr. Lincoln's pacific and common-sense way of conducting his business.

A crack-brained attorney who lived in Springfield, supported mainly by the other lawyers of the place, became indebted, in the sum of $2.50, to a wealthy citizen of the county. The creditor, failing after repeated efforts to collect the amount due him, came to Mr. Lincoln and asked him to bring suit. Lincoln explained the man's condition and circumstances, and advised his client to let the matter rest; but the creditor's temper was up, and he insisted on bringing suit. Again Lincoln urged him to let the matter drop, adding, "You can make nothing out of him, and it will cost you a good deal more than the debt to bring suit."

The creditor was still determined to have his way, and threatened to seek some other attorney who would be more willing to take charge of the matter than Lincoln appeared to be. Lincoln then said, "Well, if you are determined that suit shall be brought, I will bring it; but my charge will be ten dollars." The creditor paid over the money, and gave peremptory orders that the suit should be brought that very day.

After his client's departure, Lincoln went out of the office. He returned in about an hour with an amused look on his face. I asked what pleased him, and he replied, "I brought suit against ——, and then hunted him up, told him what I had done, handed him half of the ten dollars, and we went over to the squire's office. He confessed judgment, and paid the bill." Lincoln added that he did not see any other way to make things so generally satisfactory.

Mayor Gaynor, Literary Critic.

The Washington Star credits the late Mayor Gaynor with the following criticism of a novelist who had begun promisingly, but who had degenerated into the lowest type of "best seller:"

This scribbler's whole biography could be put into two questions and answers, thus:

"How did he commence writing?"

"With a wealth of thought."

"And how has he continued?"

"With a thought of wealth."

The Weekly Event.

John Warden, the Standard Oil magnate of Philadelphia, was taking coffee after luncheon on the sun-drenched terrace, looking out on the blue Mediterranean, of the new Hotel Ruhl in Nice.

"This hotel," he said, "has three or four hundred bedrooms, and every bedroom has its private bathroom. All new hotels of the first class are built that way now. The Negresco, further out the promenade, is the same. It's impossible, in any new and first-class hotel, to get a bedroom without a bathroom.

"Times have changed, and manners and customs. A veteran Philadelphia hotel man told me that when, in his youth as a hotel clerk, he would insinuatingly ask his new arrivals if they'd have a room with a bath, the usual reply would be:

"'Well, no, sonny, I reckon not. You see, I calc'late to git back home afore Saturday.'"

Woodrow Wilson, Democrat.

Mr. Wilson likes the common people. A gentleman used to teach a Bible class on week nights in a little country church at Penn's Neck, a near-by hamlet. Mr. Wilson promised that he would speak to the members, and long in advance, as was necessary because of a crowded calendar, set a date. After a holiday in Bermuda he found that much work had accumulated for his return. There were pressing matters needing attention, yet that first or second evening home saw him talking to the handful of country people. When the address was over and coffee and doughnuts produced Mr. Wilson won their hearts by his stories.

Tricking Cecil Rhodes.

Cecil Rhodes used to take a coop of hens on board to provide fresh eggs on his numerous voyages between England and South Africa. But those were three weeks' journeys, and not a mere five-day crossing of the Atlantic. Hence another prominent South African personage was asked why he did not follow Rhodes' example and provide himself with the luxury of new-laid eggs at sea.

"O, I don't bother to take a coop of fowls on board," he replied. "But I tip the bos'un who looks after Rhodes' hens, and I get Rhodes' eggs."—London Chronicle.

A Mark Twain Witticism.

At a banquet in New York, Mark Twain was the guest of honor.

Thomas Bailey Aldrich was among those present who happened to be seated near Twain, and in some manner the talk had veered round to pet failings.

"What is yours, Mr. Aldrich?" inquired a man near him.

The poet opened his lips to reply, but Twain beat him to it.

"Vice versa!" he drawled laconically. —Country Gentleman.

A Culinary Experiment.

The friends of a certain distinguished professor frequently dropped into his laboratory for a chat in the evening, says the Boston Herald. Generally, they found him busily engrossed in some experiment.

One evening, when two friends called, they found the professor bending anxiously over a spirit lamp, on which a small pot was bubbling.

"Well, said one of the callers, "what is it tonight?"

"Guess,' murmured the professor.

"Micrococci?" asked one.

"No."

"Pneumococci?" asked the other.

"No."

"Spirochætæ?"

"No."

The callers ran the scale of microorganisms as far as they knew it. Then one of them said:

"Well, we give it up! What is it?"

The professor smiled blandly. "Sausages!"

A Pity Indeed.

Elihu Root, in his superb Fifth avenue apartment overlooking Central Park, was talking about a famous artist whose wife had divorced him.

"It seems he didn't treat her well," said Mr. Root. Then he added:

"All geniuses are egoists. It's a pity the rule doesn't work both ways."

A Spurgeon Story.

Rev. John Robertson said that one of his biggest critics was a man who ostentatiously put his finegrs in his ears while he was preaching. The man annoyed him this way for a long time, and one time he asked Mr. Spurgeon what he should do. Mr. Spurgeon, with a twinkle in his eye, said, "I would—I would pray for a fly on his nose."

"A Good Layer."

Anthony Comstock at a luncheon in New York said of certain tabooed books and plays:

"The motive of these works was perhaps all right. But the expression, the form, was bad. And that spoiled the motive completely.

"Expression, form, you know, is everything. Consider how the lack of it spoiled the mason's speech.

"A mason at a memorial service said of a bricklayer who had been accidentally killed:

"Yes, gents, I looked out once on the beauties of nature, and all was ca'm. Our friend deceased here was layin' a brick. I looked out once again, and still all was ca'm, but our friend deceased here was no more. He was layin' a corpse.'"

Eugene Field's Little Joke.

William E. Curtis, the well-known correspondent, who died two years ago, once lent $50 to Eugene Field in Kansas City. Many years later in Chicago he reminded him of it, and Gene said he would think it over. Next day in "sharps and flats" appeared the following paragraph: "William E. Curtis, the distinguished Washington correspondent, was in the city yesterday looking after some of his permanent investments."

The World is Growing Better

"Dry Kentucky" Bill Passes.

The house of representatives, of Kentucky, by a vote of 60 to 32 passed the state-wide prohibition bill which is in the form of an amendment to the state constitution. With the consideration in Congress of national prohibition, it appears that "a saloonless nation" is not to be of necessity a dream!

MODERN WOMANHOOD

Conducted by Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison

"That I May Know Him"

Many of us have traveled long, winding roads, with glimpses now and then of some noble mountain; at times, its peak and sides would be veiled by low-hanging clouds; sometimes the way would reveal one side, sometimes the other—in some low valley, we might lose sight of it altogether; but at last, in a happy moment, we might see it in all its majesty, crowned with snow, robed in sunlight, with all its spendid outlines plainly visible. But in all our changing points of view, we were sure that God's everlasting hill was there in changeless beauty —it was only our poor vision that was lacking.

And so it is with the Christ! If we accept the theological conception of him at different stages of the church's development—if we accept humanity's conception of him under varying environments, he is indeed a changing Christ—but we are sure the change is in us, not in him, the same yesterday, today, and forever. The very crown of Christian experience is to know and see him as he is; and we are assured that when we do attain to that high ideal, we shall be like him—for no one can gaze on that gracious and irresistible presence without being transformed into his image.

Even his chosen companions, who walked and talked with him had but a poor idea of their Master and his teaching. Two of his inner circle on one occasion wanted to call down fire from heaven on a village of the Samaritans, which did not receive their message. At another time, on a single figurative mention of a sword, they began to gird themselves for the struggle with "Lord, behold, here are two swords." They called him a teacher come from God—the Son of God, but they limited his mission to the salvation of the Jews, and their restoration to the material glories of David and Solomon. Even after the marvels of the resurrection, the persistent idea still clung to them, for just before his ascension they asked him, "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore the kingdom to Israel?"

Even after the wonders of Pentecost had revealed the spiritual nature of his kingdom, they clung to the thought that his salvation was for the Jew only, or for those who submitted to the rite of circumcision, and thus renounced country and family, to become one of a race despised by the great nations of the earth; it took the voice and the vision from heaven to reveal to the chief apostle, that Jesus was the Saviour of the Gentile, as well as of the Jew. Well might we say in sorrowing reproof to one of them, "Have I been so long time with you, and dost thou not know me, Philip?"

And the Christ of the middle ages—how poor and marred is the image of him they have bequeathed to us!—aloof and vague, only reached through the intercession of the saints and the Virgin Mother! The beauty, the love, the power of Mary, the authority of the Pope, the Holy Father and Christ's vice-gerent on earth, are the dominant things in the mediaeval church—the Christ is veiled in clouds, like the mountain top in time of storm.

And even after the fuller light of the Reformation, his image was still marred by those who taught as doctrine the opinions of men! How his words were made of none effect by some of the dark dogmas of those times of creeds and divisions! He who had lovingly watched the play of children in the market place, who had lifted them up, not only in his arms, but as an ideal of character toward which seekers after God should strive, was supposed to teach the hideous doctrine of the damnation of unbaptized infants!

And those dark dogmas of the total depravity of the whole human race, of the arbitrary predestination of some to eternal life, and some to everlasting damnation—how they, and many other doctrines, have misrepresented him, who came into the world, that the world might be saved by him.

And today!— are we growing in the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ, as the living, loving leader of his people, or is he still, as in times gone by, but a vague embodiment of certain doctrines dear to us, with which we reproached and alienated those who could not see the truth as we did? What a significant phrase is that in the letter to the Ephesians, "Till we all attain unto the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God."

Surely, this linking of Christian knowledge and Christian unity has its special significance for these latter days, when the evangelization of the world halts, not for lack of money or messengers, not on account of hardness of heart in the heathen world—but, because of divisions among Christians. Mr. Campbell White said (in substance) at the Men and Millions meeting in St. Louis, that the more the various religious bodies worked together in their divine task of world redemption, the more they found out that fundamentally they were the same. As we grow in knowledge of each other, and of our essential unity, we must also grow in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and of the one "God and Father of all, who is our all, and through all, and in all."

Only as we grow into that grace and knowledge, shall we be able to lift up the Christ, and thus draw all men unto him. When we know him, and see him as he is, then can we reveal him to a waiting world, and the irresistible law of attraction will bring all men to his feet.

"BOB" BURDETTE GIVES DYING MESSAGE.

Robert J. Burdette, formerly editor of the Burlington (Ia.) Hawkeye, is dying on the Pacific Coast. He has written a beautiful farewell letter to his old congregation in Temple Church, Los Angeles. In this letter, sent from "Eventide," at Clifton-by-the-sea, Cal., he says:

"I am neither bed-ridden nor house-bound, but I am woefully weak. I ride out a little every day and enjoy it, but I avoid crowds, which tire me. I write a little for newspaper or magazine every week, for life would seem so worthless if I didn't work at something. And I love to see my friends—if they don't stay too long.

"Because it is sweet and quiet down here we will remain in 'Eventide,' so named by Mrs. Burdette because it faces the sunset. And 'Afternoon Land' is very pleasant, in spite of 'chronic pancreatitis.' Every evening as I sit in the sunroom and watch the sun go down beyond the rim of the blue Pacific, I know what is over there. There is no mystery in that unseen space beyond the sunset. I have been there. I have journeyed in those lands. There, where the sun is just sinking out of sight, is Japan, Yokohama, Tokio, Nikko, Fujihama, the beautiful Inland Sea—I can see it all. And there, where that silver star is shining through the crimson bars of the sunset, that is China. Over there is Manila. Yonder is Port Arthur. I know it all. I have been there.

"Well, beyond the gates of the sunset there is another land, farther away than the stars. I have never seen it. I have never seen anyone who has been there. But all that I know about the Oriental lands wherein I have journeyed, is the merest conjecture compared with my knowledge of the blessed land which eye hath not seen. That fair and happy country I do know. Know it with a certainty, a positive knowledge which has never been shadowed by a cloud of doubt passing over my belief. I may be confused in my earthly geographical locations. But this heaven of ours—no man, no thing, no circumstance has ever shaken my faith in that. As the sun sinks lower, faith shines more brightly, and hope lifting her voice in a higher key, sings the songs of fruition. So every evening when the sun goes down, I see that shadowless land of eternal noon. I know it is there—not because I have seen it, but because I do see it."

BABIES OF THE SLUMS.

Those who fancy (not knowing) that the poor have blunter sensibilities and less feeling for their children than we have should see them at times of sickness and death.

It's all we have, they cry, in an abandonment of grief. And those who say (not knowing) that "the poor prefer filth," should see the pathetic gratitude of the family when the nurse calls them in to see the change she has wrought upon the dead baby

All the tear stains washed away forever with all the horror of grime, pure as alabaster are the tiny features, silken smooth the soft curls. And, most appreciated of all the little icy hands are clasped above a snow-white dress, with soft lace at the neck and wrists, such as in all its hard little life the baby never wore.

There is so little for the children of the slums to live for, and such certain hardship is ahead of them that I always pity the ones who get well. The babies of the slums! Whenever I try to talk of them something rises up and chokes me It's the thought of one of my own babies setting its little bare feet on those slimy yards, among the sharp cinders. I never see them without a shudder at the thought of all that tender flesh will have to suffer—bruises, aches, and illness, hunger and cold—of the coarse, filthy clothing and wretched food. Worst of all, some of them, will have oaths and blows, and there will be a bestial life about them, so they cannot grow up innocent or pure.—Albion Fellows Bacon in the Survey.

Transylvania Adds Teacher.

Professor A. C. Kuykendall, former president of McLean College, has been called to the faculty of Transylvania for the remainder of the session to teach some of the courses given by Professor S. M. Jefferson. Professor Kuykendall is a man of scholarship and of long and successful experience as a teacher. He will open a private training school in Lexington next fall, and will afford students of Transylvania and The College of the Bible, who are deficient in their entrance requirements, an opportunity to complete their high school preparation. I. J. Spencer, minister of Central Church, is now meeting the class in Worship and Work of the Church, at Transylvania, formerly taught by Professor S. M. Jefferson. He has agreed to teach this course the remainder of the session.

Bluegrass Preachers' Meeting.

The regular March meeting of the Bluegrass Ministerial Association met at the Phoenix Hotel, Lexington, Monday, March 9, with a representative attendance and a good program. J. H. MacNeill of Winchester read a strong paper on "The Church and Vice," which was discussed by W. S. Irvin and others. These monthly meetings are delightful in their fellowship and program. The next meeting will be held Monday, April 13. The expenses are "pooled" so as to be equally borne by all.

Canton, O., Church Reports Visitors.

The Canton, O., church, P. H. Welshimer, pastor, has recently enjoyed visits from Z. T. Sweeney of New York City; Alanson Wilcox of Cleveland; Mrs. Laura D. Garst of the College of Missions, Indianapolis, Ind., and Louis R. Patmont of Milwaukee. Mr. Sweeney spoke two mornings to the student body and in the evening delivered his address on "Bed-rock in Religion" to a large audience in the church auditorium. Alanson Wilcox delivered three addresses to the students of Phillips Institute and the church. He speaks from a rich experience in a long life in the ministry. Notwithstanding his four-score years Mr. Wilcox preaches every Lord's Day and is as young in mind and heart as ever. Mrs. Laura D. Garst brought a great message to the church Feb. 22. Her visit, Mr. Welshimer reports, quickened the church in the missionary enterprise. It would be profitable to the work of the kingdom if Mrs. Garst could speak to every congregation of the Brotherhood. She visited Canton under the auspices of the local C. W. B. M. and Young People's Missionary Circle. Louis R. Patmont of Milwaukee told in a thrilling way the story of his work among the Poles. Mr. Patmont has a brother who is a student in Phillips Bible Institute.

Decision Meetings in East End, Pittsburgh.

In common with nearly all the Protestant churches of Greater Pittsburgh, the East End Christian Church held a two weeks' meeting following the "Billy" Sunday campaign. Thousands of people have been received into the various churches, writes John R. Ewers, East End's pastor. Only about ten of those coming into the East End Church can be traced directly to the Sunday campaign. He believes, however, that the religious awakening brought about by the big revival produced indirect results. Sixty-four people were received into the church in the two weeks, forty-nine of them by baptism. More than half were men and boys. All were adults but five. There have been seventy-nine received into the church since January 1, or 183 in the past fourteen months. The church has been more than doubled in the last four years. W. E. M. Hackleman led the music and the minister, John Ray Ewers, preached each night. A new church is now imperative, writes Mr. Ewers. Some large volunteer pledges have already been made and it is quite probable that a large institutional church will be built within the near future. A lot 50x144 has just been purchased adjoining the present site and the corner is now one of the best for a church in the East End. People are received into the fellowship at nearly every service. One remarkable fact in connection with this short meeting was that the church put paid advertisements in the seven big dailies of the city. It is believed to have been helpful.

Where Go to Church?

W. H. Bagby, pastor at Taylor, Tex., in a sermon preached recently answered the question, "Why Go to Church?" and the following Sunday discussed the topic, "Where Go to Church?" After pointing out that one should not choose as his church home the fashionable church, the popular church, the most cultured church or the most cordial church, Mr. Bagby concluded as follows: "Where shall I go to church, you ask? Go where you will the most surely find God, the food that feeds the soul, the water that slakes its thirst, the Spirit that bringeth light and life. If these are to be found only in the Catacombs, go there. If they can be found in the splendid temple where are the great throngs, the magnificent music, the culture and the cordiality, go there and, using these accessories as wings, mount to higher spiritual levels."

We Agree with Mr. Jones.

Edgar DeWitt Jones, pastor at First Church, Bloomington, Ill., is afraid we are going to have so many "Days" that we will have no "Lord's Days" left us. He takes issue with the Christian Evangelist for seconding editorially the motion for a "Father's Day" in the church calendar. "Why not also a Brother's Day," he asks, "and then by all means a Bachelor's Day and in all gallantry then a Spinster's Day. With the momentum thus acquired and the precedents fully established why surely a Widow's Day and next a Widower's Day. Furthermore, there should be a Grandfather's Day and a Grandmother's Day, and an Uncle's Day and an Aunt's Day and a Cousin's Day, and most assuredly a Mother-in-Law's Day, etc., etc., etc., etc. With these special days added to the Anti-Tuberculosis Day, Anti-Saloon League Day, Men's Day, World's Peace Day, Sunday Observance Day, Children's Day, etc., etc., it may be actually possible to celebrate once a year, maybe, a Lord's Day."
